'Abd Allah b. 'Abd Allâh b. Ubâbî b. Sa'îdî, 'Abd Allâh b. Sahl b. Suhayl b. 'Amr. He came out to battle with his father, on the side of the polytheists, but then he fled from them, joined the Muslims and fought with them. 'Abd Allah b. 'Abd Allâh b. Ubâbî b. Sa'îdî, an ally of the leader of the al-munâjijûn, the "hypocrites". 'Abd Allah b. 'Abd al-Asâd b. Hilâl b. 'Abd Allah b. Amr b. Makhtûm Abû Salamâ, husband of Umm Salamâ: 'Abd Allah was killed that day. 'Abd Allah b. 'Abd Manâf b. al-Nû'mân al-Sulamî; 'Abd Allah b. 'Abs; 'Abd Allah b. 'Uthmân b. 'Amir b. Amr b. Ka'b b. Taym b. Murrâ b. Ka'b Abû Bakr, "the Trusting", God bless him; 'Abd Allâh b. Urfâtâ b. 'Adî al-Khazraji.

'Abd Allah b. Makhrîma b. 'Adî al-'Uzza, one of the initial Emigrants; 'Abd Allah b. Mas'ûd al-Hudhâli, ally of Banû Zuhra, one of the initial Emigrants; 'Abd Allah b. Maṣ'ûn al-Jumâhî, one of the initial Emigrants; 'Abd Allah b. al-Nu'mân b. Baldâma al-Sulamî; 'Abd Allah b. Unaysa b. al-Nu'mân al-Sulamî; 'Abd al-Raḥmân b. Jabr b. 'Amr Abû Ubâys al-Khazraji; 'Abd al-Raḥmân b. 'Abd Allah b. Thâlabâ, Abû 'Uqayl al-Qudâ'î al-Balawi.

'Abd al-Raḥmân b. 'Awf b. 'Abd 'Awf b. 'Abd al-Hârîth b. Zuhra b. Kilâb al-Zuhrâ, one of the "ten", God be pleased with them all; 'Abs b. 'Amir b. 'Adî al-Sulamî; 'Ubayd b. al-Tayyihân, brother of Abû al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihân: his name is also given as Atîk, instead of 'Ubayd.

'Ubayda b. al-Hârîth b. al-Muṭṭalib b. 'Abd Manâf, brother of al-Huṣayn and al-Ṭufayl: he was one of the three champions who first went out to fight at Badr and whose arm (sic)72 was cut off and who died following the battle. God bless him!

72. Elsewhere in the text we learn that it was his leg that he lost.
Uthmān b. Affān b. Abū al-‘Āṣ b. Umayya b. ‘Abd Shams b. ‘Abd Manāf al-Umawi, (later) the “Commander of the Believers”, one of the Four Caliphs, and one of the “ten”. He remained behind with his wife Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), nursing her until she died. He was given a full share of the spoils.

Uthmān b. Maẓ'uẓn al-Jumahī Abū al-Sā'īb, a brother of ‘Abd Allāh and Qudāma, one of the initial Emigrants.

‘Adī b. Abū al-Zaghbā al-Juhani, who was sent ahead as a scout by the Messenger of God (SAAS), along with Basbas b. ‘Amr.

‘Uqba b. ‘Amr Abū Maṣ‘ūd al-Badrī: in the saḥīḥ of al-Bukhārī it is stated that he was present at Badr. However, many of the scholars of the military expeditions of the Prophet (SAAS) express doubts over this and therefore do not include him.

‘Uqba b. Wahb b. Rabī‘a al-Asadī, the Asad of Khuzayma, an ally of the Banū ‘Abd Shams, he being a brother of Shujā‘ b. Wahb, one of the initial Emigrants; ‘Uqba b. Wahb b. Kalda, an ally of the Banū Ghaṭfān.

‘Ukkāsha b. Miḥṣan al-Ghanmī, one of the initial Emigrants, one who will enter paradise without reckoning.

‘Alī b. Abo Talib al-Hašsimī, later “Commander of the Believers”, one of the Four Caliphs, and one of the three champions who went forth at Badr. God be pleased with him!

‘Umayr b. ‘Awf, freed-man of Suhayl b. ʿĀmir: his name is given by al-Umawi and others as ʿĀmir b. ʿAwf. It is similarly given in both ṣakīḥ collections in the account of the dispatch of Abū Ubayda to Bahrayn.

‘Umayr b. Mālik b. Uḥayb al-Zuhri, brother of Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqāṣ, martyred that day; ‘Antara, freed-man of the Banū Sulaym and also said to be a member of that tribe, but God knows best.

ʿAwf b. al-Ḥārith b. Rifa‘a b. al-Ḥārith al-Najjārī, he being the son of ʿAfra‘, daughter of Ubayd b. Tha‘labā al-Najjāriyya: he was martyred that day; Uwaym b. Sā‘ida al-Anṣārī, of the Banū Umayya b. Zayd; Ḥyād b. Ghanm al-Fihri, one of the initial Emigrants. May God be pleased with them all!

DIVISION

The total number of Muslims who were present at Badr was 314, including the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

As al-Bukhārī stated, "ʿAmr b. Khālid related to us, quoting Zuhayr, quoting ʿAbū ʾIṣḥāq, 'I heard al-Baraʾ b. ʿAṣib say, "The Companions, God be pleased with them of Muhammad, God’s peace and blessings be upon him, who had been present at Badr, related to me that they were of the number of the Companions of Ṭalūt who crossed the river with him — that is 310 and a few more." Al-Baraʾ stated, "No, by God, no one crossed the river with him who was not a believer!""

Al-Bukhārī then related it through Isrāʾīl and Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Abī ʾIṣḥāq, from al-Baraʾ in similar terms.

Ibn Jarir stated, "This is the consensus of the early authorities, that they were 310 men, and a few more."

He also stated, "Maḥmūd related to us, quoting Wahb, from Shuʿba, from Abū ʾIṣḥāq, from al-Baraʾ, who said, 'I and Ibn ʿUmar felt outnumbered at the battle of Badr. The Emigrants totalled only approximately 60, whereas the Helpers were some 240.'"

This is what is given in this account.

Ibn Jarir stated, "Muḥammad b. ʿUbayd al-Muḥārībi related to me, quoting Abū Mālik al-Jabāni, from al-Ḥajjāj, he being the son of Arṭāt, from al-Ḥakam, from Miqsam, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, 'The Emigrants at Badr totalled 70 men. The Helpers totalled 236 men. The bearer of the banner of the Prophet (SAAS) was 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib. The flag bearer for the Helpers was Sa'd b. Ḫubaida."

This determines their total to have been 306 men.

Ibn Jarir stated, "It is said that they totalled 307 men."

I observe that this latter figure may have included the Messenger of God (SAAS); the former may have omitted him. But God knows best.

It was given earlier on the authority of Ibn Ishāq that the Emigrants totalled 83 men, that of Aws there were 61, while Khazraj consisted of 170 men; and he enumerated them.

This is contrary to what al-Bukhārī reported and to what was related from Ibn ʿAbbās. But God knows best.

In the sahih it is reported of Anas that he was asked whether he had been present at Badr. He replied, "And where else would I have been then?"

In the Sunan (The Accepted Norm) by Abū Dā'ūd, there is an account from Sa'īd b. Mānsūr, from Abū Muṣāwiyya, from al-'Amash, from Abū Sufyan Ṭalḥa b. Naďf, from Jābīr b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭāmīr b. Ḥarām, who said, "I was drawing water from the well for my companions at the battle of Badr."

These two men are not mentioned by al-Bukhārī or by al-Ḍiyā’. But God knows best.

Among those included by Ibn Isbq in the total figure given of those who received a share of the spoils of Badr were some who were not actually there but who stayed behind for some good reason. These were the eight or nine men whose names follow: ʿUṯmān b. ʿAffān who stayed behind with Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), nursing her until she died. He was given a full share of the spoils; Saʿīd b. Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl who went to Syria but was given a full share; ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. Ḥarām, who said, "I was drawing water from the well for my companions at the battle of Badr."

Those Muslims who were martyred that day totalled 14 men. Those who were Emigrants were 6 in number, as follows: ʿUbayd b. al-Ḥārith b. al-Muṭṭalib, who had his leg cut off and died at al-Ṣafrā’, God bless him; ʿUmayr b. Abū Waqqās, brother of Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās al-Zuhri, who was killed by al-‘Aṣ b. Sa’d, he being a youth of 16. It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him to return home because of his youth, but he wept, and was allowed to proceed and so was killed, God bless him: their ally Dhū al-Shimālāy b. ‘Abd al-Khuzā‘; Sa‘wān b. Bayḍā; ʿAqil b. al-Bukair al-Laythi, ally of the Banū ‘Adī; Mihja‘, freed-man of ʿUmar b. al-Khattāb who was the first of the Muslims killed that day.

Of the Helpers, there were eight men killed, as follows: Ḥāritha b. Surāqa who had an arrow shot at him by Ḥabbān b. al-ʿArqāla that hit him in the neck and killed him; Mu‘awwidh and ‘Awf, the two sons of ‘Afrā‘; Yazid b. al-Hārith, known as Ibn Fushūm; ʿUmayr b. al-Ḥammām; Rafi‘ b. al-Mu‘alla b. Lawdhān; Sa‘d b. Khaythama and Mubashshir b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir. May God be pleased with them all.

With the Muslims, as stated above, there were 70 baggage camels.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “They had two men mounted on horses, one al-Miqdād b. al-Aswād, the name of the horse being Baẓaja, also known as Sabha. The other was ridden by al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām, its name being al-Yaṣṣūb. They had a banner that was carried by Muṣṭafā b. ʿUmayr, and two flags, one carried for the Emigrants by ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭālib, the other for the Helpers by Sa‘d b. ʿUbaydā.

The leader of the council of the Emigrants was Abū Bakr, “the Trusting”, while the leader of the council of the Helpers was Sa‘d b. Mu‘ādh.

As for the polytheists’ force, the best that can be said of them is that they totalled between 900 and 1,000. ʿUrwa and Qatāda stated that they numbered 930 men.

Al-Waqīḍi stated, “They were 930 men.” This figure requires proof. In some of the accounts given above they are stated to have numbered more than 1,000; perhaps such figures include their attendants. But God knows best.

The authentic account given by al-Bukhārī from al-Barā‘ states that 70 of them were killed and 70 were wounded.

This is the majority view. It was because of this that Ka‘b b. Malik stated in a poem:

“He set up 70 of them that stank at the watering hole, Uṭba and al-Aswād among them.”

Al-Waqīḍi stated that there was unanimity on that. Yet this statement is controversial. Mūsā b. Uqba and ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr said the opposite, and they are prime authorities on this. No unanimity can be claimed without their agreement, even though their views are superceded by any authentic tradition. But God knows best.

Ibn Iṣḥāq and others list the names of those killed and taken captive and the ḥāfiz al-Ḍiyā‘ compiles these effectively in his work, al-ʿAḵkām.

In the course of the narration of the account it is stated which of them was killed first, he being al-Aswād b. ʿAbd al-Asad al-Makhzūmī. The first of them to take flight was Khalid b. al-Alām al-Khuza‘ī – or al ‘Uqayli – an ally of the Banū Makhzūm. But that did not benefit him since he was captured. It was he who spoke the verse:

“It is not on our heels that our wounds bleed, but on our feet the blood drips down.”

He was not truthful in this!

The first prisoners taken were ʿUqba b. Abū Muḥyī and al-Nadr b. al-Ḥārith. They were taken from the rest of the prisoners and killed stoically before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). There are two different versions regarding which of them was killed first.

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) released a group of prisoners without charge or ransom. These included Abū al-ʿĀṣ b. al-Rabī‘ al-Umawi, al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥunṭab b. al-Ḥārith al-Makhzūmī and Ṣayfī b. Abū Rifa‘a, as told above, Abū ʿAzza al-Shā‘īr, Wahb b. Ṣumayr b. Wahb al-Jumāḥī, as told above. The rest he required to be ransomed, even including his uncle al-ʿAbbās, and he took more from him than from all the rest in order to give him no preferential treatment for being his uncle. He did this even though the Helpers who had captured him asked him to forgo the ransom for him, a request he refused. He insisted, “Don’t let him off a single dirham!”

The ransom levied was variable. The least taken was 400 dirhams; for some 40 awqiyā of gold was taken. Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated, “400 awqiyā of gold was taken from al-ʿAbbās.”

Some were employed in labour to the value of their ransom; as the Imām Aḥmad stated, quoting ʿAli b. ʿAṣim, quoting ʿDa‘ūd from Ḥikrīma, who quoted Ibn ʿAbbās, as having said, “Some of the prisoners taken at Badr had no ransom money available, so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had some of them work off their ransom by teaching the children of the Helpers to write. One day a child came in tears to his mother who asked him what was the matter. He replied, ‘My teacher hit me!’ She commented, ‘The lout! He’s seeking blood-revenge for Badr! But, by God, he’ll never get it!’”

Aḥmad is alone in giving this, but it accords with the criteria for traditions. This subject has been fully referenced above; and to God goes all praise and credit.

Chapter: On the excellence of those Muslims who were present at Badr.

Al-Bukhārī stated on this subject, “Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Muṣawīya b. ʿAmr, quoting Abū Ishāq, from Ḥumayd, who said, ‘I heard Anas say, ‘Ḥāritha was struck down at Badr and his mother went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘O Messenger of God, you know how much Ḥāritha meant to me. If he be in heaven, I will be stoic and resigned; but if it be the other place, then tell me what I ought to do.’ He replied, ‘Woe unto you if you feel bereaved! Is heaven just one garden? It consists of many; he is in the garden of paradise.’’”
Al-Bukhari is alone in giving this hadith through this path. It is related on a different path from accounts of Thabit and Qatada from Anas, to the effect that Hāritha was an observer and that the words used were, "Your son was awarded the highest paradise."

This provides a fine indication of the special status of those present at Badr, even if not engaged in the middle of the battle or the thick of the fray, but one observing it from a distance. Though merely struck by a stray arrow while drinking from the cistern, his position nevertheless won him that paradise that is the highest of all the gardens, in the very centre of heaven. It is from there that those rivers of heaven gush forth for which the law-giving Prophet (SAAS) recommended that his nation make their requests to God.

If this be the reward of such a man, what would such be for those who actually faced an enemy three times their own number?

Al-Bukhari and Muslim both recounted, from Ishaq b. Rähawayh, from ‘Abd Allah b. Idris, from Ḥusayn b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān, from Sa‘d b. ʿUbayda, from Abū ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Sulami, from ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib, the story of Ḥātit b. Abū Baltaʿa and his despatch of the latter to the people of Mecca in the year of the conquest, and how Umar sought the permission of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to strike off his head for having betrayed God, His Messenger and the believers. He responded, "He was present at Badr; do you realize that God looked down at those who took part at Badr and said, 'Do whatever you wish, for I have forgiven you!'"

Al-Bukhari’s text reads, "Is he not of those at Badr? Perhaps God looked down on those present there and said, 'Do whatever you wish, for I have guaranteed you heaven, and I have forgiven you.' Tears came to the eyes of Umar, and he said, 'God and his Messenger know best.'"

Muslim related from Qutayba, from al-Layth, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, that a slave belonging to Ḥātit went to complain to the Messenger of God (SAAS) about his master, saying, "O Messenger of God, Ḥātit will certainly go to hell!" The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "You lie; he will not go there! He was present at Badr and at al-Ḥudaybiyya."

Imām Aḥmad stated, "Sulaymān b. Dāʾūd related to us, quoting Abū Bakr b. ʿAyāsh; and al-Aʿmash related to me, from Abū Sufyān, from Jābir, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'No man who was present at Badr or al-Ḥudaybiyya will go to hell!'"

Aḥmad was alone in giving this, but it accords with the norms established by Muslim.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Yazīd related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Salama, from ʿAskim b. Abū al-Nujūd, from Abū Ṣāliḥ, from Abū Hurayra who quoted the Prophet (SAAS) as saying, "God looked down at those present at Badr and said, ‘Do what you wish, for I have forgiven you.’"

Abū Dāʾūd related it from Ahmad b. Sinān and Mūsā b. Ismāʿīl, both of them quoting Yazīd b. Ḥārūn.
Al-Bazzārz related in his musnad,⁷⁵ "Muḥammad b. Marzūq related to us, quoting Abū Ḥudhayfa, quoting ʿIkrima, from Yaḥyā b. Abū Kathīr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, who said, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, "I certainly hope that no one who was present at Badr goes to hell, if God wills it so."'"

Al-Bazzārz then commented, "We know of no other line of transmission of this hadith from Abū Hurayra other than this."

I comment that al-Bazzārz alone gives this hadith, and the other authorities did not cite it. It does accord with the criteria for sahih traditions. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated, in his chapter on the presence of the angels at Badr, "Ishaq b. İbrahim related to us, quoting Jarir, from Yaḥyā b. Saʿd, from Muṣṭafā b. Rifaʿa b. Rāfī al-Zurqī, from his father who was present at Badr, who said, 'Gabriel came to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and asked him, "How do you view those of you who were present at Badr?" He replied, "As among the very finest Muslims" or he used some such phrase."

"He (Gabriel?) then stated, 'And likewise those of the angels who were present at Badr.'"

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this hadith.

ON THE ARRIVAL OF ZAYNAB, DAUGHTER OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS), AS AN EMIGRANT FROM MECCA TO MEDINA A MONTH AFTER THE BATTLE OF BADR IN FULFILLMENT OF THE CONDITION PLACED UPON HER HUSBAND BY THE PROPHET (ṢAAS).

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When Abū al-ʿAṣ returned to Mecca, he having been released, as related above, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent for Zayd b. Ḥāritha and a Helper and told them, 'Go to the Yaʾṣūj valley and stay there until Zaynab passes by, then bring her to me.'

"They left and took up their position, it being at that time approximately one month after the battle of Badr.

"When Abū al-ʿAṣ reached Mecca he ordered Zaynab to join her father and she went off to equip herself for the journey."

Ibn Ishāq continued, "Abū ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me as follows, 'I was told that Zaynab said, 'While I was getting things ready Hind, daughter of Utba, met me and said, 'O daughter of Muḥammad, haven't I heard that you are planning to join your father?' It wasn't my idea,' I told her, and she commented, 'Well then, cousin, don't do it; but if you need anything to take on the trip or money to reach your father, I can provide it. Don't be reluctant with me, for women don't let such matters come between them, as men do.' I really thought she would do as she had said, but I was afraid of her and denied I had any such plans.'"

⁷⁵. A collection of traditions arranged by lines of their transmission.
Ibn Ishaq went on, "So she continued making plans and when she was ready her husband's brother Kinâna b. al-Rabi' brought a camel which she mounted and he, taking his bow and his quiver, led her away, she riding in a howdah and it being daytime. Some of the Quraysh men discussed this and followed after her, catching up with her at Dhū Ṭuwa. The first man to reach her was Ḥabbar b. al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib b. Asad b. 'Abd al-Uzza al-Fihri. He scared her with his spear as she was there in the howdah and because, as they claim, she was pregnant at the time, she suffered a miscarriage. Her brother-in-law then knelt down and took the arrows from his quiver, saying, 'By God, if any man comes near me, I'll put an arrow into him!' The men drew away from him.

"Then Abū Sufyān arrived with some other Quraysh leaders and said, 'Put down your arrows so we can talk with you.' He did so and Abū Sufyān drew near him and said, 'You have not done well. You came forth with a woman openly, going over peoples' heads, even though you're aware of the injury and damage done us by Muḥammad. When you took away his daughter, openly and regardless of anyone else, the people thought this was due to the humiliation we have undergone, and that this reflected our weakness and incapacity. I swear we don't want to keep her from her father and we're not after revenge, but you'd better return with the woman until the talk dies down and everyone says we have brought her back. Then you can secretly take her away to her father.' And so he did."

Ibn Ishaq related that Hind spoke the following verse criticizing those men who brought Zaynab back to Mecca,

"In peacetime, they're wild young asses, fearless and violent, but in war they're like women having periods!"

"She is also said to have spoken this line to those who returned from Badr after some of their force had been killed."

Ibn Ishaq went on, "Zaynab stayed there for some days until the gossip had subsided and then Kinâna conducted her away by night and delivered her over to Zayd b. Ḥāritha and his companion. They then took her by night to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)."

Al-Bayhaqi related in the Dala'il (The Signs), giving a path of transmission through 'Umar b. 'Abd Allâh b. 'Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from 'Urwa, quoting 'A'isha, the story of Zaynab's departure from Mecca and being brought back and having a miscarriage. His account relates that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sent Zayd b. Ḥāritha off with a ring of his that she could use to arrive to him. Zayd then presented it to a shepherd from Mecca who gave the ring to Zaynab. When she saw it she recognized it and asked him who had given it to him, and he replied that it was someone on the outskirts of Mecca. Zaynab then left Mecca by night and rode behind Zayd who brought her to Medina.

(The account states), "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) used to say, 'She was the best of my daughters who suffered on my account.'"
“This comment reached ʿAli b. al-Ḥusayn b. Zayn al-ʿĀbidin, who then went to Urwa and asked him, ‘What is this hadith I hear you have been relating?’ Urwa replied, ‘By God, I really wouldn’t diminish ʿĀṭima’s reputation for all the world, and moreover, I’ll never relate that again!’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “On that subject, it was either ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāha or Abū Khaythama, brother of the Banū Sālim b. ʿAwf” — Ibn Hishām said it was Abū Khaythama — “who spoke the following verses,

‘There has reached me unimaginable information about Zaynab’s evil, terrible treatment by them.
But by their expelling her over a battle, there being a fierce war between us, Muḥammad was not disgraced.
By his alliance with Ḍamām and by making war on us, Abū Sufyān has earned only spite and regret,
We bound his son ʿAmr and the man pledged to him in strong, well-wrought fetters,
I swore we will never lack forces well-trained and numerous with which
We will terrify the heathen Quraysh, attacking them again and again, placing muzzles over their noses and branding them,
We will expel them up into Najd and Nakhla, and if they descend we will follow down on horse and foot,
For ever, our forces never going astray; we will make them follow in the tracks of Ṭād and Jurhum.
Those who did not obey Muḥammad will regret their actions and how they will repent indeed!
Tell Abū Sufyān, if you do meet him, “If you do not accept Islam and bow down sincerely,
Then welcome that disgrace soon coming to you in this life, and that mantle of tar for ever upon you in hell!””

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The ‘man pledged’ to Abū Sufyān referred to by the poet was ʿAmr b. al-Ḥadrāmī.” Ibn Hishām stated, “It was really ʿUqba b. ʿAbd al-Ḥarīth b. al-Ḥadrāmī; ʿAmr b. al-Ḥadrāmī was killed at Badr.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb related to me, from Bukayr b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-ʿAshajj, from Sulaymān b. Yasār, from Abū Ishaq al-Dawsī, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent out a raiding party of which I was one, and told us, “If you capture Ḥabār b. al-Aswād and the other man who caught up with Zaynab, then burn them in fire!”
“The next day he sent us a message saying, “I told you to burn those two men if you took them. But then I saw that no one should burn anyone by fire except God, Almighty and Glorious is He; so if you take them, then kill them both.”’”

Ibn Ishaq alone gave this hadith, which conforms to criteria of the sahīth collections, though not cited therein.
Al-Bukhārī stated, “Qutayba related to us, quoting al-Layth, from Bukayr, from Sulaymān b. Yasār, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent us on a mission and told us, “If you should find so-and-so and so-and-so, then burn them in the fire.” Later, as we were about to leave, he told us, “I ordered you to burn them in the fire; but only God punishes by the fire, so if you find them, execute them.””"

Ibn Ishaq related that Abū al-‘Āṣ remained an unbeliever in Mecca while Zaynab resided with her father in Medina. This was the situation until, shortly before the conquest (of Mecca) Abū al-‘Āṣ left on a business trip on behalf of Quraysh. On his way back from Syria a raiding party met and overcame his caravan, and took all they had, though he escaped. He then went by night to his wife Zaynab and asked protection from her, which she gave him.

“When, next morning, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth for the prayer and spoke the words, Allāhu Akbar, God is most Great! and the people repeated this, someone cried out from the women's ranks, “O people, I have given protection to Abū al-‘Āṣ b. al-Rabi’!”

“When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had finished the prayer, he turned to the worshippers and asked, ‘Did you hear what I heard?’ ‘Yes, we did,’ they answered. He then said, ‘I swear by Him who holds the soul of Muḥammad in His hands, I heard nothing of this until I heard it when you did. And the lowest ranked Muslim may give protection on behalf of all.’

“He then went to his daughter Zaynab and said to her, ‘Daughter, treat him with honour; but let him not come close to you, for you are not lawful to him.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sent word that what had been taken from him should be returned, and they did so, keeping nothing back.

“Abū al-‘Āṣ then took it and returned with it to Mecca. There he paid off each person to whom he had a debt, making sure that he had omitted no one. He asked them, ‘Quraysh, do I owe any of you money you have not yet received?’ They responded, ‘No, may God reward you well! We have found you to be fair and honourable.’

“Then said, ‘I now bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is His servant and His Messenger. I swear that the only thing that prevented my accepting Islam while I was with him was my concern that you would think that I was doing so only to appropriate your property. God having returned it to you and I being free of it, I now accept Islam.’

“He then returned to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Dāʾūd b. al-Ḥusayn related to me, from Ḥikra, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned Zaynab to her former marriage without further ceremony.”

This hadith was related by Imām Ahmad, Abū Dāʾūd al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Mājah from an account given by Ibn Ishaq. Al-Tirmidhī stated, “There is nothing wrong with its chain of authorities.”
However, we do not know the provenance of this hadith. It probably derived from the memory of Da'ud b. al-Ḥusayn. Al-Suhayli stated, “As far as I know, none of the legal scholars vouched for it.”

In one reading the words used are, “and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned her to him after six years.” And in another, “after two years, by the first marriage.” Ibn Jarir related it in this form. Yet another reading states, “he did not effect a marriage.”

This hadith has caused difficulties for many scholars. Their basic premise is that if a woman is a Muslim while her husband is an unbeliever, and this is the situation before the consummation, then the disunion should occur immediately. If, however, this occurs after the consummation of the marriage, then he ought to wait out the ‘idda period. If he should accept Islam during that period then her marriage to him would continue. If he had not accepted Islam by the time that period had concluded, then her marriage would be dissolved.

Zaynab, God bless her, had become a Muslim when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) received his mission, and emigrated one month after Badr. Muslim women were declared forbidden to polytheists in the year of Ḥudaybiyya, 6 AH, while Abu al-ʿAṣ accepted Islam before the conquest (of Mecca) in 8 AH.

Therefore those who state that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned her to him after six years, that is from the date of her emigration, are correct. And those who say it was after two years, that is two years after Muslim women were forbidden to polytheists, are also correct.

By any calculation it is obvious that the conclusion of her ‘idda period would have occurred during this period which was at least two years, or thereabouts, following the forbidding of Muslim women to unbelievers, and so the question remains how he could have returned her to him by the first marriage.

Some suggest that it is conceivable that her ‘idda period had not ended, and that this story relates to an oath that must be presumed. Some scholars oppose this hadith with the previous one related by Ahmad, al-Tirmidhi, and Ibn Majah, from one of al-Ḥajjaj b. Arqa, from ‘Amr b. Shuʿayb, from his father, from his grandfather, which has the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returning his daughter to Abu al-ʿAṣ after a new dowry and a new wedding ceremony.

Imam Ahmad stated, “This hadith is weak and unfounded, and al-Ḥajjaj did not hear it from ‘Amr b. Shuʿayb, but rather from Muḥammad b. Ubayd Allāh al-ʿArzami. And the hadith of al-ʿArzami are worthless. The truth is that which related that the Prophet (ṢAAS) affirmed her in her first marriage.”

Al-Dārqrutni maintained the same, saying, “This hadith lacks foundation; it is the hadith of Ibn ʿAbbas that is correct, namely, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned her to him by the first marriage.”

76. The period of waiting prescribed for a woman in Islamic law between the conclusion of one marriage and the commencement of another.
Al-Tirmidhi stated, “This hadith has a controversial chain of authorities. Scholars therefore maintain that when a woman accepts Islam, and her husband does so later, then he is entitled to reconcile with her during the ‘idda period. This is the view of Mālik, al-Awza‘ī, al-Shāfi‘ī, Ahmad and Ishāq. Others state that it is obvious that her ‘idda period was over. And that those who relate his having renewed her marriage are on weak grounds.”

Regarding the case of Zaynab and the above circumstances, here is evidence that if a woman accepts Islam and her husband becomes a Muslim later, her ‘idda period having expired, then her marriage is not thereby nullified. It becomes a matter of choice whether she wishes to marry someone else or to bide her time and wait for her husband to accept Islam, whenever that might be. And she will still be his wife if she has not remarried.

There is force and good in this from the legal viewpoint. But God knows best.

Testimony in favour of this is given by al-Bukhārī when he states, “Regarding the marriage of non-believing women who become Muslims and the period of their ‘idda, Ibrāhīm b. Mūsā related to us, quoting Hishām, from Ibn Jarsh, from ‘Aṭā‘, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the polytheists had two different kinds of relationship with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the believers, depending upon whether they were enemies fighting and being fought or those with whom there was a mutual non-aggression pact. If a woman were to leave the declared enemy, she could not become engaged until she had had a period and become cleansed. Once cleansed, marriage to her would be permitted. If her husband were to leave (polytheism) before she remarried, then she could be returned to him. If slaves, whether male or female, should leave polytheism, then they would become free and would have the same rights as other Emigrants.”

He then quoted from reliable authorities accounts similar to the hadith of Mujāhid.

This is what he stated, to the letter.

His statement, “if a woman were to leave the declared enemy she could not become engaged until she had had a period and had become cleansed” necessitates that she be considered free after one period, not three menses; one group of authorities accepts this view.

And his statement, “if her husband were to leave polytheism before she remarried, then she could be returned to him,” necessitates that even if he left after her being considered free, following the ‘idda period, that she would be returned to her first husband provided she had not married someone else. This is clearly the case for Zaynab, daughter of the Prophet (SAAS), and this is accepted by some scholars. But God knows best.

Section: Verses composed about the glorious battle of Badr.

These include the following given by Ibn Ishāq quoting Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib. Ibn Hishām declared these verses inauthentic:
“Did you not see one of time’s great wonders? And to destiny there are causes clear to see.
It was nothing but a people destroying themselves, perishing by advising towards disrespect and disbelief.
One evening they went forth with their forces towards Badr, being fate’s pawns destined for its water hole.
We had sought for the caravan, desiring nothing else, but they advanced towards us and destiny made us meet.
And when we clashed we did not wish to retreat but only to strike with well-made blades,
And to strike off heads with their edges, weapons that shone as they made their mark.
We left the evil ‘Urba lying there, and Shayba among the dead who dropped into the pit.
And ‘Amr fell dead among those of their guard who fell, and the clothes of mourning women were rent for ‘Amr,
The clothes of women of Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib, noble women, shedding tears more abundantly than the Fihr.
Those were people killed in their error, and they abandoned a banner not brought there for victory,
The banner of error, whose forces Satan was leading; he betrayed them – the evil one engages in deception.
He told them, having seen the matter clearly, ‘I am quit of you. I have no endurance today.
And I see what you do not; I fear God’s punishment, and God has power.’
He led them to doom and they were embroiled, for he had knowledge unknown to them.
On the morning of the battle at the well they were a thousand strong, while we were 300, shining like fine young horses Among us were God’s forces, helping us at that place whose reputation will always be famous.
Gabriel attacked them beneath our banner in that battle where their destiny would come.”

Ibn Ishaq also quoted their reply composed by al-Ḥarīth b. Hishām, but we have deliberately omitted this.

‘Ali b. Ābu Ṭalib spoke the following verses, though these are disputed by Ibn Hishām:

“Did you not see that God put His Messenger to the test, as one tests someone well-loved, respected and good,
By which He reduced the unbelievers to humiliation; they encountered the shame of capture and death,
And so the Messenger of God’s victory was glorious; God’s Messenger was sent with justice.
He brought a furqān, clear evidence, from God, its verses clear to all of intelligence,

Some believed in that and were convinced, becoming — praise be to God — fully united,

While others denied and were confused and God on His throne compounded their agitation.

At the battle of Badr He delivered them over to His Messenger, giving him a raging force, their actions superb,

Their hands bearing and wielding fine swords that they had furished, smoothed and polished.

Many young, brave warriors they have felled, as well as others mature and courageous, Wakeful the eyes of their women mourning them, their tears flowing fast and slow.

In bereavement they weep for ʿUtbā the misguided and for his son, lamenting for Shayba and ʿAbn Jahl.

And for him whose leg was severed,77 and for Ibn Ḫudān, garbed in mourning clothes, dry-mouthed, grieving,

A group of the men dropped into the pit at Badr, men who had been unselfish both in battle and in times of famine.

Falsehood had called to them and they had answered, for falsehood has paths easily travelled.

And so they sacrificed before the house of hell, far removed now from mischief-making and enmity, in its deepest depths.”

Ibn Ḳaḥfa also gives their response to these verses, but we have deliberately omitted them here.

Ka'b b. Mālik stated,

“I was amazed at what God did, and God has power to do what He wills, there being none able to overcome God.

He had decreed that at Badr we would confront a group who had acted in evil; the path of evil leads men to doom.

They had so gathered and assembled their allies that their force was huge,

And they came at us, none else, all of Ka'b and ʿAmir united,

While with us was the Messenger of God, with Aws about him, they providing him a strong, victorious fortress,

With the Banū al-Najjār under his banner, advancing in their flexible armour, while the dust flew.

When we clashed with them all our warriors were heroic, stoic and protective of their comrades.

77. The reference is presumably to al-Aswad b. ʿAbd al-Asad, whose leg was cut off at the cistern.
We saw that there is no Lord but God, and that the Messenger of God was making truth plain,
Our light, naked swords were like firebrands that someone wielded before your eyes,
With them we destroyed their force and they scattered, and those who were evil met their doom.
Abū Jahl was cast down dead upon his face and I left Utba staggering.
Shayba and al-Taymi I left dead in the tumult, and all of these had disbelieved in Him of the throne,
And so they became fuel for fire in its abode (hell), and all who disbelieve are moving towards hell.
It will consume them, its fires stoked with molten metal and rock.
The Messenger of God had told them to come forward, but they had turned away, calling him a sorcerer.
All this for a purpose God had willed, that they perish by it; and there is no diverting any command God decreed.”

Ka'b spoke the following verses about the battle of Badr:

“Has it reached Ghassân, in their far-off abode – and the best to tell of matters are those who know them well –
That Ma'add, cruel in their enmity, their young and mature alike, have attacked us,
Because we worshipped God, hoping for none but Him and for the gardens of paradise, when its leader came to us,
A Prophet, a man with a patrimony of honour and inherited qualities of veracity fed by their roots.
They advanced and so did we, meeting like lions, their roaring impossible to quiet.
We struck them until they fell in our attacks so that the greatest of Lu'ayy stank to the nose.
They fled, our sharp swords felling them, and we cared not whether it be their ancilliaries or their core forces.”

Ka'b also spoke the following verses,

“By your father’s life, O two sons of Lu'ayy, regret your pride and haughtiness,
Now that your horsemen circled at Badr but did not persist when the forces met.
We came to it with God's light illuminating and alleviating from us the obscurity of the shadows,
The Messenger of God leading us with orders from God, the ultimate decision-maker.
Your horsemen did not gain mastery at Badr and did not bring back to you any solution,
So do not rush to Abū Sufyān and watch the finest of horses come up from Kūfā,
By God’s assistance - with that of the Holy Spirit (Gabriel) and Michael included – Oh, the best of the notables!

Hassān b. Thabit spoke the following verses, though Ibn Hishām said they are also attributed to ʿAbd Allah b. al-Ḥārith al-Sahmi:

“A man wearing a fine, light chain-mail as an undergarment led them, a man steady of temperament, effective, no coward he.
I mean the Messenger of the God of creation, who favoured him above all men in his piety and goodness,
You claimed you would protect your valuables and insisted that Badr’s waters could not be reached.
Then we did reach it, not heeding your words, and we drank our fill, not stinting ourselves,
Gripping that unbreakable rope of God stretched out and well-made,
With us was the Messenger of God, with us was the truth we will follow until death, and unlimited help, Trustworthy, effective, a light-giving star, a full moon illuminating all men of valour.”

Hassān b. Thabit also said,

“Would that the people of Mecca knew how we destroyed the unbelievers in their hour of reckoning,
We killed their leaders on our battlefield and when they retired their backs were broken,
We killed Abū Jahl and ʿUtba before him, along with Shayba falling with hands outstretched for sacrifice.
We killed Suwayd, then ʿUrba after him, and Ṭuʿma too as the dust flew,
How many men we killed of nobility, leadership, respect and good repute among their people,
We left them for yelping animals to attend, later to cook in the hot depths of hell-fire.
I swear, Mālik’s horsemen and their attendants were no defence when we clashed at Badr.”

ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib spoke the following verses about Badr, concerning the loss of his leg in the competition that he, Ḥamza and ʿAlī fought with ʿUtba, Shayba and al-Walīd b. ʿUrba. Ibn Hishām considered these verses inauthentic:

“A battle will tell the people of Mecca about us, one in which even those far away embarked upon,
About 'Utba as he fled, and Shayba after him, and 'Utba's first-born also had no joy in it.

Though you cut off my leg, I am a Muslim still and by it will earn a life close to God,

With the houris like statues, set aside at the highest heaven for those up high,

For that I have exchanged a life the best of which I have known, and I rushed to it even though losing those close to me.

The All-Merciful has honoured me by his generosity with the gown of Islam that covers over my faults,

And to fight them was not distasteful to me on that morning when men called forth their peers to fight.

When they asked the Prophet, he wanted none but us, we three, so we answered the call,

We confronted them like lions, flourishing our spears, fighting for the All-Merciful those who disobeyed.

Our feet did not leave our stand, we three, until they met their fate.”

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “Hassān b. Thābit also spoke the following verses criticizing al-Ḥārith b. Hishām for fleeing at Badr and abandoning his people and not fighting for them:

'A lovely woman disturbs your heart while you sleep, reviving you while lying there with cool, smiling lips, like musk mixed with rain-water, or fine, vintage wine, like blood from sacrifice,

Her buttocks high, their cheeks rising, carefree and not prone to oath-swearing.

Her body is built at the waist as though boneless, when she sits it becomes like a mortar of marble,

She is seductive as she moves to her bed, her body gorgeous, her figure superb.

In daytime I never tire of thinking of her, while at night my dreams of her excite me.

I swore I would forget her and think of her no more until my bones disappear in the grave.

Could a generous woman reproach for foolishness? I reject being blamed for my passion.

She came to me early, at dawn when I was newly awake, life's cares just intruding upon me.

She claimed that a man suffers all his life from a lack of a plentitude of camels.

If you were lying in what you told me, then may you avoid the lot of al-Ḥārith b. Hishām.
He left his beloved ones to fight for them, and fled by giving his steed free rein.

It outstripped the fine horses in the desert, with the speed of a rock on a rope descending a well, Joyfully it sped away with him, while his friends lay prostrate there in a terrible state.

His brothers and people locked in battle in which God was giving his support to the Muslims.

God fulfils His purpose, and so the war, its flames flaring on them, ground them to dust.

If not for God and the horses’ racing, they would have left him for the beasts, and for them to tread underfoot.

There were some who were captive and firmly bound, like an eagle defending itself against the spears.

And others who lay prostrate, answering no call, until the highest mountains might cease to exist.

In shame and clear humiliation when he saw the swords’ blades driving off all the chiefs,

Swords held by noblemen, great lords whose ancestry lines can be traced and found blemish-free, Swords that flash like lightning when striking iron in the gloom beneath the rain clouds.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “We have omitted three verses from the ending of the above poem since I found them obscene.”

He went on, “He was answered by al-Ḥārith b. Hishām, brother of Abū Jahl ‘Amr b. Hishām, who spoke the following verses:

‘The people well know that I did not abandon their battle until they had covered my horse with red foam.

I knew that if I battled on alone I would be killed, yet my martyrdom would not harm my enemy.

And so I left them, my friends among them, intending to bring them punishment some other terrible day.’”

Ḥassān also said,

“O Ḥārith, you acted badly, not like someone to be relied upon, at the battle, at the time for noble valour,

When you rode a swift-footed thoroughbred, fast and long-flanked.

Your people left behind you, you having quit the battle, hoping for escape when it was no time to leave.

Had you not compassion for your brother, lying there pierced with spears and plundered?

The Almighty had hastened to him, destroying his force in base dishonour and terrible punishment.”

Ḥassān also spoke the following,
“Quraysh learned at Badr, that day of captive-taking and terrible fighting,
That we were the war’s champions at that battle of Abu al-Walid, when the long spears clashed,
We fought both sons of Rabī‘a when they came at us dressed in double suits of chain-mail,
With which Ḥakīm fled on that day when the Banū al-Najjār wheeled in battle like lions.
Whereupon the Fihr forces ran away, little Ḥarīth giving them up from a distance,
You met humiliation and death that came quickly, penetrating beneath the jugular.
All the force fled together, caring nothing for their inherited honour.”

Hind, daughter of Uthātha b. Ṣā‘d b. al-Muṭṭalib, spoke the following elegy for ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥarīth b. al-Muṭṭalib:

“It was ʿUbayda who ensured glory, leadership and a well-bred gentility full of intelligence and wisdom, Weep for him, a towering mountain visible from afar, for guests and for widows bent over dishevelled infants.
Mourn him for the masses every winter when the sky’s horizons turn red with the drought, Mourn him for the orphans when the storms blow, for whom he would heat a pot that would boil and foam,
And if the light of its fires died down, he would relight it with cut sticks, Mourn him for those who would knock during the night, or those seeking food, or the travellers he would comfort.”

Al-Umawi stated in his work on the maghāzi, the early military expeditions, “Ṣā‘d b. Quṭn related to me as follows: ʿĀtika, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib spoke the following verses about the visions she saw, and in commemoration of the battle of Badr:

“Were my visions not true, now that a fugitive fleeing from the force brings you its interpretation? He saw and brought you the certainty he had seen with his own eyes; swords striking do not lie.
You spoke; I did not lie to you, rather it was those who lied who charged me with lying.
He came back in flight for fear of death, Ḥakīm, knowing no other way out.
Indian swords were there in front of your heads, along with spears glinting and victorious,
As though flames of fire on their edges when the raging lions charged.
I swear by my father, the day of the rendezvous with Muhammad, when with the help of wars the upper flanks were bitten,

Your souls were drawn forth with whetted swords in fighting as the South winds draw the clouds along.

Many were the covetous who were chilled by his swords, while stable watering-holes were made to shake.

What does it mean for those slain to be in the pit and for their like to be kept captive by my cousin and not to fight,

They being like women? Or did God bring some end to their spirits that took effect, for an end does come.

How did Muhammad’s cousins feel when they met in battle? Warfare certainly brings its trials.

Did he not surprise you with blows that would shock even a coward, making stars appear in full day?

I swear that if they repeat this we will overwhelm them with oceans of death through which the horsemen will race,

As though the light of the sun is the reflection of the edges of their swords, emitting light in conjunction and as a covering.”

‘Atika also spoke the following, according to al-Umawi’s account,

"Why could you not persevere against the Prophet Muhammad at Badr?

Who is able to overcome, with true perseverance, the tumult (of war)?

You did not respond to the thin sword blades sharp in the hands of the believers,

You failed to stand firm against the swords, until you suffered but little at the hands of the Believers.

You fled in haste, yet heroes do not flee from the weapons’ impact when they do battle.

He brought you what the prophets before him also brought.

And my nephew, that good and truthful man, is certainly not a poet.

Let it be enough what you have lost from your prophet; instead, the two tribes of ‘Amr and ‘Amir are helping him to victory.”

Ṭālib b. Abū Ṭalib spoke the following verses in praise of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and in mourning for those of his tribe of Quraysh who were dropped into the pit. He was still following his people’s old religion at that time:

"My eyes send forth floods of tears, weeping for Ka‘b though seeing them not.

In the battles Ka‘b betrayed one another and fate overwhelmed them, for they had sinned,
And this day 'Amir lament their misfortunes; how I would wish to see them at hand!

They are my brothers, their parentage above suspicion, and one under their protection would never be harmed.

Our brothers 'Abd Shams and Nawfal, may I be your ransom! Do not excite war between us!

Do not become, following love and friendship, mere tales you all fill with complaint.

Do you not know how it was with the war of Dahis, and that of Abū Yaksūm when they filled the defile?

Were it not for the protection of God and Him alone, you would have ended by not defending your people.

We in Quraysh have committed no great sin, but merely protected the best man who ever trod the earth,

A man of trust and a support in troubles, a man noble in repute, neither miserly not evil.

Supplicants resort to him, crowding his door, seeking a river that never fails nor dries up.

By God, my soul will always be sad and ill at ease until you smite Khazraj full well."

DIVISION

Ibn Ishaq quoted much fine poetry of the polytheists in which they mourn their dead at the battle of Badr.

One poem he gives is that of Dirār b. al-Khaṭṭāb b. Mirdās, a brother of the Banū Muḥarib b. Fīhr. He eventually accepted Islam; al-Suhaylī wrote in his work al-Rawād (The Meadows) about the verses of those poets who later became Muslims:

"I am amazed at the pride of Aws, for tomorrow fate will turn against them, and destiny can be foreseen,

And at that of the Banū al-Najjār, though a group were struck down at Badr, all of whom there being fine men,

Even if some of our men were left there dead, we have others after them yet to be so left.

Our swift horses will carry us in your midst, O Banū al-Aws, until vengeance quiets our spirits.

Amidst the Banū al-Najjār we will charge, panting beneath the mail-clad spearsmen.

We will leave corpses with vultures circling above them and with only their hopes to give them aid.

The women of Yathrib will mourn them who will have passed sleepless nights there.

And that is because our swords will keep hacking at them, dripping with the blood of those they struck."
Even though you are victorious at the battle of Badr, it was only due to Ahmad, and that is plain, that you won. And due to those fine champions who were his supporters who gave protection in the heat of battle, with death all around.

Abū Bakr and Ḥamza are counted among them, and Āli could be named amidst those you remember. It is those men, not those from whose abodes came the Aws and the Najjār, whom you should vaunt, Rather those whose ancestors were Luʿayy b. Ghālib, Kaʾb and Āmir, if lineage be considered. It was they, the finest and the most important on the morning of battle who repelled the cavalry at every fight."

Kaʾb b. Mālik replied to this with his ode given above, which begins:

"I was amazed at what God did, and God has power to do what He wills, there being none able to overcome God."

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Abū Bakr, his full name being Shaddād b. al-Aswad b. Shuʿūb (and here I comment that al-Bukhārī tells that he had a child by the ex-wife of Abū Bakr, ‘the Trusting’, after the latter had divorced her, that being when God had made non-believing women forbidden to Muslims. Her name was Umm Bakr) spoke the verses, ‘Umm Bakr greeted me with peace, but now my people are gone, can I ever have peace?

What of the pit, the pit of Badr, how can there be for me singers and fine friends with whom to drink?
What of the pit, the pit of Badr, how can there be for me plates piled high with fine meat?
What of the grave, the grave of Badr, how many grazing camels and cattle will you enjoy henceforth?
What of the grave, the grave of Badr, and great ambitions, fine gifts.
What of the friends; of that fine man Abū Āli, my brother of the generous glass and companionship!
Were you to see Abū ʿAqīl and the fighters at the Naʿām pass,
Then you would be as distraught as the mother bereft of a camel newborn,
The messenger informs us that we shall live, but what life is there for corpses and heads?" 78

I would comment that al-Bukhārī quoted some of this in his sahih collection to demonstrate the poet’s state of mind.

78. Guillaume offers an interesting comment on the word ṣadaʾ, here translated as “heads” (plural), relating it to an ancient Arabian belief that an owl-like bird, the ṣadaʾ would emerge from the head of a slain man and demand revenge for his death. Op. cit. p.353, note 2.
Ibn Ishāq stated, “Umayya b. Abū al-Šalt spoke the following verses expressing his lament for those of Quraysh killed at the battle of Badr:

‘Have you not wept over those noble men, sons of nobles, worthy of praise,
Mourning like doves on swaying, pliant branches,
Weeping as they coo softly as they return at night.
The women who mourn are like them, the hired women who wait.
Whoever mourns for them does so in sorrow and whoever praises them speaks true.
What chieftains, what great leaders there were at Badr and al-Šaqāq, And at Murāfi al-Barqayn, and at al-Ḥānān by the side of al-Šawāšī, Mature men and youthful were there, in nights of raiding, and strong men too,
Do you not see what I see, plain for all who look on?
The Mecca valley has changed, its plains now deserted,
By every prince and prince’s son, pure in friendship, confident,
Frequent visitors at the gates of kings, eminent men defeating the deserts.
Men of broad necks, tall and well-built, influential and successful,
Men who say, do and order all things proper,
Who serve rich meat piled high above the bread,
Men who pass around dish after dish after dish big as pools,
Not mere nothings for those who are guests, plates not merely flat,
Serving guest after guest after guest from huge platters,
Men who give as gifts hundreds of the pregnant camels they own to hundreds of friends,
Driving the herds of camels over to the others coming forth from Baladī, Their men of nobility having qualities outweighing other nobles on the scale. Like the weights on a scale being held down by the measurer,
One group deserted them while they were busy protecting things open to shame,
Men who struck blows against the vanguard with their Indian-made broadswords,
Their voices hurt me as they cried out, some for water, others in pain.
May God reward all the tribes of 'Ali, whether widowed or married,
If they do not attack so fiercely that all the barking dogs slink home.
On horses trained for journeys short or long, their heads held high and accompanying the unsubmitting ones. Brave men on fine horses as though attacking fierce, scowling lions.
Each combatant meets his foe as though merely walking to shake his hand,
About a thousand or a thousand more, some lancers, some in chain-mail."

Ibn Hishām stated, "We have omitted from this poetry two lines that impugn the Companions of the Messenger of God, may God be pleased with them."

I would comment that this is the poetry of a man who is feeble-minded and degenerate, a man whose ignorance and limited intelligence led him to praise the polytheists and to damn the believers. He expressed affection in Mecca for Abū Jahl b. Hishām and other accursed unbelievers and ignorant and insignificant persons, but felt none for God's servant, Messenger and true friend, the pride of mankind, none for him whose face was more luminous than the moon, a man possessed of perfect knowledge, complete intelligence, none for God's trustworthy Companion who is ready to give trust, a man eager for good works and honourable deeds, a man willing to spend thousands and hundreds more in obedience to the Lord of the earth and of the heavens.

And similar praise can be given to the rest of his noble and eminent Companions who emigrated from the abode of disbelief and ignorance to that of knowledge and Islam. May God be pleased with them all as long as light and dark intermingle, and as long as the days and the nights follow one another in succession.

We have omitted many poems quoted by Ibn Ishāq, God bless him, due to our fear of being long-winded and tiresome. There is enough in the poetry we have given. And to God is all praise and credit.

Al-Umawī has stated in his work on the military expeditions, as follows, "I heard my father say, and Sulaymān b. Arqam related to us, from Ibn Sirin, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (SAA) expressed forgiveness for the poetry before Islam. Sulaymān said, "Al-Zuhři reported that, saying, 'He forgave it all except for two odes; one was the words of Umayya in which he recalled those fallen at Badr, and the poem of al-A'šā in which he made reference to a man with sunken eyes.'"

This is a strange hadith. And this Sulaymān b. Arqam is to be disregarded. But God knows best.
Section: On the expedition against the Banū Sulaym in the second year after the emigration of the Prophet (SAAS).

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished with Badr by the end of Ramaḍān or in Shawwāl.

“He remained only seven nights in Medina before he himself conducted an expedition against the Banū Sulaym.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He placed Sibā‘ b. Urfaṭa al-Ghifārī, or Ibn Umm Maktūm, the blind, in charge of Medina.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “He reached one of their wells at a place called al-Kadr, where he stayed for three days before returning to Medina without engaging in battle. He remained there for the rest of Shawwāl and Dhū al-Qa‘dā and it was while he stayed there that he accepted ransom for the majority of the Quraysh captives.”

Section: On the expedition against al-Sawiq in Dhū al-Ḥiijja that year, it also being known as the expedition to Qarqarat al-Kadr.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “The word al-qarqara means ‘smooth ground’. The word al-kadr refers to a bird whose colours are dingy.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “According to what I was told by Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr and Yazīd b. Rūmān, as well as by others whose word I do not doubt, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb b. ʿAbd al-Malik, one of the most knowledgeable of the Helpers, that when ʿAḥad Allāh b. Kaʿb b. ʿAbd al-Malik, one of the most knowledgeable of the Helpers, that when Abū Sufyān and later the captives of Quraysh returned to Mecca, he swore that he would abstain from intercourse until he had carried out an attack against Muḥammad.

“He therefore went forth with 200 mounted warriors of Quraysh to fulfil his oath. He travelled along the Nejd road and stopped at the head of a water-course into the mountain called Nayb which is approximately one postal stage from Medina.

“From there he went on by night to the Banū al-Naḍīr and called at the home of Huyayy b. Akhtab. He knocked on the door, but he refused to open up, being afraid. So Abū Sufyān went on to Sallām b. Mishkam, who was at that time the chief of the Banū al-Naḍīr and the custodian of their treasure. He asked to go in and was invited to do so; he was treated as a guest and given wine and food.

“When the night was over he left and returned to his companions, sending some men of Quraysh ahead. They then went on to a place in that vicinity called al-Urayd, where they burnt some young date-palms. They came across one of the Helpers and a man allied to him in a garden there, killed them both and then left again.

Ibn Hishām stated, “He left Abū Lubāba Bashīr b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir in command of Medina.”
Ibn Ishāq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) reached Qarqarat al-Kadr, but then headed back since Abū Sufyān and his companions had eluded him.

“The men with the Messenger of God (SAAS) found substantial supplies that the polytheists had discarded to lighten their load. Most of what they left behind was known as al-sawiq and this name is therefore associated with this expedition.

“The Muslims asked him whether this would be credited to them as a military expedition, and he said that it would.

“Abū Sufyān composed the following verses about these actions of his and in praise of Sallām b. Mishkam, the Jew:

‘I chose one man in Medina to ally with, and I did not regret it, though I stayed only briefly.
Sallām b. Mishkam gave me refreshment with good wine, though I was hurried.
When my force turned away I told him, to alleviate his concern, “Take pleasure in glory and in booty.
Take thought, for these men are the best, pure-bred of Lu'ayy, not of some Jurhum mixed-breed.
What happened here was merely that a rider stayed a while, one who was hungry but not needy or poor.”’”

Section: On the marriage of 'Ali b. Abū Ṭālib, God be pleased with him, to his wife Fāṭima, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

This took place in 2 AH, following the battle of Badr, according to the account given by al-Bukhārī and Muslim through al-Zuhri, from 'Ali b. al-Ḥusayn, from his father al-Ḥusayn b. 'Ali, from 'Ali b. Abū Ṭālib, who said, “I had a camel as my share of the spoils of the battle of Badr, the Prophet (SAAS) having given me one as my fifth share of what God had provided that day. When I wanted to marry Fāṭima, daughter of the Prophet (SAAS), I made an arrangement with a jeweller of the Banū Qaynuqa to travel with me and to get some sweet-smelling rushes. I wanted to sell this to the jewellers and use the proceeds for a wedding feast for my bride. I gathered green fodder, sacks and ropes, having left my two camels tied down beside the house of one of the Helpers. When I had finished gathering things together, I found to my surprise that their humps had been sliced open, their flanks cut and their livers removed. I could scarcely believe my eyes at this sight. I asked who had done this and was told that it might well have been Ḥamza b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭālib who was there in that house drinking with some of the Helpers, accompanied by his songstress and some friends. She was singing,

‘O Ḥamza who cuts down the camels.’

79. This word refers to a mush-like dish made of wheat and barley.
“On hearing this, Ḥamza had jumped up for his sword, sliced open their humps, cut open their sides and removed their livers.”

‘Alī went on, “So I went off to see the Prophet (ṢAAS) who was with Zayd b. Ḥāritha. He knew something had happened to me and asked what was wrong. I replied by telling him what Ḥamza had done and where he was drinking.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then called for his cloak, put it on and walked away with myself and Zayd b. Ḥāritha following him. When he reached the house where Ḥamza was, he asked permission to enter and it was given. He set about upbraiding Ḥamza for what he had done, with Ḥamza before him drunk and red-eyed. Ḥamza stared towards the Prophet (ṢAAS) raising his eyes up to his knees, then to his face, whereupon he commented, ‘What are you but slaves to my father!’

This is the wording of al-Bukhārī in the Kitāb al-Maghāzi (The Book of Military Expeditions). He also gives the account in several other places in his saḥīḥ collection in various versions.

In this there is proof of the information we have given above that the spoils taken at Badr were divided into fives, contrary to what is claimed by Abū Wbayd al-Qasim b. Saˈlām in his book al-Amwāl (Monies). Therein he states that the revelation concerning division into fives only came thereafter. A number of authorities have disagreed with him in that, including al-Bukhārī and Ibn Jarir. We have made clear his mistake regarding this in our Tafsīr (Exegesis) and in our previous comments. But God knows best.

This behaviour of Ḥamza and his companions, God be pleased with them, occurred before wine was prohibited. Indeed, Ḥamza was killed at Uhud, as will be related, and that event preceded the prohibition of wine. But God knows best.

This hadith may be cited as evidence by those who maintain that anything expressed by someone drunk is of no account and without effect in such cases as divorce or the giving of testimony, or such matters, as some scholars have maintained and as is established in the Kitāb al-Ahkām (The Book of Statutes).

Imām Ahmad stated, “Sufyān related to us, from Ibn Abī Najīḥ, from his father, from a man who heard ‘Alī say, ‘I wanted to seek from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) my betrothal to his daughter but recognized that I owned nothing. But then I remembered his compassion and his relationship (to me) and so I did ask him to agree to my engagement to her.”

“He replied, ‘Do you own anything?’ “No,” I replied. “Where is your Ḥuṭāmī chain-mail I gave you on such-and-such an occasion?” he asked. I replied, “At my place.” “Well then,” he said, “give me that for her.” And so I did.’”

Ahmad relates this similarly in his hadīth collection, though in his chain of transmission there is one link who is dubious.
Abū Dāūd stated, “Ishāq b. Ismā'īl al-Ṭaliqānī related to us, quoting ‘Abda, quoting Saʿīd, from Ayyūb, from ‘Ikrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, ‘When ‘Ali married Fāṭima, God bless them both, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “Give her something.” He replied, “I have nothing.” “Where is your Ḥuṭami chain-mail?” he was asked.’”

Al-Nasā’ī related this from Hārūn b. Ishāq, from ‘Abda b. Sulaymān, from Saʿīd b. Ablī Ṣūrāb, from an account of Ayyūb al-Sakhīṭyānī.

Abū Dāūd stated, “Kathīr b. Mayd b. al-Ḥimsī related to us, quoting Abī Haywa, from Shuʿayb b. Abī Ḥamza; Ghaylān b. Anas related to me, from the people of Ḥims; and Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Ḥaḍir b. Thawbān related to me, from one of the Companions of the Prophet (ṢAAS) that when ‘Ali married Fāṭima and wanted to consummate the marriage, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prevented him from doing so until he gave her something. ‘Ali replied, ‘O Messenger of God, I have nothing.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘Give her your chain-mail.’ He did so and then went in to her.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated in al-Dalā’il (The Signs), “The ḥāfīẓ Abū ʿAbd Allāh informed us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb al-ʿĀṣamm, quoting Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, quoting Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishāq, that ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Najīḥ related, from Muḥājīd, from ‘Ali, who said, ‘I did ask the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to become engaged to Fāṭima. A freed-woman of mine asked, “Did you know that someone has asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for permission to become engaged to Fāṭima?” “No,” I replied. “Well,” she went on, “she has been asked for; but what prevents you from going to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and having him marry you?” I asked her, “Do I own anything with which to get married?” She replied, “If you go to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he will marry you.”

“She kept on encouraging me until I did go in to him. When I sat down before him, I was struck dumb, I swear, and could not speak I was so much in awe.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked me, “What brought you here? Is there something I can do for you?” I remained silent but he said, “Have you perhaps come to become engaged to Fāṭima?” “Yes, I have,” I replied. “Do you have something to give her in marriage?” he asked. “No, O Messenger of God, I don’t,” I replied. He then enquired, “What did you do with the chain-mail I provided for you?”

“Now I swear by Him who holds ‘Ali’s soul in His hand, it was just a Ḥuṭami chain-mail, not worth four dirhams. I replied, “Yes, I have it.” “Then I marry her to you for it; send it to her as her marriage payment,” he said. This, then became the dowry paid for Fāṭima, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Fāṭima bore to ‘Ali, Ḥassān, Ḥusayn and Muhṣin – the last of whom died young – Umm Kulthūm and Zaynab.”

Al-Bayhaqī then related through ʿAtīb b. al-Ṣāḥib, from his father, from ‘Ali, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave to Fāṭima as her trousseau a soft gown, a water-skin, and a leather pillow stuffed with sweet-smelling rushes.”
Al-Bayhaqi quoted from the Kitāb al-Maqāna (The Book of Knowledge) of Abū Ḥāmid ʿAbd Allāh b. Munaddah, that ʿAlī became engaged to Fāṭima one year after the hegira and that he consummated the marriage with her one year thereafter.

I would comment that by that account the consummation took place early in the third year of the hegira. However, it is obvious that the anecdote relating to the two camels must involve the period shortly after the battle of Badr, that is, as we have related, at the end of the year 2 AH. But God knows best.

Section: Reference to a variety of events that occurred in the year 2 AH.

We have given details above about the marriage of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to ʿAʾishah, mother of the believers, God bless her, and have already referred to the famous engagements that had occurred; these accounts include information on the deaths of famous men, both Muslim and polytheist.

Among those who died that year were the martyrs of the battle of Badr. These numbered 14 including both Emigrants and Helpers. Their names have been given above, as well as those of the chiefs of the Quraysh polytheists who numbered 70, as is widely known. Shortly after the battle, Abū Lahab ʿAbd al-ʿUzza b. ʿAbd al-Muttalib, God damn him, died. As is told above.

When the good news was brought to the Muslims of Medina by Zayd b. Ḥarītha and ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa concerning how God had afflicted the polytheists and given victory to the believers, they found Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), had died and they were levelling the soil on her grave.

Her husband ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān had stayed behind to nurse her, on the orders of the Prophet (ṢAAS). This is why he was given a share of the spoils of Badr and also assured his reward from God at Judgement Day.

ʿUthmān thereafter married her sister Umm Kulthūm, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); this is why he was known as dhū al-nūrayn, "he of the two lights". It is said that no man but him was married consecutively to two daughters of a prophet. May God be pleased with him and make him content.

That year the direction of prayer was changed, as we have related above. And there was an addition made to the prayer performed when in residence, as explained above.

That year fasting was prescribed, that of Ramāḍān, as related. The zakāt ḏāt al-nuṣāb and the zakāt al-fiṣr were imposed at that time.

That year the polytheists and Jews of Medina, among the Banū Qaynuqāʿ, the Banū al-Naḍlr and the Banū Qurayza who lived there, along with the Jews of the Banū Ḥarītha, pretended co-operation with the Muslims. A large number of the 80. The zakāt ḏāt al-nuṣāb (plural of a singular noun nuṣāb) is a tax payable on certain categories of possessions, provided the tax-payer possessed a defined minimum (nisāb) value of these. The zakāt al-fiṣr is an obligatory payment of provisions by all Muslims of means to the poor at the end of the fasting month of Ramāḍān.

polytheists and Jews professed Islam while secretly being hypocrites. Some did remain as they had been, while others were totally indecisive, tending first this way then the other, as God has depicted them in His Book.

Ibn Jarir stated, “In that year the Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote his al-maʿāqiṣ which were kept attached to his sword.”

Ibn Jarir stated, “It is said that al-Ḥasan, ‘Ali’s son was born that year.”

He went on, “Al-Wāqidi, however, claimed that Ibn Abī Sabra related to him, from Ishāq b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Abī Jaʿfar, that ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭālib consummated his marriage with Fāṭima in the month of Dhū al-Ḥijja that year.

“And if that account is true, then the former one is inaccurate.”

81. The word refers to arrangements concerning the payment of the bloodwit in the case of murder or manslaughter.
ABBREVIATIONS AND NAME-RELATED TERMS

Abū means father. According to Arabic grammatical rules, this word changes to Abī when governed by a preceding word. While, therefore, Abū Ṭalib would mean Ṭalib’s father, when the word Ibn, son, is prefixed to the name, the form changes to Abī, and so Ibn Abī Ṭalib, would mean ‘the son of Ṭalib’s father’. To avoid confusion in this text, however, the term is left here universally as Abū.

The letters ‘al-’ before a noun represent in Arabic the definite article, ‘the’.

The letter b. when part of a name represents a shortened form of the word ‘Ibn’, ‘son’. Thus, the name ‘Ya’qūb b. ‘Utba’ means ‘Ya’qūb, son of ‘Utba’. In a composite name, as are often given in this text, such as ‘Ya’qūb b. ‘Utba b. al-Mughīra b. al-Akhnas’ the names of Ya’qūb’s father, grandfather, and great-grandfather are given.

The letters bt. a shortened form of the Arabic bint, indicates ‘girl’ or ‘daughter’. Thus the name ‘A’īsha bt. Abū Bakr refers to ‘A’īsha, daughter of Abū Bakr.

The letters ŠAAS are inserted after mention of the Prophet Muḥammad. These letters stand for the Arabic words ʿalla Allāhu ḥlayhi ma sallām; this invocation, recited by Muslims after every reference to the Prophet, whether by name or inference, is normally translated as ‘May God’s peace and blessings be upon him’.

GLOSSARY ITEMS

Words defined in footnotes associated with the text are not generally included in this glossary.

afkhdh: plural of fakhd (q.v.).

ahdith: plural of hadith (q.v.).

agnatic: related through descent on the father’s side.

ʿālīm (pl. ʿulamāʾ): scholars or theologians of Islam.

ansār: the plural of nāṣir, helper, or victor. Most commonly met, in this text, in the plural form, it refers to the early Medinan allies of the Prophet who officially fraternized with the muhājirin, those Muslims who had initially gone into exile from Mecca to Medina in their support for Islam.

'arab al-‘āriba: the original Arabs, who are assumed to have spoken the language of Ya’rub b. Qahtān.

'arab al-mustāriba: ‘the arabized Arabs’, initially referring to those who spoke the Arabic of Ishmael, the dialects of the Hijāz, that is. The term is also applied to those not descended from the Arabs of Arabia, but who have been assimilated into Arab culture and who speak Arabic as their native tongue.

‘Arafāt (also ‘Arafā): a plain some 13 miles east of Mecca. Essential parts of the hajj pilgrimage ceremonies occur there, centered on a small granite hill, also known by the same name.

‘Ashīra (pl. ‘ashā’ir): an agnatic group. The word is commonly translated as tribe. An ‘ashīra is composed of several afkhādh (q.v.), while several ‘ashā’ir form a single qabila (q.v.).

badāna: an animal, commonly a camel, to be offered for sacrifice by a pilgrim at the hajj (q.v.).

barakā: blessing, in particular that divine force that enables prosperity and happiness. Persons of great piety or holiness are believed suffused with barakā, which radiates from them to those around them.

Bakka: an ancient alternative or original name for Mecca. In legend, the name comes from the Arabic verb baka, he wept, applied to Adam’s sadness at descending to the barren environment of Arabia after his expulsion from paradise.

baṭn (pl. butūn): an agnatic group smaller than a qabila (q.v.) but larger than a fākhādh (q.v.).

dafṣ: the word used to denote the act of departure from ‘Arafāt during the pilgrimage rites.

fākhādh (pl. afkhādh): a group of several families claiming descent from the same ancestor.

al-fajr: the dawn; also the superogatory prayer, recommended but not required, performed immediately after dawn. It consists of two rakʿāt (q.v.) to be recited audibly.
faṣila (pl. faṣā'il): an agnatic group consisting of the nearest members of one's ʿashira (q.v.).

ghazwa (pl. ghazawat): armed engagements in which the Prophet Muḥammad participated personally. Those he initiated but without his own direct participation are known as sarāyya (pl. of sariyya).

ḥadīth (pl. aḥādīth): a saying, reported action or anecdote relating the words or deeds of the Prophet Muḥammad. An isnād (q.v.) precedes the ḫadīth and lists the persons by whom the reported material was transmitted.

ḥadīth marfū': a ḫadīth related by one of the Companions of the Prophet (see sāḥib) and quoted directly from the latter.

ḥāfiz (pl. ḥuṭas): a person who has memorized the entire Qurān. Also one of the sacred attributes – the Guardian, the Protector – by which God is known.

ḥajj: the pilgrimage to the holy places of Mecca set annually to take place in the first half of the month of Dhū al-Ḥijja.

ḥanif: 1) a devout pre-Islamic monotheist. 2) a person sincerely searching for the ancient religion practised by Abraham, with whom the word is particularly associated.

ḥanifiyya: the religion of Abraham and the ḥanifs.

ḥaram (or ḥarām): a term denoting what is sacred, forbidden or inviolable.

ḥijāba: the office of the custodian of the kaʿba; he is known as the ḥājib.

ḥijra (or hegira): the emigration of the Prophet Muḥammad and his supporters from Mecca into exile in Medina. The date of this event was later adopted as the commencement of the Muslim era, calculated as 622 AD.

ijāza: 1) rendering something legal or permissible. 2) the act of transmitting a ḫadīth and attributing the same to an authority without actually having heard that person recite it.

ifāda: the movement or departure of pilgrims from ʿArafát following their performance of the wuqūf, 'the standing'.

īḥrām: 1) the rendering sacred or inviolate. 2) the name given to the clothing donned by Muslims entering the īḥrām state prior to their participation in the pilgrimage.
Isnād: the prefatory material to a hadith (q.v.) that lists the sequence of scholars or witnesses who transmitted the account from the time of the Prophet Muhammad up to the time when it was written down.

Izār: the cloth that covers the pilgrim from waist to knees when he commits himself to the sacred state of ihram.

Jahiliyya: denoting childlike foolishness or ignorance, the word is commonly applied to the period prior to the advent of Islam.

Jamra (pl. Jamrāt): ancient stone pillars symbolizing Satan at Minā. These are pelted with pebbles during the pilgrimage rites, the stones being known as jamrāt.

Kabā: the ancient cube-like structure within the great mosque in Mecca positioned some feet from the sacred spring zamzam (q.v.). It is towards this site that Muslims direct their prayers (see qibla).

Al-Khalil 1) a town, also known as Hebron, some 32 miles south of Jerusalem and the site of the Tomb of the Patriarchs, sacred both to Jews and to Muslims. 2) a name or attribute implying close friend or confidant; the word is particularly associated with Abraham.

Liwāʾ: 1) a flag, banner or signpost. 2) the issuance of this to those making the pilgrimage to the kaʿba.

Maqām Ibrāhīm: the ‘station’ of Abraham. A sanctuary positioned a few feet from the kaʿba where Abraham and his co-religionaries would stand for prayer during the summer months.

Maghrib: the west or direction in which the sun sets. Also, the fourth canonical Islamic prayer performed at dusk. It consists of three rakʿāt; at the first two of these the prayers are spoken audibly, the third in silence.

Masjid: the place where the Muslim prostrates in prayer, usually a mosque.

Minā: a location some four miles east of Mecca on the road to ʿArafāt.

Hadith Mursal: a hadith which is considered by scholars to have a fault or inconsistency in the chain of its transmission.

Al-Muzdalifa: a location some half way between Minā and ‘Arafāt. It is there that pilgrims returning from ‘Arafāt spend the night.
nadwa: the act of presiding over assemblies of pilgrims at the ka'ba.

parasang: a Persian term for a unit of length, also known as a farsakh. One parasang equals approximately one league, some three miles, that is.

qabila (pl. qaba'il): a large agnatic group whose members trace descent from a single ancestor. Often translated as tribe. A qabila is larger than an 'ashira (q.v.) but smaller than a sha'b (q.v.).

qādi: a judge appointed by a Muslim community to administer and adjudicate issues of Islamic law.

qibla: the direction to which a Muslim faces when praying. Initially towards Jerusalem but later changed by the Prophet Muhammad so that Muslims would face Mecca and the ka'ba there.

rak'a (pl. rak'āt): a unit of prayer consisting of a variety of gestures and postures. These rak'āt total 17 each day, divided between the five canonical prayer periods.

al-raḥīm: The All-Compassionate; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

al-raḥmān: the All-Merciful; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

Ramadān: the ninth month of the Muslim lunar calendar. The month of fasting, it was during Ramadān that divine revelation first came to the Prophet Muhammad, and it is therefore particularly venerated.

ridā: a length of unsewn cloth that is draped over the left shoulder and around the torso of the pilgrim. This garb is donned by the pilgrim when he enters the ihram state.

rifāda: the provision of pilgrims with wheat and raisins by certain members of Quraysh of Mecca.

al-sa'ī: the ritual rapid walk or jog performed during the pilgrimage between al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa.

sahab: the community and kingdom ruling South-West Arabia for centuries prior to the mission of the Prophet Muhammad.

sahīb (pl. aṣhāb, sahāba): companion; that community of men who knew and supported the Prophet Muhammad during his mission.
sahih: a hadith (q.v.) the chain of transmission of which is considered by Muslim scholars to be reliable beyond any reasonable doubt; also, a collection comprised only of such ahadith.

sam'ah: the receipt of a hadith (q.v.) from a scholar by listening to him or her recite it and then repeating it back. This method of transmitting and receiving a hadith was considered the most trustworthy of all.

sha'b (pl. shu'āb): a tribal group larger than a qabtla (q.v.); a nation, race or people.

shahāda: the profession of faith in Islam by reciting in Arabic the words: ‘There is no God but God and Muḥammad is His Messenger’.

shaykh (pl. shuyukh): an elderly man; a tribal or spiritual leader; a distinguished and devout scholar.

shī'a: the doctrine and its adherent, a shīr, that considers ‘Alī, son of Abū Ṭalib and husband of the Prophet Muḥammad’s daughter Fāṭima, was the legitimate spiritual and political heir to the Caliphate of Islam.

sunna: the body of recorded words, actions, gestures and practices of the Prophet Muḥammad. This material constitutes the second foundation of Islam and its legal system, the holy Qurʾān being the first and prime source. In the plural form, sunan, reference is made to the compilation, by various authorities of the reported words and actions of the Prophet.

tafsīr: exegesis and commentary, particularly applied to the Qurʾān.

tasmiyya: the enunciation by a Muslim of the formula: ‘In the name of God, the All-Merciful, the All-Compassionate’ prior to any act or activity in which he or she might engage.

tawāf: ritual circumambulation of a religious site, normally the kaʿba.

tubbaʾ (pl. tabābēʾa): the title applied to the kings of pre-Islamic Yemen.

wuduʾ: the ritual ablution necessarily practiced by Muslims prior to their performance of prayer.

zamzam: the sacred well positioned close to the kaʿba (q.v.) within the ḥarām al-sharif, the sacred enclosure encompassing the great mosque in Mecca. Muslims believe the well to have been miraculously opened through the agency of Gabriel to provide water for Abraham’s wife Hagar and their son Ishmael.

The Life of the Prophet Muhammad

Volume III

Al-Sīra al-Nabawiyya

Ibn Kathīr

Translated by Professor Trevor Le Gassick
Reviewed by Dr Muneer Fareed
The work at hand in its original Arabic is, in a sense, the product of two minds: the author himself, Abū al-Fīdā’ Imād al-Dīn ʿIsāmīl b. ʿUmar b. Kathīr, and, to a lesser extent, its editor, Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd. In his introduction to the Arabic, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd points out that this work is in fact the culmination of a search for a biography of the Prophet Muhammad to which Ibn Kathīr makes reference in his celebrated exegesis of the Qurān. There is, however, no extant copy of any such independent biographical study traceable to Ibn Kathīr. That such a study did exist is questionable, notwithstanding Ibn Kathīr’s own allusion thereto. Given the unavailability of this particular work, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd offers the theory that the biography in question is none other than that which appears in Ibn Kathīr’s chief work, his opus on history, the al-Bīdiya wa al-Nihāya. He argues that the sīra section of the latter work is so comprehensive in its analysis of the life and times of the Prophet Muhammad as to almost obviate the need for any independent study of the same topic. The biography at hand, therefore, is the same as found in the al-Bīdiya. Nevertheless, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd must be commended for the not inconsiderable task of editing and publishing this particular section as an independent unit, and appropriately titling it al-Sīrā al-Nabawīyya li Ibn Kathīr.

Ibn Kathīr, whose ancestors are said to have been from Iraq, was himself born around the year 1313 CE/700 AH in the Boesra district of eastern Damascus. He died 74 years later, shortly after suffering a total loss of vision. He counts as his tutors such illustrious personages as the eminent historian Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabī, the Mālikī jurist Abū Mūsā al-Qaraṭī, and the celebrated Damascene polemicist and jurist Ibn Taymiyya al-Ḥarrānī.

Ibn Kathīr’s was an era of the great political and social upheavals that posed many challenges to the Muslim world at large, and in particular, to its scholars. What with the scourge of the Tartars threatening the very existence of Islam as a socio-political entity from the outside and the sectarian and ethnic strife created by the Mamluk revolution doing much the same from within, Ibn Kathīr and his

2. According to C. Brockelman in his Geschichte der Arabischen Literatur ii. 49, this historical work of Ibn Kathīr is itself based on al-Bīzālī’s chronicle. For more information see also, Ibn Ḥādī al-Asqalānī, al-Durar al-Kāmina (Cod. Vienna, no. 1172).

The text itself suffers from a singular lack of the literary cadence that makes the historical works of al-Ṭabari, for instance, more of a pleasure to read. This seems to result from Ibn Kathir’s efforts to present an authentic description of the life and times of the Prophet of Islam, and to submit such data as is found in the popular biographical works to the scrutiny of hadith literature. The flow of his text is, without question, a casualty of this exercise. But, as has been pointed out by a scholar of the Bible, “If we read biblical narrative (or in this case the sīra material) as a story, we abandon its historical truth. If we read it as literature, we will often find literary art in it, but this art takes us further from truth.”

Not that the method of Ibn Kathir is altogether without its redeeming features: it certainly provides useful information to scholars, particularly those of the traditional schools, who would prefer to have the classical sources for sīra studies close at hand.

The contents of works such as Ibn Kathir’s sīra are today regarded by many scholars of Islam as largely proto-historical, focusing, that is, on an era whose source documentation falls short of contemporary historiographical standards. It is, some say, the stuff of myth and legend, entwined in places with real historical data. For modern historians of Islam and the Middle East such as Maxime Rodinson, Patricia Crone et al., sīra material contains, in the first instance, virtually “nothing of which we can say for certain that it incontestably dates back to the time of the Prophet.” And so, “when doing research about the life and work of the Prophet Muhammad”, Rudi Paret warns, “we on principle distrust the traditional statement and explanation of facts given by later generations, in so far as they cannot be verified by internal evidence or in some other way.”

In addition, the work at hand may be seen by some to be no more than the product of one who had a variety of interests in the topic: one who was, at one and the same time, a historian, a scribe of “sacred biography”, and also a devotee; the results of an endeavour such as Ibn Kathir’s, therefore, risk being perceived as less than the product of dispassionate scholarship.

This critical approach to Islamic historiography emerged gradually in the 18th and 19th centuries. It was, understandably, only a matter of time before Albert Schweitzer’s “quest of the historical Christ” would be appropriated by scholars of Islamic history in their search of the demythologized Muhammad; after all, this kind of appropriation of the analytical tools indigenous to studies of Christianity for the unravelling of the Islamic historical experience has become almost a convention in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies. Yet the entire process is, I believe, fraught with questionable hypotheses, broad generalizations and a certain disregard for the spatio-temporal factors that shape ostensibly similar events. The application of New Testament heuristic tools such as Form and Redaction criticism to the corpus of information pertaining to the sira seems to betray a casual disregard for the Sitz im Leben of that very corpus. The life and work of Jesus is clearly different from that of Muhammad; the former’s mission—if it can be described as such—is, for example, singularly devoid of the political and socio-economic objectives that informed that of the latter. It is, therefore, hardly surprising, as F. E. Peters in his recent article “The Quest of the Historical Muhammad” points out, that “even though a great deal of effort has been invested in research into the life and times of Muhammad, the results do not seem at all comparable to those achieved in research on Jesus, and the reasons are not at all clear.”

Ever since Gustav Weil presented his Mohammad der Prophet, sein Leben und seine Lehre in 1843, scholars have endeavoured to unravel the historical Muhammad using a variety of tools and strategems. Initially the material offered by Muslim historians such as Ibn Ishāq, Ibn Hishām and more, importantly, al-Ṭabarī was used almost unquestioningly by Christian scholars who, as Holt characterizes them, belonged mainly to “holy orders”. Their primary purpose, it would seem, was to provide a spirited defence of Christian theology and dogma against the claims of Islam and its adherents. The polemics that ensued were, in the main, reflective of the attitude that there was “not any rational inducement in all (that Muslims) believe or practice; insomuch that common sense must be discarded in order to embrace their system.” As for Muhammad, he was for many in that era “so coarse and barbarous an imposter, that there is not a man, who does not or cannot perceive plainly his cheating and corruption.” Humphrey Prideaux, the 17th-century lecturer in Hebrew at Oxford, captured rather succinctly the disposition of scholars vis-à-vis the study of Muhammad, in the rather long-winded title of his work, The true nature of imposture fully display’d in the life of Mahomet. With a discourse annex’d

13. Ibid., 300.
for the vindication of Christianity from this charge. Offered to the consideration of the Deists of the present age. Later Simon Ockley, the somewhat less acerbic and brusque vicar of Swavesey in Cambridgeshire, authored The History of the Saracens, a “much more solid contribution to historical knowledge” as Holt puts it, but one that nonetheless did “not fail to follow common form by stigmatizing Muhammad in his first line, as ‘the great Imposter’ and then describing the Arab conquests as ‘that grievous calamity’.” The liberalism that swept across Europe in the 18th century helped create a relatively less hostile attitude among European scholars towards Islam and its leader. We thus find during that era scholars such as Henri de Boulainvillier emerging. Boulainvillier, his theological affinities notwithstanding, assumed a decidedly more conciliatory tone in his biography of Muhammad, La vie de Mahomet. For him, Christianity is undoubtedly superior to Islam but he is, none the less, quite charitable in his evaluation of his subject, and says: “With respect to the essential doctrines of religion, all that (Muhammad) has laid down is true; but he has not laid down all that is true; and that is the whole difference between our religion and his.”

The quest itself began in earnest in the writings of the Belgian Jesuit, Henri Lammens. Whereas Theodor Noeldeke, prior to him, had largely failed in his attempts to unravel “the historical person of Muhammad”, Lammens plodded on, and succeeded to some extent, in demonstrating “the possibility of the critical analysis of the sīra”. Lammens’ efforts, however, were directed, not at a biographical study of Muhammad per se, but rather on the search for the secret of his personal appeal and the rapid expansion of his message. “Muhammad to him, was a historical problem as well as a symbol of Islam’s obstinacy and insensitivity to the missionary influence.”

Lammens also happened to be among the first to argue, with some conviction, that the hadith traditions as well as the sīra material on the Prophet are, on the whole, fictitious. This inaugurated a new perspective on Islamic history: the emphasis shifted from a critique of the actors in that history to the questioning of the source material itself.

In the 19th century, the Hungarian scholar Ignaz Goldziher concluded that much of the hadith material was but a “pious fraud . . . invoked by every group (in early Islam) for every idea it evolved; . . . through solid chains (isnād) of tradition, all such matters acquired an unbroken tie to the ‘Companions’ who had heard those pronouncements and statutes from the Prophet or had seen him act

in pertinent ways.” Later Professor J. Schacht further explored the foregoing hypotheses by subjecting the isnād of a few legal traditions to an exhaustive scrutiny. He concluded that “hardly any of these traditions, as far as matters of religious law are concerned, can be considered authentic; they were put into circulation . . . from the first half of the second century onwards.” From this others were quick to extrapolate that even the biographical material is fraudulent. Crone thus states: “that the bulk of the sīra . . . consists of second century hadiths has not been disputed by any historian, and this point may be taken as conceded.”

Not all Western scholars, however were as eager to jettison the classical material. W. M. Watt, writing in his Muhammad at Mecca, is clearly more reluctant than Crone, for example, to reject out of hand all such material, simply on the strength of Schacht’s conclusion. He thus maintains that “in the legal sphere there may have been some sheer invention of traditions, it would seem. But in the historical sphere, in so far as the two may be separated, and apart from some exceptional cases, the nearest to such invention in the best early historians appears to be a ‘tendentious shaping’ of the material . . . .”

It must be remembered, however, that traditional Muslim scholars display little awareness of the foregoing conundrum. The classical methodology of hadith criticism as practised by early Muslim scholars, with its close scrutiny of the isnād and the mutān of prophetic traditions, has, in the main, not been discredited, or even questioned, by Muslim scholars. If anything, that methodology has today been given a new lease of life by scholars such as Naṣīr al-Dīn al-Albānī, who, for example, regard the re-evaluation of the early sources as integral to what they call the Islamic renaissance (al-Nahḍa al-Islamiyya). Such a renaissance, Albānī argues, will fall far short of its goals, without a thoroughgoing purge of what remains of the spurious material that had crept into hadith and sīra works during the turbulent epoch of early Islamic history. He thus set himself the task of appraising scholars and the Muslim laity alike to those traditions that were deemed spurious by the regimen of classical hadith studies. His findings, which were first published under the title “al-Aḥādīth al-Ḍa‘ifah wa al-Mawdū‘ah” in a weekly column in the magazine al-Tamaddun al-Islami, now comprise a multi-volume work, appropriately titled Sīlsilah al-Aḥādīth al-Ḍa‘ifah wa al-Mawdū‘ah.

23. Ibid., 6.
Clearly not all contemporary scholars are as eager as Schacht et al. to ring the death knell on hadith literature as a tool for unravelling early Islamic history. Azami for one, in his studies on early hadith literature has attempted to show that hadith literature is indeed the richest source for the investigation of that era, for it provides, among other things, material for the understanding of the legal, cultural and religious ideas of those early centuries. He maintains that the theories of Margoliouth, Goldziher and more recently, Schacht can no longer be incontestably accepted given the recent discoveries of manuscripts or research. According to him:

“In the period referred to, works on the biography of the Prophet and on other historical topics were in a very advanced stage. We find that work on the biography of the Prophet was begun by the Companions. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr b. al-‘Aṣ recorded many historical events. It is possible still to trace his work in the ahādith narrated by ‘Amr b. Shu‘ayb (d. 118 AH) as he utilized his great grandfather ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr’s books. Urwah (d. 93 AH) in his biography of the Prophet names his authority and most probably he had obtained the information in writing. There are works mentioned here and there on a single topic of the Sirah, e.g. Memorandum on the Servants of the Prophet, a book on the ambassadors of the Prophet to different rulers and chieftains with their negotiations. There are references to the collections of the Prophet’s letters in a very early period.”

But it is, in fact, these very sources that Azami cites that have, through the use of contemporary literary and hermeneutical tools, been relegated to no more than “the rubble of early Muslim history”. For Patricia Crone therefore, the “inertia” of material such as appears heretofore “comes across very strongly in modern scholarship on the first two centuries of Islam.”” The bulk of it”, she argues, “has an alarming tendency to degenerate into mere rearrangements of the same old canon – Muslim chronicles in modern languages and graced with modern titles.”

Others, such as Juynboll, have strived to arrive at the inevitable solution intermédiaire, “a conceivable position that could be taken between the two points of view represented respectively by Muslim and Western scholarship.” For him therefore, the hadith traditions “taken as a whole” do provide a fairly reliable rendition of early Islamic history, and “a judiciously and cautiously formulated overall view of what all those early reports...collectively point to, may in all likelihood be taken to be not very far from the truth of ‘what really happened’.”

28. Ibid., 7.
Finally, the true value of this particular work probably resides outside the context of the foregoing academic debate, for as Gadamer explains in Truth and Method, \(^{29}\) "The meaning of a literary work is never exhausted by the intentions of its author; as the work passes from one cultural or historical context to another, new meanings may be culled from it which were perhaps never anticipated by its author or contemporary audience."\(^{30}\)

TRANSLATOR’S PREFACE

As has often been observed, translation is impossible, since the associations and emotive content of words in one language and culture differ from those of all others. Attempts at translation, therefore, inevitably represent strivings for compromise. While accuracy and precision are prime objectives, the ultimately necessary requirements for clarity and comprehension in the host language may require simplification or even omission from the original text. The dilemmas inherent in these conflicting objectives are at times irreconcilable, and this is particularly true when one is dealing, as here, with languages and cultures so far removed as ancient Arabic and modern English. This translation, composed in everyday, contemporary English, gives no impression of the ubiquitous rarities, oddities and archaisms of vocabulary and syntax that make the original extremely challenging to comprehend. It is hoped, of course, that the innumerable compromises that this translation represents will be accepted as good-faith attempts to convey the spirit and purpose of the original in a form that readers of English will not find impossibly daunting.

In some instances Ibn Kathir repeats anecdotal ahādīth with differing chains of authority that are almost identical in content; often, as will be seen, the accounts differ in only very few of their words and these are typically vocabulary rarities. While such variations between accounts may seem of scant interest to the Western reader, they have nevertheless been left complete and intact in this translation. Including them in full, as in the original work, gives a strong impression of the care with which these anecdotes have been handed down and the impression of their likely authenticity is therefore enhanced. This seems especially the case where the discrepancies involve vocabulary rarities that are synonymous. It seems that it would be just such words that would have been subjected to dispute, change or loss from memory.

Ibn Kathir’s objective was to appear authoritative and discriminating in his choices of inclusion and discussion of specific ahādīth; to him the listing of all the names of his authorities and his comments on their reputations was an essential component of this lectures. The give-and-take of oral lecturing – of which this work is essentially a record – would have enabled immediate verbal clarification. Our English text, in contrast, has to stand by itself, and to present an inherent and visible logic and clarity; it must also give some impression of the reliability of the Arabic text that is indicated by its complexity, and by the care with which the names of quoted sources are given and at times evaluated.

have been included in full, since their identities were of prime importance for the initial 'readership' of this work as well as to students and researchers today. However, the exact nature and relative value of the means of transmission from authority to authority and the suggestions implied of Ibn Kathir's preference for certain sources over others, have not been conveyed with exactitude, since common English vocabulary is unable to convey some of the subtleties of the Arabic technical terms employed for this purpose. The essential completeness of the original text in this translation does, however, enable serious students of early Islamic materials to bring their own differentiation to bear by their knowledge of the reputations of the persons quoted.

Certain words common in this text – such as Abū and sūrat – change in their form in Arabic to accord with basic grammatical rules. Here, however, to avoid confusion for those readers who do not know Arabic, they have been left in the form in which they are most commonly met. Initial hamza, moreover, has been omitted. Since early Arabic manuscripts, like the Arabic printed version of this text, are devoid of quotation marks, the identity of the narrator is sometimes unclear. Similarly, it is occasionally difficult to discern whether comments at the end of an account are those of the transmitting authority or of Ibn Kathir himself. Footnotes referring to these and similar textual difficulties have been kept to a minimum, while brief parenthetical explanatory comments have sometimes been inserted to aid the general reader.

Discriminating and knowledgeable readers and reviewers will no doubt find discrepancies and perhaps inaccuracies in this lengthy and demanding text, especially in the extensive poems quoted. For these the translator – and his reviewers, text editors and typesetters – apologize. But since this work offers intimate details not elsewhere available in English about Arabian history and the inspiration and leadership of Islam in its earliest formative period, it would seem unsatisfactory to leave it in a language and form accessible only to a small coterie of scholars. The evident religious historical and philosophical interest of this text suggests that all those associated with its production may properly take refuge and find consolation from criticism in the knowledge that 'to err is human'. To attempt the impossible, moreover, while perhaps foolhardy, is surely more laudable than to make no attempt at all.

Early that year the Najd expedition, known as the raid on Dhū 'Amarr, took place.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from the expedition to al-Sawiq, he remained for roughly the remainder of Dhū al-Hijja and then attacked Najd, seeking out Ghaṭafān; this expedition is known as that of Dhū ‘Amarr.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He left ‘Uthmān b. ‘Affān in command of Medina.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “He remained for all, or almost all, of Ṣafar in Najd and then returned without being ambushed.”

Al-Waqīdī stated, “News reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) that a force of Ghaṭafān fighters, from Bant Thqalāb, Ibn Muḥārib, had gathered at Dhū ‘Amarr intending to attack him. He therefore left Medina on Thursday, 12th of Rabī’ al-Awwal in 3 AH, placing ‘Uthmān b. ‘Affān in command of Medina. He was away for 11 days, and was accompanied by 450 men.

“The bedouin fled from him away into the mountains. He travelled on until he reached a well known as Dhū ‘Amarr, where he made camp. Much rain fell and the clothes of the Messenger of God (SAAS) were soaked. He dismounted beneath a tree there and hung out his clothes to dry, in full sight of the polytheists, who were keeping to themselves.

“The polytheists then sent out one of their warriors, a man named Ghawrith b. al-Ḥārith, or Duṭhūr b. al-Ḥārith, telling him, ‘God has enabled you to kill Muḥammad!’

“Then Ghawrith took the Prophet’s sword off his belt and mounted the Prophet’s horse, his sword drawn, and asked, ‘Muḥammad, who will protect you from me now?’ ‘God will,’ he replied. Then Gabriel gave the man a push in the chest and the sword fell from his hand.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) picked it up and said, ‘And who will protect you from me?’ ‘No one’, the man replied, ‘and I testify that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is God’s messenger! I swear, I’ll never gather a force to attack you.’

“And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave him back his sword.

“When the man rejoined his men, they criticized him and asked what had happened. He explained, ‘I saw a tall man who pushed me in the chest and made me fall over on to my back. I knew him to be an angel. I then testified that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God and that I would not gather a force against him.’ He then began inviting his people to accept Islam.
“It was about this incident that God Almighty stated, ‘O you who believe, remember God’s favour to you when a force had prepared to stretch out their hands against you, but He held back their hands away from you’” (sūrat al-Mā‘īda; V, v.11).

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “A similar account will be given about the expedition of Dḥāt al-Riqa‘; there may be two different incidents.”

I comment that if the above account is correct, then the other is definitely not. Because in that case — the man’s name also being Ghawrith b. al-Ḥarīth — he did not accept Islam but retained his old faith, and he did not vow to the Prophet (ṢAAS) that he would not attack him thereafter. But God knows best.

THE ATTACK ON AL-FURU‘ OF BUHRĀN.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “He remained for almost all of Rabī‘ al-Awwal in Medina, but then mounted an expedition against Quraysh.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He appointed Ibn Umm Maktūm in command of Medina.”

Ibn Išāq went on, “He continued on to Buhrān, a mine in Ḥijāz over towards al-Furū‘.”

Al-Wāqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was absent from Medina only for ten days.” But God knows best.

An Account of the Jews of Banū Qaynuqā‘ who dwell in Medina.

Al-Wāqidi claimed that this relates to a Saturday (during the first) half of Shawwāl in 2 AH. But God knows best.

It is to them that reference is made in the words of the Almighty: “Like those shortly prior to them; they experienced the ugly consequences of what they did, and they shall have painful punishment” (sūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.15).

Ibn Išāq stated, “It was at the time of these raids made by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) that the affair of the Banū Qaynuqā‘ arose.

“People say that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) assembled them in their market and addressed them, saying: ‘O Jews, beware of God afflicting you as He did Quraysh. And so accept Islam. You well know that I am a prophet sent with a mission; you find that to be so in your Book and in God’s pact with you.’

“They responded, ‘Muḥammad, do you think we are your people? Don’t delude yourself, just because you did battle with those who lacked knowledge of warfare, and so you could take advantage of them. If you fight against us, you’ll find us to be real men!’”

Ibn Išāq continued, “A freed-man of Zayd b. Thābit related to me, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, and from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, ‘The following verse was revealed specifically concerning them. “Tell those who disbelieve: ‘You shall be defeated and herded into hell, a terrible abode. A proof of this came to you when two forces clashed.’” (sūrat Al’Imrān; III, v.11). This refers to the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), to those who participated at Badr, and to Quraysh. (Along with:) “One side fights for God’s cause, while the other is unbelieving, whom they see with their own eyes to be twice their like. And God aids with His help whomsoever He wishes. There is surely a lesson in this for those who have sight.”” (sūrat Al’Imrān; III, v.12).

Ibn Ishāq stated, “‘Āsim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to me that the Banū Qaynuqāʾ were the first of the Jews who broke their pact and fought in the period between the battles of Badr and Uhud.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Jaʿfar b. al-Miswar b. Makhrama related, from Abū ʿAwn, ‘The problem with Banū Qaynuqāʾ arose as follows. An Arab woman took an ornament of hers and sold it in the market of Banū Qaynuqāʾ. She sat there with one of their goldsmiths and the men present began pestering her to uncover her face. She refused, but the goldsmith managed to attach the hem of her dress to her back. When she got up, she was exposed, and they all laughed at her. She screamed and one of the Muslim men attacked and killed the goldsmith, who was a Jew. The Jews then seized the Muslim and killed him. The Muslim’s family called for help from the other Muslims against the Jews. The Muslims were enraged, and so enmity arose between them and Banū Qaynuqāʾ.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “‘Āsim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to me, ‘And so the Messenger of God (SAAS), besieged them until they surrendered to him.”

Ibn Hishām stated that this pocket was known as the dhāt al-fuḍūl, “the bounteous”.

Ibn Ishāq continued, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told him ‘Let go of me! His face darkening in rage, he repeated, ‘Let go of me, I say!’

“‘Abd Allāh replied, ‘No; I’ll not do so until you agree to treat my allies well. Four hundred men without armour and three hundred with chain-mail have protected me from all and sundry, and you would mow them down in one morning! I’m a man who is afraid of turns of fate.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said to him, ‘They are yours!’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) placed Abū Lubāba ʿBashir b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir in charge (of Medina) during his siege of them, which lasted for 15 days.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “My father related to me, quoting ʿUbad b. al-Walid, from ʿUbad b. al-Šāmit, who said, ‘When Banū Qaynuqāʾ opposed the Messenger of God (SAAS) `Abd Allāh b. Ubayy remained allied with them and protected them, while `Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit, who had the same alliance with them as did `Abd Allāh b. Ubayy, went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and gave them over to him, renouncing his pact with them in favour of God and His Messenger. `Ubāda told him, “O Messenger of God, I ally myself with God, His messenger and the believers, and I renounce my association and alliance with these unbelievers.””

Ibn Ishaq continued, “It was about him and `Abd Allāh b. Ubayy that the following verses were revealed, ‘O you who believe, do not ally yourselves with the Jews and the Christians; they are allied with one another’” (ṣūrat al-Māʿida; V, v.50). This referred to `Abd Allāh b. Ubayy. And “... those who ally themselves with God and His messenger and those who believe; they are the party of God who will triumph” (ṣūrat al-Māʿida; V, v.56). This referred to `Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit. We have discussed this in our Tafsīr.

THE ATTACK MADE BY ZAYD B. ḤĀRITHA AGAINST THE QURAYSH CARAVAN WHICH WAS ALSO ACCOMPANIED BY ABŪ SUFYĀN AS WELL AS, IT IS SAID, BY ṢAFWĀN.

Yūnus b. Bukayy quoted Ibn Ishaq as follows, “This occurred six months after the battle of Badr.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The account of it related that Quraysh became insecure about the route they usually followed to Syria, after the events of Badr, and so they took the Iraq route. Some of their merchants, including Abū Sufyān, who was bearing a large quantity of silver which was the greater part of their merchandise, left, having hired as a guide for that route a man of Banū Bakr b. Wā'il named Furāt b. Ḥāyān, that is al-ʾIjli, who were allied to Banū Sahm.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth Zayd b. Ḥāritha who met up with them at a well called d-Qarda. He seized the caravan, and all it contained, but its men escaped. He returned with the spoils to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“Ḥassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses about this:

‘Say farewell to the rivulets of Syria, for in the way are swords like the mouths of pregnant camels hurting from eating arāk leaves
In the hands of men who have moved off towards their Lord and to His helpers in truth, and in angels’ hands.
If they proceed to the lowlands from the sand valley, then tell them, “the route is not there!”’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “This qaṣida is included in the verses by Ḥassān; Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥārith composed a response to them.”

Al-Waqidi stated, “This foray by Zayd b. Ḥāritha occurred at the start of Jumādā al-Uwšt, some 28 months after the Hijra. Ṣafwān b. Umayya was the leader of this caravan.
“The reason he sent out Zayd b. Ḥaritha was that it was Nuʿaym b. Masʿūd, then still a follower of his own people’s religion, who had come to Medina with news of this caravan. This Nuʿaym had met with Kināna b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq, along with some of Banū al-NDAR, among whom was Sulayṭ b. al-NDm, of Aslam. They had been drinking, this being before the prohibition of wine. Nuʿaym had talked of the departure of the caravan with Ṣafwān b. Umayya, and of the valuables it carried. Sulayṭ had immediately left and informed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who had promptly despatched Zayd b. Ḥaritha. His force met and seized the caravan, but the men accompanying it escaped. They did capture a man or two, then took command of the caravan and brought it in. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) divided it up into five portions, each of which amounted to 20,000 dirhams. He apportioned four-fifths of it to the expedition. Among those captured was the guide, Furāt b. Ḥayyān. He accepted Islam, may God be pleased with him.”

Ibn Jarir stated, “Al-Waqidi asserted that in the spring of that year Ḥtān b. ʿAffān married Umm Kulthūm, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and that she was brought to him in Jumādā al-Ākhira.”

THE KILLING OF KAʾB B. AL-ASHRAF, THE JEW.

He was of the Ṭāʿī tribe, part of Banū Nabhān; but his mother was of Banū al-NDAR.

Ibn Ishaq related it thus, before the withdrawal of the Banū al-NDAR. Al-Bukhārī and al-Bayhaqi, however, noted it following their accounts of the Banū al-NDAR affair. Ibn Ishaq was correct in relating it as he did, as will be clear from what follows, namely that the Banū al-NDAR matter occurred after the battle of Uhud. It was in the siege of the enemy then that wine was prohibited, as we will later explain, if God wills it.

“Muḥammad b. Maslama then approached him (Kaʾb) and said, “This fellow (i.e. the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)), asked us for charity, but he has become a nuisance to us. I’ve come to you to ask you to give us a loan.”

“He responded, “So, by God, you too are tired of him!”

“Muḥammad b. Maslama responded. “Having followed him, we don’t want to abandon him until we see how it turns out for him. We’d just like you to make us a loan.”

“All right; give me some security.’ ‘What would you like?”
"'Pledge me your womenfolk!' "
"They objected, 'How could we pledge you our women, you being the most handsome of the Arabs!'

"'Then pledge me your sons', he asked.

"'How could we pledge you our sons?' they demanded, 'and have them insulted by being told they are only worth the value of a wasq or two! That would be shameful for us. But we will pledge you our la'ma.' Sufyān said that by this he meant their weapons.

"Muḥammad b. Maslama then made a night rendezvous with him and did go to him one night, accompanied by Abū Nāpīla, who was Ka'īb's foster-brother. Ka'īb invited them into his castle and came down to them. His wife asked him, "

"Where are you going at this late hour?" (According to another account, one not from 'Amr, she commented, "I hear a voice dripping blood!")

"He replied, 'It's only my brother Muḥammad b. Maslama and my foster-brother Abū Nāpīla. A man of honour, if invited to a stabbing at night, would still accept!'

"Muḥammad b. Maslama went in accompanied by two men. He told them, 'When he comes, I'll lean over towards his hair to smell it. When you see me seize his head, then you come on over and strike him.' He went on, 'I'll do it once, then let you smell.'

"When Ka'īb came down, he was wearing a loose sash and was redolent with perfume. Muḥammad b. Maslama commented, 'I never smelled a finer scent than today!' (According to the other tradition, he (Ka'īb) commented, "I have the best-perfumed and best-looking women of all the Arabs!")

"'Amr went on, "He then asked, 'Would you permit me to smell your head?'' 'Certainly,' Ka'īb replied.

"He then smelled it and had his companions do the same. He then asked, 'Do you permit me?' 'Yes,' Ka'īb replied. And then he (Muḥammad b. Maslama) seized him, calling out, 'Get him!' And they killed him. They then went to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and informed him."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Ka'īb b. al-Ashraf was of the Taʿī tribe, of the sub-tribe of Banū Nabāḥān, though his mother was of Banū al-Nadīr. He received news of the deaths of those at Badr after the arrival of Zayd b. al-Ḥarīthah and 'Abd Allah b. Rawāḥa. He commented, 'By God, if Muḥammad has really struck down those people, then better be inside the earth than upon it!'

"When this enemy of God was sure of this news, he left for Mecca, where he visited al-Muṭṭalib b. Abū Wadā'ā b. Dubayrat al-Sahmi, whose wife was 'Āṭika, daughter of Abū al-Īs b. Umayya b. 'Abd Shams b. 'Abd Manāf. She accommodated him graciously and he began instigating an attack upon the Messenger of God (_PARAS) speaking verses and mourning the deaths of those polytheists killed at Badr."

Here Ibn Ishāq gave his poem which begins with the verse,

"The Badr millstone ground to death those killed there, and for the like of Badr one speaks and weeps."

He also gave the response to this poem by Hassān b. Thābit, may God be pleased with him, as well as verse by others.

He went on, "Ka'b then returned to Medina where he composed verses that were suggestive about the Muslim women and critical of the Prophet (PARAS) and his followers."

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "Ka'b b. al-Ashraf was of Banū al-Naḍīr, or associated with them; he harmed the Messenger of God (PARAS) by ridiculing him in verse and he rode in to Quraysh to incite them further. Abū Sufyān, in Mecca, asked him, 'In your view, I pray you tell me, which religion is more favoured by God, that of Muḥammad and his friends, or our own? Which of us, do you think, is more correct and appropriate? We slaughter our meat generously, give milk-topped water to drink, providing food for all and sundry who come.'

"Ka'b b. al-Ashraf replied, 'You are better-guided in your path than they are.'"

Mūsā went on, "And so God revealed to His Messenger the verses, 'Have you not considered those given a part of the Book who believe in enchantment and devils, and who say to those who disbelieve, ‘These are better guided on the path than those who believe (in God).’ They are indeed cursed by God; those whom God curses you shall find to be without succour' (ṣūrat al-Nisā'; IV, v.51, 2).

Both Mūsā and Ibn Ishāq stated further, "He went to Medina where he proclaimed his enmity and incited people to go to war. He had not left Mecca before he had united them to fight the Messenger of God (PARAS); he then began composing amatory verse about Umm al-Fadl b. al-Hārith and other Muslim women."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The Messenger of God (PARAS) asked, as 'Abd Allāh b. al-Mughith b. Abu Burda related to me, 'Who will take care of Ibn al-Ashraf?'

"Muḥammad b. Maslama, a brother of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal, responded, 'I’ll take care of him for you, Messenger of God. I will kill him!'

"'Do so then, if you can,' he told him.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "Muhammad b. Maslama then returned and stayed three days and nights eating and drinking nothing except what was essential. The Messenger of God (PARAS) was informed of this and he summoned him and asked, 'Why have you given up food and drink?' He replied, 'O Messenger of God, I promised you something that I don’t know whether I can fulfil or not.' He was told, 'You only have to try.'

"He replied, 'O Messenger of God, we’ll have to say certain things.'

"'Say whatever you think fit; you will be free of blame for doing so.'" Muḥammad b. Maslama then set about killing Ka'b with Salkān b. Salāma b. Waqsh, who was known as Abū Naʿīla. He was of Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal. He was, moreover, the foster-brother of Ka'b b. Ashraf. Also with them were ʿAbbād b. Bishr b. Waqsh, of Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal, along with al-Ḥārith b. Aws b. Muʿādh, of Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal, and Abū ʿAbs b. Jabr, a brother of Banū Ḥaritha."

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on, "They then dispatched to Ka'b, that enemy of God, Salkān b. Salāma Abū Naʿīla. When the latter was with him, he talked with Ka'b and they recited poetry to one another; Abū Naʿīla was a poetry reciter. He then told Ka'b, 'I'm so sorry, Ibn al-Ashraf, but I've come to you about something I want to discuss, and for you to keep confidential.' 'I'll do that,' he said.

"Muḥammad b. Maslama went on, 'This man's arrival among us was a disaster! The Arabs became hostile to us, and united against us. They have cut off our routes, so that our young are deprived and scared. We and our families are suffering greatly.'

"Ka'b commented, 'I'm al-Ashraf's son! Didn't I tell you, Ibn Salāma, that things would turn out this way?'

"Salkān then told Ka'b, 'What I wanted was for you to sell us some food for which we would give you a surety and keep trust with you; you'll do well by that.'

"He asked, 'Will you give me your sons as surety?'

"'You want to disgrace us? I have companions who share my views, and I wanted to bring them to you for you to sell to us, by which you would do well, and we would give you an equivalent pledge in weapons.'

"Salkān wanted him not to refuse to have weapons present when they brought them. Ka'b agreed, saying, 'Weapons would be good security.'

"Salkān then returned to his companions and informed them what had transpired. He told them to get their weapons and to set off, and to meet up with him. They then assembled with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)."

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on, "Thawr b. Zayd related to me, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) travelled with them as far as Baqīʾ al-Gharqad, and there he dispatched them, saying, 'Go in God's name! O God, give them help!' He then returned home. It was a moonlit night, and the men set off and reached Ka'b's castle.

"Abū Naʿīla called up to him. Ka'b had recently taken a new wife, and he jumped up wrapped in a coverlet. His wife took hold of its hem and said, 'But you're a man engaged in combat! Warriors don't go down at such a time as this!' Ka'b replied, 'But it's Abū Naʿīla. He'd not have woken me if I had been asleep.' She commented, 'I swear I sense evil in his voice!' Ka'b replied, 'If a man of honour were invited to a stabbing, he'd still accept!'"

"'He then went down and engaged them in conversation. Eventually they asked him, 'Ibn al-Ashraf, would you like to take a walk with us to Shi'b al-ʿAjūz, where we can spend the rest of the night talking?” “If you wish,” he replied. And so they left and walked for a while.

“Eventually Abū Naʿīla touched the hair at Kaʿb’s temple with his hand, which he then sniffed, saying, “I swear, I’ve never before this night smelled anything so fine!” He then walked further, then did the same, to make Kaʿb feel secure. Having gone yet further, he then took hold of Kaʿb’s hair at both temples and said, “Strike down the enemy of God!” Their swords rained blows upon him, but to no effect.’

“Muḥammad b. Maslama continued, ‘I then remembered a poignard I had with my sword and drew it, Kaʿb meanwhile making such a din that all the forts thereabouts had lit up. I stabbed my dagger into his lower stomach and bore down on it till it reached his scrotum. The enemy of God then collapsed. Meanwhile al-Ḥārith b. Aws had suffered a wound from one of our swords in his leg or on his hand.

“Then after we left, our path taking us past Banū Umayya b. Zayd, then Banū Qurayṣa and then Buʿath. After that we went on up the stony tract of al-ʿArid. On account of the blood he was losing, our companion al-Ḥārith b. Aws was lagging behind and so we halted for a while. When he came up, following our tracks, we carried him and so arrived at the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as the night was ending and he was engaged in prayer. We greeted him and he came out to us. We told him of the execution of God’s enemy. He then spat upon our companion’s wound and we went on to our families. By next morning the Jews were in shock at our attack upon God’s enemy; every Jew feared for his safety.’”

Al-Waqidi claimed that they had brought the head of Kaʿb b. al-Ashraf to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Kaʿb b. Malik spoke the following verses about this affair:

As he lay prostrate on his hands, our men with drawn swords having overcome him Upon Muḥammad’s order, when he told Kaʿb’s brother to slip by night secretly to Kaʿb.
And he tricked him, bringing him down by deceit, yet praiseworthy is he, worthy of trust and brave.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “These verses are from an ode he composed about the battle with Banū al-Naḍir that will be quoted hereafter.”

I note that the death of Kaʿb b. al-Ashraf at the hands of Aws came after the battle of Badr. Khazraj killed Abū Rāfiʿ b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq after the battle of Uhud, as will be explained hereafter, if God, in whom is all trust, so wills it.

Ibn Isḥāq also gave the following verses by Ḥassān b. Thābit:

“How fine a party of men you met, O Ibn al-Ḥuqayq, and you too, Ibn al-ʿAshraf Men who travelled by night to bring their light swords to you, as cheerful as lions prowling in their lairs.
They came to you in your own territory, making you taste death with their swift-killing blades Foreshewing the victory of the religion of their prophet, minimizing every matter of danger.” whatever Jew you may conquer!’

“Muḥayyiṣa b. Masʿūd of Aws thereupon attacked and killed Ibn Sunayna, a Jewish merchant who used to associate with them and do business with them.
His brother Ḥuwayyiṣa b. Masʿūd was older than Muḥayyiṣa and had not yet accepted Islam. When the latter killed the Jew, Ḥuwayyiṣa began hitting his brother and shouting, ‘You enemy of God, you! Have you really killed him? Yet much of the fat in your belly is from his money!’

“Muḥayyiṣa replied, ‘I was ordered to kill him by someone who, if he ordered me to kill you, I would strike your neck!’ He also said that this was the start of Ḥuwayyiṣa’s acceptance of Islam.

“Ḥuwayyiṣa asked, ‘Do you really mean that if Muḥammad told you to kill me, you would do it?’

“Muḥayyiṣa reiterated, ‘Yes, by God! If he were to order me to strike your neck, I would do so.’

“‘By God, any religion that would so affect you is truly wonderful,’ said Ḥuwayyiṣa, and he accepted Islam.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “A freed-man of Banū Ḥāritha related this to me, from Muḥayyiṣa’s daughter, from her father.

“Muḥayyiṣa spoke the following verses about this:

“A mother’s son complains that if I were ordered to kill him, I would strike him with my sharp sword at the nap of his head.

Its blade salt-like in colour, it is so well burnished;
when I aim it, it never deceives.

It would not have pleased me to kill you voluntarily, even if we owned all between Buṣrā and Maʿrib.’”

Ibn Hishām recounted, from Abū ʿUbayda, from Abū ʿAmr al-Madani, that this story relates to the time following the battle with Banū Qurayṣa, and that the man killed was Kaḥ b. Yahūdā. He stated that when Muḥayyiṣa executed him on the orders of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the day of the battle with Banū Qurayṣa, his brother Ḥuwayyiṣa said what he did and Muḥayyiṣa replied as above. And so that day Ḥuwayyiṣa accepted Islam. But God knows best.

Note: al-Bayhaqi and al-Bukhari related the Banū d-Nadir affair before the battle of Uhud, but what is correct would be to refer to it thereafter, as did Muḥammad b. Ishāq and other authorities on the early military engagements.
The proof of this is that wine was prohibited on the nights when Banū al-Naḍīr were being besieged. It is established in the ṣaḥīḥ collections that some of those who died as martyrs at Uhud had been drinking that morning. This indicates that wine was permitted at that time and was only prohibited later. And so it is clear that the Banū al-Naḍīr affair came after the battle of Uhud. But God knows best.

A further note: the affair relating to the Jews of Banū Qaynuqa’ came after the battle of Badr, as told above. The same applies to the killing of Ka‘b b. al-Ashraf, the Jew, at the hands of Aws.

The Banū al-Naḍīr affair came after the battle of Uhud, as will be told hereafter. The same is true of the death of Abū Ra‘fī, the merchant Jew from Ḥijāz who was killed by Khazraj.

The account relating to the Jews of Banū Qurayṣa will be given after the report of the battle of the ahzāb – “the clans” – and after that of al-khandaq, “the trench”.

THE BATTLE OF UHUD, IN SHAWWĀL, 3 AH.

A supplementary note from the author on the naming of Uhud: Uhud was so named because of its unique distinction among these mountains.

In the ṣaḥīḥ collection it states, “Uhud is a mountain that loves us and that we love. It is said that its name refers to its inhabitants. It is also said that it is so named to affirm the closeness of one’s family on one’s return from a trip, as does a lover. It is also said to mean, ‘alā zāhirīhi, i.e. ‘in a concrete and literal interpretation’, as in God’s words, ‘some of them tumble down in fear of God’” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.74).

In a hadith from Abū Abbās b. Jabr, it states, “Uhud loves us and we it; it stands at the gate of paradise. And it is (like a) wild ass that loathes us as we it. It stands at one of the gates of hell.”

Al-Suhaylī commented, in substantiation of this hadith: “It is well established that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘A man is with whomever he loves.’”

Al-Suhaylī’s comment is strange. For this hadith relates to people and a mountain could not be referred to as human.

This battle took place in Shawwāl, 3 AH. This is stated by al-Zuhri, Qatāda, Mūsā b. Uqba, Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq and Mālik.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “It occurred in the middle of Shawwāl.” Qatāda said, “It took place on Saturday, the 11th of Shawwāl.”

Mālik stated, “The battle took place early in the day, and it is commonly agreed that the reference is to it in the words of the Almighty: ‘... when you went forth from your family in the morning to set the believers in their positions for the battle; and God is All-Hearing, All-Knowing. When two groups from among you were inclined to being cowardly, even though God was their ally. It is in God that believers should trust. And God did aid you at Badr when you were weak. Be pious in God, that you may give thanks. (Remember) when you said to the believers, “Is it not enough for you that your Lord give you the aid of 3,000 angels He has sent down? Yes indeed! If you remain fast and pious and they charge straight down upon you, your Lord will send down 5,000 of the angels to cause havoc ...” and so on to the words, “... and God is not one to leave the believers in circumstances such as yours without differentiating evil from good. Yet God is not one to reveal to you the unknown”” (sūrat Al Īmārān; III, v.120–124 and v.178).

We have sufficiently discussed details relating to all this in our Tafsīr. And all praise and reliance is for God.

We will relate herewith the essentials of the battle as in the accounts given by Muḥammad b. Ishāq, God be pleased with him, and other scholars expert in this field.

(Ibn Ishaq stated) “Muḥammad b. Muslim al-Zuhri, Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā b. Ḥabbān, Āṣim b. Ūmar b. Qatāda, al-Ḥusayn b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAmr b. Saʿd b. Muʿadh and others of our scholars related to me various aspects of the battle of Uḥud. What follows is a composite of all their accounts.

“When those polytheists of Quraysh suffered their fate of burial in the pit, the remnants of their force returned to Mecca, as did Abū Sufyān with his caravan. ʿAbd Allāḥ b. Abū Rabīʿa, Ikrima b. Abī Jahl and Ṣafwān b. Umayya gathered with others of Quraysh whose fathers, sons or brothers had been struck down at Badr. They talked with Abū Sufyān and with others of the Meccan merchants who had been with that caravan, as follows: ‘O Quraysh, Muḥammad has done you great harm and has killed your like. Give us your assistance with this wealth to make war on him and to take revenge on him.’ They agreed.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “It was about them, so I have been told by certain scholars, that Almighty God revealed the words, ‘Those who disbelieve are spending their wealth to block off God’s path. And they shall spend it and then they shall suffer regret and be defeated. Those who disbelieve will be herded together into hell’ (sūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.36).

“And so Quraysh gathered to go to war against the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when Abū Sufyān and the caravan owners did this, assembling their Abyssinian mercenaries and those of the tribes of Kināna and the lowlands who accepted their authority.

“Abū Āzza ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Allāḥ al-Jumahi had been treated kindly by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Badr. He was a poor man with children and responsibilities and had been taken captive. Ṣafwān b. Umayya now asked him, ‘Abū Āzza, you are a poet. Help us with your voice and go forth with us,’ He replied, ‘But Muḥammad was kind to me, and I don’t want to oppose him.’ Ṣafwān persisted, ‘Yes indeed, so help us with your mind; I swear that if you return safe, I will make you wealthy. If you are killed, I swear I'll treat your daughters just like my own. Whatever happens to my children, good or bad, will be their lot too.'

"So Abū 'Azza went off into the lowlands calling upon Banū Kināna and reciting,

'O Banū 'Abd Manāt, brave men, you are fine warriors, as were your fathers too.
Let not your help be promised a year from now; do not let me down, for letting me down is not right.'

"And Nāfi' b. 'Abd Manāf b. Wahb b. Hudhayfa b. Jumāḥ went out to Banū Mālik b. Kināna haranguing them and saying,

'O māl(ik), māl (possessed of) prominent repute, I appeal to ties and to covenants
Whether to relatives or to those not related, by the alliance amidst the holy city,
At the venerated wall of the ka'ba.'

"Jubayr b. Mu'tim summoned an Abyssinian warrior slave of his, named Wahshi, who could toss a spear in the Abyssinian manner, rarely missing, and told him, 'Go forth with our men; and if you should kill Ḥamza, the uncle of Muḥammad, in revenge for my uncle Ṭu'ayma b. 'Adi, then you are a free man.'"

"And so Quraysh went forth fully armed and accoutred and with their Abyssinian mercenaries and clients from Banū Kināna and the lowlands. They also took with them their womenfolk in howdahs (camel litter, sedan chairs) to keep their spirits high and so that they would not take flight.

"Abū Sufyān, Ṣakhr b. Ḥarb, he being their commander, went forth too, accompanied by his wife Hind, daughter of Ḫubayt b. Rabī'a.

"Ikrima b. Abī Jahl also went out with his wife, his cousin Umm Ḥakīm, daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Hishām b. al-Mughira. His uncle al-Ḥārith b. Hishām also went, accompanied by his wife Fāṭima, daughter of al-Walīd b. al-Mughira.

"Ṣafwān b. Umayyā was accompanied by Barzā, daughter of Masʿūd b. Ṭūmar, a lady of Ṭaḥqīf; Ṭumār b. al-ʿĀṣ had with him Rayṭa, daughter of Munabbī b. al-Ḥājjāj, she being the mother of his son Ṭūmar b. Ṭālīb.

Ibn Iṣḥāq also mentioned other Quraysh men who were accompanied by their womenfolk.

He went on, "And whenever Wahshi passed by Hind, daughter of Uthba or she passed by him, she would say, 'Go to it, Abū Dasma, avenge us and help yourself too!' That is, she urged him on to kill Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.

"They advanced and made a halt at ʿĀynayn, on a mountain at the Sakhba valley of Qanāt, on the edge of the wādi facing Medina.

3. The poet uses the word ʾislām, here connoting "abandonment".
4. That is, "father of blackness", a reference to his black Abyssinian colouring.
"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard of this, he told the Muslims, ‘I swear by God, I had a favourable vision! I saw a cow being slaughtered and noticed a nick on the tip of my sword blade. Then I saw I had thrust my hand through a strong coat of mail. This I interpreted to be Medina.’"

This hadith was related by both al-Bukhari and Muslim from Abû Kurayb, from Abû Usâma, from Burayd b. ʿAbd Allâh b. Abû Burda, from Abû Burda, from Abû Müsâ al-Ashʿarî, from the Prophet (SAAS) whom they quoted as follows, "I saw in a dream that I was leaving Mecca for some land where there were palm trees. I thought that it was either al-Yamâma or Hajar, but then I realized that it was the city of Yathrib (Medina). In that vision, I saw myself wielding a sword, the middle of which broke. And that was what happened to the believers at the battle of Uhud. I then wielded it again and it became better than ever. And that was what happened when God gave victory and united the believers. In the vision, I also saw a cow. And, by God, this was good, for it represented the band of believers at the battle of Uhud. And the good was what God brought forth from the good, and the reward of the truth that came to us after the battle of Badr."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Abû ʿAbd Allâh al-Ḥafiz informed us, as did al-ʿAṣamm, Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allâh b. ʿAbd al-Ḥakam and Ibn Wahh, while Ibn Abû Zinâd informed me from his father, ʿUbayd Allâh b. ʿAbd Allâh b. ʿUtba, from Ibn ʿAbbas, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) took possession of his sword Dha al-Fiqdr at Badr. And it was about that sword that he saw the vision on the day of the battle of Uhud."

"When the polytheists came at the Messenger of God (SAAS), at Uhud, it was his view that he should remain in Medina and fight them there. But people who had not witnessed Badr told him, “Let’s go out, Messenger of God, to them and fight them at Uhud.” They hoped to attain some of the credit that had accrued to those at Badr. They kept on at the Messenger of God (SAAS), until he put on his chain-mail. Then they repented and told him, “O Messenger of God, stay here. Your view must prevail.”

"He told them, “It is not proper for a prophet to take off his armour after dressing in it until God decides between him and his enemy.”

"Before putting on my armour that day,” he had been telling them, ‘I had a vision of myself in stout armour – which I interpreted to be Medinâ – and that I made the (squadron) leader ride behind me; this I interpreted as the leader of the squadron. I also saw that my sword, Dhū al-Fiqâr, had been notched; this I interpreted as a weakness in you. Then I saw a cow being slaughtered, its stomach open. I swear by God, it was good.’"

Al-Tirmidhi and Ibn Mâjah related this from a hadith of ābd al-Rahmân b. Abû al-Zinâd, from his father.

Al-Bayhaqi related this hadith marfûʿan, through Hammad b. Salama, from Ali b. Zayd, from Anas, back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said, “I had a vision as if I had made the (squadron) leader ride second saddle. And the blade of my sword seemed to have been damaged. This I interpreted as meaning that I would kill the enemy’s leader. I interpreted the damage to my sword’s blade as being the death of a man from my own family.”

And Ḥamza was killed, while the Messenger of God (ṣaas) killed Ṭalḥa, who was in charge of their banner.

Mūsā b. Ḥuqā stated, “When Quraysh returned (from Badr) they brought in all the Arab polytheists whom they controlled. Abū Ṣufyān b. Ḥarb then went forth with a Quraysh force, it being in Shawwāl of the year following the battle of Badr. They halted in the middle of the wāḍi across from Uhud. There were some Muslims who had not been present at Badr and who regretted the distinction that they had lost. They were eager to meet the enemy to attain what their brethren had achieved at the battle of Badr.

“When Abū Ṣufyān and the polytheists halted at the base of Uhud, the Muslims who had not attended Badr were delighted at the enemy’s approach to them. They told one another that God had fulfilled their dreams.

“The Messenger of God (ṣaas) received a vision on the Friday night. When he arose next morning a group of his Companions came to him and he told them, ‘Last night in my sleep I saw a cow being slaughtered, and by God, it was good. And I also saw that my sword, Dhū al-Faqtār, had been notched on its blade.’ (Or he said, ‘And it had notches in it, and I hated this. These were two disasters.’) ‘And I saw myself in stout armour and that I was making a (squadron) leader ride second saddle.’

“When the Messenger of God (ṣaas) told them of his visions, they asked, ‘O Messenger of God, what interpretation do you give your visions?’ He replied, ‘I interpreted the cow I saw as one among us and among the enemy; I disliked what I saw happen to my sword.’

“Some men say that what he saw in his sword was what was to strike his face, for the enemy did wound him in the face that day; they broke one of his front teeth and tore his lip. They claim that it was ʿUtba b. Abū Waqqās who threw it. The cow represented those of the Muslims who were killed at that battle.

“(The Messenger of God (ṣaas) said) ‘I interpret the kabsh, to be the (squadron) leader of the enemy, God damn them, and the stout armour to be Medina. So remain here, drawing the families into the citadels. When the enemy attacks us through the alleys, we’ll fight them and fire down at them from on top of the houses.’ The Muslims had lined the alleys of Medina with fortifications so that they had become like fortresses.

“Those Muslims who had not been present at Badr said, ‘We had been looking forward to this day, and praying to God for it. God has brought it to us, and made the outcome close at hand.’

“One of the ansār asked, ‘When will we do battle with them, O Messenger of God, if not right here in our area?’
"Others asked, 'What about our people; what will we be able to defend, if we can't defend ourselves in war because of fear?'

"Others made statements agreeing with him or going even further. One of these men was Hamza b. 'Abd al-Mu'ttalib, who said, 'By Him who revealed the Book to you, we shall take issue with them!'

"Nu'aym b. Malik b. Tha'labah, he being of Banu Salim, said, 'O Prophet of God, do not deprive us of paradise! By Him who holds my soul in His hands, I shall enter it!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, 'By what?' 'By my loving God and His Messenger, and I will not run away on the day of war.' 'You have spoken the truth,' commented the Messenger of God (SAAS). And the man did die a martyr on that day.

"Many of the Muslims insisted on going forth to battle, refusing to accept the words and views of the Messenger of God (SAAS). If they had been content with what he had told them, it would have turned out so. But fate and destiny were to triumph.

"Most of those advising him to go forth were men who had not been present at Badr; they were aware of the credit that had earlier accrued to those who were present at it.

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) made the Friday prayer, he preached to the congregation and enjoined them to fight hard and well. Having finished his address and his prayer, he called for his armour and dressed in it. He then made announcement to the people that they were to go forth to battle.

"Aware of all this, some men of good sense observed, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered us to remain in Medina and he knows best about God and what He wants; revelation comes to him from heaven.'

"They addressed him, 'O Messenger of God, remain here, as you told us to do.' He replied, 'It is not fitting for a prophet who has put on armour for war and given the order to proceed to battle the enemy to return without fighting. I did call upon you to do that, but you insisted on going out to battle. You must fear God and remain firm in the violence when you meet the enemy. Look for what it is God has ordered you, and do it.'"

The account continued, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left with the Muslims. They took the route through al-Badatir and numbered 1,000 men. There were 3,000 in the polytheist force. The Messenger of God (SAAS) went on till he reached Uhud.

"Then 'Abd Allah b. Ubayy b. Salul went back with 300 men, there remaining 700 with the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "This is what is widely known among scholars of early military affairs – namely, that their force remained at 700 fighting men."

Al-Zuhri, however, was of the opinion that they had 400 fighting men left.
Ya'qūb b. Sufyān related it thus from Uṣbūgh, from Ibn Wahb, from Yūnus, from al-Zuhri; but by this chain of authorities the number was also given as 700. God knows best.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "The polytheists' cavalry was under the command of Khalīd b. al-Walīd. They had with them 100 horses. Their banner was in the charge of ʿUthmān b. Ṭalḥa. The Muslim force did not have a single horse." He then related the battle, as will now be done in detail, if God wills it.

Muḥammad b. ʾIṣḥāq stated, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had related his visions to his Companions, he told them, 'If you agree to remain in Medina and leave them where they have halted, that spot will turn out bad for them, while if they come in after us, we will fight them in the town.'

"ʿAbd Allah b. Ubayy b. Salūl agreed with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) that they should not go forth to meet the enemy.

"Some Muslims, however, including some whom God granted martyrdom at Uhud and others who had not attended at Badr, said, 'Messenger of God, lead us forth to our enemies so that they won't consider us to be scared of them, or too weak.'

"ʿAbd Allah b. Ubayy stated, 'Messenger of God, don't go out to attack them. Whenever we have left the town to do battle with an enemy, we have been beaten, whereas whenever they came in we beat them.'

"People kept on badgering the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) until he went in and dressed in his armour. That was on Friday, after he had finished the prayer. A man from Banū al-Najjār named Mālik b. ʿAmr had died that day. He said prayers for him and then went out to his men. They were now repenting their attitude and saying, 'We made him do what he did not wish, and we had no right to do that.'

"When he came out to them, they told him, 'Stay here if you wish, Messenger of God.' He replied, 'It would not be fitting for a prophet who put on armour to take it off before he did battle.'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then went forth with 1,000 of his men."

Ibn ʾIṣḥāq stated, "He went on as far as al-Shawt, between Medina and Uhud, and there ʿAbd Allah b. Ubayy withdrew back with one-third of the men. He said, 'He (the Prophet (ṢAAS)) agreed with them, but not with me. We don't know why we should kill ourselves out here, men!'

"He returned home with those of his tribe who were hypocrites and doubters. ʿAbd Allah b. ʿAmr b. Ḥarām al-Sulami, the father of Jābir b. ʿAbd Allah, went after them, saying, 'People, I enjoin you by God not to abandon your people and your Prophet when their enemy is at hand!' They replied, 'If we knew that you would do battle, we would not surrender you; but we don't believe there will be any fighting.'
“When they disobeyed ‘Abd Allāh and refused to change their decision to retreat, he commented, ‘May God banish you, you enemies of God; His Prophet (ṢAAS) will do without you!’”

I comment that these people are those to whom reference is being made in the words of the Almighty, “And so that He would know the hypocrites who were told, ‘Come fight in God’s cause, or defend yourselves.’ They replied, ‘If we knew there would be fighting, we would have followed you.’ On that day they were closer to disbelief than to faith. They spoke with their mouths what was not in their hearts. But God knows well what they conceal” (ṣūrat ʿAl ʿImrān; III, v.166).

This meant that they were lying in their statements, “If we knew there would be fighting, we would have followed you.” This is because the occurrence of the fighting was completely clear and evident, not something unknown or in doubt.

About them God also revealed, “What ails you then, that you have become two parties about the hypocrites; God had subverted them because of what they had earned” (ṣūrat al-Nisāʾ; IV, v.88). This is because one group had said, “We shall fight them!” while others said, “We will not fight them!” This is made clear and is well-established in the sahih collections.

Al-Zuhri stated that on that day the Companions asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for permission to enlist the aid of their Jewish allies in Medina, but that he replied, “We have no need of them.”

ʿUrwa b. Mūsā b. ʿUqba related that when ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubbay and his men withdrew, Banū Sālama and Banū Ḥāritha were about to lose courage, so God Almighty gave them strength. He therefore revealed, “When two of your parties were about to lose courage, yet God was the protector of them both, and it is upon God that believers rely” (ṣūrat ʿAl ʿImrān; III, v.123).

Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh stated, as is established about him in both sahih collections, “I would not have liked it if it had not been revealed, for ‘... God was the protector of them both.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) proceeded on, passing through the stony tract of Banū Ḥāritha. A horse swished its tail and caught against the hilt of a sword and jerked it out. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then told the man whose sword it was, ‘Sheathe your sword; I can see swords are to be drawn today.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) then asked his Companions, ‘Who can take us close to the enemy by a path that will not take us past them?’ Abū Khaythama, brother of Banū Ḥāritha b. al-Ḥārith replied, ‘I will, Messenger of God.’ He then led them out into the territory of Banū Ḥāritha, passing through their properties. Eventually Abū Khaythama led him into the farm of Mirbāʾ b. Qayzā. This man was a hypocrite and also blind. When he heard the sound of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims with him passing by, he began tossing dirt into their faces, saying, ‘If you are the Messenger of God, then I do not permit you to enter my garden!’

Ibn Ishāq continued, “It was told to me that he then took up a handful of dirt, saying, ‘By God, if I knew I’d strike no one but you, Muhammad, I’d hit you in the face with this!’ The Muslims charged at him to kill him, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Don’t kill him! This sightless fellow is blind both in his heart and in his eyes!’ But Sa’d b. Zayd, brother of Banū `Abd al-Ashhal, had already charged at him before the command of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and had hit him with his bow in his head and split it open.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded ahead and came down the defile from Mt. Uḥud, at the head of the valley, at the mountain. He positioned his camels and his men towards Uḥud and said, ‘Let no one begin fighting before I give the order to attack.’

“Quraysh had released their camels and horses in the fields at al-Ṣamgha, part of Qanāt that was Muslim territory. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave the order not to attack, one of the Companions asked, ‘Are the fields of Banū Qayla to be grazed without us going to battle?’

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) made ready for battle. His force consisted of 700 men; he appointed `Abd Allah b. Jubayr, brother of Banū `Amr b. `Awf, in charge of the archers. He stood out by being dressed in white clothing; the archers totalled 50 men. He (the Prophet (SAAS)) said ‘Fend off the cavalry from us with your arrows, so that they don’t come at us from the rear.
Whether the battle goes for or against us, hold your position so that we can’t be attacked from your direction.’”

This statement will receive testimony in both sahih collections, if God wills it.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out wearing two sets of armour; that is, he wore one suit of chain-mail above another. He gave charge of the banner to Muṣʿab b. Umayr, brother of Banū `Abd al-Dār.”

I comment that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent back a group of young men from the battle of Uḥud, not permitting them to be present at the fighting because of their youthfulness. These included `Abd Allāh b. `Umar, as is established in both sahih collections. He stated, “I was offered to the Messenger of God (SAAS) for the battle of Uḥud, but he would not allow me.
I was later presented to him for the battle of al-khandaq, ‘the trench’, at a time when I was 15, and he then did permit me to participate.”

On that occasion he also rejected Usāma b. Zayd, Zayd b. Thābit, al-Barā’ b.
`Āzib, Usayd b. Dhahir and `Arāba b. Aws b. Qayy. Ibn Qutayba related this and al-Suhaylī also gave it. It is of the last-mentioned that al-Shammākh stated:

“If a banner be raised for glory, then `Arāba will take it in his right hand.”
Ibn Saʿd b. Khaythama was also one of these. Al-Suhaylī mentioned him too. He (the Messenger of God (ṣaas)) allowed all of these to participate at the battle of al-khandaq.

He had sent back from Uhud Samura b. Jundub and Rāfīʿ b. Khadij, both of these being 15 years of age. But someone told him that Rāfīʿ was an archer, and so he let him stay. Then someone told him that Samura could wrestle Rāfīʿ down, and so he let him stay too.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Quraysh positioned their forces. They numbered 3,000. They had brought 200 horses with them which they positioned on the flanks, with Khalid b. al-Walid in charge of the right flank of the cavalry and Ḥikrima b. Abū Jahl b. Hishām in command of its left.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (ṣaas) asked, ‘Who will take this sword, along with its rights?’

‘Various men arose, but he refrained from giving it to them. Then Abū Dujāna Simāk b. Kharsha, brother of the Banū Saʿīda, came to him and asked, ‘What are its rights, Messenger of God?’

‘I will take it, Messenger of God, along with its rights,’ he agreed, and the Messenger of God (ṣaas) gave it to him.”

Ibn Ishaq related this anecdote thus, ṣaqa?r.“The Imam Ahmad stated, “Both Yazid and ʿAffān related to us as follows, Ḥammād, he being Ibn Salama, related to us, and Thābit informed us, from the Prophet (ṣaas) that at Uhud he picked up a sword and asked, “Who will take this sword?” Some men began examining it and he then asked, “Who will take it along with its rights?” The men withdrew, but Abū Dujāna Simāk responded, “I will take it with its rights.” And he did take it and cleaved a path with it through the middle of the polytheists.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abū Dujāna was a brave man who engaged in bravado when he went into battle. He had a red headband he would put on to set himself apart in battle and it would be known that he was preparing to fight.”

He went on, “When he took the sword from the hand of the Messenger of God (ṣaas), he took out the red headband and put it on. He then began strutting about between the two lines.

“Jaʿfar b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Aslam, the freed-man of ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb related to me, from one of the ansār of the Banū Salama, who related to me as follows, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣaas) said, when he saw Abū Dujāna strutting, “That is a way of walking that God dislikes except in circumstances like this!”’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Abū Sufyān had told those of Banū ʿAbd al-Dār who were in charge of the banner, inciting them to battle, ‘Banū ʿAbd al-Dār, you were in charge of our banner at the battle of Badr, and you saw what happened to us. Men will only fight for their flags; if once they are lost, they withdraw. Either take care of our banner for us, or give it over to us and we will relieve you of it.'

"They were angered at this and threatened him, saying, 'We give over our banner to you? You will learn tomorrow, when we meet in battle, how we will behave!' That was the response that Abū Sufyān wanted.

“When the forces met and drew close to one another, Hind, daughter of 'Utba, arose amidst the women accompanying her, and they took up tambourines and began beating them, positioning themselves behind the men and urging them on to battle. Hind spoke the following verses:

'Go to it, 'Abd al-Dār, go to it protectors of the rear!
Strike with your sharp weapons!'"

“She also said,

‘If you advance we will embrace and spread out cushions;
But retreat and we’ll leave and love not!’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Āsim b. Umar b. Qatādah related to me that Abū Āmir 'Abdu 'Amr b. Ṣayfī b. Mālik b. al-Nu‘mān, one of Bānti Dūbay‘a, had left for Mecca, having disagreed with the Messenger of God (SAAS); he was accompanied by 50 young men of Aws, though some say they were 15 in number. He had been promising Quraysh that if he were to meet up with his people, no two men of them would quarrel with him.

“When the sides clashed, the first to meet them was Abū Āmir with the Abyssinians and the slaves owned by the Meccans. Abū Āmir shouted out, ‘Aws, I am Abū Āmir!’ They responded, ‘May God grant you no ease, you sinner!’

‘Before Islam, Abū Āmir had been known as ‘the monk’; the Messenger of God (SAAS) had renamed him ‘the sinner’.

“When Abū Āmir heard their reply, he shouted, ‘So, evil has befallen my people since I left!’ He then engaged them in fierce battle, eventually casting stones at them.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “The sides advanced until the warfare grew intense and Abū Dujān progressed deep into the enemy’s force.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “More than one scholar related to me that al-Zubayr b. al-'Awvām said, ‘I was offended when I asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) for the sword and he refused it me and gave it to Abū Dujān. I told myself, ‘I’m the son of his aunt Ṣafiyya, and of Quraysh. Also, I went up and asked him for it before he did, yet he gave it to Abū Dujān, rejecting me. By God, I’ll watch what he does!’

“So I followed him. He took out a red headband and put it on his head. The ansār then said, ‘Abū Dujān has put on the death headband!’ This is what they would say to him whenever he did this. He then went forth to battle, reciting the words,

"I am one with whom my companion made a pact, when we were there on the hillside amidst the palm trees I'll never remain at the rear; I'll strike hard with the sword of God and His messenger."

Al-Umawi stated, "Abū Ubayd related to me, quoting the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said that a man had approached him while he was battling with it and he had asked him, 'If I give it to you, you'll probably fight at the rear.' 'No, I won't,' the man replied. So he gave the man the sword, who then recited the words,

'I am one with whom my companion made a pact;
I'll never remain at the rear!'"

This is a hadith that is related from Shu'ba. Isrā'il also related it, both of them quoting Ibn Ishāq, from Hind, daughter of Khālid; others also give it, attributing it directly to the Prophet (SAAS).

The word used in the above hadith interpreted as "the rear" is the noun al-kayyūl, a word I have not encountered elsewhere. It is said by some scholars to mean "the ranks at the back".

Ibn Hishām's text stated, "Every man he met, Abū Dujāna killed. Among the polytheists there was one man who executed every man he wounded. This man and Abū Dujāna came ever closer to one another, and I prayed to God to bring them together. And they did meet. They exchanged a couple of blows. The polytheist then struck at Abū Dujāna, who fended off the blow with his shield which trapped the man's sword. Then Abū Dujāna struck and killed him. I next saw Abū Dujāna aiming at the centre of the head of Hind, daughter of Utba. But he turned his sword aside, and I commented, 'God and his messenger know best!'"

Al-Bayhaqi related this hadith in Dalā'il (The Signs), quoting Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from al-Zubayr b. al-'Awwām, who gave it.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Abū Dujāna said, 'I saw one man who was giving great encouragement to his side, so I headed for him. When I attacked him with my sword, he let out a scream and I saw it was a woman! I respected the sword of the Messenger of God (SAAS) by refraining from striking a woman with it.'"

Mūsā b. Uqba related that the Messenger of God (SAAS), refused Umar's request when he made it for the sword and when next al-Zubayr sought it he rejected him too. This troubled them both. When he offered it a third time and Abū Dujāna asked for it, he gave it to him, and he did give the sword its rights.

He went on, "People claim that Ka'b b. Malik said, 'I was among those Muslims who went forth to the battle. When I saw that the dead on both the Muslim and polytheist sides were similar, I moved forward to participate. I then saw that one polytheist, heavily armoured, was striking the Muslims hard and saying, “Come on then, you sheep gathering for the slaughter!” But then I saw one Muslim, fully armoured, waiting for him and I went on over behind him and began comparing the Muslim with the polytheist. The latter was better in equipment and in form. I kept on waiting until they met. The Muslim then struck the unbeliever a blow with his sword on his shoulder artery. The sword came right down through to his thigh, cutting him into two. Then the Muslim uncovered his face and said, “What about that, Ka'b! I’m Abū Dujānā!”’

THE DEATH OF HAMZA, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Hamza b. ‘Abd al-Mut'ālib fought on until he killed Artāt b. Ābd Shuraqīl b. Hashim b. ‘Abd Manāf b. ‘Abd al-Dār, who was one of those bearing the banner. He also killed Uthmān b. Abū Ṭalḥa while he was carrying the flag and reciting,

’It is the duty of those who bear the flag to keep up tall or to be struck down low.’

“Hamza then attacked and killed him.

“After that Sībā’ b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza al-Ghubshānti, who was commonly known as ‘Abū Niyār’, passed him by and Ḥamza called out to him, ‘Come on over here, you son of a female who does circumcisions!’ The man’s mother was Umm Anmār, a freed-woman of Shariq b. ‘Amr b. Wahh al-Thaqafi; she was circumcisor (of women) in Mecca. When the two men met, Ḥamza struck and killed him.

“Waḥshi, the slave of Jubayr b. Mu‘ṣim stated, ‘I swear, I watched while Ḥamza struck out at everyone with his sword, letting none escape; he was like some gigantic camel. Sībā’ got to him before me, then Hamza said, “Come on over here, you son of a woman who does circumcisions!” He then struck him so fast that he seemed to have missed his head. So I readied my spear until sure it was well aimed, then I let it fly at him. It hit him beneath his navel and came out between his legs. He advanced towards me, but collapsed. I left him till he died, then I went, retrieved my spear and returned to the camp; my only business was with him.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. al-Fadl b. ‘Ayyāsh b. Rabī’ta b. al-Hārith related to me, from Sulaymān b. Yāsār, from Ja’far b. ‘Amr b. Umayya al-Ḍāmri, who said, ‘I and ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Adī b. al-Khiyār, one of Banī Nāwfa‘l b. ‘Abd Manāf, went out on a military expedition during the reign of Mu‘āwiyah. Having served with the others, we passed by Ḥimṣ, where Waḥshi, the freed-man of Jubayr, had taken up residence. When we got there, ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Adī asked, “Should we go to see Waḥshi and ask him about the death of Ḥamza, and how he killed him?” “If you would like,” I responded.
“So we went off and enquired about him in Ḥims. When we asked a man about him, he told us, “You will find him in the courtyard of his house. He has become addicted to wine; if you should find him sober, you’ll find him to be a true Arab man and you’ll get what you want from him and he’ll tell you whatever you ask him about. But if you find him under the influence, you’d better just leave him alone.”

He continued, ‘So we went off to visit him and found him in the courtyard of his house on a rug. He was a large old man who looked like a bugḥāth, a blackish bird. He was sober and in good health and we greeted him when we reached him.

He raised his sight to Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Adī and asked, “Are you the son of ‘Adī b. al-Khiyār?” “Yes, I am,” he replied. Wāḥṣi commented, “Well, I swear, I’ve not seen you since I handed you to your mother, al-Sa’diya, who was suckling you, at Dhū Ṭūwā. I lifted you up to her as she sat on her camel. She took hold of you around the waist and your feet shone as I handed you up to her. I swear, I therefore recognized your feet as soon as you stood before me!”

He went on, ‘So we sat down with him and told him, “We have come to you to ask you about the death of Ḥamza; how did you kill him?”

He replied, “Shall I tell it to you just as I did to the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he asked me about it? I was a slave of Jubayr b. Muṭṭim, whose uncle was Tu‘aymā b. ‘Adī, who was struck down at Badr. When Quraysh went forth to Uhud, Jubayr told me, ‘If you kill Ḥamza, Muhammad’s uncle, in retaliation for my uncle’s death, then you will be a free man.’

“So I went out with the warriors. I was an Abyssinian and could throw the spear like my countrymen; I rarely missed with it. When the forces met in battle, I went forth looking for Ḥamza to lie in wait for him. I found him right amidst the fray, like an enormous camel, striking out viciously at our men with his sword, nothing withstanding him. I made use of bushes and rocks to get close to him, but Sīḥā b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza got to him before me. When Ḥamza saw him, he said, ‘Come over here, you son of a woman who does circumcisions!’ He then struck him a blow so quickly that it appeared to have missed his head. I aimed my spear carefully, and when sure of it, I hurled it at him. It struck him below his navel and emerged between his legs. He tried to move towards me, but was overcome. I left him with the spear until he died. Then I went over to him, retrieved my spear and returned to camp, where I stayed. I had no business with anyone other than him. I only killed him to gain my freedom.

“When I reached Mecca, I was manumitted and remained there until the Messenger of God (SAAS) conquered Mecca. I then fled to Ṭā’if, where I stayed. When the Ṭā’if delegation left to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) and to accept Islam, I didn’t know what to do. I told people, ‘I’ll go to Syria or Yemen or some other country!’ I was in this state of indecision and anxiety when

6. Ibn Hishām adds the comment to Ibn Isḥāq’s account that the word stands for “a kind of bird inclining to black in colour”. See Guillaume, op. cit. p.753.
someone told me, 'Come on now! I swear, he'll not kill anyone who has adopted his religion and testified to the truth.'

"When he told me that, I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina, surprising him by standing before him and speaking the testimony of the truth.

""When he saw me, he asked, 'Are you Wahshi?' I replied, 'Yes, O Messenger of God.' He then said, 'Sit down and relate to me how you killed Hamza.'

""So I related it as I did to you both. When I finished my account, he said, 'Remove your face from me; I'll not see you!'

""So I used to avoid the Messenger of God (SAAS) wherever he might be so that he would not see me, and eventually God, Almighty and Glorious is He, took him to Himself.'

""When the Muslim force went to war against that liar Musaylima, who controlled Yemen, I accompanied them, taking the spear with which I killed Hamza. When the forces met, I saw Musaylima standing sword in hand, though I didn't then know for sure the man was him. I prepared to attack him, as did another Muslim, an anṣāri, coming from the other side. Each of us was heading for him. I steadied my spear until I felt good about it and then let it loose at him. It pierced him. The anṣāri then attacked him with his sword. So God alone knows which of us killed him. If it was I who killed him, then I killed the best of men after the Messenger of God (SAAS), and also killed the worst of them!"

I note that the anṣāri was Abū Dujāna Simāk b. Kharasha.

Al-Waqīḍi stated in his account of al-ridda, "the apostasy wars", as follows: "He was 'Abd Allāh b. Zayd b. Ḥārim al-Māinī. Sayf b. 'Amr stated, 'He was 'Adi b. Sahīl. And it was he who spoke the verses,

"Do you not know that it was I and their Wahshī, who killed Musaylima, who sowed dissension.

People ask me about his death and I reply, 'I struck and he pierced!'"

What is well known is that it was Wahshī who struck him when he attacked and that Abū Dujāna finished him off when wounded. This is because of what Ibn Iṣḥāq related, from 'Abd Allāh b. al-ʿAfālī, from Sulaymān b. Yasār, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, "I heard someone shout out at the battle of Yamāmā, 'It was the black slave who killed him!"

Al-Bukhārī related the story of the killing of Hamza through ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Salāma al-Mājishawn, from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-ʿAfālī, from Sulaymān b. Yasār, from Jaʿfar b. ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍāmī. He said, "I went forth to battle with ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAdi b. al-Khiyār." And he then related the incident as given above. He recalled that ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAdi was wearing a turban, and that all Wahshi could see of him was his eyes and his feet. And he related as above from his knowledge of him.

This was a great piece of detection, comparable to Mujazziz al-Mudliji's noticing a similarity in the feet of Zayd to those of his son Usama despite the difference in their complexion.

He (al-Bukhari) quoted Wahshi as saying, "When the men were lined up for battle, Sibai went out and said, 'Will someone accept my challenge?' Hamza b. 'Abd al-Muttalib came forward and answered, 'So Siba, it's you, son of Umm Anmar, the woman who does circumcisions! Do you challenge God and His messenger?' He then attacked him and it was all over for Siba."

Wahshi continued, "I was lying in wait for Hamza beneath a rock. When he came close to me I hurled my spear at him and it hit him beneath the navel and emerged between his thighs. And that was the end of him."

His account continued until he said, "And when God took the Messenger of God (SAAS) unto Himself and the pretender Musaylima appeared, I said, 'I'll go out after Musaylima in hopes of killing him to atone for Hamza.' So I did go forth with our force and the warfare progressed. Then I saw a man standing in a gap in a wall, looking like an enormous camel, rearing its head. I hurled my spear at him; it struck him in the middle of the chest and emerged between his shoulders. Then one of the Helpers charged at him and struck him with his sword on the top of his head."

'Abd Allah b. al-Fadl stated, "Sulayman b. Yasar related to me that he heard 'Abd Allah b. Umar say, 'A girl at the back of the house screamed, 'The Commander of the Faithful! The black slave killed him!'""

Ibn Hisham stated, "I have heard that Wahshi continued being punished for abuse of wine until he was eventually removed from the pension list. Umar b. al-Khattab used to say, 'I always said God would not leave Hamza's killer unpunished!'"

I note that Wahshi b. Harb, Abn Dasma, known as Aha Harb, died in Hims; he was the first person to wear his clothes madliuka, rubbed clean and hand-pressed.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Mu'ammad b. 'Umayr fought on, protecting the Messenger of God (SAAS), until he was killed. It was Ibn Qamra al-Laythi who killed him, thinking that Mu'ammad was the Messenger of God (SAAS). He went back to Quraysh and announced, 'I have killed Muhammad!'"

I note that Musa b. Uqba recounted in his work on the military expeditions, quoting Sa'id b. al-Musayyab, to the effect that the man who killed Mu'ammad was Ubayy b. Khalaf. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "When Mu'ammad b. 'Umayr was killed, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave the banner into the charge of 'Ali b. Abul Talib."

Yunus b. Bukayr stated, quoting Ibn Ishaq, "The banner was first with 'Ali b. Abul Talib. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw that 'Abd al-Dar had charge of the polytheists’ banner, he said, ‘We have a greater right to their allegiance than they do!’ He then took the banner away from ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib and gave it to Musʿab b. ʿUmayr. When Musʿab was killed, he awarded the banner again to ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “And ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib and Muslim warriors fought the enemy.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Maslama b. ʿAlqama al-Māzīnī related to me, ‘When the fighting grew fierce at the battle of Uhud, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sat beneath the standard of the anṣār and sent a message to ʿAli, saying, “Bring the banner forward!” ʿAli went forward, shouting, “I am Abū al-Qaṣm!” Abū Saʿd b. Abū Ṭalḥa, he being the standard bearer of the polytheists, called back, “Will you accept single combat, Abū al-Qaṣm?” “Yes,” he replied. So they both went forth between the opposing sides and exchanged two blows. Then ʿAli struck him down, but left without killing him off.”

“Some of the men asked him, “Why didn’t you finish him off?” He replied, “He exposed his private parts to me and I had pity on him because of our ties of kinship. And I knew that God had condemned him to death.”’

ʿAli himself, may God be pleased with him, did this at the battle of Siffin. When Busr b. Abū Arqāt came up to kill him, he exposed himself to him and Busr withdrew from him.

ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ acted similarly when ʿAli came over to kill him in one of the battles at Siffin; he exposed himself and ʿAli withdrew. On this subject al-Ḥarīth b. al-Nadr spoke the following verses:

“Is there at every battle a knight not yet expired, with his private parts visible amidst the dust? Because of this ʿAlī holds back his spearhead, and Muʿāwiya secretly scoffs at this!”

Yūnus related, from Ibn Ishaq, that Ṭalḥa b. Abū Ṭalḥa al-ʿAbdārī, standard bearer of the polytheists that day, made a challenge for single combat, but the men held back from him. Then al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām went out to him and leapt up on to his camel with him. He then hurled him down from it on to the ground and killed him with his sword. The Messenger of God (SAAS) praised him, saying, “Every prophet has his disciple, and my disciple is al-Zubayr.”

He then said, “If he had not gone out to fight him, I would have done so myself, having seen how everyone held back!”

“ʿĀṣim b. Thābit b. Abū al-Aqlah fought and killed Nafiʿ b. Abū Ṭalḥa and his brother al-Ḥallas with arrows. One went to their mother Sulāfa and laid his head in her lap. She asked, ‘Who was it shot you, son?’ He replied, ‘As he shot me, I heard a man say, “Take that; I’m Ibn Abū al-Aqlah!”’ She then swore that if God gave her ʿĀṣim’s head, she would drink wine from it.”
‘Āsim had sworn to God that he would never touch a polytheist or have one touch him. That is why God protected him at the battle of al-Raj‘ī, as will be related hereafter.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Hānzala b. Abū ‘Amīr met in battle with Abū Sufyān Sakhr b. Harb. Hānzala was known as ‘Amr; he was also known as ‘Abd ‘Amr b. Shayfī. His father, Abū ‘Amīr, was known in the jahiliyya, as ‘the monk’, because he prayed so much. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) renamed him ‘the sinner’ since he opposed the truth and those believing in it and fled from Medina abandoning Islam and in opposition to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Hānzala was also known as al-ghasil, ‘the washed one’, since he was washed by the angels, as will be related.

“When Hānzala bested Abū Sufyān, Shaddād b. al-Aws, known as Ibn Sha‘īb, saw this and struck Hānzala down, killing him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Your friend is being washed by the angels in heaven; ask his family about his circumstances.’

“So they did ask his wife. According to al-Waqīdī, she was Jamīla, daughter of Ubayy b. Salīl; she had become his bride that night.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “She replied, ‘When he went forth on bearing the call to arms, he was in a state of ritual impurity.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘And so the angels washed hi.”

Miṣa b. Wqba related that his father struck him in the chest with his foot and said, “Two sins you committed. I forbade you this fate of yours. And, by God, now you’ve achieved mercy, thanks to your father!”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ibn Sha‘īb recited on this subject,

‘I guard my companion and myself with a thrust like a flash of sunlight.’”

Ibn Sha‘īb spoke the verse,

“Were it not for my defence, Ibn Harb, and my presence, you would have been unresponsive at the mountain-slope battle.
And had I not brought the colt back to the hilltop, hyenas or jackals would have devoured it.”

Abū Sufyān spoke the verses,

“If I wished, my red-black swift-footed horse would have saved me and I would bear no debt of thanks to Ibn Sha‘īb.
And my colt would have stayed a safe distance from them, that morning and on till dusk,
While I fought them, crying, ‘Hail to the victor!’
Fending them off with a stout arm.
Weep on, caring not for how others rebuke you, nor tire of your tears and sighs,
For your father and his brothers who have passed away; their fate deserves tears.

I am relieved of my earlier pain, now that I have killed all the great chiefs of Banū al-Najjar,

And a fine leader of Ḥashim, and Muṣ'ab too, a man who was never timid in the fray.

Had I not relieved my mind by killing them, my heart would have been hurt and scarred.

They withdrew, their jalābī now dead, their wounds gaping and oozing blood, Struck down by men not equal to them either in descent or in rank."

Ḥassān b. Thabit answered him with the verses,

"You mention the fine leaders of Banū Ḥashim, and here you are stating no lie.

Are you pleased at having struck down Ḥamza, a great chief, as you yourself said,

And did they not kill ʿAmr, and ʿUtba and his son, along with Shayba, al-Ḥajjāj and Ibn Ḥabīb,

That morning when al-ʿĀṣi challenged ʿAlī and he scared him with the blow of a blood-stained sword?"

DIVISION.

Ibn ʿIṣḥāq stated, “Then God sent down victory for the Muslims, fulfilling his promise to them. They massacred them with swords, ultimately cutting them off from their camp. The enemy’s defeat was indisputable.

“Yahyā b. ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, from his father ʿAbbād, from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, from al-Zubayr, who said, ‘I swear, I remember seeing the legs of Hind, daughter of Utba and her companions, their clothing tucked up as they fled. Almost nothing prevented them being captured when the archers turned away to the camp after we had blocked the enemy from reaching it. But this meant we had left our rear open to the cavalry, and they came at us from behind. Someone yelled, ‘Muḥammad has been killed!’ So we turned back, the enemy reeling back on us too, after we had killed their standard bearers, preventing any of them from approaching it.

“And a scholar in the traditions told me that their standard remained down until ʿAmra, daughter of ʿAlqama, the Ḥārith woman, raised it again for Quraysh, and so they rallied back around it. The banner had been in the charge of Sawāb, an Abyssinian slave of Banū Abū Ṭalḥa. He was the last of them to take it; he fought on with it until his hands were cut off. He then crouched down over it, holding the banner between his neck and chest. He was killed right over it, and as he died, he said, “O God, have I ’azarru” (for ’adhartu, improperly pronouncing the dh sound) that is, ‘Am I absolved?’

“Hassan b. Thabit spoke the following verses on this:

‘You were proud of your flag, yet poor pride it was to give it over to Sawab
You entrusted your pride in it to a slave, grovelling in the dust on the ground
You thought – and a fool too has thoughts – though rarely does he get them straight
That fighting us would be as when we would meet in Mecca, with you selling us red leather bags.
It pleased us well when his hands turned red, though it was not dye that made them so.’

“Hassan also spoke the verses that follow regarding how it was ‘Amra, daughter of ‘Alqama, who raised their banner for them:

‘When the ‘Adl were led to us, like gazelles of Shirk, their eyebrows prominent,
We set at them, thrusting at them from all sides, destroying, punishing and aggrieving them,
Were it not for the woman of al-Harith having taken their banner, they would have been sold in the markets like slaves.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Muslim ranks broke and the enemy gained advantage over them. It was a day of trial and testing in which God honoured some with martyrdom. At last the enemy broke through to the Messenger of God (SAAS); he was hit with a rock and fell on his side, breaking his front teeth, slashing his face and splitting his lip. The man who struck him was Uthba b. Abū Waqqas.

“Humayd al-Tawil related to me, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘The front tooth of the Prophet (SAAS) was broken at the battle of Uhud, and he was slashed in the face. Wiping off the blood, he said, “How could any people prosper who would bloody the face of their prophet while he invites them to come to God?” And so God sent down the verse: “You have no say in the matter;
He may indeed forgive them or punish them (though) they are wrongdoers”’

Ibn Jarir stated in his history, “Muhammad b. al-Husayn related to us, as did Ahmad b. al-Fadl, as did Ashūṭ, from al-Suddī, who said, ‘Ibn Qāmiṣa al-Harithī came up and cast a rock at the Messenger of God (SAAS) which broke his nose and his front teeth, gashed his face and knocked him over. His Companions then scattered away from him, some going back to Medina and others climbing up the mountain to al-Sakhra. The Messenger of God (SAAS) began calling out to everyone, “Come to me, servants of God! Come to me, servants of God!” Thirty men did gather around him, then began moving out ahead of him, only Talha and Sahl b. Hanif staying. Talha shielded him and was struck by an arrow in his hand that became paralysed. Ubayy b. Khalaf al-Jumahi then approached; he had sworn to kill the Prophet (SAAS). He said, “I really will kill him!” He (the Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, “You liar! Where will you hide?” Ubayy then attacked, but the Prophet (SAAS) pierced him through the chain-mail over his chest and Ubayy was slightly injured. He fell, bellowing like a steer and they carried him off, telling him, “You’ve not been badly wounded; what is upsetting you so?” He replied, “Didn’t he say, “I shall certainly kill you!” If all Rabia and Mudar had assembled, he would have killed them!” And it was only a day or so thereafter that Ubayy did die of that wound.

“Word spread that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had been killed. Some of those up at al-Sakhra said, “We’d better send an envoy to 'Abd Allah b. Ubayy and have him get us a truce from Abu Sufyan. People! Muhammad has been killed! Go back home before they get to you and kill you!”

‘Anas b. al-Nadr responded, “People; even if Muhammad has been killed, Muhammad’s God has not. Fight on for what Muhammad (SAAS) strived for. O God, I apologize to You and seek Your forgiveness for what these people have said.” He then gripped his sword and fought valiantly until he was killed.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) hurried off to summon his men and reached those at al-Sakhra. When they saw him coming, one of them put an arrow to his bow to shoot, but he called out, “I’m the Messenger of God!” They were overjoyed to see him and he too was delighted to have found some of his men to protect him. When they gathered around the Messenger of God (SAAS) their depression lifted, and they advanced, talking of victory, how it had escaped them and making mention of their comrades who had been killed.

“And so God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed the following verse about these men who had said, “Muhammad is dead! So go back to your people!” It was: “Muhammad is only a messenger, and messengers have passed away before him” (sūrat Al-‘Imrān; III, v.144).

‘Abu Sufyan then advanced and took a position where he could look down upon them. When the men looked up at him, they forgot their enthusiasm and Abu Sufyan became their sole concern. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the words, “It must not be that they overcome us: O God, if this group of men are killed, then You will not be worshipped on earth.” His Companions then repented and hurled rocks at the enemy until they forced them down.

“Abu Sufyan said on that day, “Raise up Hubal! Ħanzala for Ħanzala! The battle of Uhud for the battle of Badr!”

He then went on to relate the rest of the story. This account is very strange and objectionable in part.
Ibn Hishām stated, “Rubayḥ b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abū Sa‘īd claimed, quoting his father, from Abū Sa‘īd, that it was ‘Utbā b. Abū Waqqāṣ who shot at the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), breaking his lower right incisor and damaging his lower lip. He stated further that ‘Abd Allāh b. Shīhāb al-Zuḥrī wounded his forehead, and that ‘Abd Allāh b. Qamīṣa cut open his cheek, making two rings of his chain-mail helmet pierce it. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then fell into one of the pits Abū ʿĀmir had prepared for the Muslims. ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭālib took him by the hand and Ṭalḥa b. ʿUbayd Allāh raised him up till he could stand straight. Mālik b. Sinān, the father of Abū Sa‘īd, sucked the blood from the cheek of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and swallowed it. He (the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Whoever has had his own blood touch mine will not be touched by hell-fire.’”

I comment here that Qatāda related that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) lost consciousness when he fell on his side. He stated that Salīm, freed-man of Abū Ḥudhayfā, went over to him, sat him down and wiped the blood from his face. As he came to, he said, “How could any people succeed who have done this to their prophet while he invited them to come to God?” And so God revealed, “It is not your business” (sūrat Al Ḥārām; III, v.127).

Ibn Jarir gave this tradition, incomplete in its line of transmission; discussion of this will come later, separately.

I would comment that early in the day the Muslims had the upper hand over the unbelievers. As God Almighty stated, “God certainly made good to you His promise when you killed them by His leave, until you failed and disputed about what to do and were disobedient after He had demonstrated to you what you liked. Some among you desire this world, while others of you desire the next. He then put you to flight before them, to test you all. And He has now forgiven you; God is generous to believers. Remember when you went rushing up the hill, while the Messenger called you from your rear. And so He exchanged for you one sorrow for another” (sūrat Al Ḥārām; III, v.151, 2).

“He (ʿUbayd Allāh) said, ‘We contradicted this’, and Ibn ʿAbbās responded, ‘The Book of God stands between me and anyone contradicting that. God states about Uḥud, ‘God certainly made good to you His promise when you killed them by His leave.’’” Ibn ʿAbbās then said, ‘In this text the word al-hass means “killing”. The text continues, “... until you failed” and so on till the words, “... and He has forgiven you; God is generous to believers.” By this he was referring to the archers. This is because the Prophet (ṢAAS) placed them in a position and said, “Protect our backs. If you see us being killed, don’t come to our aid. And if you see us winning, don’t join us.”’
“But when the Prophet (SAAS) was winning and laid open the polytheists’ camp, all the archers lost control of themselves and went in for plunder; the ranks of the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) then met up with them and intermingled with them in confusion.

“When the archers left the position they had had, the enemy cavalry attacked the men of the Prophet (SAAS) from that spot. The forces engaged in a general confused mêlée, and many of the Muslims were killed. The battle had gone to the Messenger of God (SAAS) early in the day, to the point where seven or nine of the standard-bearers of the polytheists had been killed. The Muslims went on, making a circuit towards the mountain; they did not reach the place where people say is the cave, which was beneath the large hollowed-out rock.

“Then Satan shouted, ‘Muhammad has been killed!’ It was not doubted that this was true. And we went on believing that this was so until the Messenger of God (SAAS) appeared amidst a group of men of Banu Sa’d; we recognized him from the distinctive way he walked. We were so overjoyed that it was as if we had not suffered what we had. As he approached us, he was saying, ‘God will be extremely angry with a people who have bloodied the face of the Messenger of God!’ He also said, ‘O God, it must not be that they overcome us!’

“Eventually he reached us and stayed awhile. Then Abū Sufyān lower down on the mountain began shouting, ‘Raise up Hubal! Raise up Hubal!’ His reference was to his god. (He also shouted), ‘And where is Abū Kabsha’s son? And where is Abū Quṭāfa’s son? Where is al-Khaṭṭāb’s son?’

“At this, ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) ‘Shouldn’t I answer him back?’ ‘You should,’ the latter replied. And so when Abū Sufyān next said, ‘Raise up Hubal!’ ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb responded, ‘God is far higher and more Glorious!’ Abū Sufyān then said, ‘Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, the war has favoured us. Give it up!’

“He then said, ‘And where is the son of Abū Kabsha? Where is Abū Quṭāfa’s son? And where is Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb?’ ‘Umar responded, ‘This, here, is the Messenger of God (SAAS); this, here, is Abū Bakr. And here am I, ‘Umar.’

“Abū Sufyān then said, ‘A battle for that of Badr. Battles move in cycles. Warfare has its ups and downs.’ ‘Umar replied, ‘They’re not equivalent. Our dead are in heaven, yours in hell!’

“He responded, ‘That’s what you claim! If that were indeed so, then it is we who have failed and lost!’ Abū Sufyān went on to say, ‘Regarding your discovery of some mutilated bodies among your dead, this was not from a decision of our leadership.’ But then his pagan fanaticism got the better of him, and he said, ‘However, if we had deliberated the matter, we might well not have decided against it!’”

Ibn Abū Hātim related this, as did al-Ḥakīm in his compendium. Al-Bayhaqī related it in his Dalā’il (The Signs), from a hadith of Sulaymān b. Dā’ūd al-Ḥashimi.
This hadith is gharib, "unilateral". It is one of the incomplete traditions ascribed to Ibn ‘Abbās. A variety of authorities testify to it, and we will quote those we can, if God wills it. And in Him is all trust, upon Him all reliance. It is He to whom one goes for help.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Ubayd Allah b. Mūsā related to him, from Isrā’īl, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Barṣ, who said, "It was on that day that we met the enemy in battle. The Prophet (ṢAAS) positioned a contingent of archers, placing ‘Abd Allāh b. Jubayr in charge of them, and telling them, 'Don’t leave here; if you see us defeat them, don’t leave. And if you see them defeat us, don’t come to our aid.'

“When we met the enemy in battle, they fled in such disorder that I saw their women scurrying up into the mountains raising their legs and exposing their ankles. Our troops began calling for plunder, but ‘Abd Allāh replied, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) charged me not to let you leave.’ But they rejected this and no sooner had they done so than they became completely confused.

"70 men were killed and then there was Abū Sufyān looking down on us and asking, ‘Is Muḥammad there among the men?’ He (the Prophet (ṢAAS)) told us not to respond. Abū Sufyān then demanded, ‘And is the son of Abū Quḥāfa among you?’ Again he told us not to reply. Now Abū Sufyān asked, ‘Is Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb there?’ He then commented, ‘Well, these men have been killed; if they were alive, they would have responded.’

"‘Umar could no longer contain himself. He shouted, ‘You lie, you enemy of God! May God give you lasting torment!’

"Abū Sufyān now said, ‘Raise up Hubal!’ The Prophet (ṢAAS) said, ‘Now give him an answer!’ ‘What should we say?’ the men asked. He replied, ‘Say: God is far higher and more Glorious!’

"Abū Sufyān responded, ‘Consolation is ours; you have none.’

"The Prophet (ṢAAS) told them, ‘Answer him back!’ ‘What should we say?’ they asked. He replied, ‘Say; “God is our master, but you have no master.”’

"Abū Sufyān then said, ‘A battle for the battle of Badr. Warfare goes in cycles. And you will find some bodies mutilated. We did not order that, but it doesn’t bother me.’”

And this is one of the traditions that al-Bukhārī includes, but Muslim does not.

Imām Ahmad stated that Mūsā related to him, as did Zuhayr and Abū Ishāq, that al-Barṣ b. ‘Azib said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) placed ‘Abd Allāh b. Jubayr over the archers, who were 50 men in all, at the battle of Uhud. He positioned them in a particular site and told them, ‘If you see the vultures flying off with us don’t leave until I send you a message. If you see us victorious over the enemy and trampling them underfoot, don’t leave until I send you a message.’

“Our forces defeated them and, I swear by God, I saw their women scurrying up the mountain, their ankles and legs exposed as they raised their garments.
“The men under 'Ahd Allāh b. Jubayr asked, ‘The plunder! Let’s go for the booty, men! Your troops have won, so what do you think?’

‘Abd Allāh b. Jubayr replied, ‘Have you forgotten what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said?’ They replied, ‘By God, we should go and join our forces and get some of the booty.‘

“And when they did join them, everyone became confused and they suffered a defeat and went on ahead, while the Messenger (ṢAAS) called at them from behind.

“Only 12 men were left with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). 70 of our men were struck down; the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and his forces had taken out 140 of the enemy at Badr, 70 being killed and 70 being taken prisoner.

“Abū Sufyān then asked, ‘Is Muḥammad among the men?’ He said this three times, but the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told them not to respond.

“Then he said, ‘Is the son of Abū Qulāfa among the men? Is Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb there?’ He then went forward to his own force and said, ‘Those people have been killed; you have requited them.’

“Umar could not restrain himself from saying, ‘You lie, you enemy of God. Those you enumerated are all alive. And the living will bring your harm!’

“Abū Sufyān commented, ‘A battle for the battle of Badr! Warfare goes in cycles. And you will find some bodies mutilated. We did not order that, but it doesn’t bother me.’

“He then began chanting, ‘Raise up, Hubal! Raise up, Hubal!’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked his men, ‘Aren’t you going to respond to him?‘ ‘But Messenger of God,’ they asked, ‘what should we respond?’ He told them, ‘Say: “God is far higher and more Glorious!”‘ “Abū Sufyān then commented, ‘We have consolation, not you.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked them, ‘Won’t you respond to him?’ They asked, ‘What should we respond, Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘Say: “God is our master and you have no master.”‘

Al-Bukhārī related this in abbreviated form from a ḥadīth of Zuhayr, he being Muḥāwiyya’s son, in abbreviated form. His version has been related above through Isrā‘īl, from Abū Isḥāq.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAffān related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Salama, quoting Thābit and ʿAlī b. Zayd, from Anas b. Mālik, who said that when the polytheists overwhelmed the Prophet (ṢAAS) while he was in the company of seven of the anṣār and one man of Quraysh, he said, “Whoever will repel them from us will be my companion in paradise!” At this, one of the anṣār came up and did battle until he was killed.

The account goes on that when they next overwhelmed him, he again said, “Whoever will repel them will be my companion in paradise!” And eventually all seven were killed.

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, “Our forces have not treated us fairly.”
Muslim related this from Hudba b. Khālid, from an account of Ḥamād b. Salama.

Al-Bayhaqi stated in his work Dalā'il (The Signs), giving his chain of transmission from Umāra b. Ghaziyya, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, "The men fled in defeat away from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), at the battle of Uhud. Eleven of the anṣār and Ṭalḥa b. Ḫubayd Allāh remained with him as he climbed on up the mountain, but the polytheists caught up with them. The Prophet (ṢAAS), asked, 'Will no one take care of these?' Ṭalḥa replied, 'I will, Messenger of God!' 'You stay where you are,' he told him. One of the anṣār then said, 'I will, Messenger of God!' and he fought hard in defence of him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) climbed up higher, along with those men remaining with him. Then the anṣār was killed and the enemy again caught up with them. Another of the anṣār then said, 'I will, Messenger of God!' And he fought on while his companions went on up. Eventually he was killed, and the polytheists caught up with them.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) kept on saying as he had the first time, with Ṭalḥa always volunteering, but being restrained, and another of the anṣār asking permission to do battle. He would be permitted to do so and would fight on as had those before him.

Eventually only Ṭalḥa was left with him. The enemy was again attacking them, so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked once more, 'Will no one take care of these?' Ṭalḥa responded that he would and he fought on as had all those before him. He was injured in his fingertips and called out in pain. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, 'If you had called out the words, 'In God's name!' the angels would have raised you up while everyone looked on at you, until they carried you right on up into the air of heaven.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then climbed up to join his men who were gathered there."

Al-Bukhārī related, from 'Abd Allah b. Abī Shayba, from Waki', from Ismā'īl, from Qays b. Abī Ḥāzim, who stated, "I saw Ṭalḥa's hand to be a stump, and with it he defended the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), at the battle of Uhud."

In both sahīh collections there is a hadith of Muṣāb b. Ismā'īl, from Mu'tamir b. Sulaymān, from his father, from Abū ʿUthmān al-Nahdi, who said, "During some of those days when he engaged in battle, no one remained with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), except Ṭalḥa and Sa'd, according to their accounts."

Al-Ḥasan b. 'Arafa stated that it was related to him by Marwān b. Muʿāwiyya, from Ḥāshim b. Hashim al-Saʿdī, who said, "I heard Saʿd b. al-Musayyab say, 'I heard Saʿd b. Abū Waqqāṣ state, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), took the arrows out of his quiver for me at the battle of Uhud and said, 'Shoot, may my father and mother be your ransom!'""

Al-Bukhārī derived this hadith from 'Abd Allah b. Muḥammad, from Marwān.
In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, there is a hadith traced from ʿAbd Allāh b. Shaddād who quoted ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib as follows, “I never heard the Prophet (SAAS) swear by both his parents to anyone except Saʿd b. Malik. At Uhud I heard him say, ‘Saʿd, shoot, may my father and my mother be your ransom!’”

Mūḥammad b. Ishaq stated that it was related to him by a member of Saʿd’s family, Sāliḥ b. Kaysān, from Saʿd b. Abū Waqqās, that at Uhud he shot his arrows from directly in front of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Saʿd said, “I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) say, ‘Shoot, may my father and my mother be your ransom!’ He even handed me arrows without points, saying, ‘Shoot with this!’”

It is established in both sahih collections, from a hadith of Ibrahim b. Saʿd, from his father, from his grandfather, that Saʿd b. Abū Waqqās said, “At the battle of Uhud I saw to the right and to the left of the Messenger of God (SAAS) two men dressed in white who were fighting fiercely; I never saw them before that, and I never saw them thereafter.” He was referring to Gabriel and to Michael, peace be upon them both.

Ahmad stated, “ʿAffān related to us and Thabit recounted to us, from Anas, that at the battle of Uhud Abū Ṭalḥa was shooting from directly in front of the Messenger of God (SAAS) who was shielding himself behind him. As he shot, the Messenger of God (SAAS) would raise himself up to see where the arrows would strike. At this Abū Ṭalḥa would say, as he brought his chest up to its full height, ‘Let it be so, may my father and my mother be your ransom, Messenger of God; no arrow will hit you. My chest will be in the way of yours.’ Abū Ṭalḥa would position himself directly before the Messenger of God (SAAS) and say, ‘I am sturdy, Messenger of God. Direct me according to your needs and order me to do whatever you want.’”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Abū Maʿṣūr ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr al-ʿAqdi, that is – related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Wāris, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAziz (b. Suhayb), from Anas, who said, “When the battle of Uhud occurred the men fled in defeat away from the Messenger of God (SAAS). Meanwhile Abū Ṭalḥa was directly in front of him, protecting him with a leather shield he had. Abū Ṭalḥa was a marksman and a very vigorous man who broke two or three bows that day. As the man with the leather bag of arrows would pass, he (the Prophet) would say, ‘Hand them over to Abū Ṭalḥa.’”

He went on, “The Prophet (SAAS) would rise up to observe the enemy and Abū Ṭalḥa would say, ‘May my father and mother be your ransom! Don’t stand up! An enemy arrow may strike you. My body shields yours.’ And I saw ʿAʾisha, daughter of Abū Bakr, and Umm Sulaym with their garments tucked up so that I could see their anklets, carrying water containers on their backs that they would empty into the mouths of the troops, return to refill them and empty them as before. The sword fell from the hands of Abū Ṭalḥa twice or thrice.”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Khalīfa told me, ‘Yazid b. Zarīr’ related to us, quoting Saʿd, from Qatāda, from Anas, from Abū Ṭalḥa, who said, “I was one of those overcome by lassitude at the battle of Uhud, so that my sword kept falling from my hands. It would fall and I would pick it up once more.”’”

Al-Bukhārī reported it thus, along with an affirmative commentary. In testimonial of this there are the words of God Almighty, “Then He sent down upon you, after sorrow, a sense of security, a lassitude overcoming a group of you. Another group had been made anxious by themselves; they have incorrect thoughts about God, thoughts of ignorance, saying, ‘Does the matter affect us at all?’ Say: ‘The entire matter is in God’s hands.’ They conceal within their souls what they would not reveal to you. They say, ‘Had we had any hand in this, we would not have been killed here.’ Say: ‘Even if you had stayed at home, those destined for being killed would still have gone forth to the places where they died. And so that God would test what was in your hearts and that He might purge what was in your hearts. And God knows what is inside one’s heart. Those of you who retreated on the day the two forces met were merely induced by Satan who made them slip on account of some things they had done. God, however, has pardoned them, for God is Forgiving, Merciful” (surah Al ‘Imrān; III, v.153, 4).

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Abdān – ‘Abd Allāh b. Uthmān al-Marwazi – related to him, quoting Abū Hamza, from Uthmān b. Mawhab, who said, “A man arrived to make the pilgrimage to the kaba. He saw a group seated and asked, ‘Who are those people seated?’ He (Uthmān b. Mawhab) replied, ‘They are men of Quraysh.’ The man then asked, ‘And who is the sheikh, the elder?’ ‘He’s Ibn Umar,’ they told him. The man then went over to him and said, ‘I’d like to have you respond to something I ask you. Please, I charge you by the sanctity of this place, do you know if Uthman b. Affān fled from the battle of Uhud?’ ‘Yes,’ the sheikh replied. The man asked, ‘And do you know him to have been absent from Badr, and not to have witnessed it?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘And do you know that he missed the bay‘āt al-ridwān, “the pledge of willingness”, and did not witness it?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied again. The man then, in satisfaction, affirmed the greatness of God.

“Ibn Umar then said, ‘Come on over so I can tell you more, and explain more about what you asked me. Regarding his fleeing at Uhud, I bear witness that God forgave him. Regarding his absence from Badr, his wife was the daughter of the Prophet (SAAS) and she was ill. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, ‘You will receive the same full share of the spoils as a man who was present at Badr.’

“Regarding his absence from the bay‘at al-ridwān, if there had been anyone more respected in the valley of Mecca than Uthmān b. Affān, he would have sent him in his place. The bay‘at al-ridwān took place after Uthmān had gone to Mecca. And the Prophet (SAAS) said, referring to his right hand, ‘This is ‘Uthmān’s hand.’ He then clasped it to his other hand, saying, ‘This is for Uthmān.’

Al-Bukhari also related this in another place. Al-Tirmidhi’s hadith has a chain of authorities from Abī 'Awāna, from 'Uthmān b. 'Abd Allāh b. Mawhāb. Al-Umawī, in his military chronicle, quoted Ibn Ishaq as saying, “Yahyā b. 'Abdād related to me, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say, on the occasion when his men had fled in defeat away from him, some of them going as far as the sandy hillock below al-'A'was, while 'Uthmān b. Affān and Sa'd b. 'Uthmān, one of the ānṣār, had fled and reached al-Jalī'ab, a mountain near Medina, adjoining al-'A'was. They stayed three nights there, then returned. They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, ‘You went there by chance.’”

All this shows that at Uhud some of the same things happened as at Badr. One such is the occurrence of the nuqās, the lassitude, amidst the warfare. This is an indication of their security of mind in God’s help, and the totality of their reliance upon their Creator and Exculpator.

Comment has been previously made concerning the words of God Almighty concerning the expedition to Badr: “When He made lassitude overcome you as a security from Him” (surat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.11). Regarding Uhud, He stated, “Then He sent down upon you, after sorrow, a sense of security, a lassitude overcoming a group of you” (surat Al-'Imrān; III, v.153). The reference here is to the perfect Muslims. As Ibn Mas'ud and others of the early authorities stated, “Lassitude in war stems from faith, while lassitude in prayer stems from hypocrisy. This is why God stated thereafter, ‘another group had been made anxious by themselves’” (surat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.11). And another similarity is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) appealed for help at Uhud as he had at Badr, saying, “If it is Your wish, You will no longer be worshipped on earth.”

As Imām Ahmad stated, “Abd al-Ṣamad and ‘Affān both related to us, as follows, ‘Hammād related to us, quoting Thābit, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said at the battle of Uhud, ‘O God, if it is Your wish, You will no longer be worshipped on earth.’” Muslim related it from Hajjāj b. al-Shāfīr, from ‘Abd al-Ṣamad, from Hammād b. Salama. Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Sufyān, from ‘Amr, who heard Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh say, “At the battle of Uhud a man said to the Prophet (SAAS) ‘If I am killed, where will I then be?’ ‘In heaven,’ he replied. Thereupon the man threw the dates out of his hand and fought until he was killed.”

Muslim and al-Nasā’ī related this from a hadith of Sufyān b. Uwayna. And this is similar to the story of Umayr b. al-Humām, which is given above relating to the expedition to Badr. May God be pleased with both these authorities.
Section: Concerning the treatment received that day by the Prophet (ṢAAS) from the polytheists, God damn them!

Al-Bukhārī gives a section entitled: “On the injuries done to the Prophet (ṢAAS) at the battle of Uhud.”

He went on, “Ishāq b. Naṣr related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Ḥamīm b. Muḥammat, who heard Abū Hurayra say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “The wrath of God is great towards those who did this” (pointing to his lower teeth) “to His prophet. Great is God’s wrath towards a man whom the Messenger of God kills in God’s cause!’”

Muslim related this through ʿAbd al-Razzāq. Mālik b. Mālik related to us, quoting Yaḥyā b. Saʿd al-Umawī, quoting Ibn Jurayj from ʿAmr b. Dīnār, from Ḥakīm, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Great was the wrath of God against those whom the Prophet (ṢAAS) killed in God’s cause. Great was the wrath of God against a people who bloodied the face of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

(Imām) ʿАḥmad stated that ʿAffān related to him, quoting Ḥammād, quoting Thābit, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said at the battle of Uhud as he wiped the blood from his face, “How could any people prosper who struck their prophet and broke his front teeth while he called people to God?” And God sent down, “It is not your business whether He forgives them or punishes them; they are wrong-doers” (ṣūrat ʿAl-ʿImrān; III, v.127).

Muslim related this from al-Qāчист, from Ḥammād b. Saʿīd. ʿАḥmad related it from Hushaym and Yazīd b. Ḥārūn, from Ḥumayd, from Anas, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had his front teeth broken and was struck in the face so that his blood flowed, and that he said, “How could a people prosper who did this to their prophet while he was calling them to their Lord?” And so God Almighty sent down, “It is not your business” (ṣūrat ʿAl-ʿImrān; III, v.127).

Al-Bukhārī stated that Qutayba related to him, quoting Yaʿqūb, from Abū Ḥāẓim, who heard Sahl b. Saʿd being asked about the injuries suffered by the Prophet (ṢAAS). He said, “I swear by God, I certainly do know who it was who washed the wounds of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who poured the water and with what he was treated. Fāṭima, his daughter washed him, and ʿAṭī poured the water from a shield. When Fāṭima saw that the water was only increasing the blood flow, she took a piece of matting, set fire to it, then attached it to the wound; the blood ceased flowing. And his front tooth was broken that day, his face was wounded, and his helmet was crushed on to his head.”

Abū Dāʾūd al-Ṭayālīsī stated in his Musnad ḥadīth collection, that Ibn al-Mubārk related to him, from Ishaq, from Yahyā b. Ṭalḥa b. ʿUbayd Allāh quoting Ṣaʿīd b. Ṭalḥa from ʿAʾisha, umm al-muʾminīn, the “mother of the believers”, as having stated, “Abū Bakr would say, regarding Uhud, ‘All credit that day was due to Ṭalḥa!’ He then would relate as follows, ‘I was the first one to return. I saw a man fighting hard in front of him in God’s cause. I saw him shout, “To the defence!””
I responded, "(Let it) be Talha!" having lost track of things. Then I told myself, "I hope he is someone from my own people." Between myself and the polytheists there was a man I did not know. I was closer to the Messenger of God (SAAS) than he was, but he walked faster than I did. Then I saw him to be Abū Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ. When we reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) his front teeth had been broken and his face had been gashed. Two links from the chain-mail of his helmet had pierced his cheek. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Both of you, take care of your companion!" meaning Talha. He was bleeding profusely, but we disregarded his words.'

He went on, "I went over to pull it out of his face, but he (Abn Wbayda) said, "I insist on my right of you letting me do it." I left him to do it, but he was reluctant to take it in his hand and so hurt the Messenger of God (SAAS). So he put his mouth over it and drew out a link, one of the front teeth falling with it. I then went over to do as he had, but he said again, "I insist on my right of you letting me do it." He then did as he had before and the other tooth dropped along with the link. It turned out that Abū Ubayda was great at tooth extraction!

"Having treated the Messenger of God (SAAS) we then went over to Talha who was in one of the pits there. He had some 70 wounds, including spear thrusts, arrow wounds and cuts. His fingers had been sliced off. We gave him treatment."

Al-Waqidi recounted, from the son of Abū Sabra, from Ishāq b. ‘Abd Allah b. Abū Farwa, from Abū al-Huwayrith, from Naṣir b. Jubayr, who said, "I heard one of the mukāhirīn saying, 'I was present at Uhud and saw the arrows coming in from all directions, with the Messenger of God (SAAS) right in their middle, but all of them were diverted from him. And I saw ‘Abd Allah b. Shiḥāb al-Zuhri that day as he said, "Direct me to Muhammad; I'll not survive if he does." The Messenger of God (SAAS) was right there at his side, with no one else with him. He went on past and Ṣafwān b. Umayya criticized him for that. ‘Abd Allāh responded, "By God, I didn't see him! I swear by God, he is forbidden to us. There were four of us who agreed together and made a pact to kill him, but we couldn't get to him.'"

Al-Waqidi stated, "In my opinion, it is well established that it was Ibn Qamī'a who shot the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the cheek and Utba b. Abū Waqqās who hit him in the lip and struck his lower teeth."

An account similar to this has been given above from Ibn Ishaq; it states that his front tooth that was broken was his lower left incisor.

Ibn Ishaq stated that Ṣāliḥ b. Kaysān related to him, from someone who related it to him, on the authority of Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqās, who said, "I was never more determined to kill anyone than I was to kill Utba b. Abū Waqqās; I knew him to be a man of evil character and hated by his people. And the statement made by the Messenger of God (SAAS) was enough for me – that 'Great is God's wrath against those who bloodied the face of His messenger.'"
'Abd al-Razzāq stated that Ma‘mar related to him, from al-Zuhri, from Uthmān al-Hārūtī, from Miqṣām, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spoke a curse against Utba b. Abū Waqqāṣ when he broke his lower teeth and bloodied his face, saying, “O God, may change not come to him, so that he dies an unbeliever!”

And no change did come over him, so that he did die an unbeliever, bound for hell-fire.

Abū Sulaymān al-Jawzājānī stated, that Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan related to him, quoting Ibrāhim b. Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr b. Ḥarb, from his father, from Abū Umāma Sahl b. Ḥanīf, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) treated his face at Uhud with a dried bone.

This hadith is gharib, “unilateral”, and I found it in the military chronicle of al-Umawi regarding the battle of Uhud.

When he had done injury to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), ‘Abd Allāh b. Qāmi’a went back and said, “I’ve killed Muḥammad!” And on that occasion that devil the ‘izb of al-ʿAqaba shouted at the top of its voice, “Hear this! Muḥammad has been killed!”

Consternation spread among the Muslims. Many people believed it, and yet remained determined to fight on in defence of Islam until they died in the same way as had the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Anas b. al-Naḍr and others of whom mention will be made were among these.

Almighty God had sent down consolatory verses to deal with this eventuality. He had stated, “And Muḥammad is no more than a messenger; messengers have passed away before him. And if he dies or is killed, will you turn on your heels? Whoever should turn on his heels will do no harm to God thereby. And God will reward the grateful. And no soul shall die except with God’s permission at a specified time. And whoever desires the rewards of this world, those We will give him; and whoever desires the rewards of the hereafter We will give him those. We will reward the grateful. And many are the prophets who have fought along with many worshippers! And they did not weaken because of what befell them in God’s cause. They neither weakened nor abased themselves. God loves those who stand firm. And what they said was merely, ‘O God of ours, forgive us our sins and our excesses! Set our feet firmly and give us victory against the disbelieving enemy!’ And so God did give them the reward of this world and the fine reward of the hereafter; God does love those who do good. O you who believe, if you obey those who disbelieve, they will turn you back on your heels and you will go back having lost. But God is indeed your master and He is best of all helpers. We will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve for their having associated with God that for which He sent down no authority. Hell-fire shall be their abode. And terrible is the abode of the unjust!” (sūrat ʿAl-ʾImrān; III, v.143–50).

42 THE LIFE OF THE PROPHET MUḤAMMAD
Abū Bakr, “the trusting”, made an address at the first assembly he held following the death of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in which he said, “O my people, regarding those who worshipped Muḥammad, Muḥammad has died. Regarding those who worshipped God, God is alive and shall not die!” He then recited this verse: “And Muḥammad is no more than a messenger.” He said, “It was as though the people had never heard this before, and so all, without exception, recited it thereafter.”

Al-Bayhaqi related in his Dalāʾīl al-Nubūywa (Signs of the Prophethood), through Ibn Abū Najīḥ, from his father, who said, “At Uḥud, one of the muḥājrīn passed by one of the aṣārīr, a man who was covered in his own blood, and asked him, ‘Are you aware that Muḥammad has been killed?’ The aṣārīr responded, ‘If Muḥammad (SAAS) has been killed, then he must have fulfilled his mission! So fight on for your religion!’

“And so the verse was revealed, ‘And Muḥammad is no more than a messenger; messengers have passed away before him.’”

That aṣārīr might well have been Anas b. al-Nadr, may God be pleased with him; he was the uncle of Anas b. Mālik.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Yazīd related to us, quoting Ḥamīd, from Anas, that his uncle was absent from the fighting at Badr and said, ‘I was absent from the first battle fought by the Prophet (SAAS) against the polytheists; if God should have me witness a battle against the polytheists, I’ll certainly show him what I can do!’

“When, at the battle of Uḥud, the Muslims gave way, he said, ‘O God, I apologize to you for what these men have done’ – meaning his fellow fighters – ‘and I declare myself innocent of what these others’ – meaning the polytheists – have done against You.’ He then advanced and was met before Uḥud by Saʿd b. Muʿādh. Saʿd told him, ‘I am with you!’ And Saʿd also said, ‘But I could not do what he did.’

He went on, “We used to say that it was about him and his Companions that the verse was revealed, ‘and of them there are those who fulfilled their vow; and of them there are those who wait’” (ṣūrat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.23).

Al-Tirmidhi related this from ʿAbd b. Ḥamīd; al-Nasāʿī related it from Ishāq b. Ṭabātābāy; both gave Yazīd b. Ḥārūn as a link. Al-Tirmidhi stated, “This tradition is ḥasan, ‘good’.”

I would comment that this ḥadīth conforms to the criteria of the saḥīḥ collections, from this source.

Imām Aḥmad stated that both Bahz and Ḥāshim related to him that Sulaymān b. al-Mughira quoted Thābit as having said, “Anas (b. Mālik) stated, ‘My uncle’ – Ḥāshim gave his name as Anas b. al-Nadr – ‘was the one for whom I was named. He was not present at Badr. This fact troubled him, and so he said, ‘I was absent from the first battle fought by the Messenger of God (SAAS); if God allows me to participate with him later in another battle, then he will certainly see what it is I can do!"

He (Anas b. Malik) went on, "He was too much in awe to say anything different. And he was present at Uhud with the Messenger of God (SAAS). He met up with Sa'd b. Mu'adh, and Anas asked him, 'Abū 'Amr, where to? How wonderful is the fragrance of paradise I sense before Uhud!'"

He (Anas b. Malik) continued, "He fought them until he was killed. Some 80 wounds were found on his body - sword cuts, spear thrusts and arrow punctures.

His sister, my aunt al-Rabi'a, daughter of al-Nadr, said, 'I only recognized my brother by his fingertips.' And this verse was revealed, 'and of them are those who fulfilled their vow, and of them there are those who wait - and they have not changed at all' (ṣūrat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.23).

He concluded, "They used to consider that this verse was revealed about him and his Companions."

Muslim related this from Muḥammad b. Ḥātim, from Bahz b. Asad. Al-Tirmidhī and al-Nāṣrī related it from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak. Al-Nāṣrī added to this. Abū Dā'ūd and Ḥammad b. Salama also gave it, and all four of these authorities quoted Sulaymān b. al-Mughīra as a source. Al-Tirmidhī stated the tradition to be ḥasan ṣahih, "good and authentic".

Abū al-Aswād stated, from ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr, who said, "Ubayy b. Khalaf, a brother of Banū Jumāh, had made an oath in Mecca that he would certainly kill the Messenger of God (SAAS). When news of the oath reached him, he said, 'No; I will kill him, if God wills it!'

"When it was time for the battle of Uhud, Ubayy came forth armoured and helmeted, saying, 'I will not live on if Muḥammad does!' He attacked the Messenger of God (SAAS) trying to kill him, but Muḥṣab b. Umayr, a brother of Banū ʿAbd al-Dar, met him in defence of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Muḥṣab b. Umayr was killed. The Messenger of God (SAAS) noticed that Ubayy's collarbone was visible between his helmet and his suit of chain-mail, and so he thrust him there with his spear. Ubayy fell from his horse, though no blood was coming from his wound.

"His companions came and carried him off; he was bellowing like a bull, but people told him, 'He's not harmed you; it's just a scratch.'

"He then told them of what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said, namely that he would kill Ubayy. He then said, 'I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand, if what afflicts me were to afflict all the people of Dhū al-Majāz, they'd all die of it!'

"And he did die and go to hell; and damned be all the denizens of hell-fire!"

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related this tradition in his military chronicle, from al-Zuhri, from Saʿīd b. al-Muṣayyab, in similar terms.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) made his way up into the defile, Ubayy b. Khalaf caught up with him and said, 'I shall not live on if you do!'"
“The Muslims asked, ‘O Messenger of God, should one of our men go for him?’ He replied, ‘Just leave him alone.’

“When Ubayy came close, the Messenger of God (SAAS) took a spear from al-Harith b. al-Summa. Some people said, as I have been told, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) took it from him, he shook himself so hard that they flew away from him like a hair from the back of a camel stung by a fly! The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went towards Ubayy and thrust him in the neck, so that he swayed back and forth several times, then fell from his horse.”

Al-Waqidi stated that Ibn Umar used to say, “Ubayy b. Khalaf died in the Rābigh valley. I was once passing through the Rābigh valley late at night when all of a sudden flames flared up, scaring me greatly. And there was a man emerging from it, dragging a chain and with a raging thirst. Then another man said, ‘Don’t give him anything to drink! He was killed by the Messenger of God (SAAS); this man is Ubayy b. Khalaf.”

This ḥadīth is fully authenticated in both saḥīḥ collections, as stated above, through ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from Hammām, from Abu Hurayra, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Great is God’s wrath against a man whom the Messenger of God kills in God’s cause.’”

Al-Bukhari related this through Ibn Jurayj, from ʿAmr b. Dinw, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbas, with the wording, “Great is God’s wrath against someone killed by the hand of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in God’s cause.”

Al-Bukhari stated that Abu al-Walid said, quoting Shuʿba, from Ibn al-Munkadīr, who said, “I heard Jābir say, ‘When my father was killed, I began to weep and to uncover the shroud from his face. The Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) stopped me, but he himself did not. Instead, he told me, ‘Don’t weep for him; the angels kept him shaded with their wings until he was raised up.’”

This tradition is related here in this form with a full chain of authorities. In the section (of his work) on funerals, he (al-Bukhari) gives its provenance as from Bindar, from Ghundar, from Shuʿba. Muslim and al-Nasaʿi related it from various paths, all quoting Shuʿba.

Al-Bukhari stated that ʿAbdān related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Mubārak, from Shuʿba, from Saʿd b. Ibrāhīm, from Ibrāhīm’s father, to the effect that ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAwf was brought food while he was fasting. He then said, “Muṣāb b. Umayr was killed, yet he was better than me. A cloak was used as his shroud. If it was placed over his head, his feet were visible, while if his feet were covered his head was visible.” He is also quoted as saying, “Hamza was killed, yet he was better than me, while we have been granted earthly favours.” He is also quoted as saying, “Things have been given to us here on earth, and we fear that the favours have come prematurely for us.” He then wept, till the food was cold.
Al-Bukhari is alone in giving this hadith.

Al-Bukhari stated that Ahmad b. Yunus related to him, quoting Zuhayr and al-A'mash, from Shaqtq, from Khabbâb b. al-Aratt, who said, “We went forth with the Prophet (SAAS), seeking to work in God’s cause, and reward from God was our due. Some of us passed away or left without enjoying any part of their reward. Mus'ab b. Umayr was one of these; he was killed at the battle of Uhud, leaving nothing but a woollen cloak. When we covered his head with it, his feet emerged. When his feet were covered with it, his head emerged. And so the Prophet (SAAS) told us, ‘Cover his head with it and place the al-ridkâr, (an aromatic rush), over his feet. Some of us have their fruit already ripened; he is harvesting them.’”

The rest of the authorities on traditions – with the exception of Ibn Majah – derive it through various paths from al-A'mash.

Al-Bukhari also stated that Wbayd Allah b. Sa'd related to him, quoting Abu Usâma, from Hishâm b. 'Urwa, from his father, from 'A'isha, who said, “When the battle of Uhud arrived, the polytheists were being defeated. So Satan, God damn him, called out, ‘Worshippers of God, look to your rear!’ At this the forward lines turned around and began battling with their rear lines. Hudhayfa saw his father al-Yaman right there and so he shouted, ‘Worshippers of God! My father!’”

'A'isha went on, “But, I swear by God they continued fighting until they had killed him. And Hudhayfa said, ‘May God forgive them.’

‘Urwa commented, ‘I swear that goodwill continued on in Hudhayfa until he joined Almighty and Glorious God.’”

I note that the reason this happened was that al-Yaman and Thabit b. Waqsh were back in the defences with the women because of their age and debility. The two men had said, “There’s no more than a donkey’s life-span left for our generation.” And so they had dismounted to be there at the fighting and their course had taken them over towards the polytheists. Thabit was killed by the polytheists, while al-Yamân was killed by mistake by the Muslims. Hudhayfa gave up his claim against the Muslims to blood money for his father and blamed none of them because of the obvious excuse for it.

DIVISION.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “And Qatada b. al-Nu'mân was struck in the eye that day, so that it fell out on to his cheek. The Messenger of God (SAAS) put it back in for him, using his hand; it was thereafter always the better and sharper of Qatada’s eyes.”

There is a hadith from Jâbir b. 'Abd Allah that Qatada b. al-Nu'mân was struck in the eye at Uhud, so that it slipped out on to his cheek. The Messenger of God (SAAS) put it back in its place and it was thereafter the better and sharper of his eyes. It did not become inflamed when his other eye was so inflicted.
Al-Dārquṭnī related, with a hadith that was gharib, “unilateral”, from Mālik, from Muhammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Ṣaṣaṣa’ā, from his father, from Abū Saʿād, from his brother Qatāda b. al- Ṣuʿmān, who said, “Both my eyes were struck at Uhud and they fell out on to my cheeks. I went with them to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he returned them both to their places. He spat into them and they regained sight.”

The first version is the one generally accepted – that he was struck in the one eye. This is why, when his son presented himself to ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, and the latter asked him to identify himself, he replied, in verse:

“I’m the one whose father’s eye slipped out on to his cheek
And it was replaced most effectively by the hand of the Chosen One.
It became again as it had been at first.
How fine an eye it became and how fine a cheek!”

Thereupon ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz responded with the line:

“That those noble qualities were not two cups of milk mixed with water that would later change into urine!”

ʿUmar then welcomed him and rewarded him richly; may God be pleased with him!

Ibn Hishām stated, “ʿUmāra’s mother, Nasība, daughter of Kaḥl al-ʿAzīziyya, fought at Uhud. ʿAbd Zayd al-Anṣārī recounted that ʿAbd’s mother, daughter of Saʿd b. al-Rabiʿ, used to say, “ʿUmāra’s mother came in to me and I asked her, ‘Aunt, tell me your story.’ She replied, ‘Early in the day I went out to see what our people were doing, bearing a water-skin filled with water. At the time I reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who was among his Companions, everything was going in the Muslims’ favour. When the Muslims were defeated, I stood near the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), engaging in the battle, defending him with my sword and shooting with my bow until I was ultimately wounded.’”

ʿUmm Saʿd went on, “And on her shoulder I saw a deep scar, so I asked her, ‘Who was it gave you this wound?’ She replied, ‘It was Ibn Qamīʿa, God damn him! When our men deserted the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), he advanced, saying, “Direct me towards Muḥammad; I will not live on if he survives!” I blocked his way, along with Muṣṭafā b. ʿUmayr and others who stayed firm with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). It was then that he gave me this wound; and I struck him many times back, but that enemy of God was wearing double armour.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “ʿAbū Ḕajāna shielded the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) with his own body. The arrows fell upon his back while ʿAbū Ḕajāna leaned over him.”

He continued, “ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) shot from his bow until its curved frame broke. Qatāda b. al-Ṣaʿmān then took and kept it.
"Al-Qāsim b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Rāfi‘ related to me, he being a brother of Bani ‘Adi b. al-Najjar, as follows, ‘Anas b. al-Nādr, uncle of Anas b. Mālik, reached ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb and ʿAlī b. Ubayd Allāh along with some muhājirin and ansār who wanted to surrender. He asked them, “Why are you just sitting?” They replied, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) has been killed.” “And what will you do with your lives after he has gone?” Anas asked. “Get up and die for the same cause as he has!” He then advanced to the enemy and fought until he was killed. Anas b. Mālik was named after him.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued, “Humayd al-Ṭawil related to me, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘That day we found 70 wounds on Anas b. al-Nadr. The only person to recognize him, from his fingertips, was his sister.’

Ibn Hishām stated, “It was related to me by a scholar that ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Āwfi was injured in the mouth and lost some teeth; he had 20 or more wounds, including one in his foot, which made him lame.”

DIVISION.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated that according to what he was told by al-Zuhri, it was Ka'b b. Mālik who first reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) after the defeat and the report of his death. Ka'b said, “I saw his eyes gleaming from beneath his helmet. So I shouted at the top of my voice, ‘Muslims! Rejoice! This is the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ But he signalled me to be silent.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued, “When the Muslims recognized the Messenger of God (SAAS) they and he moved on together up into the defile; with him went Abū Bakr, ‘the trusting’, ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, ʿAli b. Abū ʿAlī, ʿAlī b. Ubayd Allāh, al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām, al-Ḥārith b. al-Simma and a group of other Muslims. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had climbed up into the defile, Ubayy b. Khalaf caught up with him.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq then proceeded to relate how the former killed the latter, in an account similar to that given above.

He then went on, “Ubayy b. Khalaf, so it was related to me by Ṣāliḥ b. ʿIbrāhīm b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Āwfi, used to tell the Messenger of God (SAAS), when he met him in Mecca, ‘Hey, Muḥammad, I’ve a horse, al-ʿAwdh, that I feed every day with measures of corn. I’ll be riding it when I kill you!’

“To this the Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘No; it is I who will kill you, if God wills it.’

“When Ubayy was taken back to Quraysh having suffered a small injury in his neck, the blood having stopped flowing, he said, ‘By God, Muḥammad has killed me!’ They told him, ‘You’ve lost your courage! You’re not badly hurt.’ He replied, ‘But he told me in Mecca that he was going to kill me. And, I swear, he’d have killed me if he’d only spat on me!’ And that enemy of God did die, at Sarif,10 while they were transporting him to Mecca.”

10. A place some six miles from Mecca.
Ibn Ishaq went on, “Hassân b. Thabit spoke the following verses on this:

‘He inherited evil from his father, did Ubayy, the day the Messenger engaged him in combat.

You came at him, Ubayy, bearing a rotting bone, threatening him, unaware who he was;

Banû al-Najjâr killed Umayya from among you as he called for aid, “Aqil!”

Abû Rabî’a’s two sons died when they obeyed Abû Jahl, bereaving their mother.

Hârîth escaped when we were diverted by our work in taking prisoners; capturing him was a trivial matter.’

“Hassân also composed:

‘Who will be my messenger to Ubayy? You have been tossed into deepest hell.

You longed for evil from afar and swore oaths that you were all-powerful.

Your designs subverted you from afar, but stating disbelief results in delusion.

You were struck by a thrust from a man with divine protection, of noble lineage, no sinner he.

He has precedence over all others alive when disasters occur.’”

Ibn Ishaq further stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached the start of the defile, ‘Ali emerged and filled up his shield with water from the well al-Mihârîs. He brought it to the Messenger of God (SAAS) so that he would drink from it. But the latter found it had an unpleasant odour and declined to drink it. But he did wash the blood from his face and poured it over his head, saying, ‘Great is God’s wrath against whoever bloodies the face of His prophet!’”

Sufficient authentic ahâdîths have been given above to testify to this quotation.

Ibn Ishaq went on, “While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was there in the defile, along with some of his Companions, a band of Quraysh warriors climbed up the mountain.”

Ibn Hishâm added, “Khalid b. al-Walîd was among them.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then stated, ‘O God, it is not fitting for them to be above us!’

“Umar b. al-Khaṭṭâbab, along with a group of muhâjîrîn, fought on until they forced the enemy down from the mountain. The Prophet (SAAS) arose to climb upon a rock but, since he was heavy due to his age and the fact that he was wearing a double chain-mail, he could not. Tâlîh b. Ubayd Allâh then bent beneath him and lifted him up upon it.

“Yahyâ b. Abbâd b. Abd Allâh b. al-Zubayr related to me, from his father, from Abd Allâh b. al-Zubayr, from al-Zubayr, who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say that day, ‘Tâlîh earned his place in heaven for what he did that day for the Messenger of God.’’”

Ibn Hishâm stated, “Umar, the freed-man of ‘Afra, related that the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained seated for the noon prayer the day of the battle of Uhud because of his wounds, while the Muslims remained seated behind him.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Aṣim b. ‘Umar b. Qatada related to me as follows, ‘There was with us a man none of us knew who went by the name of Quzmān. Whenever he was mentioned, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would say, “He will go to hell!”

‘At the battle of Uhud he fought very fiercely, himself killing some seven or eight of the polytheists. He was a man of great courage. Eventually his wounds disabled him, and he was carried off to the Banū Zafar quarter.

‘Some of the Muslims told him, “You fought superbly, Quzmān, cheer up!” “Why should I?” he replied. “It was only for my people’s account that I fought; otherwise, I would not have.” When the pain from his wounds became extreme he took an arrow from his quiver and used it to kill himself.’

A story similar to this is also given regarding the fighting at Khaybar, as will be told hereafter, if God wills it.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Abd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting Ma’mar, from al-Zuhri, from al-Musayyab, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘We were present along with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Khaybar, and there was one man claiming to be a Muslim of whom he said, “He’ll go to hell.”

‘When the fighting began, the man fought most bravely and he was wounded. Someone told the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “The man you said was going to hell fought most bravely, but now he’s dead.” The Prophet (ṢAAS) said, “He’s gone to hell.”

‘Some of our men were almost sceptical about this, and while they were in this state it was announced that he had not died, though he was gravely wounded. That night he could no longer stand the pain of his injuries and so he killed himself.

‘When the Prophet (ṢAAS) was told of this, he proclaimed, “Allahu Akbar! God is Most Great! I testify that I am God’s servant and His messenger!”

‘He then ordered Bilāl to call out among the Muslims, “Only a Muslim soul shall enter paradise! And God even aids this religion by using sinners!”’”

The compilers of both ṣaḥiḥ collections gave this tradition from one of ‘Abd al-Razzāq.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “At Uhud, one of those killed was Mukhayriq. He was of Banū Tha‘labā b. al-Fityawn. On the day of the battle of Uhud he proclaimed, ‘O Jews, you have learned, I swear by God, that it is your duty to help Muḥammad to victory.’ They responded, ‘But today is the sabbath.’ ‘You shall have no sabbath,’ he insisted.

‘He then took his sword and equipment saying, ‘If I should fall, then my wealth goes to Muḥammad to do with as he wishes.’

‘He then went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and fought along with him until he was killed.
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, so I have been told, 'Mukhayriq is the very best of the Jews.'"

Al-Suhayli stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) converted Mukhayriq's property, consisting of seven orchards, into a waqf, a charitable endowment, in Medina.

Muhammad b. Ka'b al-Qurazi stated, "This was Medina's very first waqf.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Al-Husayn b. 'Abd al-Rabn b. 'Umar b. Sa'id b. Mu'adh related to me, from Abū Sufyān, the freed-man of Abū Aḥmad's son, from Abū Hurayra, that the last-mentioned used to say, 'Tell me which man it was who entered paradise without ever having performed the prayer?'

"If those there did not know who it was and asked him, he would reply, 'Uṣayrim of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal, 'Amr b. Thabit b. Waqsh.'"

Al-Husayn went on, "I asked Mabad b. Asad, 'Tell me about al-Uṣayrim.' He replied, 'He used to deny Islam despite his own people's acceptance of it. But when the day for Uhud arrived, he accepted Islam. He then took his sword and piled into the thick of the fray, fighting on until overcome by wounds. When some of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal were searching out those of them killed in the battle, they came upon him. They commented, "By God, this man is al-Uṣayrim; what brought him here? When we left him he was against this event." They asked him, "What brought you here, 'Amr? Was it your concern for your people, or a desire for Islam?"

"'It was my desire for Islam,' he replied. 'I have come to believe in God and His messenger and I have accepted Islam. I took my sword and joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) and fought until I was injured.'"

"Soon thereafter he died in their arms. When they told the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, 'He has gone to paradise.'"

Ibn Ishāq continued, "My father related to me, from elders of Banū Salama, who said, 'Amr b. al-Jamāh was a man who was exceedingly lame. He had four sons who fought battles like lions alongside the Messenger of God (SAAS). When it came time for the battle of Uhud, they wanted to restrain 'Amr, saying that God had excused him. So he went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, 'My sons want to restrain me from going forth to battle with you. But, by God, I hope to set foot in paradise despite my lameness!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'Regarding yourself, God has indeed excused you; it is not your duty to fight.' Then he addressed the sons, saying, 'It is your duty not to restrain him; God might well grant him martyrdom.'

"And so al-Jamāh did accompany him to battle and he was killed at Uhud. May God be pleased with him.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "As Šāliḥ b. Kaysān related to me, Hind, daughter of Utba, along with other women, mutilated the bodies of the dead Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), cutting off their ears and their noses. Hind would make the noses and ears of the men into anklets, necklaces and pendants and then give them over to Waḥshi. She also cut open Ḥamza’s liver and chewed it. But she couldn’t swallow it and so she spat it out.”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related that it was Waḥshi who cut open Ḥamza’s liver and then took it to Hind who chewed it but was unable to swallow it. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Hind then climbed upon a rock overlooking the place and, at the top of her voice, spoke the following verses,

'We've now repaid you for the battle of Badr and terrible is the warfare that follows war!
I could not stand the loss of ʿUtba, of my brother, of his uncle, and of my first-born son.
Now I have assuaged myself and fulfilled my vow; you, Waḥshi, have relieved my burning breast.
My thanks to Wabhi will be due for all my life, until my bones rot in my grave.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “She was answered by Hind, daughter of Athātha b. ʿAbbād b. al-Muṭṭalib, who recited,

'You were dishonoured at Badr and after Badr too, you daughter of a worthless fellow extreme in his disbelief!
God brought against you in the early dawn tall, fit Hashimite warriors
Each man wielding his sharp sword, Ḥamza, my lion, ʿAlī, my falcon.
When Shayb and your father sought to deceive me, they put sacrificial blood upon their chests;
Your oath was evil in the extreme.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Al-Ḥulays b. Zabbān, a brother of Banū al-Ḥarīth b. ʿAbd Manāt, who was at that time commander of the Abyssinian levies, passed by Abū Sufyān while he was striking the jawbone of Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib with the tip of his spear and saying, 'Taste this, traitor!'

“At this al-Ḥulays asked, 'Banū Kināna, tell me, can this really be, as you see, the Lord of Quraysh mutilating the flesh of his cousin?'

“The reply came, ‘Confound you, keep quiet about this; it was done in error.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When wishing to depart, Abū Sufyān ascended the mountain and shouted at the top of his voice, ‘A splendid achievement! Warfare goes in cycles. This day for that at Badr! Arise, Ḥubal!’ By this he meant, ‘Hubal, your religion triumphs.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to ʿUmar, ‘Get up, ʿUmar, and respond to him. Say, “God is far higher and more glorious! There is no equivalence: our dead are in paradise, yours in hell.”

“Abū Sufyān then said, ‘Come on up to me, ʿUmar!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told ʿUmar, ‘Go to him and see what he wants.’
“'Umar did so and Abî Sufyân told him, ‘I adjure you by God, 'Umar, have we killed Muḥammad?' 'Umar replied, ‘I swear by God, no; he is listening now to your words.’ Abî Sufyân commented, ‘I consider you more truthful and artless than Ibn Qaṣîma.’”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “Then Abî Sufyân called out, ‘Some mutilation was done to your men. I swear this neither pleased nor angered me; I neither ordered nor forbade it.’

“As Abî Sufyân moved off, he called out, ‘We have an appointment with you next year, at Badr!’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told one of his men to reply, ‘Say: “Yes there is indeed an appointment we have with you.”’

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then despatched ‘Ali b. Abû Ṭalîb saying, ‘Follow after the enemy and see what they do and plan. If they lead their horses and ride their camels, then they will be heading for Mecca. If they ride the horses and lead the camels, they will be heading for Medina. By Him in whose hands is my soul, if they head for Medina, I’ll fight them there and annihilate them!’

“‘Ali said, ‘So I followed them to see what they would do; they led their horses and rode their camels and headed for Mecca.’”

An Account of the prayers that the Prophet (ṢAAS) spoke after the battle of Uhud.

Imám Ahmad stated that Marwân b. Mu'awiya al-Fazârî related to him, quoting 'Abd al-Wâhid b. Ayman al-Makki, from Ibn Rifâ'a al-Zurqi, from his father, who said, “When the polytheists withdrew after the battle of Uhud, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Stand up, so that I may give praise to my Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He.’ The Muslims assembled behind him in ranks and he then said, ‘O God, to You is due all praise. O God, there is no grasping what You have dispersed, nor dispersing what You grasp. There is no guiding aright those whom You have led astray, nor any leading astray of those You have guided. There is no giving of what You have prevented, nor any prevention of what You have given. There is no drawing close what You have distanced, nor any distancing what You have drawn close. O God, spread forth Your blessings, Your mercy, Your generosity and Your favours upon us.

“‘O God, I ask of You those enduring blessings that never change nor cease. O God, I ask You for blessings at a time of deprivation, and security at a time of fear.

“‘O God, I seek refuge with You against the evil of what You have given us, as well as from the evil from which You have saved us.
“O God, have us view faith with favour, and endear it to us well. Have us view disbelief, immorality and disobedience with antipathy. Place us among those who are well-guided.

“O God, take us to Yourself as Muslims and give us life as Muslims. Place us among the virtuous, not the shamed or the demented.

“O God, do battle with those disbelievers who give the lie to Your messengers and who oppose them. Torment and punish them. O God, do battle against those disbelievers who were given the scripture, O God of the Truth!”

Chapter.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Muslims looked for their dead. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allah b. 'Abd al-Muqalin b. 'Abd ʿAbd al-Muqqalib, a brother of Banū al-Najjār, related to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Who will find out for me what became of Sa‘d b. al-Rabī‘, whether he is alive or dead?’ One of the ānṣār told him, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered me to find out whether you are among the living or the dead.’ Sa‘d replied, ‘I’m among the dead; inform the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of this: “Sa‘d b. al-Rabī‘ says to you: ‘May God reward you on our account better than He ever rewarded any prophet on account of his nation.’ And greet your people from me and tell them: ‘Sa‘d b. al-Rabī‘ says to you, ‘You will find no excuse with God if harm comes to your prophet while you still have one eye to blink!’”’

“Thereupon he died. I went to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and told him what had happened to him.”

I would observe that the ānṣārī who found Sa‘d among the dead was Muḥammad b. Salama, according to Muḥammad b. Umar al-Waqqīḍī. He related that he called out to him twice without him replying, but that when he said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had ordered him to locate him, he responded to him in a very weak voice.

Sa‘d b. al-Rabī‘, God be pleased with him, was one of the leaders at the pledge of al-‘Aqaba. It was he whom the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) established as the brother of ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAwf.

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) set off, so I have been told, to locate Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib. He found him in the middle of the valley, his liver having been cut from his mutilated body, from which his nose and ears had been removed.

"Muhammad b. Ja'far b. al-Zubayr related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, when he saw the sight, 'If it were not for the sorrow it would cause Safiyya and become a tradition after myself, I would leave him here to find his way into the stomachs of wild beasts and the crops of birds. And if God gives me victory over Quraysh anywhere else, I will have 30 of their men mutilated!'"

“When the Muslims saw the sadness of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his anger at those who had done this to his uncle, they determined to mutilate their enemy as no Arabs had ever done if God one day gave them victory over them.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Burayda b. Sufyān b. Farwa al-Aslami related to me, from Muhammad b. Ka‘b, and another reliable source related to me from Ibn ‘Abbās, that in that regard God revealed the verse, ‘If you inflict punishment then do so in the like manner that you were punished; but if you are patient, it is indeed better for those who are patient’ (surat al-Nahl; XVI, v.126).

“And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) forgave, was patient and forbad mutilation.”

I observe that this verse was revealed in Mecca. And the battle of Uhud occurred three years after the Hijra. How, then, could this relate? But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Humayd al-Tawil related to me, from al-Hasan, from Samura, who said, ‘Whenever the Messenger of God (SAAS) made a stop somewhere he would always before he left enjoin charity and forbid mutilation.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) stood over Ḥamza, he said, ‘I shall never be afflicted as you have been; I have never experienced anything that has angered me more than this!’ He then said, ‘Gabriel came to me and told me that Ḥamza’s name is written in the seven heavens in the words, “Ḥamza, the son of Ṭabd al-Muṭṭalib – lion of God and lion of His messenger.”’”

Ibn Hishām also said, “Both Ḥamza and Abū Salama b. Ṭabd al-Asad were foster-brothers of the Messenger of God (SAAS). All three were suckled by Thuwayba, the freed-woman of Abū Lahab.”

An Account of the Prayers said for Ḥamza and the Dead at Uhud.

Ibn Ishāq stated that he was told by a reliable source, from Miqsam, that Ibn ‘Abbās said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that Ḥamza be covered with a cloak and he then prayed over him. He spoke the words, Allāhu Akbar, ‘God is most Great’, seven times. The other dead were then placed next to Ḥamza and he prayed over them and him together, so that a total of seventy-two prayers were spoken over him.”
This hadith is gharib, “unilateral”, and its line of transmission is weak. Al-Suhayli stated, “None of the scholars at the major centres of learning support this tradition.”

Imam Ahmad stated that ‘Affân related to him, quoting Hammâd, quoting ‘Aţâ b. al-Sâ‘îb, from al-Sha‘bî, from Ibn Mas‘ûd, who said, “At Uhud the women were following behind the Muslim fighters finishing off the polytheists who were wounded. If I had sworn an oath that day that I would have hoped to fulfil, it would have been that none of us desired this world. But this was before God sent down the verse, ‘Some of you desired this world, while others of you desired the hereafter; then He turned you away from them, so that he might test you’ (sûrat Al ‘Imrân; III, v.151).

“When the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) disobeyed the orders they had received, he was left with only nine men about him. Seven of these were ansâr, two were of Quraysh; with himself added, they totalled ten men. When the enemy set upon him, he said, ‘May God have mercy upon any man who repels them from us!’ He continued saying this until all seven had been killed. Then he said to his two Companions, ‘Our comrades did not treat us fairly!’

“Then Abû Sufyân came and said, ‘Arise, Hubal!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) told his men to respond, ‘God is far higher and more glorious!’

“To this Abû Sufyân replied, ‘We have (the goddess) al-Uzzâ; you have no ‘izzâ, “consolation”!’

“Abû Sufyân then called out, ‘A battle for that of Badr. One for us, one against us. One gave us distress, one pleasure. Tit for tat. Man for man.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘There’s no equivalence. Our dead live on and are rewarded; your dead are in hell being tortured.’

“Then Abû Sufyân said, ‘There has been some mutilation engaged in by our people, though not the result of any decision by us. I neither ordered nor forbad it, liked nor disliked it. It neither annoyed nor pleased me.’

“When they searched, they found Hamza. His liver had been cut out and chewed by Hind, but she had been unable to swallow it. The Messenger of God (SAAS), asked, ‘Did she eat any of it?’ ‘No,’ they told him. He commented, ‘God would never have allowed any part of Hamza to enter hell-fire!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) positioned Hamza and one of the dead ansâr was brought and placed beside him. When he had prayed over them both, Hamza was left there, that ansârî was lifted away and another was brought in his place. This was repeated so that he ultimately said 70 prayers over Hamza.”

Ahmad is alone in giving this hadith. And there is some weakness in its chain of authorities, namely relating to ‘Aţâ b. al-Sâ‘îb. But God knows best.

The account given by al-Bukhârî is more solid. He stated, “Qutayba related to us, quoting al-Layth, from Ibn Shihâb, from ‘Abd al-Ra‘mân b. Ka‘b b. Malik, (who said) that Jâbir b. ‘Abd Allâh recounted to him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would place one piece of clothing over each two of the men killed at Uhud and then would ask, ‘Which of these had a better knowledge of the Qur'an? He would then place the one indicated in the grave first, saying, ‘I will testify for these at Judgement Day.’ He ordered that they be buried in their blood; he did not pray over them, nor were they washed.’

Al-Bukhari alone gave this; Muslim did not. Other scholars relate it from a hadith of al-Layth b. Sa’d.

Ahmad stated, “Muhammad - meaning Ibn Ja’far - related to us, quoting Ibn Ja’far, quoting Shu’ba, having heard ‘Abd Rabbih relate from al-Zuhri, from Ibn Jabir, from Jabir b. ‘Abd Allah, that the Prophet (SAAS) said about those killed at Uhud, ‘Each wound, each drop of blood will exude musk at Judgement Day.’ And that he did not pray over them.”

It is well established that he did pray for them some years thereafter, shortly before his death. As al-Bukhari stated, “Muhammad b. ‘Abd al-Rahim related to us, quoting Zakariyya b. ‘Adi, and Ibn al-Mubarak recounted to us, from Haywa, from Yazid b. Abû Ḥabib, from Abû al-Khayr, from Uqba b. ‘Amir, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) delivered a prayer for those killed at Uhud eight years thereafter, just as though he were saying farewell to the living or the dead. He then mounted the minbar and said, ‘I shall stand before you, having preceded you, and will be a witness for you. Your appointment is at the al-hand, ‘the celestial pool’, and I look at it now from this position of mine. I do not fear for you that you will (later) become polytheists. What I do fear for you is the influence of this world, that you will compete with one another over it.’’”

Uqba concluded, “And that was the last time I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Al-Bukhari also related this elsewhere, as did Muslim, Abû Dâ’ud and al-Nasâ’i, from a hadith of Yazid b. Abû Ḥabib in similar words.

Al-Umawi stated, “My father related to me, quoting al-Hasan b. Umâra, from Ḥabib b. Abû Thabit, who said, “‘A’isha said, ‘We went forth from al-Sâr, the place through which the Messenger of God (SAAS) had left for Uhud, seeking news. When dawn arose, there was a man barring our way and reciting insistently:

“We then saw him to be Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr. We stayed where we were after that and then saw a camel approaching, being ridden by a woman seated between two loads.

“We approached her and found her to be the wife of ‘Amr b. al-Jamâh. We asked her for news and she replied, “God protected the Messenger of God (SAAS) while some of the Muslims have been martyred.” “God turned back those who disbelieved, in all their anger, and they did not achieve advantage. God sufficed for the believers in the fighting, and God is mighty and powerful” (sûrat al-Ahzâb; XXXIII, v.25).

“She then told her camel to kneel, and she dismounted. We asked her about her loads, and she replied, “My brother and my husband.”’”
Ihn Ishaq stated, “Safiyya, daughter of ‘Abd al-Mut‘alib had come forward to see him (Hamza), who was her full brother. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told her son al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām, ‘Go and meet her and take her back so that she does not see her brother’s state.’ Al-Zubayr told her, ‘Mother, the Messenger of God (SAAS) orders you to go back.’ She replied, ‘Why? I have been told how my brother has been mutilated; that was in God’s cause. And that fact has comforted us. I will keep myself under control and remain calm, if God wills it.’

“When al-Zubayr went back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and reported this, he said, ‘Let her through.’ When she came, she looked at him (Hamza), said a prayer over him, asked forgiveness for him and spoke the words, ‘To God we belong, and to Him do we return.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then gave orders that he be buried, and this was done. With him was buried his cousin ‘Abd Allah b. Jahsh, whose mother was Umayma, daughter of ‘Abd al-Mu‘talib. He too had been mutilated, though his liver had not been cut out. May God be pleased with them both.”

Al-Suhayli stated, “He was later known as al-mujadda, ‘he who was mutilated in God’s cause’. And Sa‘d related that he and ‘Abd Allah b. Jahsh had said prayers, both of which had been answered. Sa‘d had prayed that he meet a polytheist horseman whom he would kill and rob, and that came true. ‘Abd Allah b. Jahsh had prayed that a horseman would meet and kill him and cut off his nose in God’s cause. And that came true.”

Al-Zubayr b. Bakka related that his sword broke at Uhud, and that the Messenger of God (SAAS) then gave him the bough of a palm tree, which when in the hand of ‘Ahd Allah b. Jāsh turned into a sword with which he fought. It was later sold in the estate of one of his sons for 200 dinars.

This is also what had happened earlier to ‘Ukásma at the battle of Badr.

It is also given in, as above, al-Bukhārī’s sahih collection that the Messenger of God (SAAS) used to bury two or three men in one grave, and even in one shroud.

He permitted this because of the wounds the Muslims had that would have made it hard for them to dig a grave for each individual. And he would position first in the grave whichever dead Muslim had had a greater knowledge of the Qur’ān.

He would join in the same grave two men who had been close friends, as he did ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Amr b. Harām, Jabir’s father, along with ‘Amr b. al-Jumūh. This was because they were friends.

They were not washed, the wounds and blood being left untouched.

Ibn Ishāq also related from al-Zuhri, from ‘Abd Allah b. Tha‘lab a. ‘Su‘ayr, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said as he was leaving the dead at Uhud, “I shall bear witness for these men; every man wounded in God’s cause will be raised by God on Judgement Day, his wounds still bleeding. The colour shall be that of blood, the fragrance that of musk.”
Ibn Ishaq went on, "My uncle, Musa b. Yasar, related to me that he heard Abū Hurayra say, 'Abū al-Qāsim (i.e. the Prophet (SAAS)) said, "Every man wounded in God's cause will be raised by God on Judgement Day while his wounds are still bleeding. The colour shall be that of blood, the fragrance that of musk.""

This hadith is also firmly given in both sahih collections from other lines of transmission.

Imām Ahmad stated, "Ali b. Āṣim related to us, from ʿĀṭā b. al-Ṣāḥib, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbas, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) said that those martyred at Uhud should have all articles they wore of iron or leather removed from them. He said, "Bury them in their blood and clothing."'"

Abū ʿAbdūd and Ibn Mājah related this from a hadith of 'Ali b. Āṣim.

Imām Abū Daʾūd stated, in his work al-Sunan, "Al-Qašābi related to me that Sulaymān b. al-Mughira related to them, from Ḥumayd b. Hilāl, from Hishām b. Āmir, who said, 'The ansūr went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Uhud and told him, "We are suffering from wounds and exhaustion; what are your orders?" He replied, "Dig and extend, placing two or three in the one grave.""

"'He was asked, 'Which dead man will be placed in it first?' (The reply was) 'The one with the greater knowledge of the Qur'an.'"

He then related it from a hadith of al-Thawri, from Ayyūb, from Ḥumayd b. Hilāl, from Hishām b. Āmir. His account adds a word, "Dig, deepen and extend."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Some Muslims had borne their dead to Medina and buried them there. But then the Messenger of God (SAAS) forbade that practice, saying, 'Bury them where they were struck down.'"

Imām Aḥmad stated, "Ali b. Ishaq related to us, quoting ʿAbd Allāh and ʿAttāb, who quoted ʿAbd Allāh, who quoted ʿUmār b. Salama b. Ḥabīb b. Yazīd al-Madīnī, who quoted his father, as follows, 'I heard Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh say, 'My father was martyred at Uhud. My sisters sent to me for him a transport camel they owned with the message, 'Load your father on this camel and bury him in the cemetery of Bāṭnū Salama.'"

"'So I went for him, with some helpers, and news of this reached the Prophet (SAAS) while he was seated there at Uhud. He called for me and told me, 'By Him who bears my soul in His hands, he'll be buried only with his brothers!'"

"'And he was buried with his comrades at Uhud.'"

Aḥmad is alone in giving this hadith.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Muḥammad b. Ḥafṣar related to him, quoting Shuʾba, from al-Aswad b. Qays, from Nabiḥ, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, that when those who were killed at Uhud were being carried away, the crier of the Messenger of God (SAAS) shouted out that the dead had to be returned to where they lay.

Abū ʿAbdūd and al-Nasāʾi related this from a hadith of al-Thawri, while al-Tirmidhī gave it from one of Shuʾba. Al-Nasāʾi also gave it, as did Ibn Mājah, from a hadith of Sufyān b. ʿUyayna. All of these were derived from al-Aswad b.
Qays, from Nabiḥ al-'Azi, from Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth from Medina to battle the polytheists, and my father 'Abd Allāh told me, ‘Jābir, there’ll be no harm in you being among the lookouts of the people of Medina until you know how things fare with us. I swear, if it weren’t for my having daughters who will survive me, I’d be happy for you to be killed right before me!’”

Jābir continued, “While I was there among the lookouts, my aunt arrived with my father and my uncle whom she had balanced on a baggage camel. She bore them into Medina to bury them in our cemeteries when a man arrived and called out, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) orders you to return with the dead and to bury them where they were killed.’ So we did take them back and buried them where they had been killed.

“During the Caliphate of Mu‘awiyya b. Abū Sufyān, a man came to me and said, ‘Jahir h. ‘Abd Allah, some of Mu‘awiyya’s workers have uncovered your father to sight, and part of him is outside the grave.’ So I went and found him to be in a similar, unchanged state as when I buried him, except for what always happens to those killed.”

The Imam then went on to relate how Jābir paid off his father’s debt, as is established in both sahīh collections.

Al-Bayhaqi related through Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Ayyūb, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh, who said, “When Mu‘awiyya made the canal where the dead of Uḥud were buried, it being by then 40 years later, we were asked to help. When we arrived there, we brought them out. A spade struck the foot of Ḥamza, and blood came forth.”

In Ibn Ishāq’s account, Jābir stated, “We brought them out and it was as though they had been buried the previous day.”

Al-Waqidi related that when Mu‘awiyya was about to dig the canal, he had a crier announce, “Anyone who had a relative killed at Uḥud should be witness.” Jābir said, “When we dug for them, I found my father in his grave lying as though asleep, unchanged. We also found that his companion in the grave, ‘Amr b. al-Jamāḥ, had his hand over a wound and when it was removed, the wound emitted blood!”

And it is said that the grave of each one of them, may God be pleased with them, gave forth a scent like that of musk. This was 46 years following the day of their burial.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Musaddad related to him, quoting Bishr b. al-Mufāḍḍal, quoting Ḥusayn al-Mu‘allim, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amir b. al-Jamāḥ, who said, “When Uḥud arrived, my father called out to me in the night, ‘I see myself as definitely being one of the first of the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to be killed. And there will be nothing dearer to me I will leave on earth than yourself, apart from the soul of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). I have a debt I want you to redeem; and I charge you to take good care of your sisters.’
"When morning came, he was the first to die. I also buried another man in his grave with him. But later it disturbed me to have placed him along with another, so six months thereafter, I exhumed him. I found him to be in the same state as when I put him there, except for his ear."

It is established in both sahih collections from a hadith of Shu'ba, from Muhammads b. al-Munkadir, from Jabir, that when his father was killed, Jabir began tearing at his clothing and weeping. People told him not to do this, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Whether or not you weep for him, the angels went on shading him (with their wings) until you had lifted him up."

In one account it is his aunt who is the person who cried.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Abū 'Abd Allah al-Hāfiz, and Abū Bakr Ahmad b. al-Hasan al-Qādi, both related to us as follows, 'Abū al-'Abbās Muḥammad b. Ya'qūb related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. Ishaq, quoting Fayd b. Wathiq al-Baštī, quoting Abū Ubāda al-Ansāri, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, from Aḥisha, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to Jabir, 'Jabir, shall I tell you good news?' 'Yes indeed, do,' replied Jabir, 'may God give you much good news.'" The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, 'Have you sensed that God gave life to your father and said, 'O worshipper of Me, request anything of Me and I shall give it to you.'?' He responded, 'O Lord, I have truly worshipped you well; I request of You that you return me to the world so that I may battle alongside Your prophet and be killed in Your cause once more.' He (God) answered, 'It has been previously decreed by Me that there shall be no returning there.'"

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad b. Abū al-Ma'ruf al-Asfarāyini related to us, quoting Abū Sahl Bishr b. Aḥmad, quoting Aḥmad b. al-Ḥusayn b. Naṣr, quoting 'Ali b. al-Madini, quoting Mūsā b. Ibrahīm b. Kathīr b. Bashīr b. al-Fākīh al-Anṣāri, who said, 'I heard Ṭalḥa b. Khirāṣh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Khirāṣh b. al-Simma al-Anṣāri al-Sulami say, "I heard Jabir b. 'Abd Allāh say, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) looked at me and said, 'Why do I see you looking depressed?'" I replied, 'Messenger of God, my father has been killed and he has left a debt and children.' He commented, 'Didn't I tell you. God only ever spoke to anyone before from behind a screen, whereas He spoke to your father face to face! He told him, 'O worshipper of Me, ask of Me and I will give you it.' He replied, 'I ask of you that you return me to the world so that I may be killed a second time.' God answered, 'I said previously, "They will not return there!"' He then asked, 'O Lord, then tell those I left behind.' And so God revealed, 'Do not consider those killed in God's cause to be dead, but alive. They will be well provided for by their Lord.'"' (ṣūrat Al-ʿImrān; III, v.169)."

Ibn Ishaq quoted from a colleague of his who related to him, quoting from 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. ʿUqayl, who stated, "I heard Jabir say, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Shall I not give you good tidings, Jabir?' "Please do!" I replied. He then said, 'God greeted your father right there at ʿUḥud where he was struck down. He then asked him, 'What is your wish, 'Abd Allāh? What do you wish me to do with you?’ He replied, ‘O Lord, to return me to the world so that I may fight again for You and be killed once more.’"

Āḥmad related this from ʿAli b. al-Madīnī, from Sufyān b. Uyyāna, from Muḥammad b. ʿAli b. Rabiʿa al-Salāmī, from Ibn ʿUqayl, from Jābīr. His account adds, “God replied, ‘I have decreed that they shall not return to it.’”

Āḥmad stated that Yaʿqūb related to him, quoting his father, from Ibn Iṣḥāq, who said, “ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatādā related to me, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Jābīr, from ʿAbd Allāh, from Jābīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say, when he made a reference to those who fought at Uhud, “O God, how I would have liked to have been left there with them at the ḥidn, the foot of the mountain’” – meaning at the saflr, “the foot of the mountain”.”

Āḥmad is alone in giving this tradition.

Al-Bayhaqi recounted, from a hadith of ʿAbd al-Aʿla b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Farwa, from Ḥabīb b. Wahb, from Ubayd b. ʿUmayr, from Abū Hurayra, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) left Uhud, he passed on his way by Muṣʿab b. ʿUmayr who had been killed. He stood over him, said a prayer for him, then recited, “There are some Muslim men who indeed spoke true in the pact they made with God” (sūrat al-ʿAzwāb; XXXIII, v.23). And he stated, “I testify that these men will be seen as martyrs by God at Judgement Day. So come and visit them. And I swear by Him who has my soul in His hand, all who greet them up to Judgement Day will have their greeting returned.”

This hadith is gharīb, ‘unilateral’.

It is related as mursal, from ʿUbayd b. ʿUmayr.

Al-Bayhaqi related from a hadith of Mūsā b. Yaʿqūb, from ʿAbbād b. Abū Ṣalīḥ, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS) used to go to the graves of the martyrs. And when he came to the entry to the defile, he would say, ‘Peace be upon you for what you bravely suffered and may the rewards of paradise be truly excellent!’ Abū Bakr continued with this tradition after the Prophet (SAAS), as did ʿUmar after Abū Bakr and ʿUtbmān after ʿUmar.”

Al-Wāqīḍī stated, “The Prophet (SAAS) would visit them every year. When he reached the hollow in the defile, he would say, ‘Peace be upon you for what you bravely suffered and may the rewards of paradise be truly excellent.’ Abū Bakr did the same every year thereafter, as later did ʿUmar and then ʿUtbmān. Fāṭima would weep when she would go to them, and she would pray for them. And ʿAṣʿād would greet them, then go over to his companions and ask, ‘Won’t you greet some men who will respond to you?’”

Al-Wāqīḍī then related their visit in another hadith from Abū Saʿīd, Abū Hurayra, ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar and Umm Salāma, may God be pleased with them all.

11. Both words mean the same. It is unclear why the text explains the first word with a synonym; perhaps al-ḥidn was a rare word in the writer’s dialect.
Ibn Abī Dunyā stated, “Ibrāhīm related to me, quoting al-Ḥakam b. Nāfi’, quoting ʿAṭṭāf b. Khalīd, who said that his aunt related to me saying, ‘I rode one day to the graves of the martyrs’—something she often did—‘and I stopped and prayed for a certain time near Ḥamza. There was no one there in the valley except for the youth standing holding the head of my mount. When I had finished, I made a farewell gesture indicating “Peace be upon you”. Then I heard the greeting being returned to me, emanating from beneath the ground! I am as sure of this as I am that Almighty and Glorious God created me, and as I know night from day. Every hair on me stood on end!’”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated, from Ismā‘īl b. Umayya, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ‘Abbas, who said, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) told me, ‘When your brothers were struck down at Uhud, God placed their spirits in the crops of green birds that would go down to the rivers of paradise and feed off the fruits there. Then they would retire to golden candelabra hung in the shade of the throne. Enjoying their food, drink and lodgings so well, they asked, “Who can tell our brothers about us, that we are alive in paradise and being well provided for, so that they will not shirk the battle, not be reluctant in warfare?”

“God, the Almighty and Glorious, replied, “I will inform them about you!” And so God sent down in the Book His statement, “Do not consider those killed in God’s cause to be dead, but alive. They are being provided for by their Lord”’ (sūrat Al-Imrān; III, v.169).

Muslim and al-Bayhaqi related from a hadīth of Abū Mu‘āwiya, from al-Asmash, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Murra, from Masrūq, who said, “We asked ʿAbd Allāh b. Masqūd about this verse, ‘Do not consider those killed’ and he replied, ‘Actually, we asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) about that and he said, “Their souls are in the crops of green birds that fly wherever they want, then retire to candelabra hanging near the throne. Once when they were there your Lord looked over at them and said, ‘Ask whatever you want.’ They replied, ‘What could we have to ask for, flying about anywhere in paradise as we do?’ He repeated His question to them three times and when they realized that they would be asked again and again, they replied, ‘We ask of You that You return our souls to our bodies on earth so that we may be killed in Your cause once more.’ And when God saw that this was the only request they would make, they were left alone.’”

Section: On the number of the martyrs at Uhud.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “The total of the muhājirin and ansār martyred at Uhud was 49 men.”

It is established in the authentic tradition given by al-Bukhārī from al-Barā’ that 70 Muslims were killed. But God knows best.

Qatāda stated, from Anas, that 70 ansār were killed at Uhud, 70 at the battle of Bpr Maṣʻūna and 70 at the battle of al-Yamāma.
Hammād b. Salama stated, from Thābit, who said that Anas used to say, “Approximately 70 were killed at Uhud, Bīr Maʿūna, Muʿta and al-Yamāma.”

Mālik stated, on the authority of Yahyā b. Saʿīd al-Ansārī, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, that at Uhud and al-Yamāma 70 ansār were killed and 70 again at the battle of Abū Ubayda bridge.

Ikrīma, Urwa, al-Zuhārī and Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq all made similar statements about Uhud and further testimony was given by the Almighty’s words, “And when an affliction struck you, you having already afflicted them twice the like, you said, ‘Whence comes this?’” (sūrat Al-ʾĪmār; III, v.164). This refers to their having killed 70 at Badr and captured 70 more.

Iṣḥāq reported that the ansār who were killed at Uhud – perhaps he meant Muslims – totalled 65; there were four muḥājirūn: Ḥamzah, ‘Abd Allāh b. Jahsh, Muṣʿab b. Umayr and Shammās b. Uthmān, while the remainder were ansār.

He listed their names by tribe. Ibn Hīṣām added 5 more names to these, thus totalling, in his view, 70 men.

Iṣḥāq also listed the names of those polytheists who were killed, and they totalled 22 men.

According to Urwa, there were 44 men martyred at Uhud, though he also gave this number as 47.

Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated that 49 Muslims were killed at that battle, along with 16 polytheists.

Al-Rabiʾ stated, from al-Shaḥīṭ, “The only polytheist captured then was Abū ʿAzza al-Jumaiḥ. He had been among the prisoners taken at Badr, but the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had released him without ransom on condition that he not fight against him again. When Abū ʿAzza was captured at Uhud, he said, ‘O Messenger of God, please release me for the sake of my daughters, and I promise you I won’t fight you again.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, ‘I’ll not have you stroking your beard in Mecca and saying, ‘I’ve tricked Muhammad twice over!’’ Then he gave orders and he was beheaded.”

Some say that it was on that occasion that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “A believer doesn’t get bitten twice from the same lair!”

DIVISION.

Iṣḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left for Medina where, so I have been told, he was met by Ḥamna, daughter of Jahsh. When she was told of the loss of her brother, ‘Abd Allāh b. Jahsh, she prayed for forgiveness for him and stated the creed, ‘To God we belong and to Him we return.’ Then she was told of the death of her uncle Ḥamzah b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, and she spoke similar prayers for him. Then she was informed of the death of her husband, Muṣʿab b. Umayr, and at this she screamed and wailed. The Messenger of God (SAAS) having seen how stoically she had received the news of the deaths of her brother and her uncle and how she lamented for her husband, commented, ‘A woman’s husband has a very special place with her.’"

Ibn Majah stated that Muhammad b. Yahyä related to him, quoting Ishäq b. Muhammed al-Farwa, quoting Muhammed b. Umar, from Ibrahim b. Muhammed b. ‘Abd Alläh b. Ja’hsh, from his father, from Hamna, daughter of Ja’hsh, who said that when she was told of the death of her brother, she said, “May God have mercy on him! To God do we belong, and to Him do we return.” When she was then told that her husband had been killed, she burst out, “O woe!” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, “A husband alone has control over part of his wife’s feelings.”

Ibn Ishäq stated, “‘Abd al-Wähid b. Abu ‘Awãn related to me, from Isma’il, from Muhammad, from Sa’d b. Abn Waqqás, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) went past a woman of Banû Dinâr whose husband, brother and father had been struck down while with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Uhud. When their deaths were reported to her, she asked, “And how is it with the Messenger of God (SAAS)?” They replied, “He is fine. He’s just as you might wish.” She then asked, “Show him to me; I want to see him.” When he was pointed out to her, she commented, “Every loss after you had gone would be jalal, trivial.”’"

Ibn Hishâm noted, “Al-jalal is a word that can apply to minor or to major matters. Here it means ‘minor’. Imru’ al-Qays spoke the verse, ‘Banû Asad’s killing of their chief makes anything thereafter jalal.’

“Here the word jalal means trivial or few.”

Ibn Ishäq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived home to his family, he handed his sword to his daughter Fâtimâ and said, ‘Wash the blood off this, my child. I swear by God, it was true to me today!’

‘Ali b. Abu Talib then handed her his sword repeating, ‘Wash the blood off it; I swear by God it was true to me today!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then commented, ‘And if you stood true in the fighting, so too along with you did Sahl b. Hunayf and Abû Dujâna!’”

Al-Bayhaqi recounted from Sufyân b. ‘Uyayna, from ‘Amr b. Dinâr, from 'Ikrima, from Ibn ’Abbâs, who said that ‘Ali b. Abû Talib at the battle of Uhud brought along his sword that had bent and told Fâtimâ, “Be thankful when you take this sword, for it satisfied my thirst for revenge!”

Ibn Hishâm stated, “This sword of the Messenger of God (SAAS) was Dhû al-Fiqâr. And a scholar told me, quoting Ibn Abû Najîh, ‘A crier called out at the battle of Uhud, "There is no sword to match Dhū al-Fiqār."") And a scholar told me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to 'Ali, 'The polytheists will not cause us similar losses again before God gives us victory over them.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by the home of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal and he heard weeping and wailing over their dead. The eyes of the Messenger of God (SAAS) welled with tears and he then said, 'But Ḥamza has no women weeping for him!"

"When Sa'd b. Mu'ādh and Usayd b. al-Ḥuḍayr returned to the home of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal, they ordered their women to dress for outdoors and to go and weep for the uncle of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"Ḥakim b. Ḥakim b. 'Abbad b. Hanif related to me, from a man of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard their weeping over Ḥamza, he went out to them; they were at the door to the mosque, weeping. He told them, "Go home, God bless you all; you have been very kind."

"And the Messenger of God (SAAS) forbade public lamentation that day, according to Ibn Hishām. But this ḥadith he gives is munqatī, 'discontinuous' and mursal, 'incompletely transmitted'."

Imām Aḥmad gave the tradition a complete line of transmission, stating, "Zayd b. al-Ḥubāb related to us, quoting Usāma b. Zayd, and Nāfi', from Ibn 'Umar, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from Uhud and the ansār women began weeping over those of their husbands who had been killed, he said, 'But Ḥamza has no women weeping for him!'

"He then went to sleep and when he awoke, the women were weeping. He said, 'Today they are weeping and lamenting the loss of Ḥamza.'"

This tradition meets the criteria of Muslim.

Ibn Mājah recounted it, from Hārūn b. Sa'id, from Ibn Wahb, from Usāma b. Zayd al-Laythī, from Nāfi', from Ibn 'Umar, to the effect that the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by some women of Banū 'Abd al-Ashhal who were weeping over their dead at Uhud. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "But Ḥamza has no women weeping over him."

So then some ansār wives did go and weep for Ḥamza. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) awoke, he said, "Confound them! They'll not be upset when they leave! Let them return, and not wail for the dead from this day on!"

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) went off into the alleys of Medina, there was much lamentation in progress in the houses. He asked, 'What's all this?' He was told, 'These are ansār women lamenting their dead.' He said, 'But there are no women lamenting for Ḥamza.' He then prayed for forgiveness for Ḥamza.

"Sa'd b. Mu'ādh, Sa'd b. Ubāda, Mu'ādh b. Jabal and ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāha heard this and walked to their homes, where they set about assembling all the

12. The editor of the Arabic printed text observes in a footnote, "Ibn Hishām stated: 'There is no sword to match Dhū al-Fiqār, and no warrior to match ʿAli!"
weeping and lamenting women there in Medina. The men told them, ‘By God, don’t weep for those slain from among the ansār until you have mourned for the uncle of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He has mentioned how there are no women lamenting him in Medina.’

“They claim that the man who summoned the mourning women was ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa. And when the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard them, he asked, ‘What’s all this?’ He was told what the ansār had told their wives; he then prayed for them warmly and asked for them God’s forgiveness, saying, ‘But I didn’t want this; I don’t like wailing!’ And he forbade it.”

Ibn Lahi’a recounts it similarly, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr. Mūsā b. ‘Uqba stated, “The hypocrites took advantage of the mourning of the Muslims to further sadden them and divide them from the Messenger of God (SAAS). The deceit of the Jews was evident and all Medina boiled with hypocrisy.”

The Jews said, “If he were indeed a prophet, they would not have defeated him, and he would not have suffered such losses at their hand. But he’s just ambitious to establish a domain under his own absolute control.”

The hypocrites said similar things, telling the Muslims, “If you had provided properly for us, those who made you suffer would not have done so.”

And so God sent down the Qurʾān concerning the obedience of those who were obedient and the hypocrisy of those who were that, and in consolation for the Muslims, for those of them who were killed, that is. God stated, “And (remember) when you went forth from your family to establish the believers in camps for battle – and God is All-Hearing and All-Knowing” (ṣūrat Al-ʾImrān; III, v.120). We have discussed this subject in our Tafsīr (Exegesis); and to God belongs all praise and credit.

An Account of the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions, despite their bruises and their wounds, to intimidate and pursue Abū Sufyān and his men as far as Hamrāʾ al-Asad, a place some eight miles from Medina.

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba stated, following his account of the battle of Uhud and of the return of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Medina, “A man from Mecca came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the latter asked him about Abū Sufyān and his men. The man replied, ‘I stayed with them and heard them arguing, some saying, “You have accomplished nothing. You damaged their leadership and their elite, but then you left them without finishing them off. They still have leaders left who will gather men against you.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders for his men – despite their grievous wounds – to move out in pursuit after the enemy in such a way that they would hear of this. He announced, ‘Only those who were present at the battle may go.' 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy asked, 'May I ride with you?' 'No,' he told him.

"And the Muslims did respond to God and to His messenger, despite their suffering, and set off.

"God stated in His Book, 'Regarding those who responded to God and to His messenger after all the injuries they had suffered, those of them who do good, and who are pious shall have a great reward' (sūrat Al-‘Imrān; III, v.171).

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did give permission to Jābir (b. ‘Abd Allāh) to go forth when he related how his father had ordered him to stay in Medina to care for his sisters.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then pursued the enemy as far as Ḥāmrā’ al-Asad."

Ibn Lahi’a related this similarly, from Abī al-Aswad, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr.

Muhammad b. Ishāq related in his military chronicle, as follows, "The battle of Uhud took place on Saturday in the middle of Shawwāl. On the morning of Sunday, the 16th of Shawwāl, the crier of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) announced to the people that they should leave in pursuit of the enemy. His crier also announced that only those who had been present at the previous day’s battle should go forth. Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh spoke with him and he permitted him to join the force.

"The purpose of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in pursuing was to frighten the enemy. This was by making them aware that they were still powerful and that their losses had not so weakened them that they could no longer face their enemy.

"‘Abd Allāh b. Khārija b. Zayd b. Thābit related to me, from Abū al-Sā‘ib, the freed-man of Quraysh, daughter of Uthmān, that a man of Banū ‘Abd al-Ash’al said, 'I was present at Uhud, along with a brother of mine. We came home wounded and when the crier of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) announced the pursuit of the enemy, I and my brother agreed that we should not lose the opportunity of participating in another expedition with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) even though we did not (each) have a mount to ride and were badly wounded. So we left with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). I was less badly wounded than my brother; when he became exhausted, I would let him ride for a while and then he would again walk for a while. Eventually we caught up with the other Muslims.'"

Ibn Ishāq continued, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went on as far as Ḥāmrā’ al-Asad, a place some eight miles from Medina. There he remained the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and then he returned to Medina."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "‘Abd Allāh b. Abī Bakr related to me that Ma’bad b. Abū Ma’bad al-Khuza‘ī passed by them. The Khuza‘ tribe, both those of them who were Muslims and those who were unbelievers, were secretly the allies of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Tihama and their understanding with him was that they would not conceal from him anything that happened there. Ma‘bad at that time was a polytheist and he told the Messenger of God (SAAS) on his way past Ḥamrā‘ al-Asad, ‘Muḥammad, we’re deeply sorry at what happened to your men, and we would hope for God to protect you and them.’

‘He then left, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was still there at Ḥamrā‘ al-Asad, and met up with Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb and his men at al-Rawḥā‘. They had decided to return to fight the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men. They had concluded, ‘We have severely damaged the best of his Companions and their chieftains and nobles, so should we now go home before we uproot them completely? We should go back for the rest of them and be finished with them.’

“When Abū Sufyān saw Ma‘bad, he asked him, ‘How are things back up behind you, Ma‘bad?’ He replied, ‘Muḥammad has come out with his men seeking you in a force the like of which I never saw before. They are truly enraged towards you. He has been joined by those who stayed behind when you did battle with him, and these men much regret what they did. The anger they have towards you is something the like of which I’ve never seen before.’

‘What are you suggesting, confound you?’ Abū Sufyān demanded. He replied, ‘I swear, I don’t think you’ll be able to leave before you catch sight of the forelocks of their cavalry.’

‘But we’ve decided to attack them to destroy the rest of them!’

Ma‘bad commented, ‘I really do advise you against that. I swear, I was so affected by what I saw that I composed some verse on the subject.’

‘What did you compose?’ Abū Sufyān asked.

Ma‘bad then recited,

‘At the noise, my mount almost shied, the earth streaming with masses of fine horses.

Racing on, their riders like noble lions, men not effeminate in the fray and not poorly armed.

I ran on, thinking the earth itself moving, as they brought up a leader never to be forsaken.

And I said, “Woe to Ibn Ĥarb when you meet and the plain shakes beneath the lines of men!”

I warn the people of Mecca very plainly, addressing every wise and sane man they have,

Of the army of Aḥmad, not some mixed rabble, and my warning should not be described as mere hearsay.’

“Abū Sufyān and his party were dissuaded from action by this.

“A party of men from ‘Abd Qays passed by, and he asked them where they were headed. When they told him to Medina, he asked why, and they replied that they were going there for supplies. Abū Sufyān asked them, ‘Would you deliver a message I will give you for Muḥammad? If you will, I’ll load up these camels of yours with raisins at Ukāz tomorrow.’ They agreed and he then told them, ‘When you reach him, tell him that we have decided to come on after him and his Companions to wipe out the rest of them!’

‘The men passed by the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Ḥamrāʾ al-Asad and told him what Abū Sufyān had said. To this he commented, ‘God suffices for us; a fine protector is He!’’

Al-Ḥasan al-巴基r gave the same tradition.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Ahmad b. Yūnus related to us, saying, ‘Abū Bakr related to us, from Abū Ḥusayn, from Abū al-Ḍuḥā, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that this phrase ḥabdūnā Allāh wa nāma al-wakil, “God suffices for us; a fine protector is He” was spoken by Abraham when he was cast into the fire. Muḥammad (SAAS) spoke it when they told him, “The people have assembled for you; make them afraid.” And he did inspire greater faith in them and they said, “God suffices for us; a fine protector is He.”’”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this account.

He also stated, “Muḥammad b. Salām related to us, quoting Abū Muḥāwiya, from Hishām, from his father, from Ḥishā, God bless her, who said to Ṣumra about the verse, ‘Regarding those who responded to God and to His messenger after all the injuries they had suffered, those of them who do good and who are pious shall have a great reward’ (ṣūrat Ṭ-Ṭrīm; III, v.171): ‘Nephew, your fathers were among these, al-Zubayr and Abū Bakr, God be pleased with them. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) suffered his losses at Uḥud and the polytheists withdrew, he was concerned that they might return. And so he asked, “Who will pursue them?” Seventy of his men volunteered, including Abū Bakr and al-Zubayr.”’

This is the account given by al-Bukhārī. Muslim gave it in an abbreviated form through Hishām. Saʿīd b. Manṣūr and Abū Bakr al-Ḥumaydī jointly related this from Sufyān b. ʿUyayna. Ibn Mājah also verified it through him, from Hishām b. Ṣur. Al-Ḥākim related it in his compendium through Abū Saʿīd from Hishām b. Ṣur; he related it from a ḥadīth of al-Suddī, from Ṣur. He said that both scholars considered the tradition ṣaḥīḥ, authentic, but that these scholars had not narrated it.

This is what he stated. But the context of this is very strange. For it is well known by the scholars who have written on the military expeditions that all those who advanced with the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Ḥamrāʾ al-Asad were those who had been present at Uḥud and that these totalled 700, as is told above, of whom 70 were killed, the remainder surviving.

Ibn Ḥajar related, through al-ʿAwnī, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “God cast terror into the heart of Abū Sufyān after what had happened at Uḥud and he returned to Mecca. The battle of Uḥud took place in Shawwal. The merchants would come to Medina in Dhū al-Qaʿda, staying once every year at Badr al-Ṣughrah. They arrived again after the battle of Uḥud. The Muslim warriors had suffered severe injuries and were complaining of these to the Messenger of God (SAAS). However, he told his men to go forth and continue what they had been doing. He told us, 'If you leave now, the month for the hajj will soon be upon us and they will not be able to do the same again until next year.'

"Then the devil came to scare his deputies, saying, 'The enemy is all gathered against you.' His men refused to follow him and so he said, 'I am going forth, even if no one follows me.'

"Abū Bakr, 'Umar, 'Uthmān, 'Aṭīya, Talḥa, al-Zubayr, Sa'd, 'Abd al-Rahmān
b. 'Aṣwāf, Abū Ubayda, Ibn Masʿūd and Ḥudhayfā left with him, accompanied by 70 men. They went in pursuit of Abū Sufyān as far as al-Ṣafra'. And God revealed the verse, 'Regarding those who responded to God and to His messenger after all the injuries they had suffered, those of them who do good and who are pious shall have a great reward'" (ṣūrat Āl-ʿImrān; III, v.171).

This account is also very strange.

Ibn Hishām stated, "Abū Ubayda related to us that when Abū Sufyān b.
Harb withdrew after the battle of Uhud, he wanted to return to Medina. But Safwān b. Umayya advised him, 'No, don't do that. The enemy is thoroughly enraged and we fear they might engage in battle differently from before. Return home.' And so they did.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who was at Ḥamrā' al-ʿAsad when he received news that they were about to go home, then said, 'By Him who holds my soul in His hand, rocks have been assigned them; if they had been greeted with them, they would have been history!'

"While out there and before his return to Medina, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) captured Muʿawiyah b. al-Mughīrā b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ b. Umayya b. 'Abd Shaṃs, 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān's grandfather on his mother's side, she being Ṣā'īda, daughter of Muʿawiyah, along with Abū 'Azza al-Jumaḥī. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had captured this Muʿawiyah at Badr and then released him. Muʿawiyah asked him, 'O Messenger of God, forgive me?' But he replied, 'No, by God, you'll not stroke your beard in Mecca and say, "I've twice deceived Muḥammad!" Strike off his head, Zuhayr!' And his head was severed."

Ibn Hishām also stated, "Ibn al-Musayyab was quoted to me as having said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, 'A believer doesn't get bitten twice from the same lair; strike off his head, 'Asim b. Thabit!' And his head was severed.'

Ibn Hishām went on, "Muʿawiyah b. al-Mughīrā b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ was given sanctuary by 'Uthmān provided that he remain only three days. Thereafter the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Zayd b. Ḥarīṭha and 'Ammār b. Yāsir to capture him, telling them, 'You'll find him in such and such a place; kill him!' And they did so, may God be pleased with them both."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "It was related to me by al-Zuhri that 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy had a particular spot (in the mosque) he would occupy each Friday; this position

13. The sanctity of the hajj season would deprive the Meccans of the opportunity of attacking
would not be disputed by anyone else, out of respect for him and his people, he being a chieftain. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) took his seat to address the people on Friday, 'Abd Allâh would arise and say, 'People, this is the Messenger of God before you. God has given you honour and glory through him. Give him aid and support and listen and obey.' He would then sit down.

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men had returned to Medina, following the events at Uhud, 'Abd Allâh got up as usual but the Muslims grasped his clothing from all sides, saying, 'Sit down, you enemy of God! You're no longer worthy of that, having acted as you did!'

"He therefore left, stepping over the necks of the men there, saying, 'By God, it's as if I were committing some sin by arising to express my support for him!"

"At the door of the mosque he was met by some of the ansâr, who asked him, 'What's wrong with you?' He replied, 'I arose to express my support for him, but some of his Companions jumped on me and roughed me up. It's as if I were committing some sin by arising to express my support for him!' 'Go back inside', they told him, 'and the Messenger of God (SAAS) will ask them to forgive you.' 'By God,' he replied, 'I don't want him to ask forgiveness for me!'

Ibn Ishâq then referred to what was revealed in the Qur'ân concerning the battle of Uhud, in sûrat Al-'Ismrân, beginning with the verse, "And (remember) when you went forth in the morning from your family to place the believers in positions for the fighting. And God is Al-Hearing, All-Knowing."

He made reference to 60 verses and discussed these.

We have ourselves written at sufficient length on this in our work of exegesis. He then proceeded to mention the martyrs of Uhud, enumerating them and their names and those of their fathers, according to their tribes, as was his custom.

He referred to 4 of the muhâjjirûn - Ḥamza, Muṣâb b. Umayr, 'Abd Allâh b. Jaḥsh, Shammâs b. Uthmân, God be pleased with them all. He named 65 ansâr who were killed. Ibn Hîshâm added 5 other names to these; thus in his view the ansâr killed totalled 70 men.

Ibn Ishâq then named those of the polytheists who were killed; these totalled 22 men whom he arranged by their tribes.

I observe that none of the polytheists were captured except for Abû 'Azza al-Jumaḥî, as al-Shâfi'î and others report. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had him killed right before him; he ordered al-Zubayr to execute him. It is also said that this was done by 'Asîm b. Thâbit b. Abû al-Aṣâf. The man's head was cut off.

Chapter: The verses exchanged between the believers and the unbelievers concerning the battle of Uhud.

We record here the poems of the unbelievers merely in order to give the responses to them made in the Islamic poetry, emphasizing the aesthetic and intellectual impact of the latter and exposing the idiocy of the former, that rabble!
Imám Muḥammad b. Ishaq, may God be pleased with him, stated, “Among the poems spoken at Uḥud was the following by Ḥubayra b. Abū Wahb al-Makhzūmi, a follower of the religion of his people, the Quraysh, ‘Why do I suffer this painful love-sickness that afflicts me for Hind when warriors are on the move?

Hind now blames and reproaches me at a time when warfare diverts me from her,

Easy now, do not reproach me; my character is thus, as you have learned, and I have never concealed.

I give aid to Banū Ka'b as they require; I bear weights and burdens I suffer from.

I bore my sword upon a tall, long-paced steed, smooth its gait, keeping up with the rest when it runs,

As it races it is like an onager in the wild which, though pursued, stays by the female asses, protecting.

From the line of Ā'waj he is, and the crowd loves him; he is like the healthy, full branch of a very tall tree.

I readied him along with a fine, select blade and a spear for whatever dangers I might meet.

And also chain-mail, rippling like running water, finely wrought and closely fitting, no faults apparent.

We led Kināna forth from the ends of Yemen across the lands, herding them along.

Kināna asked, “Where are you taking us?” We replied, “To al-Nukhayl.” And so they headed for it, and for those there.

We were the knights of the battle on the slope of Uḥud; Ma'add were afraid, so we said we would go to them.

They feared the blows and thrusts, accurate and damaging, that they had seen when their advance forces were engaged.

Then we arrived like a hailstorm, and up went the bird-spirit of Banū al-Najjār, mourning them,

And their heads in the battle were like ostrich eggs, shattered and scattered.

Or a colocynth plant, its stem dried out, being buffeted by fierce winds.

We expend our funds generously and without accounting and thrust at the knights, in their eyes, from all sides.

Many is the night a man warms himself at a carcass he has slaughtered, but reserved for the wealthy he invited.

And many the frosty and rainless, freezing night of Jumādā I've travelled through,

So bitter cold that dogs would bark only once, and snakes not move.

On such nights I've lit for the needy a big fire, bright as lightning, illuminating all around.

‘Amr and his father before him bequeathed me this practice, one he would often repeat.

Such men rivalled the stars in brightness, their achievements no less than the greatest of deeds.’

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Hassan b. Thabit, God be pleased with him, responded with the following verses."

However, Ibn Hisham said that these were also attributed to Ka'b b. Malik and others. In my view the attribution Ibn Ishaq makes to Hassan is more widely and frequently accepted. But God knows best.

"It was your foolishness that made you blindly lead Kinana against the Messenger, for God's forces would humble them.

You brought them down to pools of death that morning, for being killed and hell-fire await them.

You gathered up Abyssinian slaves, devoid of ancestry, you chiefs of disbelief, deceived by your tyrants.

Did you not remember God's horsemen when they killed those at the well, and those they threw therein?

How many were the captives we freed without cost and how many a forelock we cropped of those we mastered!"

Ibn Ishaq went on, "Ka'b b. Malik also spoke the following verses in response to Hubayra b. Abu Wahab al-Makhzumi,

'Has, then, Ghassan heard about us, even though between us and them there is desert land difficult to traverse?

Wastelands and mountains, their dark forms from the distance looking like barren dust columns, widely scattered,

Where young, hardy camels weaken and the annual heavy rain clouds pass over when they come,

Where the bones of the carcasses of exhausted beasts appear stretched out like the linens of traders.

There the wild cows and the antelopes walk in file and ostrich eggs have their shells scattered far.

Our fighters defending our faith are all fine warriors, the crests of their helmets glinting.

Every chain-mail in storage when put on seems like a full-running stream.

But at Badr ask any man you meet and any news of people far away may be useful.

There we were in the land of fear and had others than us been there, they would have left by night, in flight.

When one of our out-riders came he would say, "Prepare for what Ibn Harb is gathering and preparing."

No matter how others would react at what affects us, we would have remained more calm than them.

If others than us had faced such a host, they would have given up and dispersed.

We battled them and no tribe could have withstood us without becoming terrified and taking flight.

When they went to live at al-'Irâd," our chief said, "If we do not protect al-'Irâd, the seed, why sow it?

15. A place on the outskirts of Medina. The use of the word 'ird again in the same verse, meaning "seed", is, of course, a deliberate pun.
We have a messenger among us whose instruction we obey; when he orders us we do not delay. The spirit comes down upon him from his Lord, made to descend from the heavens and then to arise again. We seek his advice on what we want, and our goal is to listen and obey all his wishes.”

The messenger said, when they came in our sight, “Give up fear of death and seek it instead; Be like those who sell their lives by coming close to a King who gives life and restores it. Take up your swords and put your trust in God; all power rests with God.”

We headed straight for them on their mounts, our swords held above us and not afraid, Our squadron bearing swords and lances, the feet of our mounts not wavering once planted. We plunged on as into the waves of the sea, amidst which were their Abyssinians, some bearing armour, others not. They were 3,000 strong, we some 300 or at most 400 choice warriors

When we plunged into them death flowed all around us; we raced towards death’s pool and we came first. Lote-wood bows shot to and fro between us, all with fine strings from Yathrib, The arrows all made from the holy city of Sa'd, and treated with poison when crafted That pierced men’s bodies and sometimes glanced off their armour, making a noise.

The cavalry on the plain were numerous as locusts on a cool night, brought by an east wind. Then we clashed and fighting was fierce between us; and there is no denying God’s command. We struck at them until we left their leaders in the hollow lying like felled trees. That morning and on till refreshed by evening, our energy was like the heat of a fire, consuming all.

They retreated in suffering, as though they were cloud remnants that had shed their water, blown away by the wind. We advanced, our rearguard following slowly; we were like lions striking out at their game at Bisha.

We caused casualties, as did the enemy to us; it was we who acted, but God’s role was greater. We fought hard and they fought too, all getting their fill of evil. We are a people who do not consider that to kill is blameworthy for those who protect and defend their charges.

Stoic in adversity, we never find ourselves to weep over someone killed. We are warriors who never retract what we said, and we never despair at whatever warfare brings. We are warriors who, if victorious, never commit atrocities, and we never complain at our injuries.
We are like a flame from whose heat others seek protection while those near it and exposed are scorched.

You claim superiority over me, Ibn al-Ziba'rā, yet a party went forth in pursuit of you late at night.

And so on the heights of Ma'add and elsewhere ask yourself about which of all men is the least esteemed,

And who it was the warfare left with nothing to boast of, and whose face was most shamed in the battle.

We attacked you fiercely, with God's help and support, the heads of our spears well directed.

Our lances caused wounds among you like the orifices of waterskis, gushing water.

We headed for the standard-bearers and those who speed to defend the banner are those swiftest in receiving praise.

Yet your men were traitors and gave up in desertion; and God refutes any order but it is He who is most effective.'"

Ibn Ishaq went on, "'Abd Allāh b. al-Ziba'rā spoke the following verses about the battle of Uhud, he still being a polytheist at that time,

'O rook of ill-omen, since you foretell, then speak; you only announce what is already done.

Both good and evil have their course and both of these have witnesses to them.

For them gifts are valueless and the graves of rich and poor are all alike.

All life, all pleasure, fades and fate's handmaidens toy with us all.

Convey to Hassān a message from me, for composing poetry alleviates those in pain.

How many were the skulls you saw at the mountain's foot, how many the severed feet and arms.

How plentiful the fine armour removed from warriors slaughtered in the fray.

How many the noble lord we killed, men of fine lineage, on both sides, leaders and heroes,

Men truly brave, lords of distinction, not cowards when the sharp points struck.

Ask al-Mihrās, the well at Uhud, what skulls and brains inhabit it, like partridges.

How I wish that my elders at Badr had witnessed the terror of the al-Khazraj when the points struck home,

When warfare scratched its chest at Qubā and killing boiled among the 'Abd al-Ashhal.

They sped away rapidly then, like young ostriches climbing up the mountain.

Of their nobles we killed twice as many, and we reversed the trend at Badr, and it was equalized.

I am not blaming ourselves, except that if we had done it again we would have harmed them badly

With our Indian swords rising above their heads, drinking deep again and again.'"

Ibn Ishāq continued, "Hassān b. Thābit, God be pleased with him, responded as follows,
'Ibn al-Ziba'ra got carried away by a battle in which we had the advantage; if only he had been fair!

We damaged you and you us; warfare sometimes goes in cycles like that.

We put our swords to your shoulders and there we drank your blood time and again.

We made your backsides flow, as happens to old camels eating 'asafl for medicine!

You took to your heels in flight in the defile, following along like sheep.

Then we attacked you fiercely, forcing you down to the foot of the mountain;

Our groups of warriors were like ashdāq in the desert wastes, terrifying whomever came across them.

The defile pressed in upon us and we crossed through it and filled its heights and low places alike,

With men whose equal you are not and who were aided by Gabriel who came down.

It was our piety that won the day at Badr, our obedience to God and our belief in the prophets.

We killed every one of their chieftains and all their nobles in flowing robes.

At the battle of Badr we left shame upon Quraysh and exemplary tales to be told.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) in truth was witness to the battle of Badr, while the short, corpulent men

Of Quraysh assembled there were like unattended camels gathering in a pasture.

It is we, not people like you born to your mothers' arses, who face up to the fray when warfare comes!"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Ka'b recited the following verses honouring Ḥamza and those Muslims, may God be pleased with them all, killed with him at Uhud,

'You wept. And was it another who made you do so, when it was you who cried when remembering?

Your memory was of a people about whom stories have reached me in this tortuous time.

To think of them your heart throbs in longing and tear-filled sadness.

But those they killed are in pleasant gardens, honoured therein both when they enter or leave

For what they endured beneath the flag, the flag of the prophet at Dhū al-Adwaj

That day when all of Aws and Khazraj gave answer with their swords.

Along with Aḥmad's men following the truth, its path so well illuminated.

They kept on striking the warriors as they traversed through the swirling dust.

So it was until the King summoned them to a garden whose entrance was shielded by much foliage.

All of them died heroically, in God's faith, and received no punishment,

Like Ḥamza when he held true, wielding a sharp sword, cutting deep.
The slave of Banū Nawfal confronted him, snorting like a black camel,
And ran him through with a spear, fast as a flame blazing up in a fire.
Nu‘mān fulfilled his promise, and Hanzalla, the good, did not turn away
From the truth until his spirit passed on to a place splendid with jewels.
Those were men, not those of yours lying in the furthest depths of hell.”

Ibn Ḳaṣṣāf stated, “Ḥassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses in mourning for Ḥamza and the Muslims struck down at the battle of Uhud. It is in the same rhyme as the poem of ʿUmayya b. Abū ʿAlī ʿAlī eulogizing the polytheists killed at the battle of Badr.”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, “There are some scholars expert in the poetry who deny that this poem should be attributed to Ḥassān. But God knows best.”

(Ḥassān b. Thābit recited),

“O Mayy, arise and lament loudly as the mourning women do,
Like hags bearing heavy burdens, complaining, overladen,
Wailing, and scratching at the faces of other women,
Their flowing tears reminding one of pillars stained with the blood of sacrifice,
Tearing at their hair and letting its ends appear,
Looking like the tails of restive horses being tossed in the morning,
Looking like scraps of meat cut up and left to be blown dry in the wind.
They cry in sadness, mourning women overwhelmed by tragedy,
Their hearts wounded, emitting pus from beneath scabs,
Now that fate has struck down those we relied upon when we feared
The warriors at Uhud injured, and destroyed by fate,
Our knights and protectors when warriors are sent forth.
O Ḥamza, I will not, I swear, ever forget you as long as time goes on.
You were the refuge of orphans, strangers and modest-eyed widows,
Protecting against that fate that brings successive, searing wars.
O knight and champion, O Ḥamza, you were our gallant defender
Protecting us from terrible, calamitous blows of hate.
I thought of you as the lion of the Prophet, who is himself our champion, our protector,
He who has always been considered when our noble and generous lords are counted.
Towering above all nobles in fame, a man of generosity and pre-eminence,
Not an irresponsible or fearful or weak man who complains at bearing burdens.
A liberal man who would never withhold any generosity or kindness from his neighbours.
Fine young men have perished, men of great esteem,
Men who would provide food in winter when the cattle were dispersed,
Camel meat with chunks and slices of fat on top of it,
Defending their neighbours for so long as those hating them attack.
I grieve for the young men of whom we are deprived, men like shining lamps,
Proud men, lords, nobles, men of generosity and breeding,
Men who purchased praise with their wealth, for praise brings dividends,
Men who jumped to their bridles if there cried out for them
Someone beset by the misfortunes of an evil time,
His mounts moving steadily along on the flat land,
Competing with one another, he being in one group whose chests poured with sweat,
Moving on until success came, but not from the luck of a winning arrow of chance.
O Ḥamza, you have rendered me lonely, like a branch severed by someone pruning it.
I express my pain to you, now that earth and stones are piled above you,
And a flagstone placed on top of you by the gravedigger, completing his work,
On an open plain, covering the grave with earth and smoothing it well.
Our consolation is for us to say, though our speaking it is very hard, that whoever has been spared life's misfortunes
Should come to us for his eyes to weep for our noble dead
Who acted as they spoke, men of generosity and good deeds, Men whose hands were always stretched forth in liberality.”

Ibn Hishām commented, “Most scholars of poetry refute attribution of this poem to Ḥassān.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Ka'b b. Mālik spoke the following verses eulogizing Ḥamza and his fellow warriors, ‘Struck by anxiety, you lay sleepless, worried that joyful youth had been stripped from you,

While a Damri girl invited your heart to loving; but your passion is of Ghawr, and your wakefulness of Najd.
Abandon excessive pursuit of passion; you were always blamed for acting that way. It is now time for you to refrain, obediently, and to pay heed when counsel warns.
You were devastated by the loss of Ḥamza, your stomach in confusion.
If Mt. Ḥirā' itself suffered such a shock its peaks would collapse.
A chief he was, formed from Hashim's stock wherein lie prophethood, nobility and leadership, Leaders who would slaughter big-humped camels when the wind almost froze the water,
Men who would leave their brave foes prostrate on the battlefield, their lances broken in two.
This was a man who strutted in his armour as though he were a huge, brown, big-pawed lion.
He was the uncle and the confidant of the Prophet, Muḥammad, and he went most gloriously to his death.
He went with distinction to his fate, one of a family who aided the Prophet, and of whom some sought martyrdom.
Hind was told the good tidings of this, to alleviate the burning pain inside her,
When we met her folk that morning on the sandhill, that day her happiness fled.
(And we talked) of the well at Badr, when Gabriel and Muḥammad, beneath our flag, repelled the enemy,
So that the Prophet saw their hosts as two parts whom we could either kill or drive away at will,
Left prostrate at the site, they were 70 in number, Uthba and al-Aswad among them.

And Ibn al-Mughira too whom we struck above his neck-artery, making it flow and foam.

And it was a sharp sword in the hands of the believers that set Umayya al-Jumahi straight.

The polytheist rabble came to you, chased by the cavalry, like ostriches in retreat. What a difference there is in those for ever in hell and those who dwell in paradise in eternity!"

Ibn Ishaq went on to say that Abd Allâh b. Rawâha spoke the following verses in mourning for Ḥamza and his fellow warriors killed at the battle of Uhud. Ibn Hishâm, however, stated that Abî Zayd recited them to him as having been composed by Ka'b b. Malik. But God knows best.

“My eyes wept, and they had a right to do so; but weeping and wailing will do no good.

For the lion of God, that day they asked, ‘Could that man slain be Ḥamza?’

Through his death all the Muslims were injured there, the Messenger as well.

O Ḥamza, Ya'la’s father, the very foundations were destroyed; you were the epitome of glory, piety and kindness.

May God’s peace be upon you in paradise, in pleasure that will never end!

O Ḥashim, of all men the best, be steadfast; and all your deeds were good and generous.

The Messenger of God is noble and patient; it is at God’s command he enunciates when he speaks.

Who will inform Lu'ayy for me, for after today, the world will be utterly changed.

And before this day they have known and tasted deeds of ours by which the thirst for vengeance was satisfied.

You have all forgotten our blows at the pool of Badr, that day when sudden death struck you.

That day when Abû Jahl fell prostrate, the vultures circled and hovered above him, And Uthba and his son also fell, and Shayba was bitten by the burnished sword.

There we left Umayya stretched out, a slim spear between his ribs.

Ask the heads of Bânî Rabî‘a; our swords have notches because of them.

O Hind,” weep and tire not of it; for you are passionate, shedding tears as though bereaved of a son.

And You, Hind, show no joy at Ḥamza’s death; your exultation is despicable.

Ibn Ishaq continued, “Ṣafiyya daughter of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib spoke the following verses, mourning her brother Ḥamza b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. She was the mother 19. This Hind is presumably Hind daughter of Uthâtha b. ‘Abbad b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib who had eulogized Ḥamza (see above p.52), while the Hind of the next line would be the daughter of Uthba b. Rabî‘a, the wife of Abû Sufyân, who had sworn to eat Ḥamza’s liver when the latter had killed her father Uthba at Badr. The two women spoke verses against one another after the battle of Uhud.

of al-Zubayr and was the aunt of the Prophet (SAAS); may God be pleased with them all.

‘Are you, sisters of mine, asking, in fear, those present at Uhud, the ignorant and knowledgeable alike?

The knowledgeable replied, “Hamza is dead! The adviser, the very best adviser of the Messenger of God!

The God of truth and the throne has summoned him to paradise, where he will live in joy.”

That was what we had hoped for; we anticipate for Hamza the best of fortunes on assembly day.

By God, I'll not forget you so long as the winds blow; I will mourn and be sad whether I am at home or away.

For God’s lion who was a defender who protected Islam from all who disbelieved.

How I wish my limbs and bones had been there then, for the hyenas and vultures to attack me!

I say, my family having made louder their lament, “May God reward well this brother, this champion!””

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Nu’mān, wife of Shamās b. Uthmān, spoke the following verses in mourning for her husband; but God, to whom all praise and credit are due, knows best.

‘Eyes, weep copiously and without stop for a noble, brave warrior,

A man of firm conviction and fine disposition, a standard-bearer and a horseman.

When his death was announced, I cried in pain, “Gone is the man of generosity! Gone is he who fed and clothed!”

And I said, when his usual places were empty of him, “May God not distance from us our nearness to Shamās!””

“Her brother al-Ḥakam b. Saʿīd b. Yarbiʿ responded as follows in consoling her, ‘Guard your modesty, in seclusion and dignity; Shamās was just one of our men.

Do not kill yourself because his death has come, in obedience of God, and on a day of violence and terror.

Now Hamza was God’s lion; so bear up, for he tasted from Shamās’s cup that day.’

“Hind, daughter of Utba, the wife of Abū Sufyān, recited, upon their return from Uhud,

‘I have returned home with my mind in much confusion, some of those I was after having escaped me,

Those of Quraysh at Badr, and others, including some of Banū Hāshim and of the people of Yathrib.

However, I did gain one thing, even if it was not all as I had hoped in my journey.’”

Ibn Ishāq gives many more such poems. We have left out the others because of our concern not to be long-winded and boring; those poems we have given suffice. And to God be all praise.
Al-Umawi gave in his military chronicles even more poems than Ibn Ishaq; this was his usual practice, though even more evident here.

Among the verses quoted from Hassān b. Thābit were the following delivered about the battle of Uhud,

"It was the devil they obeyed, when he let them down and their disgrace and failure was fully evident,

When they shouted in unison with Abū Sufyān, ‘Rise up, Hubal!’

We all answered back, ‘Our Lord, the All-Merciful, is greater and more splendid!’

Be sure, you used this cry once at the ‘pool of death’ (at Badr), death being a place to drink.

You should know that when thoughts of death must be slaked, we are cooking pots on the boil."

It seems that these verses may well be part of Hassān’s response to ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zibār; but God knows best.

This brings to an end commentary on the battle of Uhud.

DIVISION.

There has been recounted above those events, raids and expeditions that occurred in 3 AH. The best-known of these was the battle of Uhud, that occurred in the middle of Shawwal of that year, as we have detailed above. And to God be all praise.

At Uhud, there died as a martyr Abū Yaṣā, also known as Abū ʿAmāra, Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, the uncle of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who was known as ‘God’s lion’ and ‘His messenger’s lion’. He was the foster-brother of the Prophet (ṢAAS), as also was Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Asad. All were suckled by Thuwaybā, the freed-woman of Abū Lahab, this fact being established in a reliable hadith account.

He would, moreover, have been more than 50 when he was killed. He was a brave, heroic man and a major early trusting follower; at that battle others totalling 70 were killed along with him. May God be pleased with them all!

That same year Uthmān b. ʿAffān married Umm Kulthūm, the daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), following the death of her sister Ruqayya. His betrothal to her took place in Rabiʿ al-Awwal of that year, and the marriage was consummated in Jumādā al-Ākhira, as has been told above. Al-Waqidi related this.

Ibn Jarir also said of that year: “Al-Ḥasan b. ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib was born to Fāṭima, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).” He added that the same year she conceived al-Ḥusayn; may God be pleased with them all!
In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Compassionate; O Lord, facilitate!

THE YEAR 4 AH.

In Muharram of that year Abu Salama b. 'Abd al-Asad made his foray against Tulayha al-Asadi, and he went on as far as the place known as Qatan.

Al-Waqidi quoted 'Umar b. Uthmân b. 'Abd al-Rahman b. Sa'id al-Yarbûq, from Salama b. 'Abd Allah b. Umar b. Abu Salama and others, as having said, "Abû Salama was present at Uhud, where he was seriously wounded in the upper arm. He rested for a month recuperating and then, in Muharram, at the beginning of 35 months after the Hijra, the Messenger of God (SAAS) summoned him and told him, 'I want you to go forth into Banû Asad territory and to attack them.'" He charged him to behave with piety and to treat the Muslims with him well.

One hundred and fifty men accompanied him on this expedition.

He went out to near Qatan, which is a well belonging to Banû Asad, where Tulayha al-Asadi and his brother Salama, both sons of Khûwaylid, were also present. He had assembled his allies from Banû Asad with the intention of making war against the Prophet (SAAS). But one of their men had come to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him of what they were planning against him. He had therefore dispatched Abû Salama on this expedition.

When they (the Muslims) reached their territory, they dispersed, leaving large quantities of camels and goats as booty for them. Abû Salama took all this into his possession, along with three of their slaves he had taken prisoner, and set out to return to Medina. He then awarded a substantial portion of the booty to that man of Banû Asad who had given them information. Having extracted the portion due to the Prophet (SAAS), a slave and one-fifth of the booty, he divided up the rest among his companions. Then he entered Medina."

'Umar b. Uthmân stated that 'Abd al-Malik b. Ubayd related to him, from 'Abd al-Rahman b. Sa'id b. Yarbûq, from 'Umar b. Abu Salama, who said, "It was Abû Usâma al-Jushami who injured my father. He spent a month recovering and when he had done so, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent him, in Muharram of that year, 4 AH that is, to Qatan. He was away for some ten days and when he returned to Medina his wound got the better of him and he died, three days prior to the end of Jumâdâ al-Ulîl."

'Umar then added, "My mother then observed the 'idda" period of four months and ten days. Thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) contracted marriage with her and this he consummated a few days prior to the end of Shawwâl. My mother used to say, 'There's nothing wrong with contracting and consummating a marriage in Shawwâl; it was then that the Messenger of God (SAAS) both contracted and consummated marriage with me.'"

20. The period of waiting prescribed in Islamic law during which a woman may not remarry following the death of her husband.
He stated that Umm Salama died in Dhū al-Qa‘da, 59 AH. Al-Bayhaqi related this.

I observe that we will report in regard to the latter part of this year, 4 AH, that it was in Shawwāl that the Prophet (SAAS) arranged his marriage with Umm Salama. (I will also comment) on whether the son negotiates on his mother’s behalf in marriage, and I will note the views of scholars in that regard. If God Almighty wills it so, and in Him is all confidence.

THE EXPEDITION TO AL-RAJF.

Al-Waqqādī stated, “In Safar – of the year 4 AH – the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent men to the Meccans to receive safe passage from them.”

He added, “Al-Rajf is positioned some eight miles from ʿAsfān.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿIbrāhīm b. Mūsā related to him, quoting Ḥishām b. Yūsuf, from Māʿarim, from al-Zuhri, from ʿAmr b. Abū Sufyān al-Thaqafī, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS) sent out a reconnaissance expedition, having appointed ʿAṣim b. Thābit as their leader; he was the grandfather of ʿAṣim b. ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb.

“They travelled out to a point between ʿAsfān and Mecca and there news of them reached a tribe of Banū Hudhayl known as Banū Liḥyān. The latter proceeded to pursue them, their force consisting of some 100 archers. They followed their tracks to a camp site where they had made a halt and there they found kernels of the dates with which the Muslims had provisioned themselves in Medina. The Banū Liḥyān men recognized these as being from Medina, followed on after them and eventually caught up with them.

“When ʿAṣim and his companions could go no further, they took refuge on an outcrop of rock where they were surrounded by Banū Liḥyān. The latter told them, ‘If you come on down, we give you our pledge and promise not to kill any one of you.’ ʿAṣim replied, ‘For myself, I’ll not place myself under the security of a non-believer. O God, inform Your prophet about us!’

“The Banū Liḥyān men then attacked and killed ʿAṣim and seven of his men with arrows. Khubayb, Zayd and one other man remained alive. When Banū Liḥyān repeated their pledge and promise, Khubayb and the others came down. When they had them in their power, their enemy untied some bow strings with which they bound their prisoners. The third Muslim remonstrated, ‘So now the treachery begins!’ He then refused to accompany them. His captors dragged him along, trying to force him to accompany them, but when he resisted, they killed him.

“They then set off with Khubayb and Zayd and sold them in Mecca. The tribe of al-Ḥārīth b. ʿAmir b. Nawfal bought Khubayb; it had been Khubayb who had killed al-Ḥārīth at the battle of Badr. He remained with them for some time as their prisoner until they decided to kill him. Khubayb then asked one of... al-Ḥārith’s daughters if he could borrow a razor with which to shave his pubic hair and she loaned him one.

“She later said, ‘My attention then left a baby of mine who crawled over to Khubayb, who lifted it up on to his lap. When I saw the baby there I was terrified and Khubayb, holding the razor, saw this and asked, ‘Are you scared I might kill him? I would hope to God I’d never do any such thing!’

“She used to comment, ‘I never saw a better prisoner than Khubayb. I once saw him, bound in irons, eating a large bunch of grapes at a time when there were no such fruit in Mecca; the grapes were nothing but bounty that God bestowed on him.’

“His captors ultimately took him outside the sanctuary to kill him. He asked, ‘Allow me to make two rakʿāt in prayer.’ Having done so, he went over to them and said, ‘Except for the fact that you would have thought me scared of dying, I would have prayed longer.’ He was the first to institute the practice of making two rakʿāt before execution. Khubayb then said, ‘O God, count them one by one, and give them violent death!’

“He also spoke the following verses,

‘Being killed as a Muslim, I care not how my death comes, since it is in God’s cause.

For that is God’s prerogative; and if He wishes He will give His blessings to severed limbs.’

“Thereupon ‘Uqba b. al-Ḥārith went up and killed him. Quraysh later sent for a part of Āṣim’s body that they would recognize; Āṣim had killed one of their leaders at Badr. But God sent down a cloud of wasps; these protected his body from the Quraysh emissaries who could not gain access to him.”

Al-Bukhari went on to state that ‘Abd Allah b. Muhammad related to him, quoting Sufyan, from ‘Amr, who heard Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh say, “It was Abü Sarwā’a who killed Khubayb.”

“I comment that the man’s name was ‘Uqba b. al-Ḥārith He accepted Islam thereafter and there is a hadith attributed to him concerning the foster relationship. It is said that Abü Sarwa’a and ‘Uqba were brothers. But God knows best.

This is the account of the expedition to al-Rajt as given by al-Bukhari in the section of military campaigns in his Sahih collection. He also related this in his section on al-tawḥīd, and on al-jihād, through various lines from al-Zuhri, ‘Amr b. Abü Sufyān, Asad b. Ḥāritha al-Thaqafi, ally of Bani Zuhra. Some authorities give the above name as ‘Umar b. Abü Sufyān, though it is widely accepted to be ‘Amr.

In one account of al-Bukhari he states, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) despatched ten men on a reconnaissance expedition, appointing Āṣim b. Thabit b. Abü al-Aqlaḥ as their leader.”
Muḥammad b. Ishāq, Mūsā b. Uqba and ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr, however, offer somewhat contradictory accounts. We will give herewith the wording of Ibn Ishāq to show the difference and discrepancy. Ibn Ishāq is, however, the unchallenged leading authority in this, for as al-Shāfiʿī, may God be pleased with him, put it, "Whoever wishes to research the early military engagements is reliant upon Muḥammad b. Ishāq."

Ibn Ishāq stated that ʿĀsim b. Umar b. Qatāda related to him, "A group of men from ʿĀdāl and from al-Qāra approached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) after the battle of Uhud and asked, 'O Messenger of God, Islam has already reached us. Could you now send a group of your Companions to give us instruction in the religion, in how to recite the Qurʾān, and in the laws of Islam?'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), therefore did send with them a group of six of his Companions. These were Marthad b. Abū Marthad al-Ghanawi, an ally of Ḥamzah b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib – Ibn Ishāq relates that he was their leader – Khālid b. al-Bukayr al-Laythī, ally of Banū ʿAdī, ʿĀsim b. Thābit b. Abū al-Aqālah, brother of Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf, Khubayb b. ʿAdī, brother of Banū Jahjābī b. Kūlfa b. ʿAmr b. ʿAwf, Zayd b. al-Dathīna, brother of Banū Bayyāda b. ʿĀmir, ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿĀtiq, ally of Banū Zafar. May God be pleased with them all."

Ibn Ishāq, therefore, is stating that they were six in number; Mūsā b. Uqba stated the same, and named them as Ibn Ishāq had done.

Al-Bukhārī, however, states that they were ten in number and, according to him, it was ʿĀsim b. Thābit b. Abū al-Aqālah who was their leader. God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq went on, "These men went forth as far as al-Rajī, a well belonging to Hudhayl in the Ḥijaz, above al-Hadīpa. There (other persons) betrayed them and aroused Hudhayl against them. The party were there in camp when men bearing swords suddenly descended upon them. They therefore took up their own swords to do battle. Their attackers, however, told them, 'We swear by God we don't want to kill you; we just want to get some money for you from the Meccans. We pledge and promise by God that we will not kill you.'

"Marthad, Khālid b. al-Bukayr and ʿĀsim b. Thābit, however, replied, 'By God, we'll never accept any pledge or oath made by a polytheist.' ʿĀsim b. Thābit then recited – and God knows best and to Him is all praise and reliance –

'What weakness do I have, a brave archer with a bow that has a tough string?
Long, thick arrows can wing from it; and death is truth, life false.
All that God determines comes about for man and man to Him returns.
If I do not battle you, then may my mother be bereaved!'"

"ʿĀsim also recited,

'I am Abū Sulaymān, and I have arrows made by al-Muqʿad and weapons like hell's fire.

21. A location between ʿAsfān and Mecca, some seven miles from ʿAsfān.
22. The name of a well-known Meccan arrow-maker.
When fighters throng, I’m not afraid; I have my shield of smooth bull’s leather.
And I’m a believer in Muḥammad’s mission.’

“He also said,

‘I’m Abū Sulaymān, an archer, and my people are of noble stock.’”

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on, “He then fought until he was killed, as were also two of his companions.

“When Āṣīm was killed, Hudhayl wanted to take his head and sell it to Sulāfa, daughter of Saʿd b. Suhayl. She had sworn after he had killed her two sons at Uḥud that if she got possession of Āṣīm’s head, she would drink wine from his skull.

“But when wasps prevented their getting access to it, they said, ‘Let’s leave him till nightfall; then they will leave and we will take it.’ And so God sent (a flood) into the wādī which bore Āṣīm away. He had made a pledge to God that no polytheist would ever touch him, or he one of them, because they might sully him.

“Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb used to say, when someone said that the wasps had protected him, ‘God does protect believers.’

“Āṣīm had sworn that no polytheist would ever touch him or he one of them during his life; and God protected him after his death just as he had defended God while living!”

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on, “However, Khubayb, Zayd b. al-Dāthina and Ābū Allāh b. Ṭāriq were weak and pliant and protective of their lives and so gave themselves up. The enemy took them prisoner and then took them into Mecca to sell them there.

“When they were in al-Zahrān, Ābū Allāh b. Ṭāriq extracted his hand from his bonds and drew his sword. The enemy, however, kept their distance from him and pelted him with stones until they had killed him. His grave is there at al-Zahrān.

“Khubayb b. ʿAdī and Zayd b. al-Dāthina were brought on into Mecca where they were bought by Quraysh in exchange for two prisoners of Hudhayl who were in Mecca.

“Ḥujayr b. Abū Ihāb al-Ṭamīmī, an ally of Bānū Nawfal, bought Khubayb on behalf of ʿUqba b. al-Ḥārith b. Āmīr b. Nawfal to kill him for his father; Abū Ihāb was the brother of al-Ḥārith b. Āmīr by the same mother.

“Zayd b. al-Dāthina was bought by Ṣafwān b. Umayya to kill him in revenge for his own father. Ṣafwān despatched him to al-Ṭanīm in the company of a freed-man of his named Nīṣās who took him outside the sanctuary to kill him. A group of Quraysh gathered among whom was Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb. Abū Sufyān asked him, as he was being brought forth for execution, ‘I implore you, by God, Zayd; wouldn’t you like it to be Muḥammad here in your place with us now for us to strike off his head, and for you to be with your own people?’

23. The line could be translated alternatively: ‘... just as God had protected him while he was alive’.
“He replied, ‘By God, I would not like Muḥammad, wherever he now is, to be harmed by even a single thorn and for me to be sitting among my people.’

“Abū Sufyān used to say, ‘I never saw anyone so love anyone else as Muḥammad’s Companions loved Muḥammad.’

“Nisṭās then killed him.

“Regarding Khubayb b. ‘Adi. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Najīḥ related to me that it was related to him from Mawiyya, the freed—woman of Ḥujayr b. Abū Ihāb, who had accepted Islam, who said, ‘Khubayb was kept prisoner in my home. One day I looked at him and saw that he was eating from his hand a bunch of grapes as large as a man’s head – and that at a time when I don’t know of any grapes being eaten anywhere on God’s earth!’”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda and ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Najīḥ related to me that she also said, ‘When the time for his execution came, he said, “Send for a steel blade with which I can clean myself off for the execution.”’ She went on, ‘So I gave a razor to a young man from the tribe and told him, “Take this to the man in the house.” But no sooner had the youth left with it than I began asking myself what I had done. The man will take his revenge by killing this youth, making it one man for another, I thought. But when the youth handed Khubayb the blade, the latter commented, “Wasn’t your mother afraid of my treachery when she sent you to me with this blade?” He then allowed the youth to leave.’”

Ibn ʿHishām stated, “It is said that the youth was her own son.”

Ibn Ishāq went on to quote ʿĀṣim as saying, “They then took Khubayb out to al-Tanʿīm to crucify him.

“He spoke to them as follows, ‘I’d appreciate you letting me alone to make two rakʿah in prayer.’ They agreed and he did so very well. Then he went over to those present and said, ‘I swear, if I had not been concerned that you would think I had taken a long time out of fear of dying, I would have prayed more!’

“It was Khubayb who was the first to begin the practice by Muslims of making two prayer prostrations before execution.

“They then raised him up to the scaffold and when they had bound him there he said, ‘O God, we have announced your messenger’s mission, so inform him tomorrow of what is being done to us.’ He then said, ‘O God, count them and kill them violently; let none of them escape.’ They then killed him.

“Muʿāwiya b. Abū Sufyān used to say, ‘I was there along with others in the company of Abū Sufyān and had him throw me to the ground in fear of Khubayb’s curse. People used to say, “A man who has an oath spoken against him can escape it by falling on his side.”’”

In the maghāzi, military chronicle, collection of Mūsā b. ʿUqba, it states, “Khubayb and Zayd b. al-Dathina were killed on the same day and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) heard of it that very day. He then said, ‘May peace be upon you both’ – or ‘upon you’, singular. ‘Quraysh have killed Khubayb!’”
It is said that when they crucified Zayd b. al-Dathina, they cast arrows at him to subvert him away from his religion, but this only increased his faith and his acceptance of his fate.

Urwa and Mūsā b. Uqba related that when they raised Khubayb on to the wooden frame, those present called out to him, "Would you not prefer Muḥammad to be in your place?"

He replied, "No, by God Almighty, I'd not have him ransom me by having a thorn pierce his foot!" But they laughed at him. This is reported by Ibn Ishāq in his account relating to Zayd b. al-Dathina. But God knows best.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "They claim that it was 'Amr b. Umayya who buried Khubayb."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Yaḥyā b. 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, from his father 'Abbad, from Uqba b. al-Jāḥiṣ, who said, 'I heard him say, 'I swear by God, it was not I who killed Khubayb; I was too young for that. It was Abū Māysara, brother of Banū 'Abd al-Dār, who took the spear and placed it in my hand. He then grasped my hand and the spear and pierced him with it until he had killed him.'"

Ibn Ishāq continued, "One of our associates told me, "Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb appointed Saʿīd b. ʿAmir b. Ḥidhyām al-Juḥāmī over part of Syria. He would suffer from fainting spells when he was with people and this was reported to Umar. It was said that the man had some affliction. Umar asked him on a visit he made to him, "Saʿīd, what is it that ails you?" He replied, "By God, Commander of the Faithful, there's nothing the matter with me; it's just that I was among those present when Khubayb b. ʿAdī was killed. And I heard his curse. And whenever I'm meeting people and recall this, I feel faint." Umar thought all the better of him thereafter."

Al-Umawi stated, "My father quoted Ibn Ishāq as having said, 'We have been told that Umar said, "Anyone who wants to see a man who is unique should look at Saʿīd b. ʿAmir."'"

Ibn Hishām stated, "Khubayb remained in their captivity until the sacred months had expired and then they killed him."

Al-Bayhaqi related, from Ibrāhīm b. Ismāʿīl, as follows, "Jaʿfar b. ʿAmr b. Umayya related to me, from his father, from his grandfather ʿAmr b. Umayya, that the Messenger of God (ṣaw) had sent him forth alone to get information. He said, 'I made my way to the wooden frame where Khubayb was and climbed up, fearing I might be seen. I released him and he fell to the ground. I then drew away a little, then turned but could not see anything there; it was as if the earth had swallowed him. And not a trace of Khubayb has appeared up to this time.'"

Ibn Ishāq then quoted Muḥammad b. Abū Muḥammad, from Saʿīd or ʿIrka, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, "When the men were killed at al-Raji', some hypocrites said, 'How sad for those misguided people who died that way. They neither stayed with their families, nor did they carry out their master's mission.'"
It was about them that God revealed the words, "There may be a person whose words about this life may please you, while he invokes God to witness what is in his heart. Yet he may be the most vehement of enemies" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.204).

And God revealed concerning those who went on this expedition, "There are those who sell themselves seeking God's favour, and God is compassionate to His servants" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.207).

Ibn Ishaq stated that the following verses were spoken about this expedition by Khubayb when people gathered to kill him. Ibn Hishām observed that some authorities deny that he was their author:

"The parties gathered around me, assembled their tribes and collected all the groups together;
All of them showed enmity towards me and antagonism, because I was in bonds, tightly held.
They had gathered their women and children and I was taken to a tall, stout tree-trunk;
I complain to God at my isolation and my torment and at the death the enemy planned for me.
O Lord of the Throne, give me patience to withstand what it is they intend; they have slashed my flesh and my hope despairs.
This is happening in God's cause, and if He wishes He will bless torn-off limbs.
They offered me the choice between disbelief and death, and my eyes were wet from something other than fear.
I have no fear of death — and am already dead; but what I dread is the consuming fire of hell.
By God, if I die a Muslim, I care not in what way my death in God's cause may occur.
I shall not express subservience to the enemy, nor any fear, for it is to God I am returning.""

Two of these verses are given also in the Sahih collection of al-Bukhari. These are the lines,

"I do not care, when I die as a Muslim, in what manner my death in God's cause may occur.
This is happening in God's cause; and if He wishes, He will bless torn-off limbs."

Ibn Ishaq quotes Hassan b. Thabit as having spoken the following elegy for Khubayb:

"What is wrong with your eyes, ceaselessly letting fall their teardrops on to your breast like pearls,
Over Khubayb, a hero of the brave, no coward when you challenge him and not frivolous, as is well known.

24. With slight variations in some wording and the transposition of one line.
Go forth, Khuhayh, and may God reward you well, in eternal paradise with houris for companions.

What will you respond when the Prophet asks you, while pure angels are there on the horizon,

Why it was you killed God’s martyr for a tyrant who committed crimes throughout the land?”

Ibn Hishām commented that he had left out certain verses containing obscenities.

Hassān also, according to Ibn Ishaq, recited the following verses attacking those of Banū Liḥyān who had betrayed those who went to al-Raji. But God alone, in Whom is all trust, confidence and protection, knows best.

“If pure, unadulterated treachery delights you, then go to al-Raji and ask where Liḥyān live;
They are a people who advise one another to eat the neighbours who come among them, dogs, monkeys and men being all alike!
If a billy-goat could talk and arose one day to address them, they would consider him someone of honour and importance!”

Hassān b. Thābit also said, satirizing Hudhayl and Banū Liḥyān for their treachery towards those who had gone to al-Raji, may God be pleased with them all:

“By my life, the stories told of Khubayb and ʿĀsim have disgraced Hudhayl b. Mudrik, Tales told of Liḥyān have brought them ignominy,
For Liḥyān have committed the most evil of crimes.
Their men, those from the very best of their tribe, those like the very hairs behind the fetlock of a horse’s front legs.
They betrayed at al-Raji and surrendered their charges, men of decency and fine qualities.
They betrayed the apostle’s messenger; Hudhayl gave no protection against horrendous crimes.
They will one day see victory go against them for killing one protected against evil actions,
By swarms of wasps guarding his flesh, protecting the flesh of one who witnessed mighty battles.
Hudhayl may well see the bodies of those killed laid out or at funerals.
We will engage them in fierce battles that riders will relate to fairgoers.
At the orders of the Messenger of God; His messenger has made his decision against Liḥyān, forcefully and with knowledge.
A despicable tribe that cares nothing for fidelity and does not repel the tyrant’s hand when wronged.
When (some) people live in the open desert, them you find at the very rivers, amidst the streams.

25. In Islam, the handmaidens of paradise whose company is a reward for exemplary behaviour on earth.
Hassān, may God be pleased with him, also spoke the following in praise of the men at al-Rajī, naming them in his verses. Ibn Ishāq, God be pleased with him, recorded the following:

“May God bless those who went forth together at al-Rajī and who were honoured and rewarded.

The party’s leader and commander was Marthad, and Ibn al-Bukayr was their Imām, along with Khubayb.

And there was a son of Ṭāriq and Ibn Dathina was of them; it was there he met his pre-determined fate.

And there was al-‘Āṣim, slain at al-Rajī, who reached the very heights (of heaven); how much he gained!

He prevented the panderers from striking his back by fighting fiercely; he was splendid.”

Ibn Hishām commented that most authorities deny that these are verses of Ḥassān.

THE EXPEDITION OF ‘AMR B. UMAYYA AL-ḌAMRĪ, FOLLOWING THE EXECUTION OF KHUBAYB.

Al-Waqidi stated, Ibrāhīm b. Ja’far related to me, from his father, and (as did) ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Ubayda, from Ja’far b. al-Fadl b. al-Ḥasan b. ‘Amr b. Umayya al-Ḍamrī, and (as did) ʿAbd Allāh b. Ja’far, from ʿAbd al-Wāḥid b. Abū ʿAwf, some of these giving longer accounts than others. They stated, “Abū Sufyān had asked a number of Quraysh men in Mecca, ‘Won’t someone assassinate Muḥammad? He goes walking in the markets. We would then have our revenge.’ A bedouin came to him, went inside his house and told him, ‘If you will hire me, I’ll go out and assassinate him. I’m a skilled tracker and I have a dagger that is (concealed) like the under-wing feathers of an eagle.’ ‘Then you’re our man!’ he replied, and gave him a camel and expense money. He told him, ‘Keep this secret; I don’t want anyone to hear of this and report it to Muḥammad.’ The bedouin assured him that no one would know of it.

“He then left by night on his mount, travelling on for five days, arriving in the quarter on the morning of the sixth. He then went about enquiring after the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); when he reached the place for prayer someone told him, ‘He has gone off to see Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal.’

“The bedouin then left, leading his mount. When he arrived where Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal were, he hobbled his camel and went to seek the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He found him amidst a group of his Companions, addressing them in his mosque. When the bedouin entered and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) saw him, he told his men, 'This man intends some treachery, but God will foil his plan.' The bedouin stood there and asked, 'Which one of you is 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib's son?' The Messenger of God (ṣaas) replied, 'I'm 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib's son.' The bedouin approached and leaned down over the Messenger of God (ṣaas) as though confiding a secret to him. But Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr pulled him away, saying, 'Keep away from the Messenger of God (ṣaas)!' Usayd then felt down in his loin cloth and there found the dagger. He then announced, 'Messenger of God, this man is a traitor!'

"The bedouin stood there aghast and said, 'Take my blood! Take my blood, Muḥammad!'

"Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr seized him and was about to slit his throat when the Prophet (ṣaas), said, 'Tell me the truth about yourself and why you have come. And if you tell the truth your honesty will serve you well; but if you lie to me, I'll proceed as I intended.'

"'Then I'll be free?' the bedouin asked.

"'Yes, you'll be free,' he replied.

"The bedouin then told him about Abo Sufyān and what he told him to do, and he was then given over to the charge of Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr. Next day the Messenger of God (ṣaas) summoned him and told him, 'I will either set you free to go wherever you want, or would you prefer something better than that?'

'What would that be?' the bedouin asked. 'That you give testimony that there is no god but God, and that I am God's messenger.'

"The bedouin then said, 'I do testify that there is no god but God and that you are the Messenger of God. I swear by God, Muhammad, that I was never afraid of any man. But as soon as I saw you all my strength left me. Then you perceived what I had intended, though no rider had reached you before myself with any information and no one had any information. So I realized that you were inviolate, that you were truth and that the party of Aba Sufyān was that of the devil.'

"The Prophet (ṣaas) began to smile at this. He (the bedouin) remained there for some days then asked permission of the Prophet (ṣaas) to leave and, having done so, nothing more was heard of him.

"The Messenger of God (ṣaas) then said to 'Amr b. Umayya al-Ḍamri and to Salama b. Aslam b. Ḥāris, 'Go to Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb and if you should catch him unawares, then kill him.'

"'Amr related, 'I and my companion then left, travelling on until we reached the Ya'jij valley. We tied up our mounts and my companion asked me, 'Amr, would you like for us to go on into Mecca and circumambulate the ka'ba seven times and make two rak'as in prayer?' I replied, 'I'm better informed about the people of Mecca than you are and after dark they dampen down their courtyards and sit down there. I know Mecca better than a piebald mare!' But he disagreed with me and so we went on into Mecca. We made seven circumambulations and did make two rak'as. When I went outside (the sanctuary) I was met by Mu'awiya b. Abū Sufyān, who recognized me. “It’s 'Amr b. Umayya! What a pity,” he said. He then drew the attention of the Meccans to us, who said, “'Amr has not come here for anything good!’ — 'Amr had been renowned before Islam as an assassin.

“The Meccans then gathered men together and 'Amr and Salama left, being pursued, and all hurried up into the mountains.

“'Amr went on, ‘I entered a cave and hid from them till next morning. They had spent the night searching for us, but God blinded their sight from finding their way to the road to Medina. The morning of the next day, ʿUthmān b. ʿAbbās b. Malik b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Taymī approached, looking for grass for his horse. I commented to Salama b. Ṭaswir, “If he sees us, he’ll tell the Meccans where we are, and they will discover us.” He kept on approaching until he was right over us. I then went out to him and thrust my dagger once beneath a nipple. He fell down, screaming. So the Meccans gathered and advanced together, having previously been separated. I went back inside and told my companion, “Don’t move!” The Meccans approached until they were right there and then they asked (‘Uthmān b. ʿAbbās b. Malik) who had killed him. “It was 'Amr b. Umayya al-Damri,” they replied. Abū Sufyān then said, “We knew he had not come for any good reason!” But (‘Uthmān) was not able to tell them where we were; he was at his last gasp and died. They were distracted from seeking us by their (dead) comrade and carried him away.

“We remained in our place for two nights until the search for us had died down; we then left for al-Tanʿīm. My companion asked me, “'Amr b. Umayya, would you like us to go for Khubayb b. ʿAdi, to bring him down?” “Where is he?” I asked. “Over there, crucified,” he replied, “with a guard around him.” I answered, “Leave me here awhile, and you go on. If something frightens you, then move over to your camel and sit on it. Then proceed to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and tell him the news. Leave me here; I know the town.” I then searched for him (Khubayb’s body) until I found him and carried him away on my back. I had not walked more that 20 arms’ lengths before they all woke up and set off after me. I threw down the wooden scaffold, and I’ll never forget the sound it made. Then I piled earth up over it with my feet and took off on the ʿṢafā road. Eventually they tired (of following) and went back, leaving me much relieved. My companion hurried over and mounted his camel, which he rode off to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him what had happened. I then travelled on until I was overlooking al-Ghalīl, al-Ghalīl ʿAjnān; there I went into a cave carrying my bow, arrows and dagger. While I was there a man of Banū Dīl b. Bakr arrived; he was tall, one-eyed and herding sheep and goats. He came inside the cave and asked, “What man is here?” I replied, “A man of Banū Bakr.” “I too am of Banū Bakr,” he said. He then made himself comfortable, and raised his voice in a song,

"I said to myself, "By God, I hope I get to kill you!" When he was asleep, I went over to him and killed him more brutally than I ever have anyone.

"I then left there and proceeded on down. When I got to the road, there were two men who had been sent by Quraysh to gather news. I told them, "Consider yourselves prisoners!" One of them refused, so I shot and killed him. When the other saw this, he gave himself up and I bound him and took him on in to the Prophet (SAAS).

"When I reached Medina, ansār children gathered around me, playing, and they heard their elders say, "This is 'Amr." The children raced off to tell the Prophet (SAAS), and I took the prisoner in to him, having bound his thumbs together with my bow string. I noticed that the Prophet (SAAS) was laughing. He then said a prayer for me."

The arrival of Salama was three days before that of 'Amr.

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

It is stated above that after 'Umar cut Khubayb down, he saw no cadaver or body. Perhaps he was buried where he fell; God knows best.

Ibn Hishām merely added this expedition to the text of Ibn Ishāq, his being similar to that of al-Wāqidi. However, his account gives the companion of 'Amr b. Umayya on this expedition as Jabbār b. Ṣakhr. But God knows best; and all praise be to God.

THE EXPEDITION TO BPR MA'UNA.

It took place in Safar of that year, 4 AH. The late Makḥūl, may God have mercy on him, is unique in stating that it occurred after the battle of al-khandaq, "the ditch".

Al-Bukhārī stated that Abū Ma'am ar related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Wārīth, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿĀzīz, from Anas b. Mālik who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent out 70 men, known as al-qurrā', on a mission. Their way was blocked by two tribes of Banū Sulaym, Riḍ and Dhakwān, at a well called Ma'ūna. The Muslims told them, 'We have not come out to fight you; we're sent on a mission for the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ But the tribesmen killed them.

"Consequently, the Prophet (SAAS) spoke against them for a month at each morning prayer. This began the practice of saying the qunūt; 26 previously we had not done so."

26. The word, used in the Qur'an, has associations of being humble and submissive to God, and also to stand up, or to remain standing. The term du'ū al-qunūt, the prayer of supplication or of standing, is given in Lane's Arabic-English Lexicon in Arabic and with an English translation, as follows, "O God, verily we beg for Thy aid to be obedient and to forsake disobedience, and we beg of Thee forgiveness of sins (and we believe in Thee, and we rely upon Thee) and we laud Thee well, and we will not be unthankful to Thee for Thy favour, and we cast off and forsake him who disobeys Thee: (O God Thee we worship. And to Thee we perform the divinely appointed act of prayer, and prostrate ourselves); and we are quick in working for Thee and in serving Thee; we hope for Thy mercy, and we dread Thy punishment; verily, Thy punishment overtakes the unbelievers."
Muslim related it from a hadith of Ḥammād b. Salama, from Thābit, from Anas in similar words.

Al-Bukhārī then stated, "Abd al-Aʿfāb b. Ḥammād related to us, quoting Yazīd b. Zurayʿ, quoting Saʿīd, from Qatāda, from Anas b. Ṣalāḥ, that Riḍ, Dhakwān, ʿUṣayya and Banū Liḥyān asked the Messenger of God (ṣaas) for assistance against an enemy and so he provided them the help of 70 of the anṣār. We used at that time to name them the al-gurrah; they would collect wood by day and pray by night. Eventually, when they were at Bpr ʿaṣāna the tribesmen killed them, having betrayed them. After this reached the Messenger of God (ṣaas), he said the qunūt prayers for a month, each morning saying prayers against these bedouin tribes of Riḍ, Dhakwān, ʿUṣayya and Banū Liḥyān." Anas stated, "And we would recite Qurʾān verses too, but these were later rescinded. These words were, 'Inform our people about us — that we have met our Lord. And He is pleased with us and has pleased us.'"

Al-Bukhārī went on, "Mūsā b. Ismāʿīl related to us, quoting Hamām, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣalāḥ, quoting Anas b. Ṣalāḥ, that the Messenger of God (ṣaas) sent out Ḥarām, the brother of Umm Sulaym, in charge of a party of 70 mounted men. The pagan chief ʿAmīr b. Ṭūfayl had proposed three choices to the Messenger of God (ṣaas). He had told him, 'You can have control over the bedouin, while I will control the townspeople. Or I could be appointed as your successor. Otherwise, I will do battle with you at the head of 2,000 men of Banū Ḥaṭṭafān.'

"But ʿAmīr contracted typhoid at the home of Umm So-and-So. He then said, 'Shall I suffer from a swelling like that of a she-camel in the home of a woman from the So-and-So family? Bring me my horse.' And subsequently he died on the back of his horse.

"Ḥarām, Umm Sulaym's brother, along with one man who was lame and another man of Banū So-and-So then went further on. Ḥarām told his companions, 'Stay close by me until I get near them; if they are peaceful, you'll be right there, but if they kill me, then you can go back to your comrades.'

"Ḥarām then went out to them and asked them, 'Will you let me deliver in peace a message to you from the Messenger of God (ṣaas)'?"

"He then began addressing them, but they signalled to a man who came up to him from behind and stabbed him. Ḥarām cried out, 'God is very great! I have succeeded, by the Lord of the kiʿba!'"

"The tribesmen then attacked and killed all Ḥarām's companions except for the man who was lame, and escaped up into the mountain. It was then that God revealed to us the verses, later rescinded, 'We have met our Lord. And He is pleased with us and has pleased us.'

"Each morning for the following 30 days the Prophet (ṣaas) spoke prayers against Riḍ, Dhakwān, Banū Liḥyān and ʿUṣayya, who had disobeyed God and His messenger.'"
Al-Bukhari also said that Hibbân related to him, quoting 'Abd Allâh, who said that Ma'âmîr informed him as follows, “Thumâma b. 'Abd Allâh b. Anas related to me that he heard Anas b. Mâlik say, 'When Ĥârâm b. Mîlân — who was Anas's uncle — was stabbed at al-Ma'âmînâ, he said, “Thus I do with my blood!” And he began wiping it all over his face and head. Then he said, “I have succeeded, by the Lord of the ka'bah!””

Al-Bukhari also recounted, from Ubâyda b. Ismâ'il, from Abû Usâma, from Hîshâm b. Urwa, who said, “My father told me as follows, ‘When the men were killed at Bi'r Ma'âmînâ and 'Amr b. Umayya al-Dâmî was taken prisoner, 'Amîr b. al-Ţufayl asked the father, pointing to a corpse, “Who is this?” ‘Amr replied, “This was 'Amîr b. Fuhayra. And after he was killed, I saw him raised up into the sky until I could actually see sky between him and the earth. He was then brought back down.” When news of them reached the Prophet (SAAS), he announced their death, saying, “Your comrades have been killed; they asked their Lord, ‘O God, inform our brothers about us, and of how we are pleased with You and You are pleased with us.’” And so it was that He had informed them (the Prophet (SAAS) and his Companions) about them. On that day Urwa b. Âsâb b. al-Sâlût, who was among them, was killed. And Urwa (b. al-Zubayr) was named after him, while Mundhir (b. al-Zubayr) was named after Mundhir b. 'Amr (also killed that day).’”

These, then are the accounts related by al-Bukhari on a line of transmission back to Urwa.

Al-Bayhaqi related this from a hadîth of Yahyâ b. Sa'îd, from Abû Usâma, from Hîshâm, from his father, from 'A'îsha. That account proceeds from the Hijra and relates at its conclusion what is told here by al-Bukhari. But God knows best.

Al-Wâqidi recounted it from Mu'sâb b. Thâbit, Abû al-Aswad, from Urwa. He related the story of 'Amîr b. Fuhayra, and how 'Amîr b. al-Ţufayl reported how he was raised up to heaven. His account tells that the person who killed him was Jabbâr b. Salmâ al-Kilâbî.

He stated, “And when the man pierced him with the spear, he exclaimed, ‘I have succeeded, by the Lord of the ka'bah!’

“Then Jabbâr asked, ‘What did he mean when he said, “I have succeeded?”’ People replied, ‘He meant with paradise.’ And so he then said, ‘He was right, by God!’ Thereafter Jabbâr accepted Islam, for that reason.”

In the Maghâzi, the military chronicle, of Mûsâ b. Uqba, Urwa is quoted as saying, “The body of 'Amir b. Fuhayra was not found; it is said that the angels hid it.”

Yûnûs (b. Bukayr) stated, quoting Ibn Ishaq, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained there — following Uhud, that is — for the rest of Shawwâl, through Dhû al-Qâ'da, Dhû al-Ĥijja and Muḥarram. Then, in Šâfâr, he sent out the men who died at Bi'r Ma'âmînî, four months following Uhud.”
He went on, "Ibn Isḥāq b. Yasār related to me, from al-Mughīrah b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. al-Ḥārith b. Hishām, and ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. Ḥazm, along with scholars other than these two men, as follows, ʿAbū Baraʿ ʿAṭīr b. Ṭāhir b. Jaʿfar, (known as) mulāḥib al-asimmā, "He who Toys with Spears", came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina, who explained Islam to him and invited him to accept it. But Abū Baraʿ neither did so nor refused, but said, "O Muḥammad, if you were to despatch some of your Companions to the people of Najd, inviting them to join you, I would hope they would respond positively to you."

"But the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, "But I would fear for them from the people of Najd."

"Abū Baraʿ replied that he would give them protection.

"And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) despatched al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr, brother of Banū ʿAṣṣida, (known as) al-muṣnīq li yamāt, "Eager for Death", with a party of 40 of his companions, some of the best of the Muslims. They included al-Ḥārith b. al-Ṣimma, Ḥarrān b. Ṭimān, brother of Banū ʿAdi b. al-Najjār, Urwa b. ʿAṣṣa b. al-Ṣalt al-Sulami, Nāfiʿ b. Budayl b. Warqaʿ al-Khuwāṣ, ʿAṭīr b. Fuhayra, the freed-man of Abū Bakr, along with other warriors of the Muslim elite.

"They travelled as far as the well at Maʿīna, between the territory of Banū ʿĀmir and the barrāʿ, "the lava field", of Banū Sulaym, where they halted. Having made camp, they sent out Ḥarām b. Milḥān with a letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), addressed to ʿAmr b. al-Ṭufayl. When Ḥarām reached him, ʿĀmir did not look at the document but attacked and killed the man. He then invited Banū ʿĀmir to attack, but they refused to do as he wanted, responding, "We'll not betray Abū Baraʿ; he has given them a pledge and his protection."

"ʿAmr b. al-Ṭufayl then invited the tribes of Banū Sulaym, ʿUṣayya, Ṭir, Dhakwān and al-Qāra, and they agreed to attack the Muslims. They came out against them by surprising and surrounding them while the Muslims were with their baggage. When they saw the enemy attacking, they drew their swords and fought them until all the Muslims were killed, except for Kaʿb b. Zayd, brother of Banū Dīnār b. al-Najjār. The left him there barely alive; he was picked up from among the dead and lived on until he was killed at the battle of al-khaṇḍaq.

"ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍamri and another Muslim, one of the anṣār, of Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf, were out grazing the camels and did not know of the death of their comrades until they saw vultures circling over their camp. They assumed something was wrong when they saw the birds and when they came in to see, they found them lying in their blood while the horsemen who had killed them were still there. The man of the anṣār asked ʿAmr b. Umayya what they should do; ʿAmr suggested they return to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), to give him the news. But the anṣār could not bring himself to leave the place where al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr had been killed, and he also did not want to be the one to inform the others of the bad news. He therefore fought the enemy until he was killed. ‘Amr was taken prisoner, but when he told them he was of Banū Muḍar, ʿAmir b. al-Ṭufayl released him, after cutting off his forelock. It is claimed that he let him go because of a pledge his mother had made.

“ʿAmr then left, travelling on till he reached al-Qarqara, before Qanāt; there he was met by two men of Banū ʿAmir, who made a halt at the shady place where he had stopped. The two ʿAmir men had made a pact of peace and protection with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), of which ʿAmr b. Umayya was unaware. When the two men dismounted, ʿAmr asked them who they were and they replied that they were of Banū ʿAmir. He left them alone until they were asleep and then he attacked and killed them, believing that by doing so he was taking revenge against their tribe for the attack they had made against the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“When ʿAmr b. Umayya reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), however, and told him the news, the latter told him, “You have killed two men for whom I must pay the bloodwit.” He then went on to comment, “This must be the work of Abū Baraʾ; I was reluctant and apprehensive about this.”

“When news of it reached Aba Baraʾ, he was very upset at how ʿAmir b. al-Ṭufayl had betrayed him, and at what had befallen the men of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) because of him and while under his own protection.

“Ḥassān b. Ṭhābit spoke the following verses about ʿAmir’s betrayal of Abū Baraʾ and to incite the latter’s tribe against ʿAmir,

"O tribe of Umm al-Banin, does it not distress you, fine men of Najd,
That ʿAmir has treated Abū Baraʾ with scorn in betraying him?
And making a mistake is not the same as acting deliberately.
Won’t you ask Rabīʿa, a man of deeds, ‘What things have you accomplished after I left you?
Your father, Abī Baraʾ, is a man of war, while your uncle Ḥakam b. Saʿd is a nobleman.’”»

Ibn Hishām stated, “The Umm al-Banin referred to was Abū Baraʾ’s mother; she was the daughter of ʿAmr b. ʿAmir b. Rabīʿa b. ʿAmir b. Ṣaʿṣaʿa.

“Rabīʿa b. ʿAmir b. Mālik attacked ʿAmir b. al-Ṭufayl and pierced him in the thigh, but not fatally, though he did fall from his horse. ʿAmir then said, ‘This is the work of Abū Baraʾ. If I die, I award my blood to my uncle, and he is not to be pursued for it (in revenge). If I live, I will later decide what to do.’”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba recounted from al-Zuhri in approximately the same words as those of Muhammad b. Iṣḥāq. He also stated that the leader of the Muslim party was al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr; he is also said to have been Marthad b. Abū Marthad.

Ḥassān b. Ṭhābit spoke the following verses eulogizing those killed at Biʿr Maṭʿūna; at least, that is what Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, may God be pleased with him. However, God knows best:
"For those killed at Ma‘ūna weep endless, copious tears.

For the Prophet’s cavalry who met their death, (God’s) fate.

Annihilation struck them because of men who broke their pledge in treachery.

Alas for Mundhir who passed away, who accepted his death with willing stoicism!

What a lot of fine men of ‘Amr’s people died then!"

THE EXPEDITION AGAINST BANU AL-NADIR.

It was about this expedition that God Almighty revealed sūrat al-Ḥashr (LIX). In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī there is a quotation from Ibn ‘Abbās that he used to refer to it as the (sūrat) Banū al-Nadīr.

Al-Bukhārī related from al-Zuhri, who quoted Urwa as saying, “The expedition against Banū al-Nadīr came six months after (the battle of) Badr, and before (the battle of) Uḥud.”

Ibn Abū Hāṭim, in his Tafsīr (Exegesis), traced this from his father, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ṣāliḥ, from al-Layth, from ‘Uqayl, back to al-Zuhri:

Hanbal b. Ishāq related similarly, from Hilal b. ‘Ala, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ja‘far al-Raqī, from Mu‘ṭirīf b. Māzīn al-Yamānī, from Mu‘āmmar, from al-Zuhri; he gave the date for the battle of Badr as the 17th of Ramaḍān, 2 AH.

He went on, “He attacked Banū al-Nadīr, then fought the battle of Uḥud, in Shawwāl, 3 AH. In Shawwāl of 4 AH he fought the battle of al-khandaq.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “Al-Zuhri used to say that it took place before the battle of Uḥud.”

He went on, “Others maintained that it occurred thereafter, and after the expedition to Bīr Ma‘ūna as well.”

I would comment that this was what Ibn Ishāq related, as stated above. He referred to it following his account of Bīr Ma‘ūna and after the return of ‘Amr b. Umayya and his killing of those two men of Banū ‘Āmir. (This occurred because) he was not aware of the pact they had with the Messenger of God (SAAS), this leading to the latter’s statement, “You have killed two men for whom I must pay the bloodwit.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went to Banū al-Nadīr to ask their help in paying for the bloodwit for the two men of Banū ‘Āmir who had been killed by ‘Amr b. Umayya; this was because of the pact of protection he had given the two men. There was, moreover, a pact and a treaty between Banū al-Nadīr and Banū ‘Āmir. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to them, they replied, ‘Yes, Abū al-Qāsim, we’ll help you as you wish.’

“But then some of them met secretly and concluded that they would never have a better opportunity to attack the Messenger of God (SAAS), since he was seated at the wall of one of their houses. They asked for a volunteer to climb up on to the house to drop a rock down on him so that they would be rid of him.

"'Amr b. Jaahsh b. Ka'ab volunteered to do this and climbed up to drop the rock as suggested. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had been accompanied by his Companions, who included Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Ali. He received information from heaven about what the enemy intended, so he got up and set off back to Medina. When his Companions tired of waiting for him, they set about looking for him and met a man arriving from Medina. When they asked him about the Prophet (SAAS), he replied, 'I saw him entering Medina.' The Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) then went to him and told him of the treachery Banû al-Nadr had planned against him."

Al-Waqidi stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth Muhammad b. Maslama to tell them (Banî al-Nadrî) to leave his territory and protection. But the hypocrites sent messages to them giving them their support, urging them to stay and promising them aid. This encouraged Banû al-Nadrî, and Huyayy b. Akhtab became adamant. They then sent word to the Messenger of God (SAAS) that they would not leave and warned him against breaking the agreements.

"It was then that the Prophet (SAAS) sent his forces out against them."

Al-Waqidi continued, "They kept them besieged for 15 days."

Ibn Ishâq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that preparations be made to go forth to war against them."

Ibn Hishâm stated, "He placed Ibn Umm Maktûm in command of Medina; this took place in Rabi' al-Awwal."

Ibn Ishâq went on, "He journeyed forth and besieged them for six days. It was then that the prohibition of wine came down. The enemy set up defences in their forts and the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that their date-palms be cut down and burned. They appealed to him, saying, 'Muhammad, you used to forbid causing destruction and criticized those who did so. Why are you cutting down and burning our date-palms?'

Ibn Ishâq went on, "A group of Banî 'Awf b. al-Khazraj, including 'Abd Allah b. Ubayy, Wadîa, Malik, Suwayd and Dâsî, had advised Banû al-Nadrî as follows: 'If you stay firm and resist, we will not give up on you. If you fight, we'll fight along with you, and if you are expelled, we will leave with you.' And so Banû al-Nadrî waited for their help, but they did nothing. And so God cast fear into Banû al-Nadrî, and they asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to evacuate them and to spare their blood, allowing them to depart with whatever of their belongings they could transport, except for their armour."

Al-'Awfî quoted Ibn 'Abbâs as saying, "He gave one camel to each three persons, along with a baggage carrier."

Al-Bayhaqî related this, quoting Ya'qûb b. Muhammad, from al-Zuhri, from Ibrâhîm b. Ja'far b. Ma'mûd b. Muhammad b. Maslama, from his father and his grandfather, from Muḥammad b. Maslama, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had dispatched him to Banū al-Ｎaḍīr with instructions to delay their withdrawal for three days.

Al-Bayhaqi also related, as did others, that they had debts outstanding to them that were due. And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had said, "Hurry up and pay them!"

There is dispute over the veracity of this. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "They therefore loaded their belongings on their camels to the extent they could bear. Some of their men tore down their houses and removed the door lintels which they mounted on the backs of their camels and took away. Some of them left for Khaybar, while some went to Syria. Among their leaders who went to Khaybar were Sallām b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq, Kināna b. al-Rabi b. Abū al-Huqayq, and Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab. When they arrived there the people of Khaybar accepted their control."

"Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that it was related to him that they were received by women and young men and gifts, with tambourines, flutes and girls walking behind them singing boldly and with pride; nothing similar is related of any tribe of people in their era.

"They left their properties for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); these consisted of their palm trees and their farms. These became his personal property to dispose of as he wished. He divided them up among those who first migrated with him, to the exclusion of the ānṣār, except for Sahl b. Ḥanif and Abū Dujānā. These both complained of poverty and so he gave to them."

Some authorities add al-Ḥarith b. al-Ṣimma to these two men. Al-Suhaylī related this.

Ibn Ishāq went on, "Only two men of Banū al-Ｎaḍīr accepted Islam: Yāmīn b. 'Umayr b. Ka'b, the cousin of 'Amr b. Jaḥāsh, and Abū Sa'd b. Wahb; these men retained their properties.

"A member of Yāmīn's family related to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked Yāmīn, 'Did you see how your cousin treated me, and what he intended to do to me?' Yāmīn therefore gave a fee to a man to kill 'Amr b. Jaḥāsh, God damn him, and he did so."

Ibn Ishāq continued, "God revealed sūrat al-Ḥāshr in its entirety about them, telling in it of the vengeance he took on them, how He empowered His messenger over them and what He did to them."

Ibn Ishāq then detailed this. We have spoken of this at length and in clarity in our Tafsīr (Exegesis); and to God be all praise.

God Almighty stated, "All in the heavens and all on earth declare God's glory; He is the Almighty and All-wise. He it is who drew forth from their homes for the first deportation those people of the scriptures who disbelieved. You did not think they would leave; and they thought that their forts would protect them from God. But God came at them from where they did not expect, casting fear into them. They demolished their houses with their own hands and with those of the believers. Consider this, you who have eyes! Had God not decreed for them that they should leave, He would have punished them severely on earth; and in the hereafter, they shall have the torture of hellfire. That is because they opposed God and His messenger. And for those who oppose God, God shall be severe in His punishment. Whatever palm trees you might cut down or leave standing over their roots shall be by God's permission, so that He may humiliate the evil-doers” (ṣūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.1-5).

God Almighty, may He be praised, declared His own glory and related how all creatures, high and low, glorify Him. He stated that He is All-Powerful, and unassailable, His greatness and majesty insurmountable, and that He is All-Wise in all He has created and in all He has planned and purposed. It is from all this that stem the empowerment, management and effectiveness (He gave) to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and to the believers who serve Him, in their victory over their enemies the Jews who disobedied God and His messenger and opposed His messenger and His law, all of which was the cause leading to conflict with them, as told above, until he with (God's) support encompassed them with fear and dread for a month. In addition, he imprisoned them by besieging them with his forces and his own noble self for six days. Their terror put them to total confusion, so that they ultimately cooperated and made peace to spare their blood, removing of their property what their mounts would carry. This was conditional upon their not bearing away any of their weapons, a shameful and humiliating circumstance. They proceeded, moreover, to demolish their homes, by their own hands and by those of the believers. Consider this, you who have eyes to see!

The Almighty then stated that if they had not suffered withdrawal and the remove into exile from the protection of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and from Medina, then He would have afflicted them with far worse punishment, here on earth, namely execution, along with what He had in store for them in the after-life, namely the painful punishment He has decreed for them.

The Almighty went on to refer to the wisdom that was evident in the burning of their palm trees and their abandonment of the rest of their property, all of this being palatable. He stated, “Whatever palm trees you might cut down ...” The word used here, līna, “palm trees”, refers to palms giving much fruit. And He went on, “... or leave standing over their roots shall be by God's permission.” (This implies) the following, that all of this was permitted by law and by authority, and that they should not object to it but (recognize) that it was all for their own good, not some iniquity, as some evil-minded men have said. It was, on the contrary, an expression of power, and purposed the disgrace of the shameless unbelievers.

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim both related from Qutayba, from al-Layth, from Naṣr, from Ibn Umār, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) burned and cut down the date-palms of Banū al-Naḍīr, this being at al-Buwayra, and so God revealed, “Whatever palm trees you might cut down or leave standing over their roots shall be by God’s permission, and so that He may humiliate the evil-doers” (ṣūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.5).

Al-Bukhārī quotes from Juwayriyya b. Asma, from Nafi, from Ibn Umar, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) cut down and burned the date-palms of Banū al-Nāḍīr at al-Buwayra and that on that occasion Hassān b. Thābit spoke the verses,

“It left unmoved the nobles of Banū Lu‘ayy that there was a terrible fire at al-Buwayra.”

In response to this Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥārith composed the following, “May God bless that action and set aflame all its (Medina’s) parts.

You will learn which of us it is who gains thereby, and which of our lands it will harm.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ka’b b. Malik recited, in reference to the withdrawal of Banū al-Nāḍīr and the killing of Ka’b b. al-Ashraf, (though) God knows best (whether the verses are authentic),

“The rabbis were dishonoured by their treachery; thus it is that the vicissitudes of fate revolve.

This was because they disbelieved in a great Lord whose orders are of great import.

They were brought understanding and knowledge combined, and the warner came to them from God.

A truthful warner, who brought a book and verses that were plain and illuminating.

But they said, “You did not bring truth, and you are more worthy of being denied than are we.”

He said, “Not so; I tell the truth. Those who are understanding and knowledgeable believe me.”

Those who follow him will be guided to all that is true; those who disbelieve in him will be shamed for disbelief.

When they were made to drink of deceit and disbelief, and rejection of him turned them from the truth

God made the Prophet see accurately, and God deals wisely and does not deceive.

He aided him and empowered him over them; He was his helper, a fine helper.

Of them, Ka’b was left there prostrate, and al-Nāḍīr were humbled after his downfall,

There on his two hands; flashing swords in our hands overwhelmed him
By God’s command, when he sent Ka‘b’s brother secretly to go by night to Ka‘b.

He tricked him, defeating him by guile; and Maḥmūd is brave and trustworthy.

Those of Banū al-Naḍīr were in a state of evil; the Destroyer ruined them for the crimes they committed.

That morning when the Messenger of God came slowly towards them, he being well aware of them.

Ghassān, the defenders, were helping him against his enemies, as he would aid them.

He told them, “Peace – or woe to you!” But they rejected him; and deceit and corruption allied with them.

So they tasted the outcome of their actions in distress, each three of them having one camel.

They were expelled and headed for Qaynuqā‘, abandoning their homes and date-palms.”

Ibn Ishāq also gives the response made by the Jew Sammāl; we have intentionally omitted it.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The following verses of Ibn Luqaym al-‘Absī were also spoken about Banū al-Naḍīr. It is also said that they were spoken by Qays b. Bahr b. Ṭarf al-Ashja‘ī, ‘May my people be a ransom for that man who will never die who resettled the Jews in territories not their own.

They siesta in embers of thorn trees, having exchanged uplands where young date-palms sprouted.

If my view about Muḥammad is correct, you will see his cavalry between al-Ṣallā and Mt. Yaramyam, Directing them towards ‘Amr b. Buhtha. They are an enemy; and an honest tribe is unlike one that is evil.

On the horses are heroes as they race on to battle, waving their straight wooden lances.

And each of their fine thin-bladed swords inherited from the eras of ‘Ād and Jurhum.

Who will deliver to Quraysh a message from me? Shall anyone succeed them in being so honoured,

For the fact – know this well – that their brother Muḥammad, is of the line of those between al-Ḥaǧūn and Zamzam?

If you serve him in truth, you will prosper and you will rise from below to the very heights.

He is a prophet, with mercy ordained him by God; do not ask of him anything undisclosed (by God) or improper.
By my life, there was a lesson for you, Quraysh, in what happened at Badr, and at the crowded well.

That morning he came among the Khazrajis, heading for you in obedience to God, the Powerful and Much-Honoured.

Being helped by the holy spirit, striking his enemies, a true messenger with knowledge from the All-Merciful.

A messenger from the All-Merciful reciting His Book, not having hesitated.

I see his authority rising everywhere, in accord with a command decreed by God.'"

Ibn Ishaq went on to quote the following verses from ‘Ali b. Abu Ṭalib. Ibn Hishām, however, stated, "These were spoken by a Muslim man, but I do not know anyone who attributes them to ‘Ali,

'I know, and whoever judges well does know, and I am truly sure and do not waver from

The specific words that came from God, the Kind and the Kindest of all,

In messages that are studied by the believers and in which he selected Ahmad, the One Chosen.

And so Ahmad was honoured among us, honoured in status and role.

You who threaten him foolishly, though he has done no wrong or violence,

Are you not fearful of imminent punishment? And those who are secure with God are not like those afraid!

And afraid of falling beneath his swords, felled like Ka'b Abū al-Ashraf

That day when God saw his tyranny as he disobeyed like a refractory camel?

And Gabriel kindly brought down revelation about his death to His servant.

And so the Messenger secretly sent an envoy to him with a sharp blade.

Eyes then began flowing in lament for him, when news of Ka'b’s death was announced.

They asked, “Ahmed, leave us awhile, for we have not yet recovered from our mourning.”

He did leave them, then said, “Go away, in banishment, despite your wishes.”

He despatched al-Naḍīr into exile, though they had enjoyed comfortable homes, Away to Adhri'āt, riding double on their mounts, any emaciated old camels they could find.”

We have intentionally also omitted the response to these verses from the Jew Sammāl.

God Almighty then went on to refer to the awarding of al-fay’\(^{27}\) and to the fact that God had judged that the property of Banū al-Naḍīr should go to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He therefore gave him possession of it and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) disposed of it as God Almighty wished. It is similarly established in both Sahih collections, from the Commander of the Believers, ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, who said, “The properties of Banū al-Naḍīr were awarded by God to His messenger from whatever the Muslim forces, mounted on horse or camel, had not themselves taken.” These were specifically for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He would set aside his family’s expenses for a year and then whatever riding beast or weapons remained he would treat as military supplies to be used in the cause of God, the Almighty and Glorious.

The Almighty then made clear His judgement about the al-fay’, to the effect that it was for the muhājirīn and the ansār as well as for their dependants in whatever ways and manner was customary to them. (God stated) “… and for those close in kin, orphans, the needy, wayfarers, so that it not be something taken in turns by those of you who are wealthy. Whatever the Messenger gives you, you should take. And from whatever he forbids you, keep away. And fear God; God is severe in punishing” (ṣūrat al-Hashr; LIx, v.7).

Imām ʿAḥmad stated, “‘Ārim and ‘Affān quoted Muṭʿamir as having related to them both, ‘I heard my father say, ‘Anas h. Mālik related to us, from the Prophet (ṢAAS), that a man might donate to him his palms, or whatever else God might wish, up to when Qurayza and al-Naḍīr were conquered for him; thereafter he began giving it back.’’”

Muṭʿamir’s father went on, “My family told me to go to the Prophet (ṢAAS), and to ask him back for all or part of what they had given. But the Prophet (ṢAAS) had given some of the trees to Umm Ayman – or he had done whatever it was that God had wanted.”

He went on, “So I asked the Prophet (ṢAAS), and he gave me some of them.”

Then Umm Ayman came up angrily, pulled my clothing up around my neck and began saying, ‘No! By the One and Only God, I won’t give them to you! He gave them to me!’ – or some such comments. The Prophet (ṢAAS) then said, ‘But you can have so-and-such.’ She responded, ‘No! By God!’ He repeated, ‘Then I’ll give you so-and-such.’ ‘No! By God!’ she replied. “Then I’ll give you so-and-such!’ he offered until he had given her in full. I think he must have given her ten times as much as she had formerly owned.”

\(^{27}\) The word comes from a verb meaning “to restore”, “to give back”. It refers here to a category of property acquired from an enemy who has not engaged in actual warfare but has acknowledged Muslim supremacy.

\(^{28}\) Presumably some of the date-palms referred to above.
This is derived in similar terms in various lines of transmission from Mu'tamir.

God Almighty then stated that blame was due the hypocrites who were secretly sympathetic towards Banū al-Naḍir, as we have mentioned above, promising them victory, though none came. In fact they abandoned them completely, having misled them about themselves. And so God stated, "(Have you not) seen those who were hypocritical, telling their disbelieving brethren from among the people of the scriptures, 'If you are driven out, we will go forth with you. We will never obey anyone concerning you. If you are attacked, we will certainly assist you.' But God bears witness that they are liars. If they were expelled, these people would not leave with them. If they were attacked, these would not help them. Even if they did help them, they would then turn their backs. Then they will not be helped."

The Almighty condemned them for their cowardice, ignorance and foolishness. He then drew an ugly and awful comparison regarding them and Satan, "... who says to mankind, 'Disbelieve!' But when they disbelieve, he (Satan) tells them, 'I am innocent of (responsibility for) you! I fear God, the Lord of the worlds.' And the outcome for them both is to enter hell-fire, to live therein forever. That is the reward of the unjust" (sūrat al-Hashr; LIX, v.16, 17).

The Story of 'Amr b. Su'da al-Qurashi.

He passed by the homes of Banū al-Naḍir and found them laid to waste and completely abandoned. The fact that Banū al-Naḍir had been of higher status than (his own) Banū Qurayza stimulated his interest in Islam and he brought forth a description of the Messenger of God (SAAS), from the Old Testament.

Al-Waqqidi quoted Ibrāhīm b. Ja'far as stating that his father said, "When Banū al-Naḍir left Medina, 'Amr b. Su'da arrived and when he viewed their houses and saw their destruction, he went into deep thought. When he returned to Banū Qurayza, he found them assembled in the temple. He blew on their horn and when they had gathered together, al-Zubayr b. Bāṭā asked him, 'Abū Sa'id, where were you? You've never been away before this.' 'Amr used never to leave the temple and absolutely worshipped Judaism.

"He replied, 'Today, I have seen things that should be a lesson for us. I have seen our brothers' houses empty that before were places of honour, comfort, great virtue, prestige and intellectualty. They have abandoned their possessions, given them away to others, and gone into humiliating exile. By the Torah, the fact is that God never before gave such power to a people with whom He was dissatisfied. Previously, he had been in dispute with Ibn al-Ashraf, their respected leader, and then had kept him secure in his house. He was also at odds with their chief, Ibn Sunayna, and with Banū Qaynuqā'. These people, of the greatest prestige among the Jews, he expelled, even though they were possessed of much arms and equipment and support. Then he besieged them, taking prisoner any one of them who emerged. He then addressed them, telling them he would leave them alone if they moved out of Medina. ‘My people, you have seen what you have seen! Obey me! Come, let us follow Muhammad! You well know, by God, that he is a prophet; Ibn al-Hayyibn Abī ‘Umayr and Ibn Ḥirāsh foretold us of him, these being the most learned of Jews. They expected him to come and told us to follow him. They came to us from Jerusalem and ordered us to deliver him their greetings. They then died in their faith, and we buried them in this piece of land of ours.’

‘His people were silent at this, not one of them speaking. He then repeated something similar and warned them of warfare, capture and exile. Al-Zubayr b. Bāṭā then said, ‘By the Torah, I have read the description of him in Bāṭā’s book, the Torah that was revealed to Moses, though it is not in the works we instituted.’

‘Ka’b b. Asad then asked him, ‘Well, what’s preventing you, Abī ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, from following him?’ ‘You, Ka’b, are preventing me,’ he replied. ‘Why so?’ Ka’b asked. ‘I have never, I swear by the Torah, come between you and him.’

‘Al-Zubayr insisted, ‘On the contrary, you are the custodian of our pacts and pledges; if you followed him, so would we. If you refused, so will we.’

‘At this ‘Amr b. Su’dā approached Ka’b and referred to discussion between them on that. Eventually, ‘Amr stated, ‘I’ve said all I’m going to about him; I would not feel comfortable being his follower.’”

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

Al-Bayhaqi related this in his Dalāʾil (The Signs). Ibn Ishāq, so far as I have seen, related it through Hishām, from Ziyād, to the effect that it happened in Jumādā al-Uwāl of the year 2 AH, after the battle of al-khandaq, “the ditch”, and after the expedition against Banū Qurayza. This is similar to the account given by al-Bayhaqi. But God knows best.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi stated, “Abū ʿAbd Allāh, the ḥāfīz, related to us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās al-ʾAṣāmm, quoting Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār and others, as follows: ‘After Khubayb and his companions had been struck down, the Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to revenge them by making a surprise attack against Banū Liḥyān. He took the route to Syria to give the impression that he was not attacking them, then headed for their territory. But he found that they had taken the precaution of moving into defensive positions in the mountain heights. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “If we go on down to Usfān, Quraysh will think we’re going on to Mecca.” And so he proceeded on with 200 men and encamped at Usfān. He then sent on two horsemen to Kurāʾ al-Ghamīm; they then left there.’”
Abū ʿAyyāsh al-Zurqī narrated that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa) performed the ṣalāt al-khawf at Ḫusfān.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting al-Thawrī, from Mansūr, from Mughīd, from Ibn ʿAyyāsh, who said, ‘We were with the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa), at Ḫusfān. The unbelievers met us, under the command of Khalīd b. al-Walīd. They were positioned between us and the qibla. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa) led the noon prayer and the enemy told themselves, ‘In the position they were in we could have taken them unawares.’ They then observed, ‘They have a prayer approaching that is more dear to them than their children or themselves.’

‘But between the noon and the early evening prayer Gabriel brought down the verse, ‘When you are among them and lead the prayer for them’ (ṣūrat al-Nisā’; IV, v.102).

‘Then time for prayer arrived and the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa) ordered his men to take up their weapons. We lined up in two rows behind him. He then performed a rakʿa, and we all did the same. After that he stood upright and we all did the same. He then made the prostration with the line next to him, while the others stood guarding them. When these had made their prostrations and stood up again, the others prostrated in their place. Then those others occupied the lines of the former who exchanged places with them. Thereafter, he performed one rukuʿ and they all did so too, after which he stood up, as did all of them. Following that, the next row prostrated while the others remained standing guarding them. When they sat, the others did so too, then they prostrated. He then delivered the salām greeting to them, after which he left.

‘The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa) performed the prayer this way twice — once at Ḫusfān and again in the territory of Banū Sulaym.’” Aḥmad related this from Ghundar, from Shuʿba, from Mansūr in similar terms.

Abū Dāūd related it from Saʿīd b. Mansūr, from Jarīr b. ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd; al-Nasāʾī related it from al-Fallās, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿAbd al-Ṣamād, from Muhammad b. al-Muthānā and Bundār, from Ghundar, from Shuʿba, all three deriving it from Mansūr.

This chain of authorities is in accord with the criteria of both saḥīḥ collections; (yet) neither of them included it.

However, Muslim related through Abū Khaythama Zuhayr b. Muʿāwiya, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said, ‘We went forth on an expedition with the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣa), against a tribe from Juhaynam. They engaged in a fierce battle. When he (the Prophet (ṣaṣṣa)) led the noon prayer, the unbelievers said, ‘If we had attacked them (then) we would have decimated them!’

29. A prayer performed in turn by various contingents of Muslim forces who are about to do battle with an enemy confronting them; those not praying protect those engaging in prayer against the possibility of a surprise attack.
Gabriel then informed the Messenger of God (SAAS) of this and he said, ‘They said, “A prayer is coming for them that is dearer to them than their children.”’ The hadith is then recounted in similar words as above.

Abū Dā'ud al-Ṭayālisi stated, “Hishām related to us, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the noon prayers among his Companions at Nakhl. The polytheists observed this, then said, “Leave them alone; they have a prayer coming after this one that is dearer to them than their children.”’

Gabriel then made a revelation to the Messenger of God (SAAS), informing him of this comment. When, therefore, he led the evening prayer he lined up his men in two rows with himself standing in front of them and the enemy out in front of him. He spoke the words Allāhu Akbar! “God is most Great”, and all his men said the same. Then they all performed a rak'a. After that those in front performed the prostration, while the rest remained standing. When they brought their heads up, the others made their prostration. Then that group went forward, while the next group stayed back. They all then proclaimed the takbir and performed their bows. Thereafter the ones next to him made their prostrations while the others stood, and when they raised their heads the others prostrated.’

Al-Bukhārī testified to this in his sahīh collection, giving this account of Hishām from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “'Abd al-Samad related to us, from Sa‘īd b. 'Ubayd al-Hunāfī, quoting 'Abd Allāh b. Shaqīq, quoting Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) made a halt between Dajnān and Usfān and that the polytheists commented, ‘They have a prayer to come that is dearer to them than their sons and daughters—the evening prayer, that is. Prepare to have everyone attack them all together (then).’

‘But Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him to divide up his men into two groups; some would perform the prayer while the others would stand at the ready behind them. He told them to be careful and to have their weapons prepared. The troops would perform a single rak'a each, in groups in sequence with the Messenger of God (SAAS), while he would perform two.’

Al-Tirmidḥi and al-Nasāʿī related this from an account of 'Abd al-Ṣamad. Al-Tirmidḥi categorized the tradition as ḥasan sahīh, “good and authentic”.

I comment that for Abū Hurayra to have witnessed this, it must have happened after Khaybar. Otherwise it would have to be considered of the mursalāt al-saḥāba. This categorization does not diminish the authority of such a hadith in the view of most. But God knows best.

30. That is, accounts attributed to Companions that, because of possible gaps in the lines of transmission or the reputation of the transmitters, do not meet the full criteria of ahādīth that can be viewed as sahīh.
In the text of the hadith of Jābir in the works of either Muslim or Abū Dāūd al-Ṭayālīsī there is no reference to ʿUsfān, nor to Khālid b. al-Walīd. However, it is apparent that they are one and the same.

The question remains as to whether the expedition to ʿUsfān was before or after the battle of al-khandaq, "the ditch". Some scholars, including al-Shāfīʿī, claim that the ṣalāt al-khawf was instituted only following that battle, on the basis that they deferred holding the prayer that day because of the fighting. But if practice of the ṣalāt al-khawf had been in force at that time, they would have performed it and not postponed it. Some scholars of the military engagements therefore maintain that the expedition against Banū Liḥyān, during which the ṣalāt al-khawf was said at ʿUsfān, took place after the expedition against Banū Qurayṣa.

Al-Wāqidi has a line of transmission back to Khalīd b. al-Walīd, whom he quotes as saying, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth to al-Ḥudaybiyya, I met him at Usfān. I formed (my forces) before him and blocked his way. He performed the al-zuhr prayer with his men there in front of us. We were about to attack him, but could not make up our minds to do so. God then made him aware of what we had been contemplating. And so he said the ṣalāt al-khawf with his Companions at the al-ṣuhr prayers."

The ʿumrah of al-Ḥudaybiyya took place in Dhū al-Qaʿda of 6 AH, after the battle of al-khandaq and the expedition against Banū Qurayṣa, as will be related hereafter.

The text of the account of Abū ʿAyyāsh al-Zarqāʾi requires that the verse relating to the ṣalāt al-khawf was revealed during this expedition, at the fighting at Usfān. This in turn necessitates that it was the first time he prayed the ṣalāt al-khawf. But God knows best.

We will, if God Almighty wills it, relate the manner in which the ṣalāt al-khawf was prayed and the various accounts about it in our work al-Aḥkām al-Kabīr; and it is in God we trust and have confidence.

THE EXPEDITION TO DHĀT AL-RIQĀʾ.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed in Medina following the expedition against Banū al-Naḍir for the two months of Rabīʿ al-Awwal and Rabīʿ al-Thānī, and also for part of Jumāda. He then sent forces into Najd against Banū Muḥārib and Banū Thaʿlabā of Ḥaṭṭāfān. He placed Abū Dharr in command of Medina."

Ibn Hishām stated, "It is also said that he appointed ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān in command there."

Ibn Ishaq went on, "He then went forth as far as Nakhl, this being on the expedition to Dhāt al-Riqāʾ."

31. The word riqāʾ, pl. riqāʾ, means a piece of land, paper or cloth.
Ibn Hishām commented, "(It is so named) because they patched up their banners there. Others say it is so named because there was a tree there known as Dhāt al-Riqā'.

Al-Wāqīḍī stated that it was named after a mountain there that had patches of red, black and white.

In the ḥadīth of Ābu Mūsā it is said that it was so named because of the rags they tied to their feet on account of the excessive heat.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "There he encountered a force of Ghatafān. The forces came close together without engaging in battle, each side being wary of the other; then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed the salāt al-khawf prayer."

For his account here of the salāt al-khawf prayer, Ibn Hishām relies upon one line of transmission from ʿAbd al-Wārith b. Saʿīd al-Tannūrī, from Yūnus b. ʿUbayd, from al-Ḥasan, from Jabir b. ʿAbd Allāh, and on another from ʿAbd al-Wārith, from Ayyūb, from Ābū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, and on a third from ʿAbd al-Wārith, from Ayyūb, from Nāṣr, from Ibn ʿUmar. However, in these three lines he makes no reference to either the expedition to Najd or to that to Dhāt al-Riqā'. Nor did he turn attention to any (particular) time or place.

There is, moreover, dispute over whether or not the expedition to Dhāt al-Riqā', which was in Najd and against Banū Muḥārīb and Banū Thaqābā b. Ghaṭafān, came before the battle of al-khandaq.

Al-Bukhārī took the position that that took place after the expedition against Khaybar. As evidence for that, he refers to Ābū Mūsā al-Ashʿārī's presence there, as will be shown. His arrival occurred only during the nights of the Khaybar campaign, in the company of Jaʿfār and his men. The same is true of Ābū Hurayra. He stated, "I prayed the salāt al-khawf in the presence of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), at the expedition to Najd."

Evidence that it occurred after the battle of al-khandaq is that Ibn ʿUmar was first authorized by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to participate in the fighting at that battle. It is established of him (Ibn ʿUmar) in the saḥīḥ collection that he stated, "I participated in a military expedition with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) before that to Najd during which he prayed the salāt al-khawf."

Also there is al-Wāqīḍī's statement, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth to Dhāt al-Riqā' with a force of 400 (it is also said 700) of his Companions on Saturday, ten days before the end of al-Muḥarram, 5 AH." But there is dispute over this.

Moreover, there is no escaping the fact that the salāt al-khawf was only instituted after the battle of al-khandaq because that battle took place in Shawwāl of 5 AH, as is widely known (though some date it as in Shawwāl of 4 AH), this being substantiated by the gist of the ḥadīth from Ibn ʿUmar. However, the ḥadīth of Ābū Mūsā and that of Ābū Hurayra do not (suggest this).
The Story of Ghawrath b. al-Ḥarīth.

Regarding this expedition, Ibn Ishāq stated, "'Amr b. Ubayd related to me, from al-Ḥasan, from Jābir ibn ʿAbd Allāh, that a man of Banū Muhārib named Ghawrath said to his tribe of Ghaṭafān and Muhārib, 'Shall I kill Muḥammad for you?' 'Yes indeed! And how will you kill him?' 'I'll assassinate him,' he replied.

"So he went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while he was seated with his sword in his lap. Ghawrath asked him, 'Muḥammad, could I see that sword of yours?' 'Yes.' He took it and began to raise it to strike, but God prevented him. He asked, 'Muḥammad, don't you fear me?' 'No,' he replied. 'What should I fear from you?' 'You're not afraid of me even though I have a sword in my hands?' 'No; God is protecting me from you.'

"Ghawrath then returned the sword to him. Thereafter, God, Great and Glorious is He, revealed the verse, 'O you who believe, remember God's favour to you when a people intended to lay hands on you but He turned their hands away from you. Fear God, let believers place their reliance upon God!"' (sūrat al-Māʿūdah; V, v.11).

Ibn Ishāq went on, "Yazīd b. Rūmān related to me, however, that this verse was revealed about 'Amr b. Jahāhsh, brother of Banū al-Naḍīr, and what he had intended.'

It is thus that Ibn Ishāq related the story of this Ghawrath, from 'Amr b. Ubayd al-Qadārī, the leader of the misled. He, although not deliberately engaging in falsehood in his hadīth accounts is one of those who should not be quoted as a source because of his innovations and support for them.

This hadīth is firmly established in both saḥīḥ collections from other sources than him, thanks be to God!

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī recounted here a variety of lines of transmission for this hadīth from a number of places. It is established in both saḥīḥ collections from a hadīth of al-Zuhrī, from Sīnān b. Abū Sīnān, and Abū Salama from Jābir, that he accompanied the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the expedition to Najd. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was on the way home, the time for the afternoon rest came when they were in a valley with many thorn trees. The force divided up as the men sought the shade of the trees. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stopped in the shade of a tree on which he hung up his sword.

Jābir said, "And so we slept. Then suddenly, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called out to us; we responded and found that there was a bedouin seated near him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, 'This fellow unsheathed my sword while I was asleep. I awoke to find him brandishing it in his hand. He then asked me, 'Who is there to protect you from me?' I replied, 'God.' He then sheathed the sword and sat down.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did not punish the man for having done this."
Muslim also related this, from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from ʿAffān, from Abān, from Yahyā b. Abū Kathīr, from Abū Salama, from Jābir, who said, “We advanced with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and reached Dhāt al-Riqaʿ. Whenever we came across a shade-giving tree we would reserve it for the Messenger of God (SAAS). (We did so now) and one of the polytheists came over to him while his sword was hanging on a tree. The man took the sword, unsheathed it, then asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘Do you fear me?’ ‘No,’ he replied. ‘Who is to protect you from me?’ ‘God protects me from you,’ he answered. Then the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) intimidated the man and he sheathed the sword and hung it up again.”

He went on, “Then the call for prayer was made. He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) prayed two rakʿas with one group, and they went aside while he prayed two rakʿas with the next group. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed four rakʿas, while the rest prayed two.”

Al-Bukhārī also derived this report with absolute certainty from Abān.

Al-Bukhārī stated, quoting Musaddad, from Abū ʿAwāna, from Abū Bishr, that the name of the man was Ghawrāt b. al-Ḥārith.

Al-Bayhaqī drew his account through Abū ʿAwāna, from Abū Bishr, from Sulaymān b. Qays, from Jābir, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) engaged Muhārib and Ghaṭafān in battle at Nakhl. The enemy detected a deficiency in the Muslim defences, and sent through one of their men, Ghaṭarāt b. al-Ḥārith, who went and stood with his sword right over the head of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Ghaṭarāt asked him, ‘Who is there to defend you from me?’ ‘God,’ he replied. And the sword fell from the man’s grasp. The Messenger of God (SAAS) picked up the sword and asked him, ‘And who protects you from me?’ ‘Be compassionate!’ ‘Do you testify that there is no god but God?’ he asked. ‘No’, Ghaṭarāt replied, ‘but I will give you my word that I’ll not oppose you nor assist any others who do.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) released him, and when Ghaṭarāt returned to his men, he commented, ‘I come to you from the very best of men!’”

Al-Bayhaqī then went on to tell of the ṣalāt al-khawf and that four rakʿas were performed, two with each group.

Al-Bayhaqī related the methods of performing the ṣalāt al-khawf at Dhāt al-Riqaʿ on lines of transmission from Ṣāliḥ b. Khawwāt b. Juhayr, from Sahl b. Abū Ḥathma, along with a ḥadīth of al-Zuhri, from Salim, from his father, concerning the ṣalāt al-khawf in Najd. This is given in my Kitāb al-Ahkām. But God knows best.

The Story of the man whose wife was killed on this Expedition.

Muḥammad b. ʿIshaq stated, “My uncle ʿṢadaQA b. Yāsār related to me, from ʿUqayl b. Jābir, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the expedition to Dhāt al-Riqaʿ near Nakhl and one of our men killed the wife of a polytheist. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had left to return home, her husband, who had been away, came back. When told the news, he swore he would never rest till he had taken blood revenge against Muhammad’s men.

“So he followed the tracks of the Messenger of God (SAAS), who when he had made camp had asked, “Who will stand guard for us tonight?” A muhajiri and an ansari each volunteered and he told them to take up position at the entrance to the mouth of the valley. The two men were 'Ammār b. Yāsir and 'Abbād b. Bishr. When they reached the mouth of the valley, the ansari asked the muhajiri, “Which part of the watch do you want me to take care of, the first or the last?” “You take the first watch,” the muhajiri told him and settled down to sleep, while the ansari prayed.

“When the polytheist arrived and saw the watchman’s form, he realized that he was on guard and shot an arrow at him which stuck in him. The ansari pulled out the arrow, laid it down and stood his guard, standing there in prayer. The polytheist then shot again and struck his guard again removed it, laid it down and went on praying. A third time the polytheist struck him, and once more he withdrew it and put it down, continuing his prayer with a bow and a prostration. He then aroused his companion, saying, “Remain seated; I’ve been hit.”

“At this, his companion arose and when the polytheist saw both, he knew that they were on guard against him, and so he fled.

“When the muhajiri saw that the ansari was bleeding, he exclaimed, “For God’s sake, why did you not awaken me when he first struck you?”

“The ansari replied, “I was reciting a sura (of the Qurān) and did not want to break it off before I had completed it. When he continued shooting, I finished the prostration, then awoke you. I swear by God, that unless it meant losing a position the Messenger of God (SAAS) had ordered me to hold, he could have killed me before I would have interrupted a recitation before completing it!””

Ibn Ishāq related it thus in reference to the military expeditions. Abū Da'ud recounted it from Abū Tawba, from 'Abd Allāh b. Mubārak, from Ibn Ishāq.

Al-Waqqātī related the account of the salat al-khawf in full from 'Abd Allāh al-'Umari, from his brother 'Ubayd Allāh, from al-Qāsim b. Mūhammad, from Ṣāliḥ b. al-Khawwāt, from his father, as follows: “The Messenger of God (SAAS) had attacked some women in their (the enemy’s) homes; among the prisoners taken was an attractive woman whose husband loved her. He swore an oath that he would pursue Mūhammad and not return until he had either taken blood revenge for her or had rescued her.”

Al-Waqqātī then proceeds to recount the incident much as had Mūhammad b. Ishāq.

Al-Waqqātī stated, “Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh used to say, ‘I was once with the Messenger of God (SAAS), when one of his Companions brought in a chick. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was looking at it when in came the chick’s parents (or one of them) and threw themselves down before the man who had taken it. I saw that everyone present was amazed at this. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘So you’re surprised that this bird, whose chick you took, is bowing to offer itself to gain mercy for its chick? I swear by God, your god is more compassionate for you than this bird is for its chick!’”

The Story of Jābir’s camel on this Expedition.

Muhammad b. Ishāq stated, “Wahb b. Kaysān related to me, from Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh, who said, ‘I went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS), on the expedition to Dhāt al-Riqā‘ at Nakhl, riding a feeble camel. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was returning home, I began falling behind my comrades who went on ahead. Eventually the Messenger of God (SAAS) came up to me and asked, “What’s wrong, Jābir?” I replied, “O Messenger of God, this camel of mine is slowing me down.” “Make it kneel,” he told me. I did so and he also made his camel kneel. He then said, “Give me that stick in your hand, or cut one from a tree.” I did so and he took it and prodded my camel with it several times. He then said, “Mount up!” I did so. And, I swear by Him who sent him with the truth, my weak male camel competed with his female camel!”

“When I was talking with the Messenger of God (SAAS), he asked me, “Would you sell me this camel of yours, Jābir?” “I’ll give it to you,” I told him. “No; just sell it to me.” “Make me an offer,” I asked. “I’ll take it for one dirham,” he suggested. “No way!” I replied. “Then you would be cheating me, Messenger of God!” “Two dirhams then?” he offered. “No,” I refused. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then set about raising the offer until he reached one ounce of gold. I asked him, “Would that be agreeable to you?” “Yes,” he replied. “Then he’s yours!” I told him. And he accepted it.

“He then asked, “Jābir, are you married yet?” “Yes, I am,” I told him. “To a woman previously married, or to a virgin?” “Previously married,” I replied. “Why not a young girl with whom you could have much fun?” he asked. “My father”, I explained to him, “was killed at the battle of Uhud and left seven daughters. So I married a mature woman to look after them and bring them up well.” “You did well, let’s hope to God,” he commented. “And when we get to Sirār we’ll slaughter a camel and stay there the day with her and she’ll hear about us and dust off her cushions for us.” I replied, “I swear, Messenger of God, we don’t have cushions.” “You will have,” he said. “When we get there behave wisely.”

“When we reached Sirār, the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered camels be slaughtered; this was done. We remained there that day and in the evening the Messenger of God (SAAS) went home, as did we all. I reported to my wife what he had said and she advised me to hurry up and do as I was told.

“Next morning I led my camel up to the door of the Messenger of God (SAAS), then sat down close to him in the mosque. Eventually the Messenger of God (SAAS) came outside and, when he saw the camel, he asked to whom it belonged. He was told that Jābir had brought it, and he asked where I was. Then they called for me to go to him, and he said, “Cousin, lead your camel away; it is yours.” Then he called Bilāl over and told him, “Take Jābir away and give him an ounce of gold.” So I went off with Bilāl and he did give me an ounce, and a little more as well. And, by God, my financial affairs improved constantly thereafter until they suffered recently in what befell us.”

By this he was referring to the yaum al-harra. The author of the sahih collection derived this story from a hadith of Ubayd Allah b. Umar al-‘Umari, from Wahb b. Kaysān, from Jābir, in similar terms.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “There is in this hadith reference to the Messenger of God (SAAS) telling Jābir b. ‘Abd Allah that God had given new life to his father, had spoken to him and told him, ‘Ask a request of me!’ That was because he died a martyr. For Almighty God had said, ‘God buys from believers their souls and their property.’ He awarded them more in His statement, ‘To those who do good there shall come good, and more too.’ He then combined for them compensation and indemnity and restored to them their souls that He had purchased from them. He stated, ‘Do not consider dead those who are killed in God’s cause; no, they are alive, with their Lord, and will be provided for’ (sūrat Al-‘Imrān; III, v.169).

“For human beings, the soul has the same role as a riding animal”, as ‘Umar b. ‘Abd al-‘Azīz said. He stated, “That is why the Messenger of God (SAAS) purchased from Jābir his camel, his riding beast, that is, first giving him the value of it and then returning it to him, with an additional amount as well.”

He commented, “And in this there is fulfilment of what he related to him about his father.”

Al-Suhaylī’s observation here is a strange and imaginative departure. But God Almighty, praised be He, knows best.

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqī gave an explanation relating to this hadith in his work Dalā‘il al-Nubuwwa. He has a section entitled “Chapter: On the blessings and signs of God evident in this expedition of his relating to the camel of Jābir b. ‘Abd Allah, God be pleased with him.”

This hadith has a number of lines of transmission from Jābir and many differences in phraseology. Also there is great variety in the value placed on the camel and the manner in which the sale provisions were made. The recording and interpretation of this is most appropriate in the section on sale in the works on law. But God knows best. This story is given pertaining to this expedition and elsewhere as well, as will follow. That this happened many times is unlikely; but God knows best.

ANOTHER EXPEDITION TO BADR.

This is the Badr engagement of which promise was made at Uhud, as is told above.

32. The reference is to the rebellion in Medina during the reign of Yazīd, the son of Mu‘awiya.
Ibn Ishāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to Medina from the Dhāt al-Riqāʾ expedition, he remained there for the rest of Jumādā al-Ūlā, Jumādā al-Ākhira and Rajah. In Sha’bān he left for Badr and his appointment with Abū Sufyān.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to Badr and remained there for eight days waiting for Abū Sufyān.

“So they all returned. The Meccans referred to them as the sawīq army, saying to them, ‘So you only went forth to drink sawīq then!’

“Makhshī b. ʿAmr al-Ḍamrī, who had made a contract with the Prophet (SAAS) concerning Banū Damrā at the Waddān expedition, now arrived and said, ‘Muḥammad, have you come here to this well to meet with Quraysh?’ He replied, ‘Yes, brother from Banū Damrā; but if you want, we’ll release you from your agreement with us and we’ll battle you until God decides between us.’ ‘No, by God, Muḥammad, there’s no need for that!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then returned to Medina without incident.”

Ibn Ishāq quoted ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa as having delivered the following verses as they waited for Abū Sufyān to arrive on his return that year to Badr. However, Ibn Hishām stated that this poetry was delivered to him by Abū Zayd who attributed it to Kaʿb b. Mālik:

“We agreed on Badr with Abū Sufyān, but found him untruthful and untrustworthy in his appointment.

I swear that had you and we met you would have returned home humiliated and with your supporters gone.

There we previously left limbs of ʿUtba and of his son, along with ʿAmr Abū Jahl whom we left prostrate.

You disobeyed the Messenger of God! How vile your faith and your evil and misguided conduct!

If you were to belabour me, I’d still say, ‘My wealth and family be a ransom for the Messenger of God!’

We obey him, treating none other of us as his equal; he is a flame guiding us in the dark of night!’

Ḥassān b. Thabit spoke the following verses on that occasion:

“Forget the streams of Syria! For intervening are swords (blood-stained) like the mouths of pregnant camels fed on (thorny) arāk trees.

33. A beverage, perhaps alcoholic, made of parched wheat or barley.
In the hands of men who have gone out to their Lord, to His true helpers, and to the hands of angels.

If they pass on to the lowlands from the sandy valleys, tell them that is not the route.

We remained eight days at the shallow well with a fully equipped force and many camels tethered
And round-bellied horses, sleek sided stallions high of withers,
The yearly arfaj plants being uprooted by tall, speeding mounts.

If we should meet Farât b. Ḥayyān in our journeyings, he will be as good as dead.

If, after him, Qays b. Imr al-Qays, the pallor of death will blacken his face even more!

Deliver to Abū Sufyān this message from me; for you are the best of those beggar-like men!”

Ibn Ishaq then quoted Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥarīth b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, who later accepted Islam, as answering him with the following verses:

“Ḥassān, you son of a woman who eats offal, I swear we devour great deserts like that!
When we go forth, young gazelles can’t escape between us, though seeking defence in full-speed flight.
When we leave after a halt you’d think it had been trashed by crowds at a fair!
You remained at the shallow well, wanting us to come, but leaving us in the date groves near by.
Our horses and mounts trample the vegetation underfoot, levelling all into the sand.
We halted for three days between Sa‘f and Fārūṣ, our horses fine and our camels swift-paced.
You would have thought that attacking people near their homes would be as easy as buying white lead with cash!
Don’t vaunt your fine horses when you talk to them as one who protects them and holds them back.
You express joy in them, but others should, such as the knights with descent from Fīhr b. Mālik.
You are not engaged in a migration, though you speak thereof, nor do you respect the prohibitions of its faith.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “We have omitted from this certain verses since they did not match in rhyme.”

Mūsā b. Uqba recounted from al-Zuhrī and Ibn Lahi’ā, from Abū al-Aswad, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called for men to go forth to meet Abū Sufyān, the hypocrites sent agents out to dissuade them. But God kept His supporters from harm, and the Muslims did proceed in the company of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Badr. They took various goods with them for sale, saying they would fight if they met Abū Sufyān, and that otherwise they would sell these at the Badr fair.

His account then proceeds as did the text of Ibn Ishāq to describe Abū Sufyān’s movement to Majanna, his return from there, the negotiation with al-Ḍamrt, the offer made by the Prophet (SAAS), and the repudiation which he refused.

Al-Wāqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) headed for it (Badr) with a force of 1,500 of his Companions. He placed ‘Abd Allah b. Rawāḥa in command of Medina. His departure for there occurred early in Dhū al-Qa‘dā.” He means of 4 AH.

But Ibn Ishāq’s statement is what is authentic, namely that it took place in Sha‘bān of that year, 4 AH, and it is in agreement with the statement of Mīṣa b. Uqba that it occurred in Sha‘bān, though he gives the year as 3 AH. This date is incorrect. For the agreement to meet at Badr had been made at Uhud, which took place in Shawwāl of 3 AH, as is told above. But God knows best.

Al-Wāqidi stated, “They remained at Badr for the duration of the fair that lasted eight days. Then they returned home, having profited with two dirhams for each one invested.”

Others say that they returned just as God, Almighty and Glorious is He, had said, “And so they returned with favour from God and His grace. No harm came to them. For they followed the pleasure of God, and God is He of mighty grace” (sūrat 21-‘Imrān; III, v.173).

Section: A Review of the events that occurred in 4 AH.

Ibn Jarir stated, “In Jumādā al-Uwlā of that year ʿAbd Allāh, son of Uthmān b. ʿAffān, God be pleased with him, by Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), died. He was six years of age. The Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the funeral prayer over him, and his father, Uthmān b. ʿAffān, God be pleased with him, accompanied him down into the grave.”

I would add that the same year Abī Salama ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Asad b. Hilāl b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar b. Makhzūm al-Qurashi al-Makhzūmi died; his mother was Barra, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, aunt of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He was the foster-brother of the Messenger of God (SAAS), since both were suckled by Thuwayba, freed-woman of Abū Lahab.

Abū Salama, Abū Ubayda, Uthmān b. ʿAffān and al-ʿArqam b. Abū al-ʿArqam had accepted Islam long before, on the same day.

Abū Salama and his wife had emigrated to Abyssinia and then returned to Mecca. They had had children in Abyssinia. He then migrated from Mecca to Medina and Umm Salama followed him there, as is related above. He was present at the battles of Badr and Uhud and died following wounds he suffered at Uhud. May God be pleased with him and give him pleasure. There is one ḥadīth, on the subject of "istījrāt" that is attributed to him. This will be related shortly in the text dealing with the marriage of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Umm Salama.

Ibn Jarir stated, "Some days before the end of Shaʿbān that year, al-Ḥusayn b. ʿAlī was born to Fasma, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); may God be pleased with them all.

"In Ramaḍān of that year the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Zaynab, daughter of Khuzayma b. al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Manāf b. Hilāl b. ʿAmir b. ʿAṣaʿa, a woman of Hilāl."

Abū ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-Barr quoted ʿAlī b. ʿAbd al-ʿAziz al-Jurjāni as saying that she was the sister of Maymūna, daughter of al-Ḥārith. Then he (Abū ʿUmar) stated that he had not been told this by anyone else.

She was known as Umm al-Masākin, "mother of the poor", for the many donations she made to them and for her kindness and compassion towards them. The Prophet (ṢAAS) gave her a dowry of 12 and a half ounces of gold and consummated his marriage with her in Ramaḍān. She had previously been married to al-Ṭūfayl b. al-Ḥārith who had divorced her.

Abū ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-Barr quoted ʿAlī b. ʿAbd al-ʿAziz al-Jurjāni as saying, "Thereafter his brother Ṭubayda b. al-Ḥārith b. al-Muṭṭalib b. ʿAbd Manāf had married her."

Ibn al-ʿAtbir stated, in his work Al-Ghnība, "It is said she was also the wife of ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh who was killed at Uhud while still married to her."

Abū ʿUmar stated, "There is no dispute over the fact that she died during the lifetime of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). It is said that she remained living with him only for two or three months before she died; may God be pleased with her."

Al-Wāqīdī stated, "In Shawwal of that year the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Umm Salama, daughter of Abū Umayya."

I comment that previously she had been the wife of her children's father, Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Asad. He had been present at Uhud, as is told above. He was wounded at that battle and nursed his wounds for a month until he was restored. He then went forth on a sariya, a raid, at which he earned considerable booty. He then stayed home for seventeen days, but his wounds erupted again and he died, three days before the end of Jumādā al-Uwšt of that year.

When in Shawwal it was permissible for her to remarry, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) became engaged to her, sending ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to her several times to arrange this. She told him that she was a very jealous woman and that she had children; that is, that she had children who would divert her attention from him and for whose food and support she had to work. He responded, “Regarding the children, God and His messenger will care for them; that is, you won’t be responsible for their expenses. As for the jealousy, I will pray to God and He will remove it.”

34. A supplication, derived from the Qurʾān, that one invokes during times of calamity.

She then gave her consent in the matter, finally telling ʿUmar, “Off you go; arrange the marriage of the Prophet (ṢAAS).” By this she meant that she had agreed and had given her permission.

Some scholars imagine her to have said this to her son ʿUmar b. Abū Salama who was too young at that time to be involved with contracts. I have combined all that is correct into one specific account, all praise and trust being in God.
(There is also an account that states) that the person who arranged her marriage with him was her oldest son Salama b. Abū Salama. This account is widely known because his father was her cousin and the son is eligible to be the guardian of his mother because he happens to be her means of subsistence and not because of filiation.

According to al-Shāfiʿi alone, the mere fact of being a son does not entitle him to act for his mother in a marriage contract. The three (other chief authorities on Islamic law) Abū Ḥanifa, Malik (b. Anas) and Aḥmad (b. Ḥanbal), God have mercy upon them all, disagree with him. This issue will, if God wills it, be examined further elsewhere in the Kitāb al-Nikāḥ (Chapter on Marriage) in my work al-Aḥkām al-Kabīr.

me one day from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and said, “I heard something from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) that greatly pleased me. He said, ‘Any Muslim who suffers a loss should repeat, “To God we belong, and to Him we return,” and then should pray, “O God, compensate me for my loss and give me better in exchange.”’” She went on, ‘And I learned this from him by heart.

“When Abū Salama died, I spoke the words, “To God we belong, and to Him we return”, then said, “O God, compensate me for my loss and give me better in exchange.” But then I realized what I had said and wondered how I could ever have better than Abū Salama.

“When my ḍidda, my waiting period, was over, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked to come to see me while I was tanning a hide I had. I washed my hands clean of the tanning solution, asked him to come in and set out a leather cushion stuffed with palm fronds for him to sit upon. He sat down on it and made me an offer of marriage. When he had finished speaking, I replied, “O Messenger of God! It’s not fit for me to question your wanting this, but I’m an extremely jealous woman and I’m afraid you may see in me something for which God will punish me. And I'm a woman who is getting on in years, and I have children.”

“He replied, "Regarding the jealousy, God will remove it from you. As for your reference to your age, I am afflicted just as you are. Regarding your children, they shall be as my own." So I consented to the Messenger of God (SAAS). And God did give me better than Abū Salama – the Messenger of God (SAAS)!"

Ibn Ishaq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left from Badr – where the appointment had been – to return to Medina. He remained there until the month of Dhū al-Hijja was over; the polytheists had charge of the pilgrimage that year, 4 AH."

Al-Waqidi stated, "That year, 4 AH, the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered Zayd b. Thābit to learn Hebrew script.”

I would comment that it is established in the saḥīḥ collection that he said, “I learned it in 15 days.” But God knows best.

THE YEAR 5 AH. THE EXPEDITION TO DŪMAT AL-JANDAL IN RABĪ‘ AL-AWWAL, 5 AH.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then made an expedition to Dūmat al-Jandal."

Ibn Hishām observed that it took place in Rabi‘ al-Awwal that year and that he appointed Sibat b. Ṣiba‘ al-Ghifārī in charge of Medina.

Ibn Ishaq went on, "He then, however, returned to Medina before reaching it, and without engaging in battle. He remained in Medina for the remainder of that year."

That is the statement made by Ibn Ishaq.

Muḥammad b. ‘Umar al-Waqidi quoted lines of authority back to various early scholars who stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had wanted to proceed to the closest areas in Syria but was told that this would alarm Caesar. He was also informed that there was a large force at Dūmat al-Jandal who maltreated passers-by and that it also had a substantial market; these people wanted him to approach the town.

He therefore organized his men and left with a force of 1,000 Muslims. They travelled by night, keeping under cover by day. He had a guide with him from Bānū ʿUdhra named Madhkūr, who was a skilled tracker.
When they neared Dumat al-Jandal, his guide directed him to the pasturing cattle belonging to Banu Tamim. He went on and attacked their sheep and goats; some people were killed, while others fled in disarray. When news of this reached people in Dumat al-Jandal, those there dispersed. The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded to encamp on their square, finding no one there. He remained there for several days, sending out raiding parties. They returned, with Muhammad b. Salama having taken one of the enemy prisoner. He was brought to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked him about his comrades. The man replied that they had fled the previous day. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then explained Islam to him, and he became a Muslim. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went back to Medina.

Al-Waqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to Dumat al-Jandal in Rabia al-Akhir, 5 AH. And the same year Umm Sa’id b. Ubaada died while her son was away on this expedition with the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Abu Isaa al-Tirmidhi stated in his compendium, “Muhammad b. Bashshar related to us, quoting Yahya b. Sa’id, from Sa’id b. Abu Uruba, from Qatada, from Sa’id b. al-Musayyab, that Umm Sa’id died while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was absent. When he returned he prayed for her, a month having passed.”

This mursal hadith is excellent and requires the Messenger of God (SAAS) to have been absent on this expedition for a month or more, according to what al-Waqidi, God be pleased with him, reported.

It was about this event that the main part of surat al-Ahzab (XXXIII) was revealed. In it the Almighty stated, “O you who believe! Remember God’s favour to you when enemy forces attacked you and We sent a wind against them, along with forces you could not see. God sees well what you are doing. (Remember) when they came at you from above and from below, and when your sight was blinded and hearts arose into your throats and you were confused in your thoughts about God. There believers were put to the test, and they were violently shaken. (Remember) when the hypocrites and those with disease in their hearts said, ‘It was all misleading, what God and His messenger promised us!’ And (remember) when one group of them said, ‘O people of Yathrib, there is no place for you here, so go back!’ And a group of them did ask the Prophet, saying, ‘Our homes lie exposed.’ Yet they were not exposed; all they wanted was to flee. And if they (the enemy) had gained entry from outside and had asked them to revolt, they would have done so without great hesitation. Whereas they had earlier promised God that they would not retreat; and promises made to God are answerable. Say: ‘It will not avail you to flee, whether from death or from battle; in such case you will be allowed enjoyment only briefly.’ Say:
'Who is it can protect you from God if He wishes to do you harm, or be merciful to you?' They shall not find anyone to help or aid them apart from God. God knows which of you hinder and which of you say to your brethren, 'Come over to us!' Yet they rarely go to battle. They are ungenerous to you; and when fear arrives you see them looking at you with their eyes rolling, like those who faint at death. But when the fear is gone, they pursue you with sharp tongues, greedy for the good (booty). Those people did not believe and so God nullified their action; and this was an easy thing for God. They consider that the clans have not gone; and if the clans should again come, they would wish to be among the bedouin asking for news of you; yet if they were among you, they would only do in battle a little. In the Messenger of God there has been for you an excellent model for those who have hope in God and in the last Day and who make frequent mention of God. When the believers saw the clans, they said, 'This is what God and His messenger promised us. God and His messenger spoke the truth.' And this only increased their faith and submission. The believers include some men who are true to what they promised God. Of them are those who have already fulfilled their vows, while some of them still wait but have not changed at all. God will reward those who are true in their sincerity; and He will punish the hypocrites, if He wishes, or will turn aside from them. God is very forgiving and merciful. God turned back those who disbelieved; by their rage they gained nothing good. Yet God gave satisfaction to the believers in the fighting; and God is strong and powerful. He brought down from their forts those of the People of the Book who allied with them, and cast terror into their hearts; some you killed, others you took captive. He made you heir to their land, properties and belongings, as well as to lands you have not yet trod. And God is capable of all things" (ṣūrat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.9–13).

We have discussed all these noble verses in the Tafsir (Exegesis); and to God belong all praise and credit. Let us refer here to matters relating to the account – if God wills it and in Him we place reliance and trust.

The battle of al-khandaq took place in Shawwāl, 5 AH, according to Ibn Iṣḥāq, ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, Qatāda and al-Bayhaqī, along with various scholars of the earlier and later periods.

Mūsā b. Uqba quoted al-Zuhrī as stating, "Then the waqīt al-aḥzāb, the 'battle of the clans', took place, in Shawwāl of 4 AH."

Imām Mālik b. Anas stated the same, according to a quotation attributed to him by Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, quoting Mūsā b. Dārūd.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, "There is in fact no dispute between them in this; this is because their intent was that this occurred after the passage of four years, but before the completion of five."

There is no doubt that when the polytheists left Uhud they made an arrangement to meet the Muslims at Badr in the following year. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) therefore went forth with his force in Sha‘bān of 4 AH, as told above, while Abū Sufyān returned home with the Quraysh because of the drought that year. They would not have been likely to have gone to Medina two months later. And so it may be concluded that the battle of al-khandaq took place in 5 AH. But God knows best. Al-Zuhri declared that the battle of al-khandaq took place two years following that of Uhud. And there is no dispute over the fact that Uhud occurred in Shawwāl of 3 AH, except in so far as some maintain that the dating system began with Muḥarram of the second year after the hegira, and they do not count the remaining months of that year, from Rabi‘ al-Awwal to its end, as al-Bayhaqi related it. Ya‘qūb b. Sufyān al-Rasā‘wi maintained this, declaring that Badr took place in the first year, Uhud in the second, the “appointment at Badr” in Shawwāl of year 3 AH, and al-khandaq in Shawwāl of year 4 AH.

This view is contrary to that of the majority, for it is widely accepted that the Commander of the Believers, ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, established the beginning of the era from Muḥarram of the year of the hegira, though Mālik states it to have been from Rabi‘ al-Awwal of that year. There are therefore the three views. And God knows best.

What seems true is what the majority hold — that Uhud was in Shawwāl of 3 AH, while al-khandaq took place in Shawwāl of 5 AH. But God knows best.

(Also revelant) is the hadith accepted in both sahih collections derived through ‘Ubayd Allāh from Na‘īf, who quoted Ibn ‘Umar as saying, “I was presented to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the Battle of Uhud when I was 14, but he would not give me permission to fight. I was also presented to him at al-khandaq when I was 15, and he then gave me permission.” Some scholars, including al-Bayhaqi, respond to this by saying that he was presented at Uhud at the beginning of his 14th year, and that al-Ahzāb (al-khandaq) was at the end of his 15th year.

I would comment that it is probable that what he meant was that when he was presented at al-Ahzāb he had already completed 15 years, an age at which youths are permitted to engage in battle; and so nothing more is to be added.

Therefore, when Na‘īf related this hadith to ‘Umar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, he said, “This constitutes the difference between a youth and a man.” He then wrote this to the provinces and the mass of scholars thereafter relied upon it. But God knows best.

The following text of the account is derived from Ibn Isḥāq and others.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The battle of al-khandaq took place, in Shawwāl, 5 AH.

“Yazid b. Rumān related to me, from Urwa and another trustworthy source, from ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Ka‘b b. Mālik and Muḥammad b. Ka‘b al-Qurazi and al-Zuhri, and ʿĀsim b. ‘Umar b. Qatāda, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr and other scholars, some of these giving information not included by others, as follows. What happened at al-khandaq was that a group of Jews had divided up the clans 35. Ibn Hishām gives his name as ʿAbd Allah b. Ka‘b. against the Messenger of God (SAAS). These included Sallam b. Abu al-Huqayq al-Nadri, Huyayy b. Akhtab al-Nadri, Kinana b. al-Rabi' b. Abu al-Huqayq, Hawdha b. Qays al-Waili, and Abu Ammar al-Waili, along with groups from Banu al-Nadir and Banu Wa'il. These went to Quraysh in Mecca and suggested they engage in warfare against the Messenger of God (SAAS). They told them that they would participate until they had completely destroyed him. Quraysh responded as follows, 'O Jews, you are the first people to receive scripture and knowledge in those matters in which we and Muhammad differ. Which religion is better, ours or his?'

'They replied, 'Your religion is definitely better than his; you are closer to the truth than he is.'

'It is of these people that God revealed the words, 'Have you not seen those who were brought a share of the Book? They believe in idols and evil powers, and say to those who disbelieve, “These are more rightly guided than those who believe!” Those are they whom God has cursed; and whomever God curses shall find none to help him' (Surat al-Nisa; IV, v.51-2).

'This pleased Quraysh when they said it to them and they gladly accepted the suggestion of going to war against the Messenger of God (SAAS). They then assembled and made preparations.

'That group of Jews then visited Ghaftan of Qays Ayalan and invited them to battle the Messenger of God (SAAS), telling them that they would themselves participate along with them, and that Quraysh would do so too. They therefore joined up with them.

'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard of all this and what they had agreed, he dug the ditch around Medina.'

'Ibn Hisham commented that it is said that it was Salmân who suggested this. Al-Tabari and al-Suyahli stated that the first man to dig ditches was Manushehr b. Ayraj b. Afridin and that that happened in the time of Moses, peace be upon him.

'Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) worked on this himself, inspiring the Muslims to seek reward in heaven, and they worked alongside him. Some hypocrites held back, complaining of their weakness. Some of these left surreptitiously and without his permission or knowledge.

'It was on this subject that Almighty God revealed, ‘Believers are only those who believe in God and in His messenger. And if engaged with him in a joint effort they do not leave without seeking his permission. Those who do seek your permission are those who believe in God and in His messenger. If they do ask your permission to attend to some affair, then permit it to whichever of them you wish. And ask God to forgive them; God is indeed Forgiving, Merciful. Do not consider the Messenger’s appealing to you while among you the same as you making appeals to one another. God is well aware which of you steal away in hiding. Let those beware who oppose his orders, lest trouble or painful punishment afflict them. No indeed! All in the heavens and all on earth belong to God; He well knows what you do. On the day on which they will be returned to Him, He will inform them what it was they did. God is aware of all things!" (ṣūrat al-Ṭārīq; XXIV, v.62-4).

Ibn ʿIshāq continued, “The Muslims continued working on the trench until they had finished it. They made a rhyme about one of the Muslims, a man named Juʿayl whom the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) referred to as ‘Amr. They would repeat,

‘To ‘Amr from Juʿayl he changed his name; and soon the weak are strong’, he’ll proclaim.’

“When they pronounced the name ‘Amr’, so would the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) do so along with them. When they said the word ‘proclaim’, so would he.”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Muḥāwiya b. ‘Amr, quoting Abū ʿIshāq, from Ḥumayd, who said, ‘I heard Anas say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went out to the trench and found that the muḥājirin and the ʿanṣār were busy digging. It was a very cold morning and they had no slaves to do that work for them. When he saw what they were suffering from the hard labour and their hunger, he said, ‘O God, their life is, indeed, that of the after-life; forgive the ʿanṣār and the muḥājirin.’ They responded in unison to this by chanting,

‘We are those who gave allegiance to Muḥammad, for the jihad, the holy work, forever, for as long as we live.’”

In both sahih collections there is similar wording given, on the authority of Muḥāwiya b. Qurra, from Anas.

Muslim related this from a hadith of Ḥammād b. Salama, from Thābit and Ḥumayd, from Anas, in similar words.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Abū Maʾmar related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-Wārith, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, from Anas, who said, ‘The muḥājirin and the ʿanṣār set to work digging the trench around Medina carrying away the dirt on their backs, chanting,

“We are those who gave allegiance to Muḥammad, for Islam, for ever, for as long as we live.’

“In response, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would say, ‘O God, there is no good except that of the hereafter, so bless the ʿanṣār and the muḥājirin.’"
"They would bring a handful of barley and some ill-smelling fat as a meal for them, hungry as they were; it stuck in their throats and smelled bad."

Al-Bukhari also stated, "Qutayba b. Sa‘d related to us, quoting ‘Abd al-‘Aziz b. Abū Ḥazim, from Sahl b. Sa‘d, who said, ‘We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the trench while men were digging it. We would carry the dirt away on our shoulders. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘O God, there is no life but that of the hereafter; forgive the muhājirin and the ansār.’’’" Muslim also related this, from al-Qa‘nabī, from ‘Abd al-‘Aziz.

Al-Bukhari also stated, “Muslim b. Ibrāhīm related to us, quoting Shu‘ba, from Abū Isḥāq, from al-Bara‘ b. ‘Āzib, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) was carrying away the dirt (before) the battle of al-khandaq till dust covered his stomach’ (or ‘his stomach became dust-covered’), ‘and reciting, “O God, without God we would not have been well-guided, nor would we have been charitable; nor would we have prayed.

So do send down tranquillity upon us and make us stand firm when we meet the foe.
They have wronged us; if they want trouble, we’ll resist them’’

‘And he raised his voice at the words “resist them.”’

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth of Shu‘ba.

Al-Bukhārī went on to state that Aḥmad b. ‘Uthmān related to him, quoting Shurayḥ b. Maslama, quoting Ibrāhīm b. Yūsuf, from his father, from Abū Isḥāq, from al-Bara‘, who related the following ḥadīth: “At the (time of) the battle of al-‘Aḥzāb, ‘the clans’, and the trench of the Messenger of God (SAAS), I saw him carrying the dirt from the trench so much that it hid the skin of his stomach from me; and he had much body hair. I heard him reciting verses of ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha as he moved the dirt, ‘O God, without you we would not have been well-guided; nor would we have been charitable, nor would we have prayed.

So do send down tranquillity upon us and make us stand firm when we meet the foe.
They have wronged us; if they want trouble, we’ll resist them’’

“He would stretch out the final syllables.”

In God’s name, and through Him we were guided, and if we had worshipped any but Him we would have suffered,
What a fine Lord! What a fine religion!”

This hadith, from this line, is gharib, “unique”.

Imám Abú Ahmad stated, “Sulaymán related to us, quoting Shu'ba, from Muqáwiya b. Qurra, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spoke the following while they were digging the trench,

‘O God, there is no good except that of the hereafter, so bless the ansār and the muḥājirin.’

Both authors of the sahih collections derived this from a hadith of Ghundar from Shu'ba.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Various anecdotes to which the Muslims were witness, have reached me relating to the digging of the trench that provide example of the truth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and that confirm his Prophethood. One such is that Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh would relate how they had great difficulty digging one patch of hard ground, and so they complained about this to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He called for a pitcher of water, spat in it and spoke over it some prayer that God wished him to say. He then sprinkled the water on the hard ground. Those present swear that it crumbled so much that it could not withstand an axe or a shovel.”

Ibn Ishāq related this thus, without a full chain of authorities, from Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh, God be pleased with him.

Al-Bukhārī, God bless him, stated, “Khallad b. Yahyā related to us, quoting 'Abd al-Wahid b. Ayman, from his father, who said, ‘I once went to Jābir and he told me, “At the Battle of the trench, when we were digging, a patch of extremely hard ground was in our way. The Prophet (ṢAAS) said, when he was told of this, ‘I’ll come on down.’ Then he arose; and there was a stone tied across his stomach – we had not tasted food for three days. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took the spade and struck the ground with it and it turned into soft sand.

‘”So I said, ‘Please, Messenger of God, allow me to go home now.’ Then I told my wife, ‘I saw the Prophet (ṢAAS) to be in an intolerable state. Do you have something (to eat)?’ She replied that she had some barley and a goat. So I slaughtered the goat, and she ground up the barley. Then we put the meat into a pot. I went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) after the dough had risen and when the pot was on the stone trivet and almost cooked, and said, ‘I have a little food; do come along, Messenger of God, with one or two of the men.’ ‘How much is there?’ he asked, and I told him. He said, ‘There’s a great deal of good food. Let your wife not take off the pot nor remove the bread from the oven until I arrive.’ Then he told the muḥājirin and the ansār to get up, and they did so.”
"When the man went in to his wife, he told her, "There is a problem! The Prophet is coming with muhajirun, ansār and others." She asked, "Did he question you?" "Yes," I replied.

"Then He told them all to come in, but not to push and shove, and he began to break up the bread and place meat on it. He covered over the pot and the oven when he took from them. He kept on serving the food to his Companions and taking it out. He did not stop breaking the bread and spooning the meat until they were satisfied; and some still remained. He then told her, "Eat yourself, and give to all; people are very hungry.""

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this hadīth.

Imām Abūdār related it from Waki', from 'Abd al-Waḥīd b. Ayman, from his father Ayman the Abyssinian, the freed-man of Banū Makhzūm, from Jābir in an account that combines reference to the hard ground with the stone being bound to the stomach of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Al-Bayhaqī related it in Dalā'īl (The Signs), from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asamm, from Ahmad b. 'Abd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from 'Abd al-Waḥīd b. Ayman, from his father, from Jābir, in an account combining reference to the hard ground and the food. That narrative is longer and more extensive than that of al-Bukhārī. In it he stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had learned of the quantity of the food, he told all the Muslims, 'Go along and see Jābir.' They began to do so. (Jābir) said, 'God only knows how embarrassed I felt! I told myself that he was coming with (many) people for a measure of barley and a she-kid! So I went in to my wife and told her, 'You're going to be put to shame; the Messenger of God (SAAS) is coming to you with everyone from the trench!' She replied, "Did he ask you how much food you have?" "Yes." I replied. "Well then", she commented, "God and His messenger know best!"

"And so she relieved my great concern. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came in, he said to her, "You serve, but leave the meat to me." And then he set about serving the stew and dishing out the meat, giving it to everyone in turn. He kept on doing so until all were satisfied, yet the oven and pot were still more full than before!

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, "Now you eat and serve more." And she went on eating and serving all day.'"

Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba related this similarly, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Muhammad al-Muḥārībī, from 'Abd al-Waḥīd b. Ayman, from his father, from Jābir's account, and also at greater length. Finally, he stated, "He told me they were 800 in number. Or else the figure he stated was 300."

According to the account from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Hishām b. Sa'd, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, given only at length about the food, he stated that they were 300 in number.
Al-Bukhārī then stated, “Amr b. ‘Ali related to me, quoting Abū ‘Ašīm, quoting Ḥanḍalā b. Abū Sufyān, from Abū al-Zubayr, as follows, ‘Ibn Minnā related to us that he heard Ėbīr b. ʿAbd Allāh say, “When the trench was dug, I could see that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was suffering severe malnutrition, so I asked my wife what livestock she had, saying, ‘Do you have anything? I have noticed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) is suffering serious malnutrition.’ She produced a bag containing a measure of barley, and we also did have a she-kid. I slaughtered it, while she ground the barley; we both finished at the same time. Then I cut it up and put it in the cooking pot and turned to go back to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), when she said, ‘Don’t disgrace me by having the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) come and bring others who are with him!’ I went up to him and, speaking confidentially, I told him, ‘Messenger of God, I’ve slaughtered a she-kid of ours and ground up a measure of barley we had. Please come, and bring another with you.’

“‘At this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called out, ‘Hey, everyone at the trench! Ėbīr has made a feast for us! Let’s go to it!’ He then told me, ‘Don’t take down the pot or bake the bread before I get there.’

“‘So I went home and eventually the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived, leading his men. I went to my wife and she berated me, but I told her, ‘I did just as you asked.’ She then brought out the dough to us, and he spat on it and blessed it. After that he went over to our cooking pot and spat and blessed again. He told my wife, ‘Call over a bakeress to bake along with you and keep on ladling out from the pot, but don’t take it off the fire.’ A thousand people were present. And, I swear by God, they ate, then stopped and went away and our pot was still bubbling as before, and our dough was still there too, as it had been.”’

Muslim related this from Ḥajjāj b. al-Šāqīr, from Abū ʿAšīm in much the same words.

Muḥammad b. ʿIshāq related this hadith, but his account has some unique aspects to it. He stated, “Ṣaʿīd b. Minā related to me, from Ḫabīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘We worked with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in the trench. I had a young goat, not fully fattened. So I said how nice it would be to serve it for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). I told my wife to grind up some barley for us, and she made some bread with it. I slaughtered the goat and we roasted it for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“When evening came and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was about to leave the trench (we were working in it during the day, then going home to our families each night) I told him, ‘We’ve cooked a young goat we had and baked some barley bread. I do hope you will accompany me home.’ I had only wanted him to come with me, but when I told him this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) accepted, but then he had someone call out, “Everyone is to go with the Messenger of God (SAAS), to the home of Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh!" At this I said, "O dear! We belong to God, and to Him do we return!"

"Then along came the Messenger of God (SAAS), accompanied by his men. He sat down and we brought out the food which he blessed, invoking the name of Almighty God over it. He then ate and the others set about it too. When one group was finished another came until all those working at the ditch had done."

It is strange that Imam Ahmad only gave this hadith through Sa‘īd b. Mīnā, from Ya‘qūb b. Ibrāhīm b. Sa‘d, from his father, from Ibn Ḥishāq, from Jābir, in exactly similar form.

Muḥammad b. Ḥishāq stated, "Sa‘īd b. Mīnā related to me that it was related to him that a daughter of Bashīr b. Sa‘d, sister of al-Nu‘mān b. Bashīr said, ‘My mother, ‘Amra, daughter of Rawhā, invited me over and gave me a handful of dates, putting it in my dress, saying, “Daughter, take this to your father and your uncle ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawhā for their lunch.” So I passed by the Messenger of God (SAAS), while I was looking for my father and my uncle. He (the Prophet (SAAS)) said to me, “Come over here, girl! What are you carrying?” I replied, “This, Messenger of God, is some dates my mother sent me to deliver for lunch to my father Bashīr b. Sa‘d and my uncle ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawhā.” He told me, “Bring it over here.” So I poured out the dates into his hands and they did not fill them.

“He then asked for a cloth and it was laid out for him. He piled up the dates on it and they towered above it. He then told one of his men there to shout out to those working on the trench to come and have lunch. The men all gathered around and began eating from it. But it grew in quantity and when they went off again, it was spilling over the sides of the cloth.”

Ibn Ḥishāq related it thus; there is a break in the line of transmission. The Ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī related it thus through him and without addition.

Ibn Ḥishāq stated, “It was related to me that Salmān the Persian said, ‘I was digging in the trench and one rock was too tough for me. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was nearby, and when he saw me striking it and how difficult was all the trouble I was having, he came down, took the pickaxe from my hands and struck with it. A flash glowed from beneath the pickaxe. He then struck with it again and again it glowed beneath it. He struck it a third time and again it glowed. I said, “By my father and mother, Messenger of God! What is it I see glowing beneath your pickaxe when you strike with it?” He replied, “Did you see that, Salmān?” “Yes, I did,” I replied. He explained, “The first glow was God opening up the gates to Yemen for me. The second was God opening up the gates of Syria and the maghrib, the west. The third was God opening up by it the gates of the East for me.”’"

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “This is what Ibn Ḥishāq related that Muṣā b. Uqba recounted in his work on the military expeditions; Abū al-Aswad recounted it from ‘Urwa.”
Al-Bayhaqi went on to relate a hadith through Muḥammad b. Yūnus al-Kadimi, a controversial source. However, Ibn Jarir related it in his history from Muḥammad b. Bashshār and from Bandār, both giving a line of authorities from Muḥammad b. Khālid b. ʿAthma, from Kathir b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. ʿAwf al-Muznī, from his father, from his grandfather. He recounts a hadith which tells how the Messenger of God (ṣaas) divided up work on the trench in such a way that every group of ten men were to dig for forty arms' lengths. The account also says that the muḥājirīn and the ansār quarrelled about Salmān and that the Messenger of God (ṣaas) therefore stated, “Salmān is one of us – one of the ahl al-bayt, ‘a member (honorary) of the household of the Prophet (ṣaas).’”

ʿAmr b. ʿAwf stated, “I, Salmān, Ḥudhayfa, al-Nuʿmān b. Muqarrin and six of the ansār were working on forty arms’ lengths of the trench. We dug on until we reached al-Nādā, where we came across a huge, white rock. It broke our metal tools and gave us great difficulty. So Salmān went to the Messenger of God (ṣaas) who was then in a Turkish pavilion, and told him of it. He came and took the pickaxe from Salmān and struck the rock so hard it split. From it there came a flash of light so strong as to illuminate all the way between the two lava fields – (at both ends) of Medina, that is. It was like a great lantern on a very dark night. The Messenger of God (ṣaas) invoked God’s greatness, saying Allāhu Akbar, ‘God is Most Great’, as at a victory, and the Muslims did so as well. He then struck it again and the same thing happened, a third time with the same result. Salmān and the Muslims asked the Messenger of God (ṣaas) what the light meant. He replied, ‘From the first, the castles of al-Ḥira and cities of Chosroe were lit up to be seen like the fangs of dogs. Gabriel announced to me that my nation would be victorious over them. From the second, the red castles of Byzantium were illuminated, as though they were the fangs of dogs; Gabriel announced to me that my nation would be victorious over them. From the third, the castles of Ṣanʿā were lit up like the fangs of dogs; Gabriel announced to me that my nation would be victorious over them. So be joyful at this news!’ The Muslims were delighted, and said, ‘Praise be to God! A true omen!’

“When the enemy clans appeared for battle, the believers told one another that that was what God and His messenger had promised them and was true, and so their faith and determination were reinforced. The hypocrites said, ‘He tells you he can see from Yathrib to the castles of al-Ḥira and the cities of Chosroe, and that they will be rendered up to you, yet here you are digging the trench and can’t even come out into the open!’

“And so it was that about them God revealed, ‘(Remember) when the hypocrites and those with sickness in their hearts say, “What God and His messenger promise us is mere fancy!”’(ṣūrat al-ʿAzīz; XXXIII, v.12).

This hadith is unilateral.

Allāh b. Yazīd, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) ordered a trench be dug around Medina and the work was underway, some men told the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) that they had come across a rock they could not dig up. He then went there, with us accompanying him, and when he reached the site, he took the pickaxe, struck a hard blow with it and spoke the words, Allāhū Akbar! “God is Most Great!” Then came a crashing sound the like of which I never heard before and he said, “Persia has been conquered!” He then struck again, and again invoked God’s greatness. Again came a crashing sound the like of which I had never heard, and he said, “Byzantium has been conquered!” He then struck and invoked once more and again I heard a crashing sound the like of which I had never heard, and he said, “God has delivered Ḥimyar as (our) allies and comrades!”’"

This too is unique from this line of transmission. There is weakness in ‘Abd al-Rahlīm b. Ziyād b. Anṭam al-Ifriqi as a source. But God knows best.

Al-Ṭabrānī also stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥanbal related to us, Saʿīd b. Muhammad al-Jurfī related to me, Abū Numayla related to us, quoting Nuʿaym b. Saʿīd al-Gharī, that ‘Ikrimā quoted Ibn ‘Abbās as saying, ‘When the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) dug the trench, his Companions had tied stones to their stomachs they were so hungry. When he saw this, he said, “Can’t you find someone who could give us a meal?” A man replied, “Yes.” The Prophet (Ṣaḥḥā) then said, “Since you didn’t say no, then lead us to him.” So off they went to the man’s house, but he was doing his share of work in the ditch. His wife sent a message to him to come home because the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) had come to visit them. The man hurried home expressing his concern. He did have a goat with a kid, and the man sprang at the goat. But the Prophet (Ṣaḥḥā) said, “No; there’s the kid behind her. Slaughter the kid.” The wife prepared some ground wheat she had and made it into dough and baked it. The pot was prepared and she crumbled the bread into the stew in her wooden bowl that served ten and offered it to the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) and his Companions. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) placed a finger in it, invoked God’s name and asked Him to bless it, then told them to eat. They did so until they were satisfied. Yet all they had eaten was one-third; two-thirds of it remained. He then told the ten men with him to go and bring back a like number. They left and the next ten arrived and ate till they were satisfied. He then arose and said a prayer for the mistress of the house, invoking God’s name over her and her family. They then returned to the trench. He asked them to accompany him to Salmān who had a rock in his way for which he had insufficient strength. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) said, “Let me be the first to strike it.” He said God’s name over it, struck it and one-third of it split away. He then said, “God is most great! It’s the castles of Syria, by the Lord of the kaʿba!” He hit it again, and another section came away. He said, Allāhū Akbar! “God is most Great! It’s the castles of Syria, by the Lord of the kaʿba!” He then hit it again and another section came away.
He said, \textit{Allāhu Akbar!} "It's the castles of Persia, by the Lord of the ka'ba!" Thereupon the hypocrites commented, "So we dig a trench for ourselves while he promises us the castles of Persia and Byzantium!"

The \textit{ḥāṣīz} al-Bayhaqi stated further, "\textit{Ali b. Ahmad b. 'Abdān informed us, quoting Ahmād b. 'Ubayd al-Ṣaffār, that Muḥammad b. Ghālib b. Ḥarb related to us, quoting Hawdhā, that 'Awf related to us, from Maymūn b. Ustādh al-Zuhrī, and al-Barā'ī b. 'Azīb al-Anṣārī related to us, as follows, 'When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had ordered us to dig the ditch, a large, tough rock was in our way but the pickaxes made no impression on it. The problem was brought to the attention of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and when he saw it, he took the pickaxe and spoke God's name. Then he struck it hard and a thud of it broke off. He then exclaimed, 'Allāhu Akbar! I have been given the keys to Syria! I swear by God I can see its red castles, by God's grace!' He then struck it a second blow and cut off another third. Again he exclaimed, 'I have been given the keys to Persia! I swear by God, I can see the castles of the white cities!' He then struck a third time, speaking God's name and broke the rest of the rock. He exclaimed, 'Allāhu Akbar! I have been given the keys to Yemen! I swear by God, I can see the gates of Šanā' from where I am now!'""

This hadīth is also unique, one related only by this Maymūn b. Ustādh. He was of Basra, and related material from al-Barā'ī and 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr, and from him Ḥamīd al-Ṭawālī, al-Jurayrī and 'Awf al-Arābī. Abū Ḥāfīm stated, on the authority of 'Ishāq b. Mansūr and Ibn Mu'sīn, that he was a \textit{thīqa}, "a reliable source". 'Ali b. al-Madīnī stated, "Yahyā b. Sa'īd al-Qāṭānī would not relate traditions from him."

Al-Nasā'i stated, "'Isā b. Yūnūs related to us, quoting Ḍamrā, from Abū Zar'a al-Saybānī, from Abū Sakīna, a man from Bahrayn, from one of the Companions of the Prophet (ṢAAS), who said, 'When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered the digging of the trench, a large rock got in the way of their work. So the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went and took the pickaxe and placed his cloak down in the direction of the trench. Then he said the words, ‘The word of your Lord will be fulfilled in truth and justice. Nothing can alter His words. He it is who hears and knows’ (ṣūrat al-An'am; VI, v.115). At this a third of the rock split off. Salmān al-Fārisī was standing watching. At the blow struck by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), there had been a flash of light. Then he hit it a second time and repeated, ‘The word of your Lord will be fulfilled in truth and justice. Nothing can alter His words. He it is who hears and knows.’ Another third broke off, and a light again flashed that Salmān saw. He then struck a third time, saying, ‘The word of your Lord will be fulfilled in truth and justice. Nothing can alter His words. He it is who hears and knows.’ At that the remaining third split up."

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left, picked up his cloak and sat down. Salmān asked him, ‘Messenger of God, I noticed that each blow you struck was accompanied by a flash of light.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, “So, Salmān, you saw that?” “Yes, I did, I swear by Him who sent you with the truth, Messenger of God.” The Messenger of God (ṣaas) went on, “When I struck the first blow the cities of Chosro and their surroundings, along with many other towns were raised up before me so that I saw them with my own eyes.” One of his Companions present there then asked, “Messenger of God, please pray to God to grant us victory, give us their progeny as booty and to let us destroy their lands with our own hands.” And he did speak that prayer.

“Then I struck the second blow and Caesar’s cities and their surroundings were raised before me so that I saw them with my own eyes.” Those present said, “Please, Messenger of God, pray to God to grant us victory, to give us their progeny as booty and to let us destroy their lands with our own hands.” And he did so pray.

“Then I struck the third blow, the cities of Abyssinia were raised before me, along with the villages there about, so that I saw them with my own eyes.” Then he said, “Allow Abyssinia what they allowed you, and leave the Turks undisturbed for as long as they so leave you.”

Al-Nasā’ī related it thus at length, whereas Abū Dā’ūd quoted from it the words, “Allow Abyssinia what they allowed you, and leave the Turks undisturbed for as long as they so leave you.” His line of transmission was from Ḥalim b. Muḥammad al-Ramlī, from ʿAmr b. Ḥuḍra, from Abū Zura ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū ʿAmr al-Saybānī.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “A trustworthy source related to me from Abū Hurayra that when these territories were conquered in the eras of ʿUmar and of ʿUthmān and thereafter, he would say, ‘You should conquer what seems appropriate to you; for, I swear by Him who holds Abū Hurayra’s soul, you have not conquered any town, and you never will right on up to Judgement Day, the keys to which were not given beforehand to Muhammad (ṣaas).’”

This line of transmission for this ḥadīth is broken; but it is given in complete form from another line, thanks be to God. For Imām Ahmad stated, “Ḥajjāj related to us, quoting Layth; that ʿUqayl b. Khalid related to him, from Ibn Shihab, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, that Abū Hurayra said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (ṣaas) say, ‘I was provided for my mission with words that united and I was made victorious through awe. And while I slept I was brought the keys of all the treasuries on earth and they were placed in my hand.’”

Al-Bukhārī related this in a ḥadīth unique to himself from Yahyā b. Bukayr and Saʿīd b. ʿAfrī, both of them quoting al-Layth. According to him, Abū Hurayra said, “... and the Messenger of God (ṣaas) went on to say, ‘... and you are advancing to them.’”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Yazīd related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, who quoted the Messenger of God (ṣaas) as saying, ‘I was made victorious through awe and was provided with words that united. The earth was made for me a mosque and a purification; and while I was asleep, I was brought the keys to the treasuries of the world, and they piled up in my hand."

This chain of transmission is considered strong and excellent according to the criteria of Muslim, (yet) the chief authorities (on the traditions) did not include it. In both sahih collections are the words (of the Prophet (SAAS)), "And when Caesar expires there will be no other Caesar after him; when Chosroe expires there will be no Chosroe after him. And by Him in whose hand is my soul, the treasuries of both these shall be used in God's cause."

In the authentic hadith it is stated, "God gathered up for me the earth, all its parts to the east and to the west; all of that He gathered up for me shall be the domain of my people."

DIVISION.

Ibn Ishâq stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had completed the trench, Quraysh advanced at the confluence of the streams from Rûma, between al-Jurf and Zaghaba. They were accompanied by 10,000 of their Abyssinian mercenaries and their allies of Banû Kinâna and people from Tihâma. Ghaťafân advanced as well, along with their allies from Najd. They came to a halt at Dhanab Naqamâ, over by the side of Mt. Uhud.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims, 3,000 strong, came forth until they had Mt. Salâ behind them. There he encamped, with the trench between his forces and the enemy. The women and children were taken above into the forts."

Ibn Hishâm stated, "He placed Ibn Umm Maktûm in command of Medina."

I would comment that this makes reference to the Almighty's words, "(And remember) when they came at you from above you and from below you, and when eyes turned dim and hearts rose into throats, and you were having doubts about God" (sûrat al-Ahzâb; XXXIII, v.10).

Al-Bukhârî stated, "Uthmân b. Abî Shayba related to us, quoting Ubayd, from Hishâm b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿAʾisha, who said, 'The words, "when they came at you from above you and from below you" refer to the battle of al-khandaq.'"

Mûsâ b. Uqba stated, "When al-Ahzâb, the clans, positioned themselves around Medina, Banû Qurayža locked their fortresses against them."

Ibn Ishâq stated, "Ḥuyayy b. Akhṭab al-Nadri went to see Kaʾb b. Asad al-Qurazi, who was their designated contractor and trustee. When Kaʾb heard of his coming he locked the gate of his fortress against Ḥuyayy. When the latter asked permission to enter, Kaʾb refused to open up for him. Ḥuyayy called up to him, 'Kaʾb, open up for me, damn you!' 'Damn you, Ḥuyayy,' he replied. 'You're an evil man! I've made a pact with Muḥammad and I'm not going to break my agreement with him. I’ve never found him to be anything but trustworthy and truthful.’

‘Huyayy insisted, ‘Damn you, open up so I can talk to you!’ ‘I will not,’ Ka‘b replied. Huyayy then said, ‘I swear, the only reason you’re locking me out is that you’re scared at losing your jashisha, your cornbread, of having me eat it with you!’

‘This so embarrassed Ka‘b that he did open up. Then Huyayy told him, ‘Ka‘b, I bring you fame forever, and a huge mass.’ ‘And what is that?’ he asked. ‘I bring you Quraysh with their chieftains and nobles whom I have left encamped at the confluence of the streams at Rûma, along with Ghaṭafān, with their chiefs and nobles whom I have positioned at Dhanb Naqma, near Uhud. They have made a treaty that they will not leave until we completely destroy Muḥammad and those with him.’

‘Ka‘b responded, ‘What you bring me, I swear by God, is shame forever and a cloud that has lost its water; it thunders and there is lightning, but there is nothing in it. Damn you, Huyayy, leave me to maintain my pact with him; I have never found Muḥammad to be anything but trustworthy and honest.’

‘Amr b. Sa‘d al-Quraṭi spoke too, and did so well, according to the account given by Musa b. Uqba. He reminded them of the pact with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and of the treaty made by Ka‘b and them to aid him. He said, ‘If you won’t actually help him, then just leave him to his enemy.’

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Huyayy continued badgering Ka‘b to the extreme until he gave way in agreeing to break his pact with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and fighting him alongside the ahzab, the clans. This was on the understanding that Huyayy would guarantee him that if Quraysh and Ghaṭafān were to withdraw without destroying Muḥammad that he would join Ka‘b in his fort and they would share the same fate.

“And so Ka‘b b. Asad abrogated and dissolved the pact he had with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Musa b. Uqba stated, “Ka‘b b. Asad and Banu Qurayza required of Huyayy b. Akhṭāb that he take from Quraysh and Ghaṭafān hostages who would remain in custody so that no harm would come to themselves if his enemies were forced to retreat after failing to destroy Muḥammad. The hostages were to number 90 of their leading men, and Huyayy agreed to this. Thereupon Ka‘b b. Asad and Qurayza did break their pact and tore up the document on which it was recorded; the tribes Banu Sa‘na, Asad, Usayd and Thaqāba, however, went forth to join the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “When news of this reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and the Muslims, he sent out Sa‘d b. Mu‘ādh, he being at that time the leader of al-Aws, along with Sa‘d b. Ubāda, leader of Khazraj, accompanied by ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha and Khawāt b. Jubayr, telling them, ‘Go to those people and determine whether what we have heard is true, then inform me by some unintelligible remark I will understand but that will not weaken the resolve of the Muslims. If they are keeping to their pact, then you can report this openly to our men.' The emissaries then left and reached Ka'b and his men."

Mūsā b. Uqba went on, "And so they went with them into their fortress and called upon them to make friends and to renew the pact. However, the Qurayza men replied, 'What now? When he has broken our wing and deported them'—meaning Banū al-Naḍīr. They criticized the Messenger of God (SAAS), and Sa'd b. 'Ubāda began reviling them. This made them angry, so Sa'd b. Mu'ādh told him, 'I swear, we did not come here for this! Our issue with them is too serious to settle with bad language.'

"Sa'd b. Mu'ādh then spoke to them as follows, 'You know of the relationship between us, Banū Qurayza, and I'm afraid you might have happen to you the same as befell Banū al-Naḍīr, or even worse.' But they replied, 'You must have eaten your father's penis!' Sa'd b. Mu'ādh responded, 'It would have been much more appropriate and much better if you had responded differently.'"

Ibn Ishaq went on, "They criticized the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, 'Who is this "Messenger of God"? We have no pact with Muhammad.' At this Sa'd b. Mu'ādh, who was an excitable man, reviled them and they insulted him. Sa'd b. 'Ubāda told him, 'Don't insult them any more; our issue with them is too serious for name-calling.'

"Thereupon both Sa'eds and those with them returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and, after greeting him, said, "Udl and al-Qāraa!" By this they were referring to their treachery towards those who had gone to al-Rajf, Khubayb and his companions.

"At this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) announced, 'Allāhu Akbar! Rejoice, Muslims!'"

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) covered himself in his cloak, after receiving the news of Banū Qurayza, and went to lie down. He was absent a long time; and his men had become extremely concerned and fearful when they saw him lie down, for they realized no good news had come from Banū Qurayza. But eventually he raised his head and said, 'Rejoice at God's victory and for His help!'

"Next morning the two opposing sides closed and they exchanged fire with arrows and stones. Sa'd b. al-Musayyad said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the words, 'O God, I beseech You to fulfill Your pact and promise! O God, if it pleases You, You will (no longer) be worshipped!'"

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Thereupon the anxiety and fear increased. Their enemy came at them from above and below, so that the Muslims were very confused. Dissension arose, to the point where Mu'attib b. Qushayr, a brother of Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf, commented, 'Muhammad used to promise us that we would eat the treasures of Chosroe and Caesar, yet now we don't feel safe going to the toilet.' Similarly, Aws b. Qayzi said, while in the presence of others of his people, 'O Messenger of God, our homes are open to the enemy. Give us leave to return to our homes; they are outside Medina.'

"It is these persons and those like them who are referred to in the words of the Almighty, '(Remember) when the hypocrites and those with disease in their hearts said, "it was all misleading, what God and His messenger promised us!"' And (remember) when one group of them said, "O people of Yathrib, there is no place for you here, so go back!" And a group of them did ask the Prophet (SAAS), saying, "Our homes are undefended!" Yet they were not exposed; all they wanted was to flee.'" (surat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.12, 13).

Ibn Ishaaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in his forward position with the polytheists besieging him there for some 20 days, almost a month, but there was no actual warfare between them, apart from some discharge of arrows.

"It has been related to me by 'Asim b. Umar b. Qatada, and from another source I do not doubt, from al-Zuhri, that when conditions there became worse, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent to Umayn b. Hiṣn and al-Ḥarith b. 'Awf al-Murri – these men being leaders of Ghaṭafan – offering them a third of the dates of Medina if they were to go home and leave him and his men alone. And so peace talks were held between him and them, to the extent that they did sign a document. However, it was not properly witnessed with true intent for peace, but merely to reduce tension.

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) wished to do this, he sent for Sa'd b. Mu'adh and Sa'd b. Umara, informed them and sought their counsel. They responded, 'Messenger of God, is this something that you wish to do, something God has ordered you to do and which we must put into effect, or is it something you are doing for us?"

"He replied, 'It is something I am doing for you. I swear by God, I am only doing this because I see the Arabs shooting at you as if from one bow, and because they are attacking you from all sides. I want to break up their coalition against you.'

"Sa'd b. Mu'adh then told him, 'Messenger of God, we used to be disbelievers in God, and worshipped idols along with those people, not worshipping nor knowing God. At that time, they would never have dreamed of eating a single date of ours except as our guests or after purchase. Should we give them our property now, after God has honoured us with Islam, led us to Him and given us esteem through you and through Him? We'll have none of this! By God, all we'll give them is the sword, until God decides between us and them!"

"The Prophet (SAAS) responded, 'As you wish.' Thereupon Sa'd b. Mu'adh took the document and erased the writing from it, saying, 'Now let them fight us!'" of the Quraysh cavalry, consisting of 'Amr b. 'Abd Wudd b. Abū Qays, of Banū Āmir b. Lu'ayy, ʻIkrima b. Abū Jahl, Ḥubayrā b. Abū Wahb, both of Banū Makhzūm, ʻDirār b. al-Khaṭṭāb b. Mīrāḍās, of Banū Muḥārīb b. Fīhr, donned their armour and then went forth on horseback to the positions held by Banū Kināna. There they called out, ‘Banū Kināna, prepare for battle! You’re going to discover who are the true knights today!’

“They charged forward on their mounts, but stopped at the trench saying, when they saw it, ‘By God, this is a trick no Arab used before!’ They then headed for a narrow part of the trench and beat their horses, which charged over it and carried them to swampy ground between the trench and a fissure. Thereupon ʻAli b. Abū ʻṬālib and a group of Muslims came out and blocked the opening through which they had forced their horses. The enemy horsemen then charged at them.

ʻAmr b. ʻAbd Wudd had fought at Badr but been badly wounded and consequently had not been present at Uhud. At al-khandaq he had come out to battle wearing his insignia so that his rank would be evident. Now there on his horse, he cried out, ‘Who will accept my challenge to combat?’ ʻAli b. Abū ʻṬālib, God be pleased with him, came forward and said, ‘Amr, you used to swear by God that if any man of Quraysh offered you two choices, you would accept one of them.’ ‘That is so,’ ʻAmr replied. ‘Ali then said, ‘Well then, I invite you to God and to His messenger and to Islam!’ ‘I don’t need that,’ replied ʻAmr. ‘Then’, ʻAli continued, ‘I invite you to combat!’ ‘Amr responded, ‘Why this, nephew? I swear, I don’t want to kill you.’ ‘Ali replied, ‘But, by God, I want to kill you!’

“This enraged ʻAmr and he leaped off his horse and hobbled it and beat its head. He then advanced at ʻAli and they fought, circling around one another until ʻAli, God be pleased with him, eventually killed him. Their horsemen left in defeat, charging back across the trench in flight.”

According to Ibn Ishaq, ʻAli b. Abū ʻṬālib spoke the following verses on that:

“He sought aid from the stone (idol) in his stupidity, while I rightly sought support from the Lord of Muḥāammad.

I felt proud when I left him prostrate like a tree stump amid the fine sand and rocks.

And refrained from taking his armour, though if I had been defeated he would have had mine.

Do not think that God would abandon His faith and His prophet, you clansmen!”

Ibn Hishām stated that most authorities on poetry doubt that this poetry was by ʻAli.

Ibn Hishām also said that ʻIkrima tossed his spear away that day when he was defeated by ʻAmr, and that Hassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses on that subject:
“He fled and threw his spear to us; perhaps, ʿıkrım, you should not have done this.
You turned and ran like a male ostrich, looking only straight ahead.
You did not turn your back like a man would; the nape of your neck was like that of a furʾal.”

Ibn Hishām explained that the word furʾal means a young hyena.

The ḥāṣẓ al-Bayhaqī recounted in his Dalāʾīl al-Nubuwwa, quoting Ibn Ishaq in another place in the sīra, the life of the Prophet (ṢAAS), as follows, “ʿAmr b. ʿĀbd Wudd went forth in full armour and called out, ‘Who will meet me in combat?’ ʿAlī b. ʿAbū Ṭalib arose and said, ‘I’ll do it, Prophet of God.’ ‘But that is ʿAmr,’ he replied. ‘Sit down!’ ʿAmr called out again, ‘Will no man accept combat?’ He then began teasing them, saying, ‘What about that paradise of yours? Don’t you claim that any of you who are killed will enter there? So will not any man of you accept combat with me?’ ʿAlī again arose and asked, ‘May I, Messenger of God?’ ‘Sit down!’ he replied. Then ʿAmr called out a third time, speaking the verses, ‘I’m hoarse from calling out to them. Won’t someone come forth?

While those thought brave are too cowardly; I’ve stood here like an accomplished champion.
That is why I have always hastened forth before the fighting begins.
In a warrior, it is bravery and generosity that are the best qualities.’

“ʿAlī again arose and went over to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), ‘May I go, Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘But it is ʿAmr.’ ‘Even though it is ʿAmr!’ he insisted. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then gave him permission and he walked out towards him, reciting the verses,

‘Do not hurry away, for someone who is not weak is responding to your challenge.
He is a man of determination and wisdom, and truth is the resort of all who succeed.
I hope that I will make mourning women stand over you From the thrust of a spear that will always be mentioned in talk of warfare.’

“ʿAmr asked him, ‘Who are you?’ ‘I am ʿAlī,’ he replied.
“You mean ʿAbd Manāf’s son,” ʿAmr enquired. ‘No; I’m ʿAlī son of Abū Ṭalib,’ he responded. ‘Nephew,’ ʿAmr told him, ‘you have uncles who are more mature than you; I am reluctant to shed your blood.’ ʿAlī replied, ‘But, by God, I’m not reluctant to shed your blood.’ This angered ʿAmr and he dismounted and drew his sword like fire flashing. He then advanced furiously towards ʿAlī.
‘Ali met him with his leather shield. ‘Amr struck it and pierced it, his sword remaining stuck in it while it also struck ‘Ali’s head. Then ‘Ali struck him in his neck vein and he fell down. The dust had risen and the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard someone saying, ‘Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great!’ And so we knew that ‘Ali had killed him. ‘Ali then spoke the lines,

‘Is it against me that the horsemen thus charge; my companions held me back from them.
My zeal today and a resolve in my mind, not just in my (mouth) tooth.’

“He then went on to speak the line,

‘He worshipped the stone (idol) in his stupidity, while
I wisely sought aid from Muhammad’s Lord.’

“Then ‘Ali went on towards the Messenger of God (SAAS), his face beaming, and ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb asked him, ‘Did you strip off his armour? It’s the best armour among the Arabs.’ ‘Ali responded, ‘As I struck him, he shielded his private parts from me, and I felt embarrassed to despoil my own cousin.’

Ibn Ishāq further stated, as quoted by al-Bayhaqī, that ‘Ali struck him at the collarbone, his weapon going on down to emerge from his belly, and that ‘Amr died in the trench. The polytheists then sent word to the Messenger of God (SAAS), seeking to purchase his corpse for 10,000 (dirhams). But he responded, “He’s yours. We don’t profit from the dead.”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Naṣr b. Bāb related to us, quoting Ḥajjāj, from al-Ḥakam, from Miqṣam, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The Muslims killed at the trench a polytheist and were given money for his corpse. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said “Give them back the money for his corpse; his corpse is evil, and so would be the blood-money.” He would not accept anything from them.’”

Al-Bayhaqī narrated this from a hadith of Ḩammād b. Salama, from Ḥajjāj, he being Ibn Arṭāt, from al-Ḥakam, from Miqṣam, from Ibn ‘Abbās, whom he quoted as saying that a polytheist was killed at the battle of al-Ḥzhāb and that a message was then sent to the Messenger of God (SAAS) offering payment of 12,000 (dirhams) for his body. He responded, “There’s no good in his body, nor in the price for it.”

Al-Tirmidhī related this from a hadith of Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Ibn Abū Laylā, from al-Ḥakam, from Miqṣam, from Ibn ‘Abbās. He categorized this hadith as gharīb, “unilateral”.

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba recounted that it was actually the body of Nawfāl b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Makhzūmī they requested after he was killed, and that it was for him that they offered blood-money. But he (the Prophet (SAAS)) responded, “He is evil, and so would be the blood-money; God has cursed him and his blood-money. We have no intent to take blood-money for him. And we will not prevent you from burying him.”

Yunus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishaq as stating, “Nawfal b. ‘Abd Allah b. al-Mughira al-Makhzumi came forth and made a challenge for combat. Al-Zubayr accepted and went out to battle him, striking him so hard that he split him in two and badly dented his sword. He then left, reciting the line, ‘I’m a man who protects and defends the Prophet, the chosen one, al-ummi”, the untutored.’”

Ibn Jarir stated that when Nawfal became trapped in the trench, the Muslims began hurling rocks at him. So he said, “A death better than this, I pray you, fellow Arabs!” At that ‘Ali went down and killed him. The polytheists then asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) for his body, offering a price for it. But he refused to take anything from them and allowed them to remove it.

This hadith is to be categorized as gharib, “unilateral”, from two sources.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated through Hammad b. Yazid, from Hisham b. Urwa, from his father, from ‘Abd Allah b. al-Zubayr, who said, “At the battle of al-khandaq, I was put in the fortress with the women and children. With me was ‘Umar b. Abū Salama, who would bend over so that I could get on his back and observe. I saw my father charging first here, then there, attacking everything that came before him. That evening he joined us in the fortress, and I commented to him, ‘Father, I watched what you did today!’ He responded, ‘So you saw me, son!’ ‘Yes,’ I affirmed. ‘Well, may my father and mother be your ransom!’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abū Layla, that is ‘Abd Allah b. Sahl b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Sahl al-Ansārī, brother of Banū Ḥarīthah, related to me that ‘A’isha, mother of the faithful, was in the fort of Banū Ḥarīthah, one of the most secure of the Medina forts, during the battle of al-khandaq. Umm Sa’d b. Mu‘adh was with her there. ‘A’isha said, That was before the veil was imposed on us. Sa’d passed by wearing armour so small that his whole arm was exposed. He was carrying a spear and as he brandished it, he would call out,

There’s no harm in death when the time is right!”

‘His mother called out to him, “Hurry along, son! By God, you’re late already!” I commented to her, “Umm Sa’d, I just wish Sa’d’s armour was larger.” I was afraid he would be struck in those very places; and indeed an arrow was shot at Sa’d b. Mu‘adh that severed the artery of his arm.””

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Āsim b. ‘Umar b. Qatada told me, ‘It was Hibbān b. Qays b. al-Ariqa of Banū Āmir b. Lu‘ayy who shot at him and when the arrow struck, 36. This adjective has been the subject of much study. Some consider it to refer to someone coming from Mecca, known as the Umm al-Qura, “the mother of all cities”. Others interpret it to mean unlettered, untutored and therefore a reference to the miraculous nature of the Qurān and the impossibility of its having been composed by someone who lacked education.

he called out, 'Take that from me; I'm Ibn al-'Ariqa!' Sa'd responded, 'May God make your face sweat' in hell! O God, if You will prolong this battle with Quraysh, preserve me for it! For there is no people I would rather fight than those who have harmed Your messenger, disbelieved in him and expelled him. But if You decree (continued) war between us and them, then make me a witness to it, and do not make me die before letting me engage in battle with Banū Qurayza!''

Ibn Ḩishāq went on, "A reliable source related to me, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ka'b b. Mālik, that the latter would say, 'Actually, it was Abū Usāma al-Jushami, an ally of Banū Makhzūm, who struck Sa'd that day.' And Abū Usāma composed the following verse on the subject that he recited to Ṣakīma b. Abī Jahl:

'Ikrīma, were you not blaming me when you said, "May Khālid be your ransom at the forts of Medina?" Was it not I who struck Sa'd with an arrow in his elbow, causing a wound that would not congeal? It caused Sa'd's death and made old women and well-breasted virgins mourn.

It was you who defended him when ʿUbayda called in his distress to a group of them,

Those times when they avoided his path, while at other times they were too scared to act.'"

Ibn Ḩishāq commented, "God knows which account is correct."

Ibn Ḩishām stated, "It is also said that it was Khāfaja b. ʿĀsim b. Ḥībbān who struck Sa'd."

I would comment that God did respond to the plea of His servant Sa'd b. Muʿādh concerning Banū Qurayza. God did please him, and He thus ruled regarding them with strength and ease; and He made it be they who requested that, as will be explained hereafter. He decreed that their warriors be slain and their children be taken captive. And so the Messenger of God (ṣaas) said to him, "You issued judgement concerning them, by the decision of God above the seven heavens."

Ibn Ḩishāq stated, "Yaḥyā b. ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, quoting his father ʿAbbād as having said, ʿṢaffiyā, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, was in Fārā, the castle of Ḥassān b. Ṭābit and she said, Ḥassān was there with us along with the women and children. A Jew passed by and began circling around the castle. Banū Qurayza had begun fighting and had cut off its relations with the Messenger of God (ṣaas). There was no one there to protect us while the Messenger of God (ṣaas) and the Muslims were so engaged with the enemy that there was no one who could leave them and come to us if someone should attack us. So I said, Ḥassān, as you can see, that Jew is circling the castle"

37. The word 'ariqa in the name of the Quraysh archer means to sweat; hence Sa'd's response. and I am concerned that he might inform the Jews over behind us of where our weakness lies, now that the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men are so busy. Go down to him and kill him!’ He replied, ‘God forgive you, daughter of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib! You must know I could never do such as thing as that.’”

“She went on, ‘When he said this to me and I saw I could expect nothing from him, I put on a waist-wrapper then took a cudgel and went down from the fort towards him. Then I struck him with the cudgel till I had killed him. When I had finished with him, I returned to the fort and said, ‘Hassān, now you go down and plunder him; the only thing that prevented me doing it was his being a man.’ He replied, I don’t need to plunder him, daughter of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib!’””

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “The polytheists surrounded the Muslims, so rendering them with their squadrons inside a kind of fortress. They besieged them for some 20 nights, coming at them from every side, so that they never knew whether or not (the attack) was over.”

He went on, “They sent one large detachment towards where the Messenger of God (SAAS) was stationed, and they did battle all day until night came. When it was time for the al-ṣaḥr prayer, the enemy force was still at hand and so neither the Prophet (SAAS) nor any of the men with him could perform the al-ṣaḥr prayer in the manner they wished. When, at night, the enemy force turned away, people claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘They kept us from the ʿṣr prayer; may God fill their bellies and their hearts (and their graves,’ according to one report) with fire!’

“When conditions worsened, so did the attitude of many people and they began saying ugly things. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw the state of his men and their ill mood, he tried to encourage them, saying, ‘By Him who hears my soul in His hand, He will give you relief from the distress you are suffering. I certainly hope to circumambulate in safety around the Ancient House and that God will present me with the keys to the ka’ba, and that God will destroy Caesar and Chosroe and that we will expend their wealth in God’s cause!’”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Ishāq related to us, quoting Rawḥ, quoting Hishām, from Muḥammad, from ʿAbīda, from ʿAlī, who quoted the Prophet (SAAS) as having said at the battle of al-khandaq, ‘May God fill with fire their houses above them and their graves, for them having kept us from the middle prayer until the sun set.’”

The rest of the narrators, except for Ibn Mājah, related it similarly from various lines back to Hishām b. Ḥassān, from Muḥammad b. Sirin, from Ubayḍa, from ʿAlī. Muslim and al-Tirmidhī related it through Saʿīd b. Abū Urūba, from Qatāda, from Abū Ḥassān al-Aʿrađ, from Ubayḍa, from ʿAlī. Al-Tirmidhī categorized the ḥadīth as hasan, saḥīḥ, “good and authentic”.

Then al-Bukhārī stated, “Al-Makki b. Ibrāhīm related to us, quoting Hishām, from Yahyā, from Abū Salama, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, that ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb came along, at the battle of al-khandaq, after the sun had set, and began cursing the Quraysh unbelievers. He said, 'Messenger of God, I could scarcely perform my prayers before the sun had almost set.' The Prophet (SAAS) responded, 'By God, I didn't perform it!' We then went on down with the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Buṭḥān, and he performed the prayer ablutions, as did we too. He then performed the ‘āṣr prayer after the sun had set and thereafter went on to perform the maghrib, after sunset, prayer.”

Al-Bukhārī also related this, as did Muslim, al-Tirmidhī, and al-Nasā’ī, from various lines, back to Yahyā b. Abū Kathīr, from Abū Salama.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Abd al-Ṣamad related to us, quoting Thābit, quoting Hilal, from Ịkrima, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) engaged the enemy in battle and had not finished doing so when it became too late to perform the al-‘asr prayer. When he realized this, he said, “O God, may you fill with fire the homes and graves of those who kept us from performing the ṣalāt al-musātā” (“the medial prayer”).’”

Only Aḥmad gives wording like this; it comes to us from an account of Hilal b. Khabbāb al-‘Abdi al-Kūfī, a trustworthy source, vouched for by al-Tirmidhī and others.

Some scholars point to these ahadith as evidence for the prayer ṣalāt al-musātā being that of al-‘asr, as is implied in them. The qādi al-Mawardi\textsuperscript{38} accepted this for the “school” of al-Shāfi‘ī because of the authenticity of this hadith.

I have examined this carefully with quotations and evidences with reference to the words of the Almighty, “Attend well to the prayers, and to the salāt al-mustā‘, and stand up before God, in humility” (surat al-Baqara; II, v.238).

Some authorities make reference to this action to justify delaying the prayer because of battle; this is the view of Makhlūl and al-Awzā‘ī.

Al-Bukhārī devoted a section to this and used this hadith and the statement made by the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he ordered his men into action against Banū Qurayza, as will be shown. He quotes the statement, “None of you should perform the al-‘asr prayer unless it be at where the Banū Qurayza are.” Some of the men actually performed the ‘āṣr prayer on the way, while others of them only did so after reaching there, following the sunset. He (the Prophet (SAAS)) did not deal harshly with either of the two groups. He (al-Bukhārī) also quoted as his authorities the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS), and those others present with them at the siege of Tastur in 20 AH, in the time of ‘Umar, where they performed the morning prayer after sunrise. This was due to the fighting and to the approaching defeat of the fortress.

Other scholars, in fact the majority of them, including al-Shāfi‘ī, stated that this procedure at the battle of al-khandaq was abrogated by the legalization of the ṣalāt al-khawf thereafter; at that time this had not been made legal and that was why they postponed it that day. But this is an undecided issue.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “A group of scholars maintain that the Prophet (ṢAAS) performed the al-khawf prayer at Usfān.”

Ibn Ishāq, who is certainly the authority on the maghāzi, the military engagements, mentions this incident before al-khandaq, as he had with Dhāt al-Riqa’, to which he also referred before al-khandaq. But God knows best.

The statement that the postponement of the prayer at the battle of al-khandaq came about inadvertently, as the commentators on (the sahih collection) of Muslim related from certain others, is problematical; for it is unlikely that this would have occurred for such a large group, bearing in mind their strong determination to observe the prayers. How could this be when it is related that on that day they put off the prayers of the al-zuhr, noon, the al-‘asr, the late afternoon, and the al-maghrib, the sunset, until the whole group prayed at the time of the al-‘isha’, the evening, according to the account of Abū Hurayra and Abū Sa‘īd?

Imām Ahmad stated, “Both Yazīd and Ḥajjāj related to us as follows, ‘Ibn Abū Dhi‘b related to us, from al-Maqbūrī, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū Sa‘īd al-Khuḍrī, who quoted his father as saying, “We were pinned down at al-khandaq until part of the night had gone by and eventually we were relieved.” That relates to the statement, “God saved the believers in battle; and God is mighty, powerful”’” (surat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.25). So the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called for Bilāl, gave him his orders, and set about performing the al-zuhr prayer as he would do at its normal time. Then he performed in turn the prayers for al-‘asr, al-maghrib and al-‘isha’. He did this before he dismounted. Ḥajjāj stated, “This is in keeping with the instruction concerning the ṣalāt al-khawf: ‘If you are afraid, it can be performed on foot or while mounted’” (surat al-Baqara; II, v.239).

Al-Nasā’ī related this from al-Fallās, from Yāḥyā al-Qaṭṭān, from Ibn Abū Dhi‘b. He said, “At al-khandaq the polytheists kept us from the al-zuhr prayer until the sun had set.” He then related the ḥadīth as above.

Aḥmad stated, “Hushaym related to us, quoting Abū al-Zubayr, from Nāfi‘ b. Juba‘yra, from Abū Ubayda b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Mas‘ūd, from his father, to the effect that at al-khandaq the polytheists kept the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from performing four prayers until such part of the night had passed that God had determined. And so he gave orders to Bilāl, who gave the call to prayer. He then set about praying the al-zuhr, followed by the al-‘asr, al-maghrib and then al-‘isha’.”

he gave orders to Bilal who made the call for prayer, and then he performed the al-zuhr. Thereafter, he ordered Bilal to again make the call and then performed the al-‘asr. Again he ordered Bilal to make the call and then performed the al-maghrib, after which he once more ordered him to make the call and then performed the al-‘ishâ’. He then stated, ‘There is not upon the face of the earth any people but you making mention of God’s name at this hour.’”

Al-Bazzâr was alone in giving this hadîth. And he stated, “We know of this only through this line of authorities; however, some others relate it from ‘Abd al-Karim, from Mujâhid, from Abû ‘Ubâyda, from ‘Abd Allah.”

CONCERNING THE PRAYERS SPOKEN BY THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) AGAINST THE AHZÂB, THE CLANS.

And how God used His might and power to deal with them in response to His messenger (SAAS), and to guard his noble person. He therefore sent their minds into turmoil and thereafter turned a fierce wind upon them and shook their bodies.

Imâm Ahmad stated, “Abû ‘Amir related to us, quoting al-Zubayr – meaning Ibn ‘Abd Allah – quoting Rabî’î b. Abû Sa‘îd al-Khudari, from his father, who said, ‘At al-khandaq, we asked, “Messenger of God, is there something we should speak? For the hearts have reached the throats!” He replied, “Yes: ‘O God protect our weaknesses and pacify our fears.’” And then God smote with wind the faces of His enemies.’”

Ibn Abû Hatîm related this in his Tafsîr (Exegesis), from his father, from Abû ‘Amir – meaning al-‘Aqâdî – from al-Zubayr b. ‘Abd Allah, freed-man of Úthmân b. ‘Affân, from Rabî’î b. ‘Abd Allah, that Abû Sa‘îd b. ‘Abd Allah, from his father, from Abû Sa‘îd, who related it, and this is the correct (line).

Imâm Ahmad stated, “Husayn related to us, from Ibn Abû Dhibîb, from a man of Banû Salama, from Jâbîr b. ‘Abd Allah, that the Prophet (SAAS) came to the place of prayer at the battle of al-Ahzâb, took off his cloak, and stood with his hands raised and outstretched invoking God against them; and he did not pray.” He (Jâbîr) then said, “After that he again came and invoked God against them, then prayed.”

It is established in both sahih collections, from ahâdith of Ismâ‘îl b. Abû Khâlid, from ‘Abd Allah b. Abû Awfâ, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) invoked God against the clans, saying, ‘O God, Revealer of the Book, Quick to take account, defeat the clans! O God, defeat them, and shake them!’”

In one account the wording is, “O God, defeat them and give us victory over them!”

Al-Bukhârî related from Qutayba, from al-Layth, from Sa‘îd al-Maqburt, from his father, from Abû Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) used to say, “There is no god but God alone; He gave power to His forces, gave victory to His slave and overcame the clans by Himself. There is nothing after Him.”
Ibn Isḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his men remained in that state of fear and difficulty as God described at the attacks of their enemy who came at them from above and from below. Eventually Nu‘aym b. Mas‘ūd b. ‘Amir b. Unayf b. Thaqaba b. Qunfudh b. Hilal b. Khalāwa b. Ashja‘ b. Rayth b. Ghaṭafān went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Messenger of God, I have accepted Islam, but my people do not know of this. Give me whatever orders you wish.’ He replied, ‘You are only one man; use trickery to relieve us of them, if you can. War is deception.’

“Nu‘aym b. Mas‘ūd then left and went out to Banū Qurayẓa whose close companion he had been before Islam. He reminded them of his friendship and association with them. They accepted this and expressed their confidence in him. He then told them that Quraysh and Ghaṭafān were not in the same situation as themselves. The battle area, he reminded them, was their territory and the site of their property, wives and children. He observed that they had nowhere else to go, whereas Quraysh and Ghaṭafān had come in to do battle against Muḥammad and his men from elsewhere. Banū Qurayẓa, he observed, had joined in battling him even though territory, women and property of the other tribes were elsewhere. This meant that Quraysh and Ghaṭafān would take any opportunity they could, but if they were unsuccessful, they would return home, leaving the lands of Banū Qurayẓa between themselves and their enemy. And then Banū Qurayẓa would have insufficient power to withstand him if they were left alone. He advised them, therefore, not to participate with Quraysh and Ghaṭafān in the fighting without taking some of the leaders of the two tribes as hostages to guarantee that they would fight on against Muḥammad until they defeated him. Banū Qurayẓa agreed to this.

“Nu‘aym then went to Quraysh and reminded Abū Sufyān and those with him of his friendship for them and alienation from Muḥammad. He then told them he had some information he thought he should impart to them and he asked them to keep it confidential. They accepted this, and he then told them what he had told Quraysh and advised them to be cautious.

“When the night of the sabbath of Shawwāl in 5 AH arrived, God so arranged it for His messenger (ṢAAS) that Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb and the leaders of Ghaṭafān sent ‘Ikrima b. Abū Jahl and some other Quraysh and Ghaṭafān men to Banū Qurayṣa and told them that they were not in permanent quarters and that their horses and camels were dying. They asked them to prepare for battle that would destroy and rid them of Muḥammad. Banū Qurayṣa replied that it was a day when they could do nothing; they referred to the fate of some of them who had acted previously on that day (the sabbath). They also refused to participate in fighting Muḥammad until they received hostages who would guarantee continued action until he was defeated. They expressed their fear that if their allies suffered severe losses in the fighting, they would retreat home, leaving themselves alone with the enemy on their territory and that they would not have the power to defeat him.

“When their messengers returned with news of the response made by Banū Qurayṣa, Quraysh and Ghaṭafān believed in what Nuʿaym b. Maṣūd had told them. And so they sent the message back that they would not deliver a single man over to Banū Qurayṣa, and that it was up to them whether or not to come out to engage in battle. When the messengers brought them this response, Banū Qurayṣa believed that what Nuʿaym b. Maṣūd had told them was true. They were sure that Quraysh and Ghaṭafān would seize any opportunities they had, but otherwise would disperse into their own territories, thus leaving them alone to cope with the Muslims. They therefore sent back to Quraysh and Ghaṭafān that they would only do battle along with them if they were to hand over hostages to them.

“Quraysh and Ghaṭafān refused this; God thus created dissension between them and then that night He sent a fierce wind against them, on an extremely cold winter's night that overturned their cooking pots and vessels.”

This account related about Nuʿaym b. Maṣūd by Ibn Ishāq is better than that related by Muṣā b. Uqba.

Al-Bayhaqi gave it in his Dalāʾil (The Signs). The gist of his narration was that what had reached him was that Nuʿaym b. Maṣūd would spread abroad whatever news he learned. And it so happened that one evening the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) beckoned to him to come over as he passed by and asked him what he had heard. Nuʿaym replied that Quraysh and Ghaṭafān had sent to Banū Qurayṣa asking them to come forth in battle to finish off the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Banū Qurayṣa had agreed to this on condition that hostages be given over to them. It had previously been related that they had only abrogated the pact at the hands of Huyayy b. Akhṭab on condition that hostages would be brought to them as security.

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said to Nuʿaym, “I wish to tell you something in confidence; do not repeat it. They sent to me seeking peace if I would restore Banū al-Naḍir to their homes and property.”

Following this, Nuʿaym b. Maṣūd left for Ghaṭafān and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, “Warfare is deception; perhaps God will act on our behalf.”
Nuwaym went to Quraysh and Ghaṭafān and told them this news and they hastily despatched ʿIkrima and a group of men to Banū Qurayṣa asking them to join in the fighting alongside them. It happened to be a sabbath, however, that the Jews held sacred; moreover, they asked for hostages as security. And so God came between them and they disagreed with one another.

I would comment that it is likely that when Banū Qurayṣa gave up hope of settling their difficulties with Quraysh and Ghaṭafān, they did send to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), requesting peace on condition that he restore Banū al-Naḍīr to Medina. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) learned of their dispute and how God had broken their unity, he despatched ʿUdhayfa b. al-Ṭamān over to them to see what the enemy was doing that night.”

He went on, “Yazid b. Ziyād related to me, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Qurayḥ, who said, ‘A man from Kiifā asked ʿUdhayfa b. al-Ṭamān, ‘Abū ʿAbd Allāh, have you actually seen the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and were you really a Companion of his?’ ‘Oh yes, nephew,’ he replied. ‘And how did you get by?’ he asked. ʿUdhayfa replied, ‘It was difficult for us, I swear by God.’ ‘I swear,’ commented the Kiifān, ‘if we’d lived at his time, we’d never have let his foot so much as touch the ground; we’d have carried him on our shoulders.’ ʿUdhayfa responded, ‘Nephew, I swear I see us now with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at al-khandaq, and after he had prayed for part of the night, he turned to us and asked, “Who will volunteer to go and see what the enemy is doing, and then come back?” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stipulated that if the volunteer would come back, he would ask God that the man be his Companion in paradise. But so severe was the fear, cold and hunger, that not one person volunteered. Since no one had risen, he called upon me, and once he had done so, I had no alternative but to do so. He then told me, “ʿUdhayfa, go and infiltrate the enemy. Go and see what they are doing, but don’t cause any trouble; then return to us.”

“So I did so. The gale and God’s soldiers were greatly damaging them, leaving them no fire nor pots, nor tents upright. Ābū Sufyān arose and said, “Quraysh, every man check out the person sitting next to him.”

“At this I took the hand of the man next to me and asked him his name. He told me who he was. Ābū Sufyān then said, “We’re not in a permanent camp, our horses and camels are dying, and Banū Qurayṣa are at odds with us, and we’ve heard things about them that we don’t like. You can see what we’ve lost due to the gale, how our cooking pots won’t stay upright, and we can’t keep fires burning and our tents standing. You should leave, as I am about to do.” He then went to his camel which was hobbled, mounted it, struck it so that it arose on three legs since he only unhobbled it when it was standing. If it had not been for the promise the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made me make not to cause trouble, I could have shot him with an arrow.”
Hudhayfa went on, “So I returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and found him standing in prayer shrouded in a wrap belonging to one of his wives. When he saw me, he asked me to come in (to sit) at his feet and threw an end of the wrap over me. He then bowed and prostrated, while I was under it. When he was finished, I related the news to him. When Ghațafān heard what Quraysh had done, they hurried off home.”

This hadith is munqati’, incomplete in its line, in this version.

Muslim b. Ḥajjaj related this hadith in his saḥth collection, from an account of al-A‘mash, from ʿIbrāhīm b. Yāzīd al-Taymi, from his father, who said, “We were with Hudhayfa when a man told him, ‘If I had been alive with the Messenger of God (SAAS) I would have fought alongside him heroically.’ ‘Would you, indeed?’ Hudhayfa asked him and went on, ‘Once we were there at the battle of al-ʾAhzāb with the Messenger of God (SAAS). It was night time and there was a fierce, cold gale blowing. He asked us, “Is there no man who will bring me news of the enemy and be with me at Judgement Day?” When none of us responded, he asked the same question a second and a third time. Then he said, “Hudhayfa, you go and bring us news of the enemy.” Since he had called upon me by name, I had no alternative but to get up. He then said, “Bring me news of them without giving them any cause for alarm about me.” So I left and made my way to them, feeling as if I was walking through a public bath! I found Abū Sufyān there warming his back to the fire. I placed an arrow in the centre of my bow and was about to release it when I remembered how the Messenger of God (SAAS) had told me not to give them any alarm about him. If I had shot it, I would have hit him. I then left to return to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and again the feeling of walking in a public bath overcame me. When I arrived back, I felt very cold and chilled once again. I told this to him and he put over me part of the cloak he was wearing as he prayed. I slept right on through till morning. When he spoke to me, saying, “Up you get, sleepy-head!”’”

Al-Ḥākim related this hadith, as did the ḥāfuẓ al-Bayhaqī in his Ḍalā‘īl, in an extended form from a hadith of ʾIkrima b. ʿAmmār, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Duʿālī, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, the nephew of Hudhayfa, who said, “Hudhayfa related the events in which they had participated with the Messenger of God (SAAS). Those sitting listening to him commented how they would have behaved in various ways if they had been present. Hudhayfa then said, ‘You shouldn’t wish for that. There we were, drawn up in battle array, keeping down, while Abū Sufyān and his forces were above us, while the Jews of Bani Qurayza were down below us, making us fear for our families. We never experienced any night so black and violent as that; the winds blew fiercely with great explosions like thunderbolts. It was so dark we couldn’t even see our fingers.

‘The backsliders began asking the Prophet (SAAS) permission to withdraw, saying that their homes were exposed – though they were not exposed. He gave his permission to leave to each person who asked and so they would slip away. We were some 300 men in number. The Messenger of God (SAAS) received us one by one until eventually my turn came; I had nothing on to protect me from the enemy and the cold except a woollen coat of my wife that came down no further than my knees. When he came to me I was kneeling down. He asked, “And who is this?” “Hudhayfa,” I replied, “Hudhayfa, eh?” “Yes, Messenger of God,” I responded, keeping down close to the ground and unwilling to get up. But I did rise and he said, “There’s activity among the enemy; bring me news of them.” Actually, I was the most terrified of our men and certainly the coldest.

“When I left, the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the words, “O God, protect him from danger from his front and rear, from his left and his right, from above him and from below him.” And, I swear, I felt from then on entirely empty of the fear and cold God had previously created inside me! As I was turning to leave, he called out, “Hudhayfa, don’t cause any disturbance in the enemy before you come back to me.”

“As I approached the enemy camp, I saw the light of a fire they had burning. There I saw a dark-skinned, heavy-set man holding his hands out above the fire and then wiping them on his waist, saying, “Get the mounts ready!” I had not known Abii Sufyân before that; I took out an arrow with white feathered flights from my quiver and positioned it in my bow to shoot it in the light of the fire, but then remembered how the Messenger of God (SAAS) had told me not to cause any disturbance before I returned to him. So I stopped and returned the arrow to my quiver. Then I mustered up my courage and entered their camp. Those men closest to me were of Banî ‘Amir, and they were saying that they should mount up and leave, since they had no permanent quarters there and that the wind was blowing straight through their camp. I could hear the sounds of the stones raised by the wind striking their mounts and their equipment. I left and went on my way back to the Messenger of God (SAAS). Half way or thereabouts, I came across 20 or so horsemen, fully shrouded, who told me, “Tell your master that God has saved him!”

“So I returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and found him wrapped up in a blanket, praying. No sooner was I back than I felt terribly cold again and began shivering. As he prayed, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gestured to me and when I drew near him, he spread his blanket out over me. When something troubled the Messenger of God (SAAS), he would pray. I made my report about the enemy and how they had been moving out when I left the camp. Then Almighty God revealed, “O you who believe, remember God’s favour to you, when troops came to you and We sent down against them a wind and (Our) troops you could not see. God is fully aware of what you do ...” up to and including, “And God was sufficient for the believers in battle. God is Almighty, Powerful”” (ṣūrat al-Ahzâb; XXXIII, v.9–25).

That is, God removed their enemy from them by the wind He sent against them and the troops of angels and others He sent to them. And so, “God saved the believers from battle.” That is, they did not need to face them in fighting and in combat because the Almighty and All-Powerful drew them away through His power and strength.

This is why it is established in both sahih collections from Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to say, ‘There is no god but God alone; He was sincere in His promise and aided His servant, gave power to His troops and defeated the Ahzab all by Himself. After Him there is nothing.’”

Regarding His words, “God saved the believers from battle”, this is a reference to the cessation of war between the two sides. That is what occurred; thereafter, Quraysh never again instituted warfare against the Muslims. As Muḥammad b. Ishāq, God be pleased with him, stated, “When the troops at al-khandāq left there, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, so it has been related to me, ‘After this year, Quraysh will not go to war against you, but you will against them.’”

He went on, “And Quraysh did not attack thereafter, whereas they (the Muslims) did attack them, until God gave him victory over Mecca.” This report comes from Ibn Ishāq.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Yahyā related to us, from Sufyān, that Abū Ishāq related to him, ‘I heard Sulaymān b. Ṣurad, God be pleased with him, say, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Now we will attack them, but not they us.’’”

Al-Bukhārī related this thus from a hadith of Iṣmā’īl and Sufyān al-Thawrī, both of whom quoted Abū Ishāq al-Sabi‘, from Sulaymān b. Ṣurad.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Three Muslims of Bani ‘Abd al-Ashhal were martyred at the battle of al-khandāq; they were Sa‘d b. Mu‘ādh” — extensive information about his death will follow — “Anas b. Aws b. ʿAtik b. ʿAmr, and ʿAbd Allāh b. SAal. Also killed were al-Ṭufayl b. al-Nu‘mān, Tha‘labā b. Ghanāma, both of Jashm and of Sulaymān, and Ka‘b b. Zayd al-Najārī, who was killed by a stray arrow.

“Three of the polytheists were killed. These were Munabih b. Uthmān b. ʿUbayd b. al-Sabbāq b. ʿAbd al-Dār, who was struck by an arrow and later died from his wound in Mecca, Nawfal b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mughīra who charged across the trench on his horse and became bogged down and killed there; the polytheists offered a large sum for his body, as is related above. And there was ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Wudd al-ʿAmrī, who was killed by ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalīb.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “A trustworthy authority related to me that al-Zuhri said, “Alī that day killed ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Wudd, whose son was Ḥasāl b. ʿAmr.”

Ibn Hishām also stated, “He is known both as ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Wudd and ʿAmr b. ʿAbd.”

Section: On the Expedition against Banū Qurayza.

On the severe violence God Almighty brought down upon them, along with the painful punishment He had prepared for them in the hereafter.
All that was due to their disbelief, their breaking of the pacts between themselves and the Messenger of God (SAAS) and their allying themselves with the ahzāb, the clans, against him. None of that did them any good and brought the wrath of God and His messenger down upon them, a bad bargain for them in this world and the next.

God Almighty had stated, "And God turned back in their rage those who disbelieved, and they obtained no good advantage. God saved the believers from battle; and God is mighty, powerful. And He brought down those of the people of the Book who supported them from their fortresses, and He cast terror into their hearts; you killed one group (of them) and took prisoner another. And He made you inherit their lands, homes and property, along with a land you had not yet trodden. And God has power over all things" (sūrat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.25–27).

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Muḥammad b. Muqātīl related to us, quoting ‘Abd Allah, quoting Mūsā b. ‘Uqba, from Sālim, and Na‘īr, from ‘Abd Allāh, who said that whenever the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from a military expedition, the pilgrimages of the hajj or the al-‘umra, he would first affirm the greatness of God, and then he would say, ‘There is no god but God alone! He has no associate. All dominion is His. All praise is due to Him. He has power over all things; we (return) repenting, seeking forgiveness, praying, prostrating and praising our Lord. God is true to His promise; He gave aid to His servant and defeated the ahzāb by Himself.’" Muḥammad b. Ishaq, God be pleased with him, stated, “Next morning the Messenger of God (SAAS) left the trench accompanied by the Muslims and returned to Medina, there laying down their arms.

“At the noon prayer, Gabriel, so al-Zuhri told me, came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), wearing a turban embroidered in silk and gold, riding a mule with a saddle adorned with a brocade cloth, and asked, ‘Have you put down your weapons then, Messenger of God?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘Well,’ Gabriel informed him, ‘the angels have not yet put down theirs; I’ve come to you now from pursuing the enemy. God commands you, Muḥammad, to go against Bani Qurayza. I myself am heading for them and am going to shake them up!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then summoned a muezzin and an announcement was made: ‘All those who hear and obey should perform the al-‘asr prayer only among Banū Qurayza. I myself am heading for them and am going to shake them up!’

Ibn Hishām stated that he placed Ibn Umm Maktūm in command over Medina.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “It was related to me by ‘Abd Allah b. Abū Shayba, quoting Ibn Numayr, from Hishām, from his father, who quoted A‘īsha as saying, ‘When the Prophet (SAAS) returned from the trench and he had put down his arms and taken a bath, Gabriel came to him and said, “So you have put down your arms! We’ve not done so, I swear by God! Go forth to them!” “Where to?”
he asked. “Over here.” Gabriel said, gesturing towards Banū Qurayṣa. And so the Prophet (Ṣaḥḥa) did go forth.’”

Al-Ḥākim stated, “Ḥasan related to us, quoting Ḥammād b. Ṣalāma, from Hishām b. ʿUrwa, from his father, from ʿAlī, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) had disposed of the ʾahḍāb, he entered the bathhouse to bathe. Then Gabriel came and I could see, across the house, that his head was reddened with dust. He said, “Muḥammad, you’ve laid down your arms then!” “We have laid down our arms,” he replied. Gabriel said, “Well, we’ve not laid down ours yet. Get up after Banū Qurayṣa!”’”

Al-Bukhārī then stated, “Mūsā related to us, quoting Jarir b. Ḥāzim, from Ḥumayd b. Hilāl, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘It was as though I could see the dust rising in the street of Banū Ghamr (in Medina) due to the marching of Gabriel’s troops when the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) set out against Banū Qurayṣa.’”

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Asmāʾ related to us, quoting Juwayriyya b. Asmāʾ, from Nāṣir, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) stated at the battle of al-Ahzāb, “Let no one perform the al-ṣaʿr prayer unless it be among Banū Qurayṣa!”’ Time for the al-ṣaʿr prayer came for some, while they were still travelling. And some of these decided not to perform the prayer before arriving, while others decided to pray then and that they had not been required to wait. This was reported to the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa), but he was not severe with any one of them.’”

Muslim related it thus from ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Asmāʾ.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated, “Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfīz and Abū Bakr Alḥām b. al-Ḥasan al-Qaḍī both stated, ‘Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. Khalīd b. ʿAlī, from Bishr b. Ḥarb, from his father, (who said) “Al-Zuhri related to us that ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Kāb b. Mālik informed him that his uncle ʿUbayd Allāh told him that when the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) returned from fighting the al-Ahzāb, he took off his breast-plate, washed and bathed. then Gabriel, upon whom be peace, appeared before him and said, ‘Some warrior you are! It seems you have taken off your breast-plate! Well, we haven’t done that yet!’”

“At this, the Prophet (Ṣaḥḥa) got up in a fright and insisted that everyone should refrain from performing the al-ṣaʿr prayer unless it be among Banū Qurayṣa.

“And so the Muslims dressed in their armour. However, they arrived at Banū Qurayṣa only after the sun had set. At sunset, disputes arose. Some maintained that since the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) had told them not to pray the al-ṣaʿr unless it be at Banū Qurayṣa, there could be no sin in them complying. One group did pray out of their caution, while others refrained from praying until the sun had set, after which they prayed among Banū Qurayṣa; they too acted out of caution. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) did not berate either one of the groups.”
Also, al-Bayhaqi related, through `Abd Allah al-Umari, from his brother Ubayd Allah, from al-Qasim b. Muhammad, from `A'isha, (who stated) that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was with her, "... and while we were there inside the house, in came a man who greeted us. The Messenger of God (SAAS) got up in a fright, and I arose too; suddenly, there was Dihya al-Kalbi. He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)), said, 'This is Gabriel! He has ordered me to attack Banu Qurayza. He said to me, "You have put down your arms, but we have not.'"

We had pursued the polytheists until we reached Hamra' al-Asad, following the return of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from al-khandaq. So the Messenger of God (SAAS) arose in great concern and said to his Companions, 'I require you not to perform the al-'asr prayer until you arrive at Banu Qurayza.' The sun set before they reached them and one group of the Muslims thought that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had not wanted them to wait to say the prayer and so they prayed. Another group maintained that they were acting in accord with the requirement made by the Messenger of God (SAAS), and that they would not be considered guilty of a sin for not praying. And so one group did pray, in their faith and as a precaution, while another group did not, for the same reasons.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not berate any person from either group. He then went forth and as he passed by any group of people, on his way to Banu Qurayza, he would ask them, 'Did anyone pass by you?' They responded, 'Dihya al-Kalbi passed by on his grey mule, mounted on a piece of brocade cloth.' He responded, 'That was Gabriel; he has been sent to Banu Qurayza to shake them up, and to cast terror into them.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then besieged them, telling his Companions to protect him with their shields so that he could hear their response. He called out to them, 'Hey, you, you brothers of monkeys and pigs!' They replied, 'Abu al-Qasim, you used not to employ bad language!'"

"And so he besieged them until they came down, following the judgement of Sa'd b. Mu'adh, whose allies they were. He decreed for them that their warriors should be killed and that their children and women should become captive."

This hadith has excellent lines of transmission from `A'isha and others.

The scholars differ over which of the two groups was correct that day. In fact the consensus is that each of them was worthy and justified in their actions and not to be severely criticized.

One group of scholars, however, maintains that those who postponed the prayer from its predetermined time until they could perform it among Banu Qurayza were correct, because their order to postpone it that day was specific and special and therefore should have been given precedence over the normal time for which it was determined under the law.

Abu Muhammad b. Hazm al-Zahirî stated in his biography (of the Prophet (SAAS)), "God knows that had we been there we would not have performed the al-'asr prayer unless it had been among Banū Qurayṣa, even if it would have had to be several days thereafter?"

This statement of his accords with the principle he holds fundamental, to act in accord with what is apparent.

Another group of scholars considered, on the contrary, that those who performed the prayer at its regular time while they were travelling were the ones who were correct because they had understood that the intent was to hasten their journey to Banū Qurayṣa and not to postpone the prayer. They acted in accord with the precepts suggesting the superiority of prayer being performed at its proper time, even though they understood what the legislator had wanted. Because of this, he did not berate them or order them to repeat the prayer at the time to which it had been changed that day, as the others claimed. Those who did postpone it were forgiven, since they acted in accord with their understanding; most things they were ordered to do they did in fact accomplish.

As for those who maintain that it is permissible to postpone prayer because of warfare — as al-Bukhārī understood and justified from the hadith of Ibn ʿUmar referred to previously — (in this case) neither those who performed the prayer earlier nor those who did so later ought to be considered suspect. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq then stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) thereafter sent forward ʿAlī b. Abū ʿṬālib bearing his banner and the men hurried towards it.”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated in his work on the maghāzi, the military expeditions, quoting al-Zuhri, “While the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was in his bathroom, so they claim, having combed out one side of his hair, Gabriel came to him riding a horse and dressed in his breast-plate. He halted at the door of the mosque where the funeral biers are placed. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came out to him, whereupon Gabriel said, ‘May God forgive you, have you put down your arms?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. Gabriel commented, ‘Well, we’ve not put ours down ever since your enemy came at you; and I’m continuing to pursue them until God defeats them.’ And they say that there was actually dust present upon Gabriel’s face. He then went on to say, ‘God commanded you to fight Banū Qurayṣa, and I will pursue them along with the angels accompanying me; we will make their fortresses shake around them. Go forth you too, with your men!’

“And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did follow after Gabriel. He passed by a seated group of Banū Ḥānām who were awaiting the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he asked them whether a horseman had recently passed them. They replied that Dihya al-Kalbī had passed them on a white horse, seated on a saddle cloth or a piece of velvet brocade, and wearing his breast-plate. They say that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘That was Gabriel!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) used to liken Dihya al-Kalbī to Gabriel. He then said, ‘Join me at where Banū Qurayṣa are, and perform the al-'asr prayer among them.’
“And so they arose, along with those other Muslims God wished, and they set off for Banū Qurayṣa. The time for the al-‘asr prayer came while they were en route, and they remembered the prayer. Some of them asked others, ‘Don’t you know that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered you to perform the al-‘asr prayer among Banū Qurayṣa?’ Others said, ‘It’s the prayer (time).’ And so some did pray while others postponed it until they could perform it among Banū Qurayṣa, after the sun had set. They informed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) which of them had performed it earlier and those who had postponed it, and people say that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did not berate either of the two groups.

“When ʿAli saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) approaching, he met him and said to him, ‘Go back, Messenger of God, God will take care of the Jews for you.’ ʿAli had heard from them some ugly talk with reference to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his wives, may God be pleased with them, and he disliked for him to hear this. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked why he was advising him to go back, but ʿAli concealed from him what he had heard of them. Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘I think you have heard them say something harmful about me; I will go on, for if the enemies of God saw me they would not say any of what you heard.’

“When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) alighted at their fortresses, they being high above him, he addressed a group of their nobles at the top of his voice so that they could hear him saying, ‘Respond, you tribe of Jews, you brothers of apes, for disgrace from God, Almighty and Glorious is He, has come down upon you!’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then besieged them with legions of the Muslims for some ten nights. God had brought back Ḥuyayy b. Akhrab and he had entered the forts of Banū Qurayṣa. God cast terror into them, and the siege was very hard on them. They eventually shouted for Abn Lubaba b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir – they had been allied to the ansār – but Abū Lubāba stated, ‘I will not go to them until the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gives me permission.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then gave him permission.

“And so Abū Lubāba went to them and they complained to him and asked him what they thought they should do since they did not have the power to engage in warfare. Abū Lubāba gestured at his throat across which he brought his fingers, showing them that it was their execution that was wanted.

“When Abū Lubāba left them, he was suddenly aghast, realizing that some urge had overcome him. He told himself that he could not look the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in the face until he did some loyal act as repentance that God would appreciate.

“And so he went back to Medina and tied his hands to one of the tree trunks (supporting the roof) of the mosque. It is said that he remained tied there for some 20 days.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked, when Abū Lubāba absented himself, ‘Hasn’t Abū Lubāba yet finished dealing with his allies?’ When it was related to him what Abū Lubāba had done, he said, ‘After (he left) me some urge overcame him; if he had come to me, I would have sought forgiveness for him. Since he has now done what he has, I will not move him from where he is until God decrees His will upon him.”

Ibn Lahi’ā related this thus, from Abū al-Aswad, from ‘Urwa. Muḥammad b. Ishāq recounted this in this way in his work on the maghāzi, in the same line of authorities as Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from al-Zuhri, and (it appears) similarly in the account given by Abū al-Aswad from ‘Urwa.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made camp at one of the wells of Banū Qurayṣa; called the Annā well; it was among properties they owned. He besieged them for 25 days, by which time the siege was causing them great hardship and much anxiety.

“Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab had joined them in their fortress when Quraysh and Ḥaṭṭafān had withdrawn, thus fulfilling the pact he had made with Ka‘b b. Asad. When they were sure that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had no intention of departing before he had utterly defeated them, Ka‘b b. Asad addressed Banū Qurayṣa. He told them, ‘You well know the crisis you face. I suggest three alternatives; choose the one you like best.’ ‘What are they?’ they asked. He replied, ‘First, that we follow and believe this man. I swear, it is clear to you now that he is a prophet who has been sent, and that it is he whom you find mentioned in your scripture. You should give him control over your lives, properties, children and women.’ They replied, ‘We will never abandon the law of the Torah, nor exchange it for another’

“He then said, ‘If you refuse me this, let us kill our children and our women and then go forth to Muḥammad and his companions with our swords drawn; that way we will not leave any responsibilities behind us, and God will decide between us and Muḥammad. If we perish, we perish; but we won’t be leaving behind any children to worry about. And if we are victorious, we’ll certainly acquire other women and children.’

“They replied, ‘Shall we kill these unfortunates? What good would there be in living on after them?’

“He continued, ‘If you refuse this, then tonight it is the sabbath. It may well be that Muḥammad and his men feel secure now. Let’s go forth and seek to take Muḥammad and his men by surprise.’

“They replied, ‘Should we desecrate our sabbath; if we do, there will befall that metamorphosis you well know has always befallen those who have done so.’

“He commented, ‘Not one of you men has ever, since the day you were born, acted decisively.’

“They then sent to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), asking him to dispatch to them for consultations Abū Lubāba b. ‘Abd al-Mundhir, a brother of Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf who were allies of al-Aws.

39. An allusion to the references in several places in the Qurʾān to those who profaned the sabbath. See, for example, sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.63.
“He did dispatch Abū Lubāba and when they saw him, the men arose to meet him. The women and children broke into sobs before him. He felt very sorry for them; they asked him whether they should submit to Muḥammad’s judgement. He said that they should. He then gestured with his hand across his neck, indicating that execution was coming.

“Abū Lubāba (later) commented, ‘I swear by God, my feet had not left that place before I knew I had betrayed God and His messenger.

“Abū Lubāba then left hurriedly. He did not, however, return to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), but tied himself to one of the supports of the mosque, saying, ‘I will not leave here until God forgives me for what I have done. I swear to God that I will never again go to Banū Qurayza, nor ever be seen again in any place where I have betrayed God and His messenger!’”

Ibn Hishām also stated, “He remained tied there for six days. His wife would come to him at each prayer time and untied him so that he could perform the ablutions and pray. He would then be tied up again. Eventually forgiveness did come down for him, in the Almighty’s words, ‘And others confessed their sins, having mixed good deeds with bad; God may well forgive them. God is indeed forgiving, merciful!’” (ṣūrat al-Tawba or al-Barzā; IX, v.102).

According to Mūsā b. Uqba he remained bound for 20 days. But God knows best.

Ibn ʿIshāq related that God revealed His forgiveness to His messenger at the very end of the night, while he was in the home of Umm Salama. He began to smile and when Umm Salama asked him why, he told her that God had forgiven Abū Lubāba. She asked his permission to leave to inform him. He agreed, and she went and told him the good news. People crowded around him joyfully, wishing to untie him from his bonds. But he said, “No one but the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) shall untie me.” When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came out to perform the dawn prayer, he did untie him, may God be pleased with him.

Ibn ʿIshāq stated, “Thereafter Thaʿlaba b. Saʿya, Usayd b. Saʿya and Asad b. ʿUbayd, all of Banū Hadal and not from either Qurayṣa or al-Naḍīr, their own pedigree being superior to that, they being Banū ʿAmm al-Qawm, accepted Islam that night during which Qurayṣa had come under the control of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“Also that night ʿAmr b. Suʿdā al-Quraṣi came out and passed by the guard of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); Muḥammad b. Maslama was in charge of them that night and when he saw ʿAmr, he called out and asked him his name, which he gave. ʿAmr had refused to participate in Banū Qurayṣa treachery towards the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), having said, ‘I will never betray Muḥammad!’ When he recognized him, Muhammad b. Maslama said, 'O God, do not forbid me to set aside the minor sins of noble men!' He then let him pass. Amr then hurriedly left and spent that night in the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS), in Medina. Thereafter he departed for some still unknown destination. When what had happened to him was mentioned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), he commented, 'That is a man whom God saved because of his trustworthiness.'

He went on, "Some people claim that he was tied up with rope along with others of Banū Qurayza. The rope to which he had been tied was later found thrown away, and it was not known where he had gone. And it was then that the Messenger of God (SAAS) made the above statement about him. But God knows best which of the accounts is correct."

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Next morning they came under the authority of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Banū Aws promptly claimed that Banū Qurayza had been allied with them rather than with Khazraj. They also referred to how the Messenger of God (SAAS) had given control over Banū Qurayza to ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy when he had requested this, as is related above.

"When Aws had spoken to him, the Messenger of God (SAAS) responded to them, 'O Aws, will you be content to have one of your men decide about them?' When they agreed to this, he placed them under the charge of Sa’d b. Mu‘adh. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had placed Sa’d b. Mu‘adh inside his mosque in a tent belonging to an Aslam woman named Rufayda; she was caring for the wounded. When he placed Sa’d in charge of Banū Qurayza, his people approached him and mounted him on a donkey bearing a leather cushion; he was a handsome, large man. They then brought him to the Messenger of God (SAAS), telling him to treat his charges kindly, since it was with that expectation that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had appointed him over them. When they insisted upon this, he responded, 'It is now time for Sa’d to take no account of anyone's criticism for what he does in God's cause!' One of those of his people who was accompanying him returned to Banū ‘Abd al-Ashhal and told them of the death of the men of Banū Qurayza even before Sard reached them, because of what he had heard him say.

"When Sa’d arrived at where the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims were, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Arise to greet your master.' The Quraysh muhajirin, said he was referring to the ansār, while the latter thought that his order had been directed towards all the Muslims, and so they stood up. They told him, 'Abū ‘Amr, the Messenger of God (SAAS) has delegated to you the question of deciding what to do with your charges.' Sa’d replied, 'Is it your duty to swear by a pact with God that whatever decision I reach about them will be enforced?' 'Yes,' they agreed. Sa’d then asked, 'And does that apply to him who is over here?' He was referring to the direction where the Messenger of God (SAAS) was, while looking away from him out of his respect for him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) answered, 'Yes.' Sa’d then said, 'I therefore decree that the men among them shall be executed, while their properties shall be liquidated and their offspring and women shall be taken captive.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "'Āṣim b. Uma r b. Qatāda related to me, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Uma r b. Sa'd b. Mu'ādh, from 'Alqama b. Waqqas al-Laythi, who said, 'The Messenger of God (ŞAAS) said to Sa'd, 'You have judged them with the decision of God, from seven heavens above.'"

Ibn Hishām stated, "A reliable scholar related to me that 'Ali b. Abū Talib exclaimed as they were besieging Bātīn Qurayṣa, 'O Army of the Faithl! He and al-Zubayr b. al-'Awwān then advanced and 'Ali said, 'I will taste what ʿAmza tasted, or I will storm their fortress!' But they replied, 'Muḥammad! We will submit to the judgement of Sa'd b. Mu'ādh.'"

Imām Ahmad stated that Muḥammad b. Ja'far related to him, quoting Shu'ba, from Sa'd b. Ibrāhīm, quoting Abū Umāma b. Sahl, who said, "I heard Abū Sa'd al-Khudrī say, 'Bānū Qurayṣa agreed to submit to the authority of Sa'd b. Mu'ādh. So the Messenger of God (ŞAAS) sent for Sa'd who came to him on a donkey. When he drew near the mosque, the Messenger of God (ŞAAS) said, "Stand up for your master" (or "your better"). He then said, "These people have submitted to your authority." He (Sa'd) stated, "We shall execute their warriors and take their children prisoner." The Messenger of God (ŞAAS) commented, "You have given judgement with God's decree." He may have said, "You have given judgement with the mālik's ('the ruler's') decree." According to another account, the word used was malak, "angel".'"

In both saḥīḥ collections it is derived by various lines of authority from Shu'ba.

Imām Ahmad stated, "Hujayn and Yūnus related to us, saying, 'Al-Layth b. Sa'd related to us, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, "At the battle of al-Ahzāb an arrow was shot at Sa'd b. Mu'ādh and the medial vein in his arm was severed. The Messenger of God (ŞAAS) cauterized it with fire. Sa'd's hand then swelled up and he bled it. Seeing this, Sa'd said, 'O God, do not extract my soul before you settle Bānū Qurayṣa for me.' At this the flow ceased, with not another drop falling, until Bānū Qurayṣa submitted to Sa'd's authority. A message was sent to him to this effect and he decreed that their men should be executed and that their women and children should be made captive and should serve the Muslims. The Messenger of God (ŞAAS) said, 'You have correctly given God's judgement regarding them.' They were 400 in number. When their execution was over, Sa'd's artery burst and he died.'"

Both al-Tirmidhi and al-Nasa'i related this from Qutayba, back to al-Layth. Al-Tirmidhi categorized it as hasan saḥīḥ, "good and authentic".

Imām Ahmad stated, "Ibn Numayr related to us, from Hishām, saying, 'My father quoted 'A'isha to me as having said, "When the Messenger of God (ŞAAS) came back from the Battle of al-Ahzāb and had put down his arms and bathed, Gabriel, his face dust-covered, came to him and said, 'So, you've put down your arms! I swear by God, we have not! Go out and battle them!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Where to?’ ‘Over here,’ Gabriel responded, gesturing towards Banū Qurayṣa. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth against them.”

Hishām stated, ‘My father informed me that they accepted the authority of the Prophet (SAAS) over them and that he then delegated that authority to Saʿd. He then stated, “I judge that the warriors be executed, that their women and offspring be taken captive and that their properties be divided up.”’

Hishām went on, “My father stated further, ‘I was told that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “You have judged them by God’s judgement.”’

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Zakariyya b. Yahyā related to us, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Numayr, quoting Hishām, from his father, from ʿAʾishah, who said, ‘At al-khandaq Saʿd was wounded. One of Quraysh, a man named Hishān b. ʿAriqa, shot an arrow at him and hit him in the main vein in his arm. The Prophet (SAAS) set up a tent for him in the mosque so that he could visit him from nearby. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had returned from al-khandaq and had put down his weapons and had bathed, Gabriel, shaking dust off his head, came to him and said, “So, you have put down your weapons? I swear by God, I’ve not done that! Go forth against them!” The Prophet (SAAS) asked, “Where to?” Gabriel then gestured towards Ban Qurayṣa. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then did go out against them and they accepted his authority; he then delegated this authority to Saʿd. The latter decreed, “I judge that their warriors be executed, that their women and offspring be taken captive and that their properties be divided up.”’

Hishām went on, “My father quoted ʿAʾishah as saying that Saʿd stated, ‘O God, You well know that there is no one I would rather fight on your behalf than a people who have called Your messenger a liar and have exiled him. O God, I believe You have put an end to warfare between us and them. Give me life for so long as there is any warfare against Quraysh, so that I may fight against them for You. And if You have brought the war to an end, recommence it and place my death therein.’ Then there was an explosive emission from his upper chest, but this did not alarm anyone. But there was a tent (for the wounded) belonging to Banū Ghifār in the mosque. And, when the blood began streaming down towards them, they shouted, ‘Hey, you in the tent, what is this coming down to us from you?’ It was from Saʿd; his wound was streaming blood and he died of it.’

This was related by Muslim from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd Allāh b. Numayr.

I would comment that Saʿd first spoke this prayer before he passed judgement on Banū Qurayṣa. This is why he prayed that his death not occur before he had settled with Banū Qurayṣa. And God did answer his prayer. After issuing his judgement on them, and God had pleased him greatly thereby, he prayed a second time in this way and God then gave him martyrdom, may God be pleased with him and give him pleasure. Reference to his death will come shortly, if God so wills it.
Imām Aḥmad related it also from another line at great length; in that account there are other interesting aspects. He stated that Yazīd related to him that Muḥammad b. 'Amr narrated to him, from his father, from his father 'Alqāma b. Waqqās, who said, "Aṭīsha stated to me as follows, 'I was leaving on the day of the battle of al-khandaq, following after our forces, when I heard the sound of movement behind me. Then I saw it was Sa'd b. Muṣādh, accompanied by his brother Al-Harith b. Aws, carrying his child. I sat down on the ground and Sa'd passed by, wearing an iron coat of mail from which his arms and legs protruded. I was concerned about injury to these limbs of Sa'd; Sa'd was one of the greatest and tallest of men. As he passed, he was speaking the verse, "Remain awhile; let Ḥamal see the battle. How fine is death when its time has come!""

She continued, "I got up and ran into a garden. There I found a group of Muslims; among them were Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. One of the men had on a subgha" (by which she meant a mighfar, a "helmet"). "Umar asked, 'Why are you here? I swear, you're bold! What's to protect you if some disaster should happen or you got cut off?' He went on criticizing me until I wished the earth would open to swallow me on the spot! Then the man lifted the helmet off his face and I saw that it was Ṭalḥa b. Ubayd Allāh. He commented, 'Hey, Umar, shame on you! You're overdoing it! From today on, whatever aligning or taking refuge there is will be to God, Almighty and Glorious is He!'

Aṭīsha went on, "Then a Quraysh man named Ibn al-'Ariqa shot at Sa'd, saying, 'Take that! I'm Ibn al-ʿAriqa!' It struck and severed the main artery in his arm. Sa'd then prayed, 'O God, do not make me die before you give me satisfaction over Banī Qurayza!' These people had been his allies and colleagues before Islam. Then his wound stopped bleeding and God sent the gale against the polytheists and spared the believers engaging in battle; God is indeed powerful, strong. Abū Sufyān and his force then went to Tihāma, while Uuyayna b. Badr and his force withdrew to Najd.

Banū Qurayza then returned home and sought protection in their fortresses. The Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to Medina where he ordered a leather tent be set up in the mosque for Sa'd. Then Gabriel came, the folds of his clothing covered with dust, and he said, 'Have you put down your weapons, then? By God, the angels haven't put down their weapons yet. Go forth and do battle with Banū Qurayza!'

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then put on his breast-plate and had it announced that the men should prepare to depart for battle. He passed by Banū Ghanam who were his neighbours close by the mosque. He asked them, 'Who was it passed by you?' They replied, 'Dihya al-Kalbi went by.' Now Dihya al-Kalbi was similar in beard, age and face to Gabriel, upon whom be peace.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded on to Banū Qurayza and besieged them for 25 days. When their suffering from the siege grew intense, a message was sent telling them to accept the authority of the Messenger of God (SAAS). They sought advice from Abū Lubāba b. 'Abd al-Mundhir, and he made a sign to them indicating execution. Banū Qurayṣa then said they would accept the authority of Sa'd b. Mu‘ādh. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, ‘Then do accept the authority of Sa’d b. Mu‘ādh!’ He was brought to him on a donkey, seated on a saddle stuffed with palm fronds and with his people all around him, who were telling him, ‘Abū ‘Amr, they are your allies and colleagues, your family in times of crisis, people you know well.’ But Sa’d did not respond to them at all, nor did he turn towards them. When he arrived close by the homes of Banū Qurayṣa, he turned to his entourage and said, ‘It’s time for me to disregard any possible criticism in serving God!’”

‘A’isha went on, “Abū Sa‘īd said that when he appeared, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, ‘Arise for your master and help him dismount!’ At this ‘Umar commented, ‘Our “master” is God!’ (But) he said, ‘Help him dismount.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘Render your judgement over them.’ Sa’d responded, ‘I decree that their warriors be executed, their offspring be taken captive, and their properties be divided up.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘Your decree accords with the judgement of God and with that of His messenger.’

“Thereupon, Sa’d spoke the following prayer, ‘O God, if you have left for Your prophet any further warfare against Quraysb, then let me remain for it. But if You have now ended the warfare between him and them, then take me to Yourself.’”

‘A’isha went on, “His wound then burst; up to then he had been free of it, nothing being visible except for a small circular spot. He went back to the tent that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had set up for him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) went to him, along with Abū Bakr and ‘Umar. And I swear by Him in whose hands is Muhammad, that I could well differentiate the weeping of ‘Umar from that of Abū Bakr while I was there in my room. They were, as God said, ‘... compassionate among themselves’” (ṣūrat al-Fāṭḥ; XLVIII, v.29).

‘Alqama stated, “I then asked, ‘How did the Messenger of God (SAAS) react?’ ‘A’isha replied, ‘His eyes never wept for anyone. However, if he was deeply moved, he would take hold of his beard.’”

The chain of authorities for this hadith is excellent, and there are testimonials to its veracity from other sources. In it there is the clear statement that Sa’d prayed twice, once before he passed judgement on Banū Qurayṣa, and once thereafter, as we stated earlier. And all praise and credit go to God. We will report, after finishing the narrative, the manner of his death and burial, and the credit to him therefore, may God be pleased with him and give him pleasure.

Ibn Ḳistāḥ stated, “They (Banū Qurayṣa) were then brought down and the Messenger of God (SAAS) imprisoned them in the home of the daughter of al-Ḥārith, a woman of Banū al-Najjār.”
I comment that the reference is to the daughter of Al-Ḥarith b. Kurz b. Ḥabib b. ʿAbd Shams; she was the wife of Musaylima al-Kadhdhbā, who had by her a son named ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmir b. Kurz.

Ibn Ishaq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out into the Medina market and had some trenches dug. Then he sent for Banū Qurayza men to have their heads severed in those trenches. They came out in groups. Among them was that enemy of God Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab, along with Ka'b b. Asad, their leader. They were 600 or 700 in number. Some estimate their number to have been as many as 800 or 900."

I comment that according to al-Layth, quoting Abū al-Zubayr from Jabir, as given above, they numbered 400. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq continued, "As they were being taken in groups to the Messenger of God (SAAS), they asked Ka'b b. Asad, 'Ka'b, what do you think he will do to us?' He replied, 'Will you not understand anywhere? Can't you see that the one calling never stops, and that those of you who go never return? It means, by God, execution!' "This continued until he had finished with them. Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab was brought to him wearing a flowered robe all over which he had made finger-size holes so that it not be taken from him; his hands were drawn up and tied by a rope to his neck. When he looked over at the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, 'Well, I swear by God, I don't blame myself for being your enemy, but whoever abandons God will be abandoned!' "He then went forward to the men and said, 'O people, there is no harm in the command of God; a decree, fate and a massacre have been written by God against Banī Isrā'īl!' He then sat down and he was struck in the neck. "Jabal b. Jawwāl al-Tha'labi then spoke the verses,

'By your life, I swear that it was not himself that Ibn Akhtab blamed, but whoever abandons God will be abandoned

He strove hard, pushing himself to the limits, exerting himself vigorously to achieve glory.'"

Ibn Ishaq then related the story of al-Zubayr b. Bāṭā, an old man who had become blind. "At the battle of Bu'rath he had been given over to the charge of Thābit b. Qays b. Shamās who had cut off his forelock. On this day Thābit had wanted to repay him," so he went to al-Zubayr and asked, 'Do you know me, Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān?' 'Would the like of me not know the like of you?' he responded. Thābit then said, 'I want to pay you back!' 'Well,' replied al-Zubayr, 'an honourable man would repay an honourable man.'

40. Musaylima al-Kadhdhbā, i.e. "the great impostor" of Yamāma and a leader of Banū Ḥanifa, claimed prophethood for himself following the death of the Messenger of God, (SAAS). He was ultimately defeated and killed by the Muslims in 12 AH, supra, p.25n.

41. Ibn Kathir here omits from his narrative the important fact given in Ibn Ishaq's account that al-Zubayr had spared Thābit's life on an earlier occasion, before the coming of Islam.
"Thabit then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked permission to release him, and he did release al-Zubayr b. Baṣa. When he informed him of this, al-Zubayr responded, 'What would an old man who would have no son and no family do with his life?' Thabit then returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked him to restore to the man his wife and his son, and to this he agreed. When he returned to al-Zubayr with this news, the old man now said, 'What's to become of a household in Hijaz that has no property; how could they survive?' Again Thabit went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked that the property of al-Zubayr be released to him, and he did so.

"When he went back and told him this, al-Zubayr asked, 'Thabit, what became of Ka'b b. Asad, whose face was like a Chinese mirror that reflects the faces of the tribe's virgins?' 'He has been killed,' he replied.

"'And what of our vanguard in the attack and our protector in flight, 'Azal b. Shamwâl? 'He has been killed,' Thabit replied.

"'What became of the two counsel' – meaning that of Banu Ka'b b. Qurayza and Banu 'Amr b. Qurayza. 'They have dispersed and been killed,' he replied.

"'I ask you then, Thabit, by your obligation to me, to let me join my own people. There is no good in life for me now that they have gone and I can’t stand postponing joining my loved ones for so long as it would take to fill and empty a bucket being borne along by a camel!' At this Thabit went over to him and cut off his head.

"When al-Zubayr's phrase 'joining my loved ones' reached Abû Bakr, the trusting, he commented, 'He'll meet them, by God, in the fire of hell where he will dwell for ever!'

Ibn Ishaq used the word fayla in his account, to refer to the filling of a bucket; Ibn Hisham said the word should be qabla. Regarding the word used for camel here, nādih, Ibn Hisham said it referred to a camel that bears water used to irrigate date-palms.

Abû Ubayda, however, said that the word refers to the emptying of a bucket.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) had ordered the execution of all of their adults. Shu'ba b. al-Ḥajjāj related to me, from 'Abd al-Malik b. Ťmayr, from 'Atiyya al-Qurayzâ, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that all grown-up Banu Qurayzâ should be executed. I was a youth and since they decided I was not fully grown they let me go.'"

Authorities of all four sunan codices of hadith relate this account from 'Abd al-Malik b. Ťmayr, from 'Atiyya al-Qurayzâ, with similar wording.

Certain scholars make reference to this who maintain that establishing the presence of coarse hair in the genital region proves maturity. Indeed this does constitute maturity in the most authoritative statements on the subject made by al-Shâfi'i.

42. The term used here, ashab al-sunan, refers to the four authoritative codices of hadith from among the šâih collections. Their authors were al-Tirmidhi, Abû Da'ūd, Ibn Majah and al-Nasa'i.
There are some scholars who differentiate Muslim from non-Muslim youths, saying that that can indicate maturity, but only in the case of the latter. This is because a Muslim (youth) may be disadvantaged to some purpose because of that.

Ishāq recounted from Ayyūb b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, that Salmā, daughter of Qays, mother of al-Mundhir, had asked the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) to release Rifāʿa b. Shamwāl, who was adult and had taken refuge with her; he had known them before this. He (the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ)), did release him for her. She had said, “Messenger of God, Rifāʿa claims that he will pray and eat camels’ meat.” And so he granted her wish and released him.

Ibn Isḥāq stated that it was related to him by Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr, from ʿUrwa, from Aʾisha, who said, “He only executed one of their women. She was talking with me and laughing heartily all the time the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) was executing her menfolk in the market-place. Then a voice called out asking where was so-and-so. She exclaimed, ‘It’s me, by God!’ I asked her, ‘For pity’s sake, what’s wrong?’ She said, ‘I’m to be killed!’ ‘Why?’ I asked. ‘For something I did,’ she told me. Then she was taken away and beheaded.’

The account continues, “Aʾisha used to say, ‘I swear, I’ll never forget how high-spirited she was and how much she laughed when she knew she was to be killed.’”

Imām ʿAbd al-Hamid related this the same way, from Yaʿqūb b. Ibrāhīm, from his father, from Muḥammad b. Isḥāq.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “It was she who had thrown down the millstone on to Khallād b. Suwayd and had killed him.” He is inferring that it was for him that the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) had her executed.

Ibn Isḥāq stated elsewhere, “He named her as Nabāṭa, wife of al-Ḥakam al-Quraṭ.”

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) then divided up among the Muslims the property, wives and children of Banū Qurayṭa, after he had taken out one-fifth. He awarded each horseman three shares, two for the horse and one for its rider. He gave one share to each foot soldier. The horses numbered thirty-six at that battle. This was the first time the booty was divided into division of two shares and the first in which it was divided into five parts.

“The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) dispatched Saʿīd b. Zayd with the captives taken from Banū Qurayṭa to Najd, where he sold them in exchange for horses and weapons. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) had chosen for himself one of their women, Rayḥāna, daughter of ʿAmr b. Khānafa, of Banū ʿAmr b. Qurayṣa. He stayed intimate with her until he died, she still being at that time in his household. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) had suggested that she accept Islam, but she had refused. Eventually she did accept Islam and this brought great pleasure to him. He suggested releasing and marrying her, but she chose to continue in slavery, considering that easier for her. She remained with him until the Messenger of God (SAAS) died."

Ibn Ishāq then commented upon the verses of the Qurʾān that relate to the battle of al-khandaq, from early in surat al-Ahzāb. We have given reference and explanation to that in our Tafsir (Exegesis), and to God be all praise and credit.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Those Muslims martyred in the conflict with Banū Qurayṣa were Khalil b. Suwayd b. Thaʿlabā b. ʿAmr al-Khazrajī, who was crushed when a millstone was cast down on him. They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘He will receive the reward of two martyrs.’"

I would observe that it was that woman mentioned above, the only woman of Banū Qurayṣa executed, who had thrown the stone down at him. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Abū Simān b. Miḥsān b. Hurthān of Banū Asad b. Khuzayma died while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was besieging Banū Qurayṣa; he was buried in their cemetery that (same) day."

THE DEATH OF SAʿD B. MUʿADH, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM.

It has been related above that Hībbān b. al-ʿAriqa, God damn him, had shot an arrow at him and struck him in the vein of his arm. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then cauterized him with fire and stopped up the wound. Saʿd prayed to God not to make him die before he had been relieved of Banū Qurayṣa. This occurred following their breaking of the pacts and agreements they had made with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and their alignment with the aḥzāb, the enemy clans. When the latter withdrew, dispersing away from Medina, Banū Qurayṣa were totally left to disaster, both on earth and in the after-life. The Messenger of God (SAAS) went to them and besieged them, as told above. When they were in real suffering, beset from all sides, they decided to submit to the authority of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to do with them as ever God wished. He delegated that authority to the chief of Aws, who had been allied with them before the coming of Islam; he was Saʿd b. Muʿadh. Banū Qurayṣa were pleased with this. It is said that they initially gave themselves over to Saʿd’s authority because they had high hopes of his kindness and partiality towards them. They did not know that they were more hateful in his view than the apes and pigs that were their peers! This was because of the intensity of his faith, and his high trust. May God be pleased with him and give him pleasure.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent for him; Saʿd was in a tent in the mosque. He was brought on a donkey riding on a soft saddle placed under him because of his injury. When he drew near the tent of the Messenger of God (SAAS), the latter ordered all there to rise for him. It was said that this was so that he would dismount because of the severity of his injury; also it was said that this was to accord him respect in the presence of those about whom he was to decide, so that he would be more effective in carrying out his judgement. But God knows best.

When he decreed death and captivity for them and God had pleased and satisfied him by relieving him of them, and he had returned to the tent in the mosque accompanied by the Messenger of God (SAAS), he prayed to God the Almighty and Glorious that he have martyrdom. And God had chosen his reward; his wound burst open that night. Blood went on escaping from him until he died. May God be pleased with him.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When the Bantū Qurayza affair was concluded, the wound of Sa'd b. Mu'ādh burst open and he died of it, a martyr.

"Mu'ādh b. Rifā'a al-Zurqi related to me as follows, 'It was related to me by whomever you like of my people, that Gabriel, wearing an embroidered turban, came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), when Sa'd b. Mu'ādh was taken late at night. He said, "Muḥammad, who is that dead man for whom the gates of heaven were opened and for whom the throne shook?"

"'The Messenger of God (SAAS) arose hurriedly, dragging his clothing behind him, and went to Sa'd, whom he found to have died; may God be pleased with him.'"

This is how Ibn Ishāq related this.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated in his Dalā'il (The Signs), "Abū 'Abbās Muhammad b. Ya'qūb, from Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allah b. Ḥakam, who said, 'My father and Shu'ayb b. al-Layth related to us as follows, 'Al-Layth b. Sa'd related to us, from Yazid b. al-Hadd, from Mu'ādh b. Rifā'a, from Jābir b. 'Abbās, who said, 'Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked, "Who is that fine worshipper of God who, when he died, had the gates of heaven opened up for him, and for whom the throne moved?"

"He went on, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out and found it was Sa'd b. Mu'ādh. The Messenger of God (SAAS) sat down by his grave as he was being buried. While thus seated, he twice recited, subḥāna Allāh, "God be praised". So everyone said the same. He then spoke the words, "Allāhu Akbar! Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great! God is most great!". So everyone spoke the same. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "I was amazed at this fine worshipper who was constrained in his grave until this (time), when he was relieved."'"

Imām Ahmad and al-Nasaʾī related, quoting a line of transmission through Yazid b. 'Abbās, Usāma b. al-Hadd, and Yahyā b. Sa'id, from Mu'ādh b. Rifā'a, from Jābir, who stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to Sa'd the day he died and while he was being buried, 'Praise be to God for this fine man for whom the throne of the All-Merciful moved, and for whom the gates of heaven were opened; he was constrained, and then God released him.'"
Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated, "Muṣṭadh b. Riḍa related to me, from Mahmūd b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Amr b. Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘We were there while Saʿd was being buried, in the company of the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ), who spoke the invocation subḥāna Allāh, God be praised, which was repeated by all there. He then said Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great, and everyone joined him in saying this. Then they asked him, ‘Why did you praise God, Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘His grave constrained this fine man until God relieved him.’”

Imām Aḥmad related it thus, from Yaʿqūb b. Ibrāhim b. Saʿd, from his father, from Ibn Ishaq.

Ibn Hishām stated, “The figurative meaning of this hadith is shown in Ṭaʿīsha’s words, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) stated, “The grave constrains; if anyone were to escape from it, it would be Saʿd b. Muṣṭadh.”’

I would comment that this hadith is given by Imām Aḥmad as follows, “Yahyā related to us, from Shuʿba, from Saʿd b. Ibrāhim, from Nāfi, from Ṭaʿīsha, from the Prophet (ṣaṣṣ), who said, ‘The grave exerts pressure; if anyone were to escape from that, it would be Saʿd b. Muṣṭadh.’”

The line of authorities for this hadith would meet the criteria for the two jāhīh collections, except for the fact that Imām Aḥmad related it from Ghundar, from Shuʿba, from Saʿd b. Ibrāhim, from “a person”, from Ṭaʿīsha.

The ḥāfiz al-Bazzār related it from Nāfi, from Ibn Umar. He said, “ʿAbd al-Alā b. Ḥammād related to us, quoting Dāʾūd, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān (who said), “Ubayd Allāh b. Umar related to us, from Nāfi, who quoted Ibn Umar as saying, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) stated, ‘The day Saʿd b. Muṣṭadh died 70,000 angels descended to earth; they had never before touched the earth came down at the death of Saʿd b. Muṣṭadh.’ And as he was being buried, the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) also said, ‘Praise be to God! if anyone escaped the pressure of the grave, it was Saʿd.’”

Al-Bazzār stated, “Ismāʿīl b. Ḥafṣ related to us, from Muḥammad b. Fudayl, quoting ʿAta b. al-Sāḥib, from Mujahīd, from Ibn Umar, who said, ‘The al-ʿarsh, the throne, shook at the pleasure of God’s meeting Saʿd b. Muṣṭadh.’ It is said that he meant the al-ṣarīr, the couch. (As is the case in the following verse.) ‘And he raised his two parents up on to the al-ʿarsh’ (ṣūrat Yūsuf; XII, v.100). As for the shaking, that referred to its frame. He went on, ‘And the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) went into his grave and stayed there awhile. When he emerged, he was asked, “Messenger of God, what kept you?” He replied, “Saʿd was very much constrained in the grave; and so I prayed to God, and it was widened for him.’’’’

Al-Bazzār stated, ‘‘Aṭāʾ b. al-Sāphib was alone in giving this ḥadīth.’’ I would observe that it was who was being addressed in this matter.

Al-Bayhaqī, may God be pleased with him, following his having told how constrained Sa’d, God be pleased with him, was by the grave, related a strange tradition about it. He said, ‘‘Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfīẓ related to us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās, quoting Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, quoting Yūnus, from Ibn Iṣḥāq, who said, ‘‘Umayya b. ʿAbd Allāh related to me that he asked some of Sa’d’s family, ‘What have you heard that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said on this subject?’ They replied, ‘‘We were told that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was asked about that and said, ‘He’ (Sa’d) ‘would cut short some of the ablutions for urination.’’’’’

Al-Bukhārī stated, ‘‘Muḥammad b. al-Muthannā related to us, quoting al-Fāḍl
b. Musāwir, quoting Abū Muḥāwiya, from al-ʿA’mash, from Abū Sūfyyān, from Jābir, who said, ‘‘I heard the Prophet (ṢAAS) say, ‘The throne shook at the death of Sa’d b. Muʿādhd.’’’’’

Also from al-ʿA’mash, ‘‘Abū Sāliḥ related to us, from Jābir, from the Prophet (ṢAAS) the same words. A man asked Jābir, ‘‘How is it that al-ʿAṣārīb b. ʿĀzīz says (that the statement was) ‘the al-ṣarīr, the couch, shook?’ He (Jābir) replied, ‘‘There was some animosity between these two tribes; I heard the Prophet (ṢAAS) say, ‘The al-ʿarsh, the throne, of the al-Rahmān, the Merciful One, shook at the death of Sa’d b. Muʿādhd.’’’’’

Muslim related this, from ʿAmr al-Naqīd, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Idrīs and Ibn Māja, from ʿAṭī b. Muḥammad, from Abū Muḥāwiya, both of whom quoted al-ʿA’mash. Their version does not add anything to the account as given by al-ʿA’mash from Abū Sāliḥ, from Jābir.

Aḥmad stated, ‘‘Abū ʿAbd al-Razzaq related to us, from Ibn Jurayj, ‘‘Abū ʿAbd al-Zubayr informed me that he heard Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh say, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, while the bier of Sa’d b. Muʿādhd was there in front of them,
‘The throne of the Merciful One shook for it.’’’’’

Muslim related it from ʿAbd b. Ḥumayd, as did al-Tirmidhī from Maḥmūd
b. Ghaylān, both quoting ʿAbd al-Razzaq.

Imām Aḥmad stated, ‘‘Yaḥyā b. Sa’d related to us, quoting ʿAfīf, quoting Abū Naḍrā (who said) ‘I heard Abū Sa’d quote the Prophet (ṢAAS) as having said, ‘The throne shook at the death of Sa’d b. Muʿādhd.’’’’’

Al-Nṣāṭ related it from Yaḥyā b. Ibrahīm, from Yaḥyā.

Aḥmad stated, ‘‘Abū al-Wahhāb related to us, from Sa’d, (who quoted) Qatāda as saying, ‘Anas b. Mālik related to us that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, his bier having been put down, ‘The throne of the Merciful One shook for it.’’’’’

Muslim related it from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Aẓdī, from ʿAbd al-Wahhāb.
Al-Bayhaqi narrated from a hadith of al-Mu'tamir b. Sulaymân, from his father, from al-Hasan al-Basri, who said, “The throne of the Merciful One shook with joy for his spirit.”

The hâfiz al-Bazzâr stated, “Zuhayr b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting ‘Abd al-Razzâq, quoting Ma'mar, from Qatâda, from Anas, who said, ‘When Sa'd’s bier was carried, the hypocrites said, “How light his bier is! That’s due to his having passed judgement over Bânû Qurayza.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was asked about this, and he said, “No, but the angels carried him.”’”

(This has) an excellent line of transmission.

Al-Bukhari stated, “Muḥammad b. Bashshâr related to us, quoting Ghandar, quoting Shu'ba, from Abū Ishâq (who said), ‘I heard al-Barâq b. ʿAffâb say, “I was presented with a silk robe for the Prophet (ṢAAS), and his Companions began touching it and admiring its softness. He said, ‘Are you admiring the softness of this? The kerchiefs of Sa'd b. Mu'ādth are better than them, or softer.’”’”

He (the source) then said, “Qatâda related this, as did al-Zuhri who reported hearing it from Anas, from the Prophet (ṢAAS).”

Aḥmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Wahhāb related to us, from Sa'd, he being the son of Abū ʿUrūba, from Qatâda, from Anas b. Malik, that Uqaydir Dūma made a present of a jubba, a long outer garment, to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); this was before the wearing of silk was prohibited. He put it on and when people admired it, he said, ‘By Him in whose hands is my soul, the kerchiefs of Sa'd in heaven are finer than this!’”

This hadith accords with the criteria of both al-Bukhari and Muslim, but they did not include it. Al-Bukhari, however, quoted it as commentary.

Aḥmad stated that Yazid quoted Muḥammad b. ʿAmr as follows, “Waqqid b. ʿAmr b. Sa'd b. Mu'âdth related to me (and Muḥammad said that Waqqid was one of the finest, best and tallest of men) as follows, ‘I went in to Anas b. Malik and he asked me who I was. I replied that I was Waqqid, son of ʿAmr, the son of Sa'd b. Muâdth. He then said, “You take after Sa'd.” He then wept copiously, saying, “May God grant Sa'd His mercy! He was one of the finest and tallest of men.” He then went on, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) dispatched an army out to fight Uqaydir Dûma, who sent to him a jubba of brocade woven with gold thread. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) put it on, went up on to the minbar, the pulpit, and sat down without speaking. He then came down again. People felt and gazed admiringly at the jubba, and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked them, ‘So you admire this then? The kerchiefs of Sa'd b. Mu'âdth in heaven are much finer than what you can now see.’”’”

Al-Tirmidhi related it thus, as did al-Nasa'i, from a hadith of Muḥammad b. ʿAmr. Al-Tirmidhi classified it as hasan saḥîh, “good and authentic”.

After making reference to the throne having shaken after the death of Sa'd b. Mu'âdth, Ibn Ishâq went on to quote a line of verse from one of the anšâr, the Helpers:
“The only person whose death we ever heard caused the throne of God to shake was Sa’d b. Mu’adh.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “His mother – Kubaysha, daughter of Râfi’ b. Mu‘awiya b. ‘Ubayd b. Tha‘lab b. Khudariyya al-Khazrajiiyya, that is – spoke the following elegy when Sa’d was being borne away on his bier, ‘Sa’d’s mother grieves for Sa’d, the fierce and impetuous,

A man of leadership and glory, an eager knight.
He would fill every breach, active in cutting off enemy heads.’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘All mourning women exaggerate – except for she who mourned for Sa’d b. Mu’adh!’”

I would comment that Sa’d’s death came some 25 days after the withdrawal of the ahzâb, the enemy clans. They had assembled in Shawwâl of 5 AH, as is told above, and remained there for approximately 1 month. Thereafter, the Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth and besieged Banû Qurayza for some 25 days. They then accepted the authority of Sa’d, who died shortly after he had passed judgement on them. This would have occurred at the end of Dhū al-Qâ’da or early in Dhū al-Hijja of 5 AH. But God knows best.

Similarly, Muhammad b. Ishq stated, “The conquest of Banû Qurayza took place in Dhū al-Qâ’da and the beginning of Dhū al-Hijja. The polytheists took charge of that pilgrimage.”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Hassân b. Thâbit spoke the following verses eulogizing Sa’d b. Mu’adh, may God be pleased with him, “My tears descended in a stream, and it was right for my eyes that they should weep for Sa’d.

Lying dead, prostrate on a battlefield. Eyes grieving at his loss flowed copiously, in constant pain.
A member of the religion of the Merciful, he will inherit paradise along with the (other) martyrs; theirs is the most noble of groups.
Even though you have said good-bye to us and left us and went into the dust of the dark grave.
You have, Sa’d, through your noble martyrdom, gone back (to God) clothed in finery and glory.
By your judgement on both Qurayza tribes with what God had decreed, you did not decide wilfully.
The decree of God matched your judgement on them; you did not absolve them when you were reminded of a former pact.
Even though fate has placed you with those others who exchanged this life for heaven’s eternal gardens
IMAM ABU AL-FIDA’ ISMA’IL IBN KATHIR

Happy is the end of the trustworthy who one day are called to God in honour and glory.”

Section: Poetry spoken on the battles of al-khandaq and Banu Qurayza.

Al-Bukhari stated, “Hajjaj b. Minhal related to us, quoting Shu’ba, quoting ‘Adi b. Thabit, as saying that he heard al-Bara’ b. ‘Azib state, “The Prophet (SAAS) told Hassan, “Satirize them; and Gabriel is with you!””

Al-Bukhari also said, “Additional material was given by Ibrahim b. Tahman, from al-Shaybani, from ‘Adi b. Thabit, from al-Bara’ b. ‘Azib, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS), at the battle of Qurayza, told Hassan b. Thabit, “Satirize the polytheists, for Gabriel is with you.””

Al-Bukhari also related this, as did Muslim and al-Nasawi, with lines of transmission from Shu’ba, but without the addition related above by al-Bukhari.

Ibn Ishaq, may God have mercy on him, stated, “Dirar b. al-Khattab b. Mirdas, brother of Banu Mu‘ahrib b. Fihr, spoke the following on the battle of al-khandaq.”

I would add that this was prior to the acceptance by Dirar of Islam.

“Many were the sympathetic women who doubted us, though we commanded a formidable force.

Its size was almost as large as Mt. Uhud when the onlooker saw its dimensions.

You saw their short armour amply fitting their heroes and their tough leather shields.

And their fast horses charging like arrows we aimed at the misguided sinners.

It was as if, when we and they charged, they were shaking hands with us, at the entry to the trenches.

Men among whom you could find not one wise, even though they would ask, ‘Are we not rightly-guided?’

We besieged them for an entire month, standing above them like conquerors.

We attacked them morning and evening every day, fully accoutred in our armour.

With sharp, cutting swords in our hands, we used them to slice their skulls and head-bones.

The gleam of their drawn blades shining in the hands of those who unsheathed them was like the flash of lightning on clouds brightening the night that you would see with full clarity.

Had it not been for the trench where they were, we would have demolished them all.

It, however, protected them; they took refuge with it from us for fear of us.
Even though we withdrew, we left Sa'd laying dead by your tents.

When darkness came, you could hear the women chanting their lamentation for Sa'd.

We will revisit you shortly, assisting one another as we did before,

A group of men of Kināna who will not be unarmed, acting like lions of the forest, defending their dens.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “He was answered by Ka'b b. Malik, brother of Banū Salama, may God be pleased with him, ‘Many were the questioning women who asked us how we battled, though if they had been witness to it they would have seen us stand firm.

We did stand fast, seeing nothing equal to God against what faced us, relying on Him.

On our side was the Prophet, a trustworthy ally; with him we can overcome all mankind.

We were fighting a people who did wrong and were disrespectful and who were waiting a chance to attack us.

When they arose against us, we fought them hard with blows that destroyed the over-hasty.

The women would have seen us in full, long chain-mail gleaming like streams in the desert, Bearing light swords in our hands with which to puncture the zeal of the trouble-makers.

At the entrance to the trenches like lions whose thickets protect their dens.

And our cavalry attacking by morning and evening gazed at the enemy in disdain and wore insignia

In support of Ahmad and God, so that we may be sincere in worship of truth.

And the people of Mecca should know when they travel, and the tribes who came in clans,

That God has no partner, and that God is the Lord of those who believe.

Though you may have killed Sa'd impudently, God it is who best determines.

He will enter him in fine gardens which shall be the abode of the righteous,

Just as He repelled you, defeated, in flight, for all your anger, shamed and in failure.

Shamed, you gained no good there, and came close to being destroyed.

By a gale that blew upon you so that you were rendered blind beneath it.”
Ibn Ishāq stated, "Abd Allāh b. al-Zibārā al-Sahmi spoke the following verses on the battle of al-khandaq."

I would add that this poet had not yet accepted Islam.

"Greetings to a home whose features have been obliterated by lengthy neglect and the passage of time. It is as though Jews had written their tracing, except for the corrals and tent pegs.

A wasteland, as though you had not sported there, pleasantly, with girls of your own age.

Think no more of a life now gone and a place in ruins and abandoned.

And remember with thanks the trials of those people who went out together past the stone monuments,"

The monuments at Mecca, heading for Yathrib, multi-voiced, numerous, many in number.

Avoiding the high ground and usual routes in all the heights and passes

Leading along with them their lean steeds, their bellies thin, their flanks trim,

All offspring of long-bodied mares and stallions, (moving stealthily) like a lion attacking an inattentive watchman.

An army with whose banner Uyayna led, while Sākhr commanded the ahzāb, the clans.

Two leaders, splendid like full moons, in them the rescue of the poor, the refuge of those in flight

Until when they arrived in Medina and dressed for death, bearing sharp swords.

For a month and ten days they fought Muḥammad, his Companions in the fighting being the very best.

They announced their withdrawal that morning, and you said, 'This has almost finished us off!'

Had it not been for the trenches, they would have left their forces lying dead, the prey for birds and wolves."

Ibn Ishāq continued, "He was answered by Ḥassān b. Thābit, God be pleased with him,

'Do the effaced remains of a deserted campsite respond to one who addresses them?

A wasteland, its traces wiped away by frequent rain and constant gusts of wind?

There I once saw dwellings made lovely by fresh-faced women of high ancestry.

44. Presumably the stone markers delineating the holy areas of Mecca.
But enough reminiscence of fair maidens, sweet-talking and full-breasted,
And complain to God of your cares and what you think of a people who maltreated the Messenger in anger.
Who attacked him en masse, gathering townsmen and bedouin tribesmen to fight,
An army including Quyayna and Ibn Ḥarb, combining with the cavalry of the clans.
And when they arrived at Medina, they hoped to kill the Messenger and to gain much plunder.
They attacked us in the morning with all their strength but were repelled into retreat for all their rage
By a gale that broke them apart and by the forces of your Lord, the Lord of Lords.
God spared the believers their doing battle and assured them the greatest of rewards
After they had despaired; the sending down of our generous Lord’s assistance broke them apart.
He gave relief to Muḥammad and to his Companions and disgraced all the doubting defamers.
Hard in heart, aggressive, doubt-filled, disbelieving men, impure.
May failure cling to them, for they maintained their disbelief until the end.’’

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Kaḥb b. Mālik also answered him, saying,
‘The battles have given us to keep the finest gift of our bountiful Lord
White forts, well-watered camel pastures, dark green, where milk is plentiful.
(Abundant) as lava fields, their bounty and plenty goes to neighbour, relative and guest
With captured horses as swift as light, raised on barley and cut fodder.
Their feet unshod, firm-fleshed, lean of body and legs
Long-necked, responding eagerly to the call, like hunting dogs obeying their master
Now circling the grazing livestock and then bringing down the enemy and retrieving the kill,
Chasing wild beasts, light-footed, in war, grim in battle, their pedigree evident, Fed with kindness and so well-bodied and fleshed, but slim bellied.
They (the warriors) arrive wearing double-meshed coats of mail and bearing strong, accurate spears.
And sharp swords, their tarnish removed by the polishers, borne by fine men of high birth.
His right hand gripping a slim spear at the ready, its making entrusted to Khabbab.
There is a bright blue in the spear and it is like a flaring flame in the dark of night,
A squadron whose chain-mail repels the arrows and turns aside their blows,
Dark red, all gathered together, as though their spears in each engagement were a forest on fire,
Heading for the shade of the banner as though they were an eagle’s shadow, a straight lance of al-Khaṭṭ.
Their heroism overcame Abū Karib, Tubba’ and the bedouins.
It was admonitions from our Lord that guided us, through the tongue of one splendid and good.
They were presented before us and we wanted to remember them after they were set out before the clans, Wise words that the criminals thought too severe but men of wisdom understand.
_Sakhina came to defeat their Lord, but those seeking to overcome the All-Conquering will be overcome!”_

Ibn Hishām stated, “Someone I trust related to me, quoting ‘Abd al-Malik b. Yahyā b. ‘Abbad b. ‘Abd Allah b. al-Zubayr, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘When he heard this verse from him, he said, “O Kaḇ, God thanks you for having spoken those lines!”’

I would comment that by the above word _sakhina_ Quraysh were meant. The Arabs would use this word, meaning “hot”, in referring to them because of their liking for eating hot food, unusual for the desert dwellers. But God knows best.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “Kaḇ b. Malik also spoke the following verses,

‘May he who enjoys the clash of battle when its noise resembles that of the crackling of flaming reeds
Come to a battle site where swords were whetted, between al-Madhād and the trench’s sides.
They were skilled in striking at the emblazoned knights and entrusted their lives to the Lord of the East
In a force God employed to aid His prophet, and He was gracious to His servant thereby.
They all wore suits of armour the full lengths of which rippled like wind on the surface of a pool.
Of white, finely-wrought steel, its rivets (protruding) like locusts’ eyes in the tight-woven links.
Held up by the belt of an Indian-crafted sword, its steel pure, sharp and shining.
That along with our piety, was our dress on the day of the battle, and every hour a trial.
If our swords were unable to reach we would step forward to make them do so.

And you could see skulls with their tops exposed, as well as hands severed as though never created.

We met the foe with a strong, united force that drove off their army as though heading for the heights of Mt. al-Mashriq.

We prepared against the enemy every light-bodied, white-footed piebald horse, Swiftly bearing riders whose steeds seemed in the fray as (speedy) as lions on a damp hillside.

Trusted steeds which bring death to the brave from deadly spears amidst the dust.

God ordered that the horses be tied to his enemy in the warfare; God is indeed the best to bring success.

That they should harass the enemy and protect the homes if the evil-doers’ cavalry approached.

God the Almighty aided us with His power and reliable endurance at the time we met them.

We obey the order of our Prophet and respond to him; if He calls us to an unpleasant task, we are not to be outpassed.

When there is a summons to engage in dangerous acts, we attend them, and when we see fighting rage, we take part.

Those following the Prophet’s words (are right), for among us his orders are obeyed, and He is fully believed.

By that He will give us aid and show our glory and ensure thereby that we achieve a pleasant life.

Those who deny Muhammud are disbelievers and have strayed from the path of the God-fearing.’”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “Kab b. Malik also spoke the following,

“The clans well knew, when they joined against us and attacked our faith, that we would not give up

Joint forces of Qays b. Aylan and Khindif united, but they did not know what was going to happen.

They seek to turn us from our religion, while we seek to turn them from disbelief; and the All-Merciful sees and hears.

When they stormed against us in battle, broad help from God helped us against their rage;

That was God’s grace and protection for us; and whomever God does not protect is lost.

He led us to the religion of the truth, and chose it for us; and God has deeds above those of all others.”’"
Ibn Hisham commented, “These verses are in a qaṣīda of his” – by which he meant a long ode.

Ibn Ishaq continued, “Ḥassān b. Thabit spoke the following lines on the execution of Banū Qurayṣa, ‘Qurayṣa encountered what harmed them and found no aid against disgrace.

Disaster hit them equal to that which struck Banū al-Naḍīr
That day when the Messenger of God came down at them like the light-giving moon.
He had eager horses bearing riders like eagles.
We left them having gained nothing, their blood smeared on them like perfume, Prostrate, vultures circling above them; thus are the evil and obstinate paid back.
So warn Quraysh of the like from the All-Merciful, if they will take my advice.’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Ḥassān b. Thabit also spoke the following verses about Banū Qurayṣa, ‘A people who helped Quraysh had made a pact, and they shall find no aid in their land.

The Book was brought them, but they neglected it; they are blind to the Torah, ruined.
You disbelieved in the Qurʾān, though you had been brought proof of what the Warner spoke
But the leaders of Banū Luʿayy ignored the great conflagration at al-Buwayra.’

“Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥarith b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib answered him as follows, ‘May God eternalize such a deed as that! And may the fire blaze on in its parts!

You shall learn which of us is sin-free, and the lands of which of us it will harm.
If the palm trees there had been riders, they would have told you, “There’s no place for you here, so leave!”’”

I comment that Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥarith spoke this verse before he accepted Islam. Some of these lines are also given by al-Bukhārī.

Ibn Ishaq recorded also the response of Ḥassān on this subject addressed to Jabal b. Jawwāl al-Thaʿlabi; that we have purposely omitted.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ḥassān b. Thabit also spoke the following eulogizing Saʿd and those men who achieved martyrdom fighting Banū Qurayṣa, 'My people, is there defence against matters ordained? And will good times now gone ever return? I remembered a time now gone, my emotions were disturbed and my tears flowed down. The pain of sorrow reminded me of brethren and of dead now gone, including Tūfayl and Rāfī. And Sa'd; they are in paradise, while their homes are empty and the earth a waste-land without them. At the battle of Badr they were loyal to the Messenger, while above them were the shades of death and flashing swords. He called, and they responded properly, all of them responsive and obedient to every command. They did not withdraw until all were gone; and it is only battles that shorten a life-span. For they hope for intercession from him, at a time when only prophets will intercede. And so that, O best of worshippers, was our brave action, our response to God while death awaited. We made the first step towards You, while behind us in God's religion others will follow our first. We know that dominion is God's alone, and that God's decree will surely prevail.'

ON THE EXECUTION OF ABŪ RĀFI' SALLĀM B. ABŪ AL-ḤUQAYQ THE JEW, GOD DAMN HIM, IN A FORTRESS OF HIS AT KHAYBAR. HE WAS A WELL-KNOWN MERCHANT OF HIJĀZ.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “When the battle of al-khandaq and the Banū Qurayṣa affair were over, the matter of Sallām b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq, he being known as Abū Rāfī', arose. He was one of those who had gathered the clans against the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Prior to the Battle of Uḥud, Aws had killed Ka'b b. al-Ashraf and so the Khazraj asked permission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to kill Sallām b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq, who was at Khaybar, and he agreed. “Muḥammad b. Musallam al-Zuhri related to me as follows, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Ka'b b. Malik as having said, ‘God had so ordered it for His messenger (ṢAAS) that Aws and Khazraj used to compete with one another like two stallions. If Aws ever accomplished something for him, then Khazraj would not want this to give them any advantageous position with him over themselves. So they would strive hard to achieve something similar. And when Khazraj accomplished something, Aws would say the same. “When Aws struck down Ka'b b. al-Ashraf for his enmity to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Khazraj determined that Aws would have no advantage with him over themselves thereby. And so they asked themselves who had expressed... an enmity similar to that of Ibn al-Ashraf; they thought of Ibn Abū al-Ḥuqayq, who was at Khaybar. They therefore asked permission of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to kill him, and he agreed.

"Five men of Khazraj, of Banū Salama, then set out to do this. They were 'Abd Allah b. 'Atik, Mas'ūd b. Sinān, 'Abd Allah b. Unays, Abī Qatāda al-Ḥarīth b. Rib'i, and Khuza'a b. Aswād, an ally of theirs from Banū Aslām. The Messenger of God (SAAS) placed 'Abd Allah b. 'Atik in command of them and told them to refrain from killing any woman or children.

"It was night when they arrived at the compound of Ibn Abī al-Ḥuqayq. They took care to close all the doors upon those who lived there. He himself was in an upper chamber reached by a ladder. They climbed it, reached his door and asked to come in. His wife came out to them and asked who they were. They replied that they were bedouin seeking supplies. She told them they had come to the right man and let them in."

The account proceeds, "When we went in, we shut him and ourselves inside the room, fearing someone might interfere between us. His wife screamed and gave him warning about us, but we set upon him with our swords while he was still in bed. I swear it was only his whiteness – like that of a Coptic dress lying there – that showed us where he was in the black of the night. As his wife screamed, we raised our swords to her, but remembered what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had forbidden and lowered them again. We would otherwise have killed her too that night. As we struck him with our swords, 'Abd Allah b. Unays plunged his into his stomach and pierced him through, as he said the words, "Qatī! Qatī!" "That's enough! That's enough!"

"Then we left. 'Abd Allah b. 'Atik had poor sight and he fell off the ladder and severely sprained his arm. We carried him off into a water channel at one of their wells. They (Ṣallām's people) lit torches and chased all around looking for us, but gave up and assembled around him as he expired.

"We wondered how we could ascertain that he had died, so one of us suggested that he would go back to see. He mingled with those there and reported how he had seen her – Sallām's wife – holding a torch and telling people as she looked into his face, "I swear, I heard the voice of Ibn 'Atik. But then I told myself I must be wrong, because there was no way he could be in these parts!" She then went close and, looking into his face, said, "He's dead, by the God of the Jews!" And I swear, I never heard words sweeter to me than those!

"When he returned and told us this, we carried our companion away and reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS) the death of God's enemy. When with him, we argued over which of us had actually killed him, each of us claiming it. He then said, "Hand me your swords." When we did so, he examined them and said of the sword of 'Abd Allāh b. Anis, "This one killed him; I can see food traces on it."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Hassān b. Ṭhabīt spoke the following verses on this,
'God has credit for that band you met, Ibn al-Ḥuqayq, and you too, Ibn al-Ashraf. They attacked you bearing light swords, as lively as lions in thick brush. They reached you in your own town and made you taste death with swift swords. Seeking victory for their prophet's religion, belittling every difficulty.'

This, then, is the account as given by Imām Muḥammad b. Ishāq, may God have mercy on him.

Imām Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Bukhārī stated, "Ishāq b. Naṣr related to us, quoting Yahya b. Adam, quoting Ibn Abū Zaʿida, from his father, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Barāʾ b. ʿAzib, who said, "The Prophet (ṢAAS) sent a group of men to attack Abū Rāfīʾ. Abū Allāh b. ʿAtik entered his house at night while he slept and killed him."

Al-Bukhārī also narrated, "Yūsuf b. Mūsā related to us, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Mūsā, from Isrāʾīl, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Barāʾ, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent out some men of the ansār to attack Abū Rāfīʾ, the Jew. He appointed ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAtik in charge of them. Abū Rāfīʾ had been doing harm to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and assisting his enemies. He was inside a fort he owned in Hijāz. When they drew near him, by which time the sun had set and the people were taking their livestock inside, ʿAbd Allāh told his companions, "Sit down here, and I'll go off and play a trick on the gatekeeper to get inside." He then went on, close to the gate, where he shielded himself with his clothing as though relieving himself, the other residents already having gone inside. The gatekeeper called out to him to come on inside since he wanted to close the gate."

(ʿAbd Allāh's account went on), "So I went in and hid. When everyone was inside, he locked the gate and hung the keys on a peg. I then took them and opened the gate. Abū Rāfīʾ was entertaining in an upstairs room of his. When his guests left, I went on up to him, closing each door behind me from the inside, determined that if they spotted me they would not reach me before I killed him. "When I reached his chambers, he was inside a ḥāgh, a dark apartment, but I did not precisely know his whereabouts. So I called out, "Abū Rāfīʾ?" "Who's there?" he asked. I then hurried towards the voice and struck out at him with my sword. But I was confused and accomplished nothing, while he shouted out. So I left the chamber and went a little off, then came back in again, asking, "What was that sound, Abū Rāfīʾ?" He replied, "Woe on your mother, I swear, there's a man in the house who just hit me with a sword!" At that I hit him hard once more but still did not kill him. Then I put the tip of my sword into his stomach until it reached his back. I then knew I had killed him. After that I opened the doors again, one by one, and reached a stairway. When I put my foot down, thinking I had finished (climbing down) I fell. It was a moon-lit night. I broke my leg but tied it up with a turban and went on as far as the gate, where I sat, telling myself I should not leave until I knew I had killed him. At the cock’s crow the death-announcer got up on a wall and shouted, “I lament the death of Abū Raḍī, saviour of the people of Hijāz.” I then left to join my companions, telling them, “Let’s go! God has killed Abū Raḍī!” When I reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, he said, “Stretch out your leg!” I did so and he touched it. And it was as if it had never caused me pain!”

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “Aḥmad b. ʿUthmān b. Ḥaṭḥim al-Awdī related to us, quoting Shurayḥ, quoting Ibrāhīm b. Yūsuf, from his father, from Aḥmad b. ʿIshāq, who said he heard al-Barāʾ say, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent out ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAtīk, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Uṭba, along with others, against Abū Raḍī. When they drew near the fortress, ‘Abd Allāh b. ʿAtīk told them to wait while he went on ahead.’” (He recounted), “I played a trick to get inside the fortress. They could not find a donkey of theirs and went out with a lantern to find it. I was afraid I would be discovered, so I concealed my head and crouched as though relieving myself. He (the gatekeeper) called out, “Whoever wants to go in should do so before I lock the gate.” So I went inside then hid in a donkey stall at the fortress gate. There were people dining with Abū Raḍī and they kept on conversing with him until it was night. Then they went home.

“When the voices died down and I could hear no movement, I came out. I saw where the gatekeeper had placed the key to the fortress, in a niche, and I took it. So I used it to open the door, telling myself I would quietly sneak out if people detected me. I then barred the doors of all their dwellings from the outside.

“After that I climbed a ladder up to Abū Raḍī and found his apartment dark, the lantern having been extinguished. I did not know where the man was, so I called out his name. When he responded, I made for the voice and struck him. He cried out, but my blow did no injury. Later I came back to him as though to help him and, disguising my voice, asked him, “What’s wrong, Abū Raḍī?” He replied, “Woe on your mother! A man came in to me and struck me with a sword!” I then made for him and struck him again, but once more to no avail. He shouted out and aroused his family. After that I again returned, changing my voice as though coming to help. He was lying on his back. So I placed my sword on his stomach and leaned on it until I heard the sound of (it striking) bone. I then left, in some confusion, found my way to the ladder I wanted to descend, but I fell off it and dislocated my leg. I bandaged it and went on to my companions, limping. I told them, “Get going! Tell the Messenger of God, the good news! I’ll not leave until I hear the announcement of his death.” When dawn broke, the announcer climbed up and lamented the death of Abū Raḍī. So I got up and left, feeling no pain, and rejoined my companions before they reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and I told him the good news.””
Al-Bukhārī, alone of the authors of the six canonical books of tradition, related this text. He then went on, “Al-Zuhri stated, Ubayy b. Ka'b said, ‘So they went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was on the minbār, the pulpit, at the time. He asked, ‘Are faces happy?’ They replied, ‘May yours be, Messenger of God!’ ‘Did you slay him?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. ‘Hand me the sword,’” he asked. He unsheathed it and then said, “Yes, that’s his food on the tip of the sword.’”

I would comment that it is likely that when ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Atik fell from the ladder that he dislocated his shank and sprained his foot and his leg. When he bound it up, it had the immediate effect of calming the pain. And when he wanted to walk, he was aided (by unseen forces) for he was engaged in a beneficial exercise. When he reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and came to a rest, the pain in his leg again flared up. When he stretched it out and the Messenger of God (SAAS) touched it, that took away the pain there had been, as well as what he might have expected there would be thereafter. This would reconcile the former and latter accounts. But God knows best.

In this regard, Mūsā b. Uqba related in his maghāzi, his work on the military engagements, an account similar to that of Muhammad b. Ishaq. He named the group of men who took part therein as those stated by Ibn Ishaq, Ibrāhim and Abū Ubayd.

THE EXECUTION OF KHĀLID B. SUFYĀN B. NUBAYH AL-HUDHALI.

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqī gave this account in Dalā’il (The Signs) following that of Abū Raﬁ'.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Ya‘qūb related to him that his father quoted Ibn Ishaq as saying, “Muhammad b. Ja‘far b. al-Zubayr related to me, from Ibn ‘Abd Allāh b. Unays, from his father, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) called for me and said, ‘I have been informed that Khalid b. Sufyān b. Nubayh al-Hudhali is gathering a force of men to attack me. He is at Urāna. Go to him and kill him.’” I replied, “Messenger of God, please describe him to me so that I can recognize him.” “When you see him”, he replied, “you’ll tremble.”

“So I left, bearing my sword; I came upon him at Urāna where he had litter-borne women for whom he had sought a campsite. When it was time for the al-ṣaṣr prayer – and I had experienced that shivering that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had described for me when I should see him – I went towards him. As I did so, I was worried that some conflict might develop between us that would preoccupy me from performing the prayer. So I prayed as I walked towards him, nodding my head for the prayer bows and prostrations. When I reached him, he said, “And who might you be?” I replied, “I’m a bedouin Arab who has heard of you and of your gathering a force against that fellow, and I’ve therefore come to you.” He replied, “Yes, I am engaged in that.” I then accompanied him a while until, when I could, I attacked him with my sword and killed him. I then departed, leaving his women all crouched over him.

“When I reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he saw me, he asked, “Happy, I hope?” I replied, “I’ve killed him, Messenger of God!” “You spoke true,” he said. He then arose with me, entered his house and presented me with a stick, saying, “Keep this with you, ‘Abd Allah b. Unays.”

“So I took it and went outside where people asked me what it was. I replied that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had given it to me and had told me to keep it. They then suggested I return to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and ask him to explain about that. So I did go back and asked him why he had given me the stick. He replied, “It is a sign between yourself and me for Judgement Day. There will be very few that day with something to lean upon.””

The account continues, “‘And so ‘Abd Allah attached it to his sword and it was always with him until, upon his death, it was included in his winding sheet and he and it were buried together.’”

Urwa b. al-Zubayr and Mūsā b. Uqba relate this story without a full line of transmission in their works on the maghāzī. But God knows best.

Ibn Hishām stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Unays spoke the following verses on his execution of Khālid b. Sufyān, ‘I left Ibn Thawr like a camel foal still connected to its mother, while around him hired weepers rent their clothes to shreds.

I engaged him, while the camel litter was at my back and his, with a sword formed from fine, molten steel,

Well-tested by the heads of armoured men, as though a flame in a dark night from a flaring fire.

I told him, as my sword bit into his head, “I am Ibn Unays, a knight, no coward I.

I am the son of him whose like fate never produced, a man who welcomed all, a generous host.”

I told him, “Take that, the blow of a noble, gracious man who follows the religion of the Prophet Muḥammad;

If the Prophet is concerned about a disbeliever, I race towards him, raising voice and hand.”’”
I comment that his full name was ʿAbd Allāh b. Unays b. Ḥarām, Abū Yaḥyā al-Juhānī; he was a famous and highly-regarded saḥābi, “Companion”. He was present at the al-ʿAqaba pledge, and participated in the battles of Uhud, al-khandaq and later ones. His death occurred late in life, while he was in Syria, at age 80, as is well known. It is also said that he died in the year 54 AH. But God knows best. ʿAli b. al-Zubayr and Khalīfa b. Khayyāt differentiated him from ʿAbd Allāh b. Unays Abū ʿIsā, the anṣārī; it was he who related that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prayed at Uhud over a vessel containing water and its spout opened and he drank from it. This was what Abū Dāʿūd and al-Tirmidhī related through ʿAbd Allāh al-ʿUmārī, from ʿIsā b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Unays, from his father. Al-Tirmidhī then stated, “But its chain of authorities is not reliable; and ʿAbd Allāh al-ʿUmārī is a weak source with regard to his memory.”

The Story of ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ and the Negus, after the battle of al-khandaq, and how ʿAmr accepted Islam.

Ibn Ishāq related the following after his account of the killing of Abū Raftā. ʿYazid b. Abū Ḥabīb related to me, from Rashīd, freed-man of Ḥabīb b. Aws al-Thaqafī, from Ḥabīb b. Aws, as follows, “ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ related to me directly, saying, “When we left with the aḥzāb, the clans, after the battle of al-khandaq, I gathered some Quraysh who thought as I did and respected my opinion and told them, ‘You know how I think that the Muḥammad affair is escalating badly. You know my opinion; what is yours?’”’ “How do you mean?’ they asked. “‘Well,’ I went on, ‘I think we should join the Negus and stay with him. If Muḥammad defeats our people, we’ll be there with the Negus, and we’d prefer to be under his authority than that of Muḥammad. If our people prevail, they already know us, and we’ll experience nothing but good from them.’ “‘They responded, ‘That’s a (good) opinion.’ “‘I then said, ‘Let’s gather something to present to him.’ The gift he liked most from our country was leather, so we collected a large quantity of it for him. “‘After that we left and joined him. While we were there with him, ʿAmr b. Umayya al-ʿĀmārī arrived; the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had sent him to the Negus concerning Jaʿfar and his companions. He went in to see the Negus and then came out again. I told my friends, ‘That’s ʿAmr b. Umayya; if I were to go in to the Negus and asked him to give him over to me, he would do so and I could kill him. And if I did that Quraysh would know that I was acting for them in killing Muḥammad’s envoy.’” “He went on, “So I went in and bowed as was my custom. He greeted me, saying, ‘Welcome to my friend! Did you bring me a gift from your country?’ I replied, ‘Yes, O king. I’ve brought you a lot of leather.’ I then gave it to him and he was delighted. After that I asked him, '0 king, I saw a man who just left your presence; he is the envoy of a man who is our enemy. Give him over to me, so that I may kill him. He has killed some of our leaders and nobles.'

""But he became enraged; he put out his hand and struck his nose with it so hard I thought he broke it. If the earth had opened up, I would have willingly gone inside!

""Then I said, '0 king, if I had known this would displease you, I would never have asked it of you.'

""He responded, 'Do you ask me to hand over to you the envoy of a man to whom the nāmūs al-akbar, "the archangel Gabriel" comes, the one who used to come to Moses, so you could kill him?'

""I asked, 'Is that how he is, 0 king?' 'Woe on you, 'Amr,' he replied; 'obey me and follow him. I swear by God that he is right. He will certainly overcome all those who oppose him just as Moses son of 'Imrān defeated Pharoah and his troops.'

""I asked, 'Will you accept my allegiance to him in Islam?'

""Yes,' he replied, stretching out his hand. I then declared to him my allegiance to Islam.

""After that I went out to my companions, my attitude towards Islam now completely different from what it had been. I concealed from them my having accepted Islam and then left, heading for the Messenger of God (SAAS), to become a Muslim. I met Khalid b. al-Walid – that being before the conquest of Mecca – while he was coming from Mecca. I asked him, 'Where are you headed, Abū Sulaymān?' He replied, 'I swear by God, the way has become clear.
The man really is a prophet. I am going to accept Islam; until when (should I delay)?' I then told him, 'I swear by God, I myself have only come to accept Islam!'

""So we went to Medina to see the Prophet (SAAS). Khalid arrived first, accepted Islam and declared his allegiance. I went up to him and said, 'Messenger of God, I pledge allegiance to you on condition that you forgive me all my past sins, without reference to what is yet to come.'

""The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'Amr, do pledge, for Islam erases all before it, just as the Hijra erased all that preceded it.'

""I then made my pledge to him and left.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "A reliable source related to me that Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa b.
Abū Ṭalḥa was with them both and accepted Islam at the same time. 'Abd Allāh
b. Abū al-Zibārā? al-Sahmī then spoke the verses,

'I refer Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa (to what is behind us) (or to our pact) and to the place at al-Muqabbal where people cast their sandals.

And to all the pacts our forefathers made, and Khalid is not absolved of the like as well.
Is it the key to a house you do not possess that you desire;" yet what could you more desire than a house of ancient glory?

Do not trust Khalid hereafter, not ʿUthmān; they have caused a calamity."

I observe that their acceptance of Islam came after the Ḥudaybiyya truce. This is evident because on that occasion Khalid b. al-Walid was in the polytheist cavalry, as will be related. It would have been more appropriate to refer thereafter to his acceptance of Islam. But I have related it here since Imām Muḥammad b. Ishāq, God be pleased with him, did so. This is because the first departure of ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ to the Negus did occur after the battle at al-khandaq; it is clear that he went there for the remainder of the year 5 AH. But God knows best.

Chapter: The Marriage of the Prophet (SAAS) to Umm Ḥabiba, daughter of Abū Sufyān.

Al-Bayhaqi related following the battle of al-khandaq, quoting al-Kalbī from Abū Šāliḥ from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said with relation to the words of the Almighty, “Perhaps God will bring about friendship between you and those of them you consider enemies” (ṣūrat al-Mumtaḥana; LX, v.7). “This relates to the marriage of the Prophet (SAAS) to Umm Ḥabiba, daughter of Abū Sufyān; she thus became the ʿumm al-muʾminin, the ‘mother of the believers,’” while Muʿāwiya (son of Abū Sufyān), became the khal al-muʾminin, the ‘uncle of the believers.’"

Al-Bayhaqi then stated, “Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥafīz recounted to us, quoting Ahmad b. Najda, quoting Yahyā b. ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd, quoting Ibn al-Mubārak, from Maʾmār, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, who said that Umm Ḥabiba was with ʿUbayd Allāh b. Jaḥsh who had gone to the Negus and had died. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had then arranged marriage with Umm Ḥabiba while she was there in Abyssinia, and the Negus had arranged this, giving her a dowry of 4,000 dirhams which he had taken to her by Shurāḥbīl b. Ḥasana; it was he who provided her trousseau, the Messenger of God (SAAS) not sending her anything. He said, “The dowry provided for the wives of the Prophet (SAAS) used to be 400 (dirhams).”

I would comment that in fact the dowries of the Prophet (SAAS) were 12 awqiyya and 1 nash (of gold); and the wuqya was worth 40 dirhams, while the nash was worth one-half (a wuqya). That totals 500 dirhams.

Al-Bayhaqi then recounted through Ibn Lahī’a, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa, that ʿUbayd Allāh b. Jaḥsh died a Christian in Abyssinia. The next to marry Umm Ḥabiba was the Messenger of God (SAAS); it was ʿUthmān b. Ṭallāḥ, God be pleased with him, who arranged her marriage to him.

45. ʿUthmān b. Ṭallāḥ was in charge of the keys of the kaʿba.
46. The honorific title given to the wives of the Prophet (SAAS).
I comment that the conversion to Christianity of 'Ubayd Allah b. Jahsh has been described above. That occurred after he had migrated to Abyssinia with the Muslims. There Satan subverted him and made Christianity seem attractive to him, and he therefore embraced it until he died. May God curse him! He used to mock the Muslims by telling them, "We see clearly; your eyes are still half closed!" Reference to this is made above relating to the migration to Abyssinia."

Urwā's statement above, "It was Uthmān who arranged the marriage for him," is strange. This is because Uthmān had returned to Mecca before this, and then migrated to Medina, accompanied by his wife Ruqayya, as is related above. But God knows best.

What is authentic is the account of Yūnus, quoting Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said, "I was informed that the man who arranged her marriage was her cousin Khalīd b. Saʿīd b. al-ʿĀṣ."

I comment that the agent of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in accepting this contract was Ṭḥumma, the Negus, the king of Abyssinia. This is what Yūnus reported, on the authority of Muḥammad b. Ishāq, whom he quotes as saying, "Abū Jaʿfar Muḥammad b. ʿAlī b. al-Ḥusayn related to me, stating, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍamri to the Negus and he arranged his marriage to Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abī Sufyān, conveying from him 400 dinars.'"

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār stated, "Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan related to me, from his father, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. Zuhayr, from Ismāʿil b. ʿAmr, that Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abū Sufyān said, 'While I was in Abyssinia, I was surprised by a visit from an envoy of the Negus, a slave-girl called Abraha who used to care for his clothes and anoint him. She asked to come in and I agreed. Then she said, "The king says to you, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) has written to me asking me to arrange your marriage to him.'" I replied, "God has sent you with good news." Abraha then continued, "The king says to you, 'Appoint an agent to arrange your marriage.'"

"'So I sent for Khalīd b. Saʿīd b. al-Āṣ and appointed him my agent. Then I gave to Abraha two silver bracelets and two silver camel decorations I was wearing and silver rings from each of my toes, I was so pleased with the good news she had brought me.

"'That evening the Negus ordered Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib and the Muslims there to attend him and he made an address in which he said, "Praise be to God, the King, the All-Holy, the Faithful, the Powerful, the Almighty! I testify that there is no god but God, that Muḥammad is His servant and His messenger, and that it is He whose coming Ḥisā (Jesus), son of Mary predicted. Further, the Messenger of God (SAAS) has requested that I marry him to Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abū Sufyān. I have responded to the request made by the Messenger."

of God (SAAS), who has given 400 dinars as her dowry.” He then poured out the coins before everyone.

“Khālid b. Sa‘īd spoke, saying, “Praise be to God! I give Him praise and ask His forgiveness. I testify that there is no god but God, and that Muḥammad is His servant and messenger whom He sent with guidance and the religion of truth to show its superiority to all religions, however much the polytheists may dislike this. Moreover, I have responded to what the Messenger of God (SAAS) has requested, and I have contracted his marriage to Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abū Sufyān. May God bless the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

“The Negus then paid the dinars over to Khālid b. Sa‘īd who took them. Then everyone was about to rise, but he (the Negus) then said, “Take your seats, for it is the practice of prophets to have a feast when they marry.” He then called for food and they ate and dispersed thereafter.”

I comment that it may well be that ‘Amr b. Umayya, when seen by ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ emerging from the presence of the Negus, following the battle of al-khandaq, had been active in the matter of Umm Ḥabība. But God knows best.

However, the ḥāfīz al-Bayḥāqi stated, “Abū ‘Abd Allāh b. Māndāḥ related that the marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Umm Ḥabība was in the year 6 AH, while his marriage to Umm Salama was in the year 4 AH.”

I comment that Khalīfa, Abū Ubayd Allāh Ma‘ṣmar b. al-Muthannā and Ibn al-Baraqi said the same, and that the marriage to Umm Ḥabība was in 6 AH. Some people said that it was 7 AH. Al-Bayḥāqi said, “That is more likely.”

I also note that, as has been related heretofore, his marriage to Umm Salama was late in the year 4 AH. It is likely that the marriage to Umm Ḥabība occurred before that, though it could also have been thereafter. It is most probable that it was following the battle of al-khandaq, because of what we have related above regarding ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ, and how he saw ‘Amr b. Umayya with the Negus, engaged in that matter. But God knows best.

The ḥāfīz Ibn al-Athir recounted in al-Ghābā, quoting Qatāda, that when Umm Ḥabība migrated from Abyssinia to Medina, the Messenger of God (SAAS) became engaged to her and married her.

Some scholars maintain that he married her after her father had accepted Islam, following the conquest of Mecca. But that contradicts what was related by Muslim, through ʻAbīkrima b. ʻAmr al-Yamani, from ʻAbī Zubayr Simāk b. al-Walīd, from Ibn ʻAbbās, that Abū Sufyān said, “O Messenger of God, grant me three wishes!” “Yes,” he replied. “That you give me authority to battle the unbelievers just as I used to battle the Muslims.” “Yes,” he replied. “And that you appoint Miḥāwiya as a clerk of yours.” “Yes,” he replied. “And I have at home the best and most lovely of all the Arab women, Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abū Sufyān; let me marry you to her.”

That is the hadith in its entirety.

Ibn al-Athir stated, “This hadith is one for which Muslim is criticized. This is because when Abū Sufyān came to renew the pact before the conquest, he went in to see his daughter Umm Habiba and she rolled up the rug of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He then asked, “By God, I don’t know whether you consider the carpet too good for me or me too good for it!” She replied, “This rug belongs to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and you are a polytheist.” He replied, “I swear by God, you've changed for the worse since you left me, daughter!”

Ibn Hazm stated, “This hadith was invented by 'Ikrima b. 'Ammar. This statement from him should not be considered dependable.”

Others stated that he wanted to renew the pact because of the disadvantages in it (that had been included) without his permission. Others say it was because he believed that his daughter’s marriage would be dissolved because of his acceptance of Islam.

But all this is unconvincing. What is most likely is that he wanted to marry him (the Prophet (SAAS)) to his other daughter 'Amra, since he thought that would bring honour to himself. And he therefore sought help from his daughter Umm Habiba, as is stated in both sahih collections. The narrator was merely in error in his using the name Umm Habiba. That is why we have given (only) one report.

Abū Ubayd al-Qāsim b. Sallām stated, “Umm Ḥabiba died in the year 44 AH.” Abū Bakr b. Abū Khaythama said, “She died one year before Mu'āwiya.” The death of Mu'āwiya occurred in Rajab of 60 AH.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) TO ZAYNAB, DAUGHTER OF JAHSH B. RYAB B. YA'AMUR B. ŠABRA B. MURRA B. KABIR B. GHANAM B. DUDAN B. ASAD B. KHUZAYMA, AL-ASADIYYA, UMM AL-MŪMININ, 'MOTHER OF THE BELIEVERS'.

Her mother was Umayya, daughter of 'Abd al-Mu'tālib, aunt of the Messenger of God (SAAS). She was previously the wife of his freed-man Zayd b. Ḥarītha, God be pleased with him.

Qatada, al-Wāqidi and some of the people of Medina said that he married her in the year 5 AH; some added the month, Dhū al-Qa‘da. The Ḥāfez al-Bayhaqi stated, “He married her after the attack on Banū Qurayza.” Khalifa b. Khayyāt, Abū Ubayda Maʿmar b. al-Muthanna and Ibn Mandah said that he married her in the year 3 AH. The first possibility is better known and it is the one accepted by Ibn Jarir and several historians.

Various commentators, theologians and historians give as the reason for his marrying her reference to a hadith related by Ahmad b. Ḥanbal in his collection that we have deliberately refrained from including so that those lacking understanding would not place it in the wrong context.18

48. Zaynab had originally been presented, when a virgin, by the Prophet (SAAS) to his freed-man and adopted son Zayd d. Ḥarītha. Her later divorce and this marriage inspired much commentary and is the subject of the following passage in the Qurʾān quoted here by Ibn Kathīr.
In His Glorious Qur'an, Almighty God stated, “And (consider) when you say to him whom God had favoured and whom you had favoured, ‘Keep your wife for yourself, and fear God,’ and you hide within yourself what God makes evident, and you fear men. Yet God has greater right that you fear Him. And since Zayd has now finished with her, We give her to you in marriage so that there should be no distress for believers regarding the wives of their adopted sons when the latter have divorced them. God’s command must be fulfilled. And there should be no distress for the Prophet in accomplishing what God has imposed upon him. Such has been God’s course with those who went before. God’s decree is determined’” (sūrat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.37, 38).

We have discussed this at sufficient length in our Tafsir (Exegesis).

The person referred to as having received God’s favour is Zayd b. Haritha, the freed-man of the Messenger of God (SAAS). God favoured him with Islam, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) also favoured him by setting him free and by marrying him to Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh, the daughter of his own maternal aunt. Muqatil b. Habba stated that the dowry he provided for her was ten dinars and sixty dirhams, a veil for her head and face, a wrap, a coat of armour, fifty mudd (a dry measure) and ten mudd of dates. She (Zaynab) remained with him (Zayd) close to a year, or longer, but then they quarrelled. Her husband complained about her to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he would say to him, “Keep your wife for yourself and fear God.”

God stated, “You hide within yourself what God makes evident.” Regarding this, ‘Ali b. al-Husayn Zayn b. al-‘Abidin and al-Suddi said, “He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) knew that she was to be one of his wives and it is he who hid (this) within himself.”

Many early authorities discussed this matter in various strange ways. Some of these are controversial and so we are omitting them.

God Almighty stated, “And since Zayd has now finished with her, We give her to you in marriage ...” This refers to Zayd having divorced her. And when her ‘idda period was over, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent to her so that she would become engaged to himself, and he then married her. And it was the Lord of the universe, Blessed and Almighty is He, who married him to her, as is established in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, from Anas b. Mālik. The latter related that Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh, used to claim superiority over the other wives of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and say, “It was your families who arranged your marriage, whereas it was Almighty God, from above the seven heavens, who arranged mine!”

There is a report through ʿIsā b. Tahmān, from Anas, which says, “Zaynab would claim superiority over the wives of the Prophet (SAAS) and say, ‘It was God who arranged my marriage from heaven.’ And it was regarding her that the verse requiring use of the hikāb, the veil, was revealed, namely, ‘O you who believe, do not enter the chambers of the Prophet unless you are invited to eat, without waiting while it be cooked?” (ṣūrat al-ʾAhzāb; XXXIII, v.53).

Al-Bayhaqi related, from a ḥadīth of Ḥammād, from Zayd b. Ḥarīth, from Anas, who said, “Zayd came to complain about Zaynab and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘Fear God, and keep your wife for yourself.’

Anas went on, “And if the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had been concealing something, it would have been this. She used to claim superiority over the wives of the Prophet (ṢAAS) and say, ‘It was your families that arranged your marriages, while God from above the seven heavens arranged mine.’ He then said, ‘Al-Bukhārī related this from Ahmad, from Muḥammad b. Abū Bakr al-Muqaddamī, from Ḥammād b. Zayd.’

Al-Bayhaqi then related, through ʿAffān, from Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Thābit, from Anas, who said, “Zayd came to complain to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) about Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh. The Prophet (ṢAAS) told him, ‘Keep your family for yourself.’ And there was revealed the verse, ‘and you hide within yourself what God makes evident.’

He went on, “Al-Bukhārī related it, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Raḥīm, from Muṭṭāb b. Manṣūr, from Muḥammad, in an abbreviated form.” Ibn Jarir stated, “Ibn Ḥamīd related to us, saying, ‘Jarir related to us from Mughira, from al-Shaʿbī, as follows, “Zaynab used to say to the Prophet (ṢAAS), ‘I, alone of your wives, was led to you by three factors: my grandfather and yours was one person.’ (She was referring to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, who was the father of the father of the Prophet (ṢAAS) and the father of her own mother, Umayya.) And I was married to you by God Almighty from heaven. And the envoy was Gabriel, upon whom be peace.’”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Hāshim (meaning Ibn al-Qāsim) related to us, quoting al-Nadr, quoting Sulaymān b. al-Mughira, from Thābit, from Anas, who said, ‘When Zaynab’s ʿidda period was over, the Prophet (ṢAAS) said to Zayd, “Go and make mention of me to her.” He went to her—she was leavening her dough at the time—and (later said), “When I saw her, I felt so emotional I could not look at her, because the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had made mention of her. So I turned my back to her and withdrew, saying, ‘Zaynab, rejoice! The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) makes reference to you (for marriage).’ She exclaimed, ‘But I have not done anything to cause my Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, to so honour me!’ Then she went to her place of prayer.” Thereafter the (passage in the) Qurʾān was revealed, and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came and went in to her without (seeking) permission.’”

Anas went on, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) consummated his marriage with her, we made a feast of meat and bread for her sake. Some people left while some men stayed in the house talking following the food. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left, and I followed him as he went to each of the chambers of his wives to greet them. They called out to him, ‘O Messenger of God, how He went on, "Then he left and entered his chamber and I went to enter it with him. But he threw down the screen between myself and him. (Then it was) revealed about the hijāb, the screen and the people were admonished by the words, 'Do not enter the chambers of the Prophet unless you are invited.'"

Muslim and al-Nasā'ī related it thus, through Sulaymān b. al-Mughṭra.

An Account of the institution of the hijāb, the screen, on the morning of Zaynab’s wedding arranged by God.

It was appropriate for the screen to be instituted during this wedding, as a protection for her and for her sisters, also known as the umahāt al-mu'minin, the "mothers of the faithful". This was in accord with the previously held view of ʿUmar Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Raqqāŷī related to him, quoting Muʿtamīr b. Sulaymān, who said, "I heard my father say, 'Abī Mījlāz quoted Anas b. Mālik as having said, 'When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Zaynab, daughter of Jāḥsh, he invited people in and they ate and sat there conversing. When he was ready to arise, they did not do so. When he saw that, he himself arose. When he did so, others also arose, though three men remained seated. When the Prophet (ṢAAS) came (back) to go inside, the people were still sitting, but they then got up and left. I went and told the Prophet (ṢAAS) that they had left and he returned and went inside. I went as if to go inside too, but he let down the screen between myself and him. Then God Almighty revealed, ‘O you who believe, do not enter the chambers of the Prophet.’’"

Al-Bukhārī related this in other passages; and Muslim and al-Nasā'ī did so with other lines of transmission from Muʿtamīr. Al-Bukhārī then related it – he alone doing so – from a ḥadīth of Ayyūb from Abū Qullābā, from Anas in similar form.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Abū Muʿāmmar related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Wārith, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Suhayb, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, "A feast of bread and meat was given for the marriage of the Prophet (ṢAAS) to Zaynab, daughter of Jāḥsh. I was dispatched to invite people to come for the food, and they would come and eat then leave; others would come and do the same. I continued inviting until I could not find anyone left to invite. I then said, ‘O Prophet of God, I don’t find anyone to invite.’ He responded, ‘Take the food away.’ But there were three men who stayed in the house conversing. So the Prophet (ṢAAS) left and went to the chamber of ʿAʾishah and said, ‘Peace be upon you, people of the house, along with the mercy and blessings of God.’ She replied, ‘Peace be upon you, along with the mercy and blessings of God. How did you find your family, may God bless you!' He then went and visited the chambers of each of his wives, spoke to them as he had to 'A'isha and they responded to him as she had done. He then came back and the three men were still in the house conversing. The Prophet (SAAS) was exceedingly modest and he then left again, heading for 'A'isha's chamber. And I don't know whether I told him or whether he was (otherwise) informed that the people had left, but he came out, and, placing one foot over the threshold of the door and leaving the other outside it, he let down the screen between myself and him. Then the verse relating to the hijab was revealed.”

Al-Bukhari was alone in giving this from this line. He then related it, also uniquely, from Ishâq, he being Ibn Naṣr, from 'Abd Allâh b. Bukyâr al-Sâhid, from Humâyd b. Anas in similar form. That account refers to two men, instead of three. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhari also gave the chain of a similar hadith from Ibrâhîm b. Tahâmân, from al-Jâ'd Abû Uthmân, from Anas.

Ibn Abî Hâtim said, “My father related to us, quoting Abû al-Muqaffâ, quoting Ja'far b. Sulaymân, from al-Jâ'd Abû Uthmân al-Yâshkuri, from Anas b. Mâlik, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) and some of his wives gave a wedding feast. Umm Salim made some hays, a dish of date, butter and curds, and placed it in a bowl, saying, ‘Go to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and tell him that this is a little something for him from us.’”

“Anas went on, ‘People at that time were under strain. I took it to him, saying, ‘Messenger of God, Umm Salim has sent you this, with her greetings, and says, ‘This is a little something for you from us.’’ He looked at it and said, ‘Place it over near the house.’ He then said, ‘Go and invite for me so-and-so’ and he named a large number of men. He added, ‘And any other Muslims you may meet.’ So I invited those he had told me, along with the other Muslims I met. When I returned, I found the house, the stone benches and the courtyard filled with people. I (Ja'far b. Sulaymân?) asked, ‘Abû 'Uthmân, how many must there have been?’ ‘Some 300’ he replied.’

“Anas went on, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told me to accompany him and I took it (the bowl of food) to him. He placed his hand over it and prayed, saying, mâ sha'â Allâh! ‘Whatever God wills!’ He then said, ‘Have them form groups of ten and invoke the name of God; every person should eat what he finds.’ They began invoking God’s name and to eat until all had done so. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told me, ‘Pick it up.’ I then went and took the bowl and looked inside. And I don’t know whether there was more when I had put it down or when I picked it up!

“Some men stayed behind conversing in the house of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Meanwhile, his wife, whom he had brought in with them, was there turning her face to the wall. The men stayed so long chatting that they annoyed the Messenger of God (SAAS). He was the most modest of men; if they had realized it, they would have felt badly. Eventually he went off into his chambers to his wives. When they (the men there) saw him do so, they thought they had annoyed him, and so they moved to the door and left. Then he returned, let down the screen and went inside while I was there in the (outer) room. The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed inside his house for a while and God made a revelation of the Qur'an. He came out reciting this verse, “O you who believe, do not enter the chambers of the Prophet unless you are invited to eat, without waiting while it be cooked. If you are invited, then do enter and when you have eaten, disperse. Do not linger on for conversation. That would annoy the Prophet, though he would be too shy (to tell you so); but God is not shy of the truth. And if you should ask something of them (his wives), do so from behind a screen. That is more pure for both you and them. And you should not annoy the Messenger of God, nor should you ever marry his wives after him. That would indeed be offensive to God. And whether you divulge something or keep it concealed, God has knowledge of all.”” (surat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.53, 54).

Anas went on, “He recited these to me before the others. And so I have known them longer than them.”

Muslim, al-Tirmidhî and al-Nasîî all related this tradition from Qutayba, from Ja'far b. Sulaymân, from al-Ja'ḍ Abî Uthmân. Al-Tirmidhî categorized it as hasan sahib, “good and authentic”. Muslim also related it, from Muhammad b. Râfî’, from ‘Abd al-Razzâq, from Ma’mar, from al-Ja’ḍ Abî Uthmân.

Al-Bukhârî related this hadith, as did al-Tirmidhî and al-Nasîî, from several lines, from Abû Bishr al-Ahmâsî al-Kûfi, from Anas, in similar form. Ibn Abî Ḥâtim related it from a hadith of Abû Nadra al-‘Abdi, from Anas in similar form; they did not explicate it. Ibn Jarîr related it from a hadith of ‘Amr b. Sa’d and from a hadith of al-Zuhri, from Anas, in similar form.

I note that Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh, may God be pleased with her, was one of the first women who migrated. She was a woman of great goodness and charity. At first her name was Tarra, then the Messenger of God (SAAS) renamed her Zaynab. She was known as Umm al-Hakam, “al-Hakam’s mother”.

‘A’isha, may God be pleased with her, said, “I never knew a woman more religious, more God-fearing, more truthful in her speech, more protective of family ties, more trustworthy or more charitable than Zaynab.”

It is established in both sahib collections, as will be seen in the hadith al-ifk, “the calumnious account”, that ‘A’isha stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh, about me. She was the (only) wife of the Prophet who could compete with me for his favour. God encompassed her with goodness, and she said, ‘O Messenger of God, in all truth and obedience, I say I never knew of her (‘A’isha) anything but good.’”

49. See above, pp.217 et seq.
Talha, from 'A'isha 'mother of the believers', who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'The women who will be the earliest to join me (in the Hereafter) are the ones who are the most generous.' We used to vie with one another over which of us was the most generous. In fact it was Zaynab, because she made things herself and gave to charity.”

Muslim is alone in giving this.

Al-Waqidi and other authorities on the biography of the Prophet (SAAS), on the early military campaigns and on history, state that she died in 80 AH. The Commander of the Believers 'Umar b. al-Khattab, may God be pleased with him, prayed over her. She was buried at al-Baqi; and she was the first woman for whom a bier was made.

THE YEAR 6 AH.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “People used to say that it was in Muḥarram of that year that there was the expedition of Muhammad b. Maslama to Najd. It was during this that they captured Thumāma b. Ṭāhil al-Yamāni.”

I note, however, that in the text of Ibn Ishāq from Sa'd al-Maqburi, from Abū Hurayra, that he (Abū Hurayra) was present then and it was after the expedition against Khaybar that he (Abū Hurayra) emigrated. It (the expedition to Najd) would therefore have to be dated thereafter. But God knows best.

It was during the early part of this year, for certain, that the expedition was mounted against Banū Liḥyān.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The conquest of Banū Qurayza took place in Dhū al-Qa‘da and the start of Dhū al-Ḥijja. The polytheists had charge of the pilgrimage that year, 5 AH that is.” As is related above.

He went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Medina thereafter for the months of Dhū al-Ḥijja, Muḥarram, Safar and both Rabī‘ al-Awwal and Rabī‘ al-Thānī. In Jumāda al-Uwlā, at the start of six months following the conquest of Banū Qurayza, he went forth against Banū Liḥyān seeking revenge for Khubayb and his companions who were killed at al-Rajī. In order to surprise the enemy, he made it appear that he was heading for Syria.”

According to Ibn Hishām, he left Ibn Umm Makmtm in command of Medina.

What Ibn Ishāq is referring to here is as follows. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had reached their homes (in his attack on Banū Liḥyān) they retreated before him and sought refuge in the mountain heights. He therefore turned off to Usfān, where he encountered a force of polytheists. It was there that he performed the ṣalāt al-khawf, the “fear prayer”.

This expedition has been described above as having occurred in 4 AH. Al-Bayhaqi related it there.

But what Ibn Ishāq relates is most probable, namely that it took place after the battle of al-khandaq. It is established that he did perform the ṣalāt al-khawf at Usfān on the expedition against Banū Liḥyān. It should best, therefore, be included here and removed from there, in accord with the Imam, the prime authority, on the military expeditions in his own era and thereafter. As al-Shafi‘i, may God be pleased with him, stated, “Whoever wants information of the military expeditions is dependent upon Muḥammad b. Ishāq.”

Ka‘b b. Malik spoke the following verses on the expedition against Banū Libyān:

“If Banū Libyān had stayed they would have met at their dwellings a band of brave fighting men Mounted on fast horses; their hearts would have filled with terror at the great force of their host, vast as heaven’s gate.

But they were mere weasels, keeping to the high and inaccessible Hijāz passes.”

THE EXPEDITION AGAINST DHU QARAD.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then proceeded to Medina. He had been there only a few nights when ʿUyayna b. Ḥisn b. Hudhayfa b. Badr al-Fazārī and some horsemen of Ghaṭafān attacked milch-camels belonging to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-Ghāba. A man of Banū Ḥifār and his wife had been guarding the camels; the raiders killed him and abducted his wife along with the camels.

ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related the following to me, as did ʿAbd Allah b. Abī Bakr, along with another man I trust, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ka‘b b. Malik; each of these sources gave part of this account. The first to become aware what they had done was Salama b. Ḥam b. al-Akwāq al-ʿAslāmi who was heading for al-Ghāba armed with his bow and arrows and accompanied by a slave belonging to Ṭalḥa b. Ṣayd Allāh leading his horse. When he had climbed up to the al-Wadār pass, he saw some of their horsemen. Then he looked down towards Salī and cried out (in alarm), ‘Wā sabahāti!’ He hurried off in pursuit of the raiders, like a lion. When he caught up with them, he began shooting his arrows at them, exclaiming, ‘Take that! I’m Ibn al-Akwa! Today the wicked will die!’

“Whenever their horsemen headed for him he would flee, then return and shoot again at them whenever he could, repeating the same battle cry. One of them exclaimed (using a pun on his name, Ibn al-Akwa) ‘Is he trying to yuqawwru, “to divert us”, so early in the day!’

“News of Ibn al-Akwa’s battle cry reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina, and he called out there: ‘Alarm! Alarm!’ At that the cavalry hurried to the Messenger of God (SAAS). The first to reach him was al-Miqdād b. al-Aswād, followed by ʿAbdād b. Bishr, Saʿd b. Zayd, Ṣayd b. Zuhayr (though there is some doubt about this man), Ṣuḫāṣa b. Miḥṣān, Muḥriz b. Naḍla, brother of

50. A cry for help.

“When they were gathered around the Messenger of God (SAAS), he appointed Saʿd b. Zayd as their leader. He then told them, ‘Get out and pursue them, and wait till I join you with our men.’

“I have been told by some men of Banū Zurayq that the Prophet (SAAS) said the following to Abū ʿAyyāsh: ‘What if I were to give this horse over to a better rider than yourself so that he can catch up the enemy?’ Abū ʿAyyāsh says, ‘I responded, “Messenger of God (SAAS), I’m the best of all horsemen!” Then I slapped my horse and I swear by God, he’d not carried me 50 arms-lengths before he tossed me! I was amazed.’

“Some men of (Banū) Zurayq say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave over Abū ʿAyyāsh’s horse to Muḥādh b. Māṣis, or to ʿAṣidh b. Māṣis b. Qays b. Khalda, the eighth (of the horsemen there). Some count Salama b. al-Akwaʿ as the eighth and drop Usayd b. Ẓuhayr. But God knows best. Salama b. al-Akwaʿ was not a rider that day; he was the first to catch up with the raiders on foot.”

The account continues, “The horsemen left and caught up with the enemy. ʿAsim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to me that the first rider to catch up with them was Muḥriz b. Naḍla, known as al-Akhram, and also as Qumayr. The horse he rode belonged to Maḥmūd b. Maslama. The name of the horse was Dhī al-Lamma. When he reached the enemy, he said, ‘Stop, you tribe of no-goods, and let the anṣār and the muḥājirin pursuing you catch up with you!’ One of the raiders then attacked and killed him. His horse wheeled and could not be caught; it raced off without stopping until it reached a stable of Banī ʿAbd al-Asḩān; that is, it went back to the stall in Medina where it had been.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “No other Muslim than him was killed that day.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Some other scholars refer to Waqqāṣ b. Mujjaziz al-Mudlijī as having been killed along with him.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “A source I trust related to me, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb b. Malik, that Muḥriz was riding a horse named al-Janāh, belonging to ʿUkāsha b. Miḥṣan. Muḥriz was killed and Janāḥ was captured. But God knows best.51

“When the cavalry engaged, Abū Qatāda killed Ḥabīb b. ʿUyayna, covered him with his cloak, then caught up with the rest. Soon the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived there with the other Muslim warriors.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He placed Ibn Umm Maktūm in command of Medina.

“When the Muslim force found Ḥabīb (b. ʿUyayna) covered with Abū Qatāda’s cloak, they were shocked, believing the latter had been killed. But the Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, ‘It’s not Abū Qatāda; it’s someone he has killed, then covered with his cloak to let you know that he did it.’”

51. There seems to be some confusion in Ibn Ishaq’s account as to the name of the father of Waqqāṣ and whether or not he was killed in this engagement.
Ibn Ishāq continued, "Ukāsha b. Miḥṣan then caught up with Awbār and his son 'Amr who were riding the same camel. He pierced both with his lance, killing them both together. They then retrieved some of the milch-camels. The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded on and encamped at Mt. Dhū Qarad; he was joined by his force and they remained there for a day and a night. Salama b. al-Akwa‘ told him, 'Messenger of God, if you were to send me on with 100 men, I could recover the rest of the herd and kill the enemy.' But the Messenger of God (SAAS), so I have been told, replied, 'By now they are being served their evening drinks among Ghaṭafān.' He then provided a slaughtered camel for each 100 men and they remained there. After that he returned to Medina.

"The wife (who had been abducted) of the Ghifārī guard then arrived in Medina on one of the camels of the Prophet (SAAS), to whom she reported. When she had finished her account, she told him, 'Messenger of God, I promised God I would slaughter this camel if God allowed me to escape on it.' He smiled and responded, 'But you would be rewarding the camel badly, since God bore you away and let you escape on it, if you slaughtered her. No vow in disobedience of God is valid, nor is one relating to something you do not own. She is one of my camels. Go back to your family, with God's blessings.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The hadith on this subject was transmitted from Abū al-Zubayr al-Makki from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī."

This, then, is this story with its text and line of transmission as given by Ibn Ishāq.

Al-Bukhārī, God be pleased with him, states following his materials relating to the al-Ḥudaybiyya incident and before his account of the expedition to Khaybar, "The expedition to Dhū Qarad; this incident relates to the enemy's raid on the milch-camels of the Prophet (SAAS), three days before the Battle of Khaybar. Qutayba b. Sa‘īd related to us, quoting Ḥātim, from Yazid b. Abū 'Ubayd, who said, 'I heard Salama b. al-Akwa‘ say, "Once I left (town) before the call had been made for the al-fajr, dawn, prayer. The milch-camels belonging to the Prophet (SAAS) used to graze at Dhū Qarad. (On the way) I was met by a slave belonging to 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf, who said, "The milch-camels of the Prophet (SAAS) have been stolen!" Who took them? I asked. 'It was Banū Ghaṭafān,' he replied. I called out three times, 'Wā sabāhā? I (shouted so loudly I) made all between Medina's two mountains hear me. I then rushed on ahead until I caught them up as they were watering their camels. I began shooting my arrows at them; I was an archer. (As I did so) I called out, in rajaz, doggerel verse, 'I'm Ibn al-Akwa‘, and today the wicked will die!' I (continued shooting until) I had retrieved the milch-camels and I also seized from them thirty cloaks."

"When the Prophet (SAAS) and his men arrived, I told him, 'Messenger of God, I have prevented the enemy getting water. They will be thirsty. Send a force after them now.' He replied, 'Ibn al-Akwa‘, you mastered them; now be charitable!'"
"We then went back; the Messenger of God (SAAS) seated me on his camel along with himself for the journey back to Medina."

Muslim related it thus from Qutayba. Al-Bukhari related it from Abū ʿAṣim al-Sahli, from Yazid b. Abū ʿUbayda, from his freed-man Salama in similar terms.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Hāshim b. al-Qāsim related to him, quoting ʿIkrima b. ʿAmmār, quoting ʿIyās b. Salama b. al-Akwa', who reported that his father had said to him, "At the time of the Hudaybiyya expedition, we came to Medina with the Messenger of God (SAAS). Then I and Rabah, a slave of his, left, without his prior knowledge. I went with a horse belonging to ʿAlī b. ʿAbdullāh; I wanted to graze it with the camels. But when it was dark 'Abd al-Rahmān b. ʿUwayna raided the camels of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He killed their herdsman and drove them away, he and the horsemen he had accompanying him. I told Rabah to ride the horse back to ʿAlī and to inform the Messenger of God (SAAS) that his herd had been raided.

"I then climbed a hill, turned towards Medina and shouted three times, 'Ya sabahā!' I then pursued the enemy, bearing my sword and arrows. I began shooting at them and wounding them; this was when there were plenty of trees about. When one of the horsemen would come back at me, I'd sit at the base of a tree and shoot. And every rider who came near I shot. As I shot at them, I would call out, 'I'm Ibn al-Akwa! Today the wicked will die!' When I would attack one of their men on his mount, my arrows would fall on him until I pierced him in the shoulder, then I'd cry out, 'Take that! I'm Ibn al-Akwa', and today the wicked will die!'

"While I was in the trees, I plastered them with my arrows; when the mountain trails were narrow, I would climb up the mountain side and hurl down rocks on them. My engagement with them continued, with me following them and calling out my battle cry, until God so arranged it that I retrieved and left behind me all of the property of the Messenger of God (SAAS), having saved it from their control. I went on shooting at them until I had got over 30 of their spears and over 30 cloaks they were bearing. All of this they cast away I placed beneath stones, gathering everything into position in the path the Messenger of God (SAAS) would take. Later in the morning ʿUwayna b. Badr al-Fazārī came to reinforce them; at that point they were in a narrow defile. I climbed the mountain so that I was above them. ʿUwayna asked them, 'What's this I see?' They replied, 'We've had too much trouble from this fellow. He's been with us from dawn till now. He's seized everything we had and placed it all behind himself.' ʿUwayna commented, 'Well, if this fellow saw that he was being hunted, he'd have left you alone. Some of you should attack him.' A group of four of them did so, climbing up the mountain.

"Having made them hear my call, I asked them, 'Well, do you know me?' 'Who are you?' they asked. 'I'm Ibn al-Akwa,' I told them. 'By Him who honoured Muhammad, none of you who pursue me will catch me, whereas no one I hunt will escape me!' One of them commented, 'I agree!'

"So I had not left that position of mine when I saw the cavalry of the Messenger of God (SAAS), coming through the trees. Leading them was al-Akhram al-Asadi, followed by Abū Qatāda, the horse-master of the Messenger of God (SAAS). After him came al-Miqdād b. al-Aswad al-Kindi. The polytheists then withdrew and I came down from the mountain and took hold of the reins of al-Akhram’s horse. I told him, ‘Take care of the enemy'—meaning ‘watch out for them'; ‘I’m worried they might cut you off. Take it slowly until the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men catch up with you.’ But he replied, ‘Salama, if you truly had faith in God and the last day and knew that heaven and hell are real, then you would not try to block my way to martyrdom!'

"So I released the reins of his horse and he charged at 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Uyayna who turned to face him. They exchanged a few thrusts. Al-Akhram wounded 'Abd al-Rahmān who then thrust back at him and killed him. 'Abd al-Rahmān mounted al-Akhram’s horse, but Abū Qatāda closed with him and they exchanged a couple of thrusts. Abū Qatāda was wounded, but he killed 'Abd al-Rahmān and mounted al-Akhram’s horse.

"I then ran out in pursuit of the enemy, continuing until I saw some dust rising from the advance of the warriors of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Before sunset they turned off into a defile where there was water, a place called Dhī Qarad, where they wanted to drink. When they saw me running ahead after the enemy, they turned away from there and halted in the mountain pass where there was a well. The sun set. I caught up with one of the enemy and shot at him, yelling, ‘Take that! I’m Ibn al-Akwa! And today the wicked will die!' He responded, ‘Bukra,' ‘tomorrow', al-Akwa’s mother will be bereaved!’ ‘Right you are, you’re your own enemy,’ I replied. The man I had shot at was named Bukra. I shot a second arrow at him and both stuck in him. The enemy abandoned two horses, and I brought these back to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was at the water-hole from which I had diverted them, at Dhī Qarad. He was there with a force of 500 men. Bilāl had slaughtered a camel I had retrieved; he was busy cooking its liver and its hump for the Prophet (SAAS).

"I went over to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘Please let me choose 100 of your men to attack the enemy in the dark. I’ve killed all their guards.’ He replied, ‘Would you really do that, Salama?’ ‘I certainly would, by Him who honoured you!’ I replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) laughed so heartily I could see his molars in the firelight. He then said, ‘They are being served drinks now in Ghatafān territory.’ A man of Ghatafān then arrived and said, ‘The enemy force passed by so-and-so the Ghatafāni and he slaughtered a camel for them. But when they began removing its skin, they discovered an ulcerous wound. So they abandoned it and fled.’

"Next day the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Abū Qatāda is the finest of our horsemen, while the best of our foot-warriors is Salama.’ And he awarded me both the share for a horseman and that for a foot-warrior. He then set me to ride behind himself on (his camel) al-‘Adba’ on our way back to Medina.

“When we were about half a day’s travel from the town, one of our warriors, an ansārī, who had never been beaten in a race, began calling out, ‘Will someone race me? Won’t someone race me into the town?’ He repeated this several times while I was there riding behind the Messenger of God (SAAS). I asked the man, ‘Don’t you respect the noble or fear the powerful?’ ‘No, I don’t’, he replied, ‘except for the Messenger of God (SAAS)!’ I then asked, ‘Messenger of God, do please, for the sake of my mother and my father, let me race with the fellow!’ ‘If you like,’ he replied. ‘I’ll come to you,’ I told the man. At that he jumped off his mount and I bent my leg and jumped down from the camel. I then let him get well ahead, holding myself back, then I ran hard, caught up with him and slapped him on the shoulder, saying, ‘I beat you, by God!’ — or I made some such comment. The man laughed and said, ‘I agree.’ So we went on into Medina.”

Muslim related this hadith in this way with lines from ‘Ikrima b. ‘Ammxr in similar form. His version ends, “... so I beat him into Medina and we remained there only three days before we left for Khaybar.” Ahmad also has this text.

Al-Bukhārī and al-Bayhaqi relate this engagement after al-Ḥudaybiyya and before Khaybar, similar to Ibn Ishāq. But God knows best. Thus it should be placed later, to early in 7 AH, for Khaybar took place in Safar of that year.

Regarding the woman who escaped on the camel of the Prophet (SAAS), having sworn to slaughter it for its having allowed her to get away, this story is related by Ibn Ishāq from Abī al-Zubayr, with an incomplete chain of authorities back to al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. It is also given with a complete line through other sources.

Imām Ahmad stated, “‘Afnān related to us, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, quoting Ayyūb, from Abū Qalāba, from Abū al-Halab, from Umrān b. Ḥuṣayn, who said, ‘(The camel named) al-‘Adba’ had belonged to a man of Banū ‘Uqayl and had been one of the mounts racing at the hajj fair; the Messenger of God, God’s peace and blessings be upon him, had taken it when he had captured him. When the Messenger of God (SAAS), riding a donkey with a velvet saddle cloth, had later passed by the man, who was in fetters, the latter had called out to him, “Hey, Muḥammad, why did you take me and the hajj racing camel?” The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “We’ve seized you on account of your allies Thaqīf.”’”

(The narrator continued) “Thaqīf had taken captive two of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS). The prisoner then said, along with other things, ‘But I’m a Muslim!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, ‘If you were to have said that when you had your freedom, you would have been very successful.’ As the Messenger of God (SAAS) went on his way, the man called out, ‘Muḥammad, I’m hungry and I’m thirsty! Give me some food and drink!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘Yes, that’s what you’re after!’ Then the two men were ransomed, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) retained al-‘Adba’ for his own journeys.
"After that the polytheists raided the Medina milk-camels and made off with them, including al-'Adba', and they also took captive a Muslim woman. When they made camp, they set his camels free in their enclosures. One night after they were asleep, she went out to the camels. Each one grunted until she reached al-'Adba'. She had come upon a female riding camel that was well used to being ridden. She mounted it and directed it towards Medina. She then vowed that if God were to allow her to escape on it, she would slaughter it. When she reached Medina, the camel was recognized as belonging to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He was told of her vow (or she came to him and told him of it) and he stated, 'It was a bad vow she' (or 'you') 'made to slaughter it if God allowed her to escape on it.' He went on, 'No vow in disobedience to God is valid, nor is one relating to what one does not own.'"

Muslim related this from Abū al-Rabīʿ al-Zahrānī, from Ḥammād b. Zayd.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Among the verses spoken relating to the Dhū Qarad incident were the following by Ḥassān b. Thābit,

'Had the frogs of their hooves not suffered while being led, south of Sāya, (our horses)
Would have met you bearing fully armed warriors carrying the banner, men of fine ancestry.
And those offspring of sin would have rejoiced that we were at peace that morning when al-Miqdād's horsemen came.

There were eight of us, while they were numerous and loud-mouthed, but they were pierced by our lances and they fled.

We belonged to that people who were pursuing them and who gave free rein to each horse.

Indeed, by the lord of the camels that race to Minā,
(we will) cross by the passes over the mountains

Until we make our mounts urinate amidst your horses and make off with your women and children,

Moving quickly, our garments tucked up, our horses swift and moving proudly, in valley or battlefield,
Having worn down their quarters and made their backs bare on days being led and on others at the chase.

Our steeds, moreover, get milk to drink and warfare is fanned by the breeze.

And the steel blades of our swords slice through shields of iron and recalcitrant heads.

God places barriers in their way on account of what is sacrosanct, and for the dignity of the All-Merciful.

They once were contented at home, but on the day of Dhū Qarad their faces were like slaves.'"
Ibn Ishāq stated, “Sa‘d b. Zayd, leader of the riders moving in advance of the Messenger of God (SAAS), was enraged at Hassān and swore he would never speak to him. He said, ‘He raves away about my horses and riders and then credits al-Miqdād’. Hassān then apologized to him, claiming that al-Miqdād’s name matched the rhyme. He then spoke verses praising Sa‘d b. Zayd,

‘If you need the fiercest and most determined, or a man of real ability, then seek out Sa‘d b. Zayd, who never gives in.’

“But the verses did him no good.

“Hassān b. Thābit also spoke the following about the incident at Dhī Qarad.

‘Did ‘Uyayna imagine when he visited it that he would demolish the castles there?
You were proved to lie in what you claimed as true;
you said, “We will seize much booty!”’
You hated Medina when you visited it, and became used to the roar of lions there.
Quickly they retreated, like speeding ostriches, and they uncovered no camels’ hideout.
The messenger of the lord was the leader over us; how beloved a leader we find him!
A messenger who proves true his mission and who recites a book that illuminates and enlightens.’

“Ka‘b b. Mālik spoke the following verses on the Dhī Qarad incident in praise of the Muslim horsemen that day, ‘Do those offspring of sin consider that we on horseback are not the match for their knights?

We are men who see no disgrace in death and we do not bend before the rigid lance.
We serve our guests the choicest of meats, and we strike off the heads of happy braggards!
We turn back bemedalled warriors when they charge with blows that dispel the courage of the brave,
With heroes who protect the banner, men of glory, fierce as wolves of the jungle.
They protect their reputation and their lands with swords that slice off the tops of helmets wearing heads.
Ask of Banū Badr, if you meet them, what our brothers did on the day of battle.
When you go forth tell the truth to those you meet; do not hide your news in your meetings.
Say we escaped the claws of a lion in his lair, whose deep anger remains unalleviated.’”
THE EXPEDITION AGAINST BANU AL-MUSTALIQ OF KHUZA'A.

Al-Bukhari stated, "This was the expedition to al-Muraysi." Muhammad b. Ishäq stated, "That took place in 6 AH." Musä b. Uqba, however, set it in 4 AH.

Al-Nû'mân b. Rashid stated, quoting al-Zuhri, "The ḥadith al-ifk, the 'calumnious report', occurred during the expedition to al-Muraysi." Similarly al-Bukhari related it from the military chronicle of Musä b. Uqba, to the effect that it took place in 4 AH. However, it was related from both him and from Urwa that it occurred in Sha'bân, 5 AH. Al-Waqidi stated, "It took place when two nights remained of Sha'bân in 5 AH, and he (the Prophet (SAAS)) was accompanied by 700 men."

Muhammad b. Ishäq b. Yasär stated, following his account of the Dhü Qarad incident, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Medina for part of Jumäda al-Ākhira and Rajab, whereafter he made an expedition against Banû al-Mustaliq of Khuza'a, in Sha'bân, 6 AH."

Ibn Hishäm stated, "He appointed Abû Dharr al-Ghifäri in command of Medina; Numayla b. 'Abd Allâh al-Laythi, however, is also named."

Ibn Ishäq went on, "'Asim b. Umar b. Qatada, 'Abd Allâh b. Abû Bakr and Muhammad b. Yahâyä b. 'Abbâs related to me, each narrating part of the account relating to the expedition against Banû al-Mustaliq, as follows, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) was informed that Banû al-Mustaliq were assembling to attack him, under the leadership of al-Ḥârith b. Abû Dirä, the father of Juwayriyya, whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) later married. When he heard of their activity, he went forth against them, engaging them at one of their water sources at a place called al-Muraysi', near Qudayd, towards the coast. The forces met and did battle; God defeated Banû al-Mustaliq, a number of them being killed, and the Prophet (SAAS) took over as booty their women, children and possessions.'"

Al-Waqidi stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth with two nights having passed of Sha'bân in 5 AH, with a force of 700 of his Companions against Banû al-Mustaliq. They were allied to Banû Mudlij. When he reached them, he entrusted the banner of the muhâjirûn to Abû Bakr, the Trusting — though some say to Ammâr b. Yâsîr — and that of the ansâr to Sa'd b. 'Ubâd. He then ordered Umar b. al-Khaṭṭâb to tell the enemy, 'Cry out the words, 'La Ilâha illâ Allâh!', 'There is no god but God'. By this you will protect yourselves and your property.' But they refused and cast arrows instead.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then ordered the Muslims to attack. They did so as one. And not one man escaped them; they killed ten and captured the rest. Only one of the Muslims was killed."

It is related in both sahîh collections, from a hadith of 'Abd Allâh b. 'Awn, who said, "I wrote to Nâfi' asking him about the battle-cry prior to the fighting. He replied, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) attacked Banû al-Mustaliq while they were engrossed in their pleasures, taking water at the well. He killed their warriors and took captives. It was that day he acquired – I think that is what he said – Juwayriyya, daughter of al-‘Hārith. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Umar narrated this to me, and he was with that army.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “One of the Muslims, Hishām b. ‘Utbah, was struck down that day. He was killed in error by one of the ansār who thought him to be an enemy.”

Ibn Ishaq related that Hishām b. ‘Utbah’s brother, Miqyas b. ‘Utbah, arrived from Mecca professing Islam and requested blood-money from the Messenger of God (SAAS), since his brother had been killed in error. He did pay blood-wit and Miqyas stayed on a short while but then attacked and murdered his brother’s killer. He then returned, an apostate, to Mecca and spoke the following verses,

“It assuaged me that he was felled in the valley, his clothing stained with the blood of his jugular.

My mind was troubled before I killed him; my worries kept me from enjoying my bed.

By killing him I eased my tension and got my revenge; and I was prompt to return to the idols.

Through him I avenged Fihr and charged his blood-wit to the chiefs of Banū al-Najjar, the lords of Fārīṣ castle.”

I note that this is why this Miqyas was one of the four persons whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) had executed on the day of the conquest of Mecca, (having said) “... even if they be wrapped in the drapes of the ka‘ba!”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “While the warriors were there at the well, a group of men arrived to get water. ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb had with him a hired man of Banū Ghifār named Jahjah b. Mas‘ūd who led his horse. Jahjah and Sinān b. Wabr al-Juhani, an ally of Banū ‘Awf b. al-Khaẓraj, got in one another’s way at the water-hole and began fighting. Al-Juhani called out, ‘Help, ansār friends!’ Jahjah shouted, ‘Help, muḥājirī friends!’ At this ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salīl became angry; he had with him a number of his people, including Zayd b. Arqam, a boy.

‘Did they really cause this?’ he asked. ‘They challenge us and outnumber us in our own lands! I swear by God, the old maxim well applies to us and these Quraysh ruffians: “fatten your dog and you it will eat!” I swear, when we return to Medina the stronger will drive out the weaker!’ He then approached some of his people and told them, ‘See what you have done to yourselves! You let them settle among you and shared your property with them. I swear, if you had kept what you owned from them, they would have gone some place else!’

‘Zayd b. Arqam overheard this and so informed the Messenger of God (SAAS), who had ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb with him at the time. ‘Umar advised him, ‘Order ‘Abbad b. Bishr to kill him!’ But the Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘How would it be, ‘Umar, to have people say that Muḥammad kills his own Companions. No, give orders to leave instead.’ This was at a time of day when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was not accustomed to begin a journey. So everyone then set off.

‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salīl went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he was told that Zayd b. Arqam had reported what he had been heard to say. He swore by God that he had not said any such thing and had not spoken to Zayd. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy was a great chief of his people, and those ansār of his men present with the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Messenger of God, perhaps the lad mistook what was said, or did not memorize it correctly.’ They said this to give support and protection for ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy.

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had set forth and travelled some distance, he was met by Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr who addressed him as a prophet and greeted him in peace. He said, ‘Messenger of God, aren’t you out travelling at an unpleasant time when you don’t usually do so?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded to him, ‘Have you heard what your friend said?’ ‘What friend was that then?’ Usayd asked. ‘Aḥd Allāh b. Ḥuayy,’ he replied. ‘Well, what did he say?’ he asked. ‘He claimed that when he gets back to Medina, the stronger will drive out the weaker.’ Usayd responded, ‘Well, I swear by God, Messenger of God, you’ll drive him out if you wish. He’s certainly the weak one, and you the strong.’ He went on, ‘Be kind, Messenger of God! I swear, God brought you to us while his people were stringing pearls with which to make a crown for him. And so he considers that you have robbed him of his kingdom.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded on throughout that day and that night and the following morning until they suffered greatly from the sun. He then had them make a halt and they all fell asleep as soon as they dismounted. He had only behaved in this way to keep the minds of his men off discussion of what ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy had said the previous day. After that, the Messenger of God (SAAS) took his men off into Hijaz and encamped at a water-hole there, a little above al-Naqi, at a place called Baq‘a. When he left there a gale arose that much discomforted and frightened the men. He told them, ‘Don’t be afraid at it; it is blowing this way due to the death of one of the unbelievers’ chiefs.’ When they reached Medina, they discovered that Ritaca b. Zayd b. Thbit, of Banī Qaynuqā, a leader of the Jews and a supporter of the hypocrites, had died that day.”

Mūsā b. Ḫubayl and al-Waqidi related this similarly.

Muslim related, through al-A‘mash, from Abū Sufyān, from Jābir, much the same story, although he did not name the hypocrite who had died. He stated, “A gale blew up while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was on one of his travels, and he said, ‘This is because of the death of a hypocrite.’ And when we reached Medina, we found that one of the chief hypocrites had died.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Then the sūra was revealed in which God made mention of the hypocrites, with reference to Ibn Ubayy and those like him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) took hold of the ear of Zayd b. Arqam and said, ‘This is he who devoted his ear to God!’"

I comment that I have written on this in my Tafsir (Exegesis) at sufficient length to obviate need to repeat it here. We have listed the various lines of transmission of this hadith from Zayd b. Arqam; to God belong all praise and credit. Should anyone wish to include this material here, he is at liberty to do so. And to God all credit is due.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Āṣim b. 'Umar b. Qatāda related to me that 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salūl came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, ‘Messenger of God, I have heard that you want to kill 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy because of what you were informed about him. If that is so, then order me to do it and I will bring you his head. I swear that Khazraj well know that there is no man more loyal to his father than me. I fear that if you order someone other than myself to do it and he does kill him, then my spirit will not allow me to look upon the killer of 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy walking freely among people and so I will then kill a believer in exchange for an unbeliever, and so enter hell!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘On the contrary, we will treat him kindly and enjoy his company so long as he stays with us.’ Thereafter, if anything bad had happened, 'Abd Allāh’s people would blame and reproach him. So the Messenger of God (SAAS), having been informed that they were treating him that way, asked 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, ‘Well, what do you think now, 'Umar? I swear, if I had killed him the day you suggested it, there would have been much resentment. But if I were to order his death today, they would all kill him!’ 'Umar responded, ‘Well, I've certainly learned that orders you give are more blessed than mine would be!”

'Ikrima, Ibn Zayd and others relate that this son, 'Abd Allāh, stood in the way of his father 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salūl at the narrow entry into Medina and told him, “Stop! By God, you'll not enter until the Messenger of God (SAAS) gives you permission to do so!” When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived, 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy did indeed ask his permission to enter and he sent to him allowing him to do so.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “A number of the Banū al-Muṣtaḍīq were killed that day. 'Ali b. Abū Ṭālib killed two of them – Mālik and his son.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The battle-cry of the Muslims was, 'Ya Manṣūr! Amit! Amit! O conqueror! Kill! Kill!’”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) took many captives that day and he distributed them among the Muslims.”

(ṢAAS) on the expedition to Banū al-Muṣṭaliq. We took many of the bedouin captive and we lusted after the women; celibacy was very hard on us. We liked to practise al-'azl, but wondered whether we should do this without asking the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), since he was there with us. So we did ask him about it, and he replied, ‘You might well not do that; for any soul that is going to exist till Judgement Day will so exist.’”

He (Muslim) also related this hadith.

Ibn Ishaq continued, “One of those taken captive that day was Juwayriyya, daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Abū Ḍirār. Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr related to me, from Urwa, who quoted ʿĀʾisha as saying, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) distributed the captives taken from Banū al-Muṣṭaliq, Juwayriyya, daughter of al-Ḥārith, was awarded to Thabit b. Qays b. Shammas, or to a cousin of his and she wrote a muqābala5 deed giving herself to him. She was a very sweet and attractive woman; every man who saw her fell for her. She came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to ask his help in preparing the document. And, I swear, as soon as I saw her at the door of my room, I disliked her and recognized that he would see in her what I did. When she went in to him, she said, “Messenger of God, I am Juwayriyya, daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Abū Dirār, the leader of his people. You can see what my plight is now; I have fallen to the lot of Thabit b. Qays b. Shammas” – or to his cousin – “and I’ve prepared a deed awarding myself to him. I’ve come to ask your help in writing it.”

“The news spread that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had married Juwayriyya, daughter of al-Ḥārith. And so people said, “Then they (i.e. our captives) are relatives of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)!” And so they released their captives.

“And so by his marriage to her, he released 100 of her relatives from Banū al-Muṣṭaliq. I know no woman who brought greater blessings to her people than she.”

Thereafter Ibn Ishaq reported the incident of al-ifk in its entirety as part of his narration of this expedition. Al-Bukhārī and several other scholars did the same. I have laid out the various lines of transmission in my Tafsir (Exegesis) of sūrat al-Nūr (XXIV) and this could be joined to what was mentioned here. And God is the source of help.

Al-Waqidi stated, “Ḥārām related to us, from Hishām b. ʿUrwa, from his father, who said, ‘Juwayriyya, daughter of al-Ḥārith, stated, “For three nights before the arrival of the Prophet (ṢAAS), I seemed to see the moon travel from Yathrib and fall into my lap. I did not like to tell anyone of this prior to the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS). But when we were taken captive, I felt good about the visions. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) freed me and married me. I swear, I never spoke to him on behalf of my people; it was the Muslims themselves who sent messages to them. The first I knew of it was when a slave girl belonging to one of my female cousins told me the news. And I gave thanks to God Almighty.”’”

Al-Waqqāṣī stated, “It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave as dowry for her the freeing of 40 of Banū al-Muṣṭaliq.”

Mūsā b. Uqba related, quoting Banū al-Muṣṭaliq, that her father sought her out and paid ransom for her and that then the Messenger of God (SAAS) sought her in marriage and he (her father) then married him to her.

THESIṢSAT AL-İF, THE ‘CALUMNIOUS REPORT’.

This is the text of Muḥammad b. Ishāq’s account of the calumny.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Al-Zuhri related to me the following from ʿAlqama b. Waqqāṣ, Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, Urwa b. al-Zubayr, ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUtba. He, al-Zuhri, said that some of these sources had given more information than others, and that he had consolidated all into the account that follows.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “(Also) Yahyā b. ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me the following, from his father, from ʿAṣīṣa, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr from ʿAmra, daughter of ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from ʿAṣīṣa who was narrating about herself when people spread the calumny about her. Each one of these contributed to this account of hers, some giving information not reported by others. Each is regarded as a reliable source for information from her, and all reported what they had heard her say.

ʿAṣīṣa said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was about to go on a journey he would draw lots among his wives to decide who would accompany him. He did so, as usual, for the expedition against Banū al-Muṣṭaliq; my name was drawn and so he took me with him. The women on such occasions would eat light filling foods rather than meat which would increase their weight. I would sit in my howdah while my camel was being saddled. The men responsible for mounting it would then grasp the howdah from below it and lift and place it upon the camel’s back, tying it there with ropes. They would then lead the camel away by the head.

‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had completed that journey, he directed the party to return home and when close to Medina he made a halt for part of the night. A crier then called out to everyone to depart again, and people prepared to do so. I went out to relieve myself. I was wearing a necklace of onyx beads from Zafār. When I had finished, it slipped from my neck without my knowledge. Having returned to my mount, I felt for it around my neck but did not find it there. People were beginning to leave, but I returned to where I had been to search for the necklace and eventually I found it. The men who had now finished saddling my camel came back for me and raised up the howdah, thinking I was inside as usual, and fastened it on the camel; they had no doubts about my being inside. Then they took the camel by the head and led it away.

"When I returned to the campsite, there was absolutely no one there; everyone had left. So I wrapped myself in my cloak and lay down; I was sure that they would return for me when they missed me.

"I swear, I was lying there when Șafwān b. al-Mu’atient al-Sulami came by. He had for some reason of his own been lagging behind the other warriors and had not spent the night with the others. When he saw my form he approached and stood above me; he had seen me before the veil was required for us. When he saw me, he exclaimed, "To God we belong, and to Him we return! Isn't it the za’ina6 of the Messenger of God (SAAS)?" I was all wrapped up in my cloak. He then asked, "What made you stay behind, yarhamuki Allah! 'May God have mercy on you!'" I did not speak to him. He then brought up the camel and said, "You ride." He kept away from me.

"So I mounted and he led the camel away by the head, moving quickly to catch up with the rest. I swear by God, we neither caught them up nor did they miss me before morning. By the time the force had halted and made secure, the man appeared leading me. And so those who spread the calumny began talking and the men were greatly purturbed. However, I swear I knew nothing of this.

"We then went on into Medina. There I soon fell seriously sick and heard nothing of what was going on. All the talk soon reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) and my parents, but they told me absolutely nothing of this. All I noticed was that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was not as kind as usual towards me; whenever I had been sick he had been very kind and comforting to me, but not on this occasion. I pretended not to notice. When he came in to see me, my mother being present nursing me, he would just say, formally, "Kayfa fikum?" (‘How are you?’). He would add nothing more.

"Eventually this coldness of his bothered me and so I asked him, "Messenger of God, if you will allow it, I'd like to go and stay with my mother to have her care for me." "No problem," he replied. And so I moved in with my mother. I still had no knowledge what was going on until I recovered from my illness some three weeks later.

"We were an Arab people and did not have in our homes those toilets that foreigners use; we find them disgusting. We would go out and use the open areas of Medina. Each night the women would go outside to relieve themselves. I went out to do so one night accompanied by Umm Mistah, daughter of Abū Ruḥm

b. al-Muṭṭalib. She was walking with me when she tripped over her gown and swore taʿis Misṭaḥ! “perish that Misṭaḥ!” Misṭaḥ was her son’s nickname, his real name being ʿAwf. I commented, “That’s a terrible thing to say about a muḥājirī, and a man who fought at Badr!” “Has the news not reached you, daughter of Abū Bakr?” she asked me. “What news?” I asked. She then told me what those spreading the calumny were saying. I exclaimed, “This is really so?” “Yes”, she said, “it really is so.”

“I swear, I was so upset I could not do my business and went home. I wept so much I thought my crying would burst my liver! I told my mother, “May God forgive you for not telling me anything about what people have been saying about me!” She replied, “Don’t take it too seriously, daughter; rarely does a beautiful woman with a husband who loves her not have her co-wives, and others too, speak badly about her.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had stood and addressed people on this subject, but I knew nothing of that. He had praised and thanked God, then said, “Why is it that people are giving me concern about my family and speaking untruths against them? I swear by God, I know nothing but good of them! And they are also saying the same against a man of whom I have never known anything but good. He has never entered any of my dwellings without me being in his company.”

“The greatest blame for this lay with ʿAbd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salūl, some of the Khazraj and Misṭaḥ, and Ḥamna, daughter of Jaḥṣ. Ḥamna spoke thus because she was the sister of Zaynab, daughter of Jaḥṣ, who also lived with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). And Zaynab was the only one of his wives who would rival my status with him. Zaynab herself was given God’s protection through her religion, for she spoke only good of me. Ḥamna spread her rumours about me to do harm for her sister’s sake, and I suffered for that.

“When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made this address, Usayd b. Ḥudayr stated, “Messenger of God, if they were from al- Aws, we would deal with them for you; if from our Khazraj brethren, then give us your order and I swear by God, they deserve to have their heads cut off!”

“Then Saʿd b. Ubāda arose; he had previously been considered a fine man. He said, “You lie, I swear by God’s life! You’d certainly not cut off their heads! And you only made that statement because you knew that they were of Khazraj; if they had been from your tribe, you’d never have said that!”

“Usayd b. Ḥudayr then responded with, “It’s you who lie, I swear by God’s life! You’re a hypocrite arguing on behalf of hypocrites!”

“People became so angry that there was almost fighting between these two tribes of Aws and Khazraj.

“Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stood down and came in to see me. He called for ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib and Usāma b. Ṣayd and consulted with them. Usāma spoke well of me and then said, “Messenger of God, this is about your family about whom we know nothing but good. It’s all foolish lies.”“ʿAlī said, "Messenger of God, there are plenty of women; you can exchange them. Ask the slave girl; she will speak the truth to you."

"So the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for Burayra to ask her. 'Ali went up to her and struck her violently, saying, "Speak the truth to the Messenger of God (SAAS)!" Burayra replied, "I swear by God, I know nothing but good! I never found fault with 'A'isha at all, except that, when I knead dough and ask her to watch over it she may fall asleep, and the pet lamb comes and eats it!"

"'A'isha continued, 'Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) came in to me; I had with me both my parents and an ansârî woman. I was weeping, and so was she. He sat down, gave praise and thanks to God, and said, "'A'isha, you have been informed what people have been saying about you. Fear God. If you have indeed done wrong, as they say, then repent to God. God accepts repentance from his servants." As soon as he said this my tears dried up so that I could feel nothing of them. I waited for my parents to respond on my behalf to the Messenger of God (SAAS), but they did not speak.

"I swear to God, I thought myself too humble and unimportant for God to send down a verse of the Qur'an about me, one that would be recited and used for the prayer. But I had hoped that the Prophet (SAAS) would have some vision in his sleep by which God would prove my veracity from His knowledge of my innocence and would give some information. But as for a verse of the Qur'an being revealed about me, I swear I thought myself too insignificant for that. When I saw that my parents were not going to respond on my behalf, I asked them, "Will you not reply to the Messenger of God?" They replied, "By God, we don't know what to reply."

"I swear, I don't know any household that ever suffered so much as did that of Abû Bakr through those days. When they were unable to respond for me, I burst out crying again. Then I said, "By God, I'll never repent to God for what you refer to. I swear, I well know that if I were to affirm what people say while God knew me to be innocent of it, I would be affirming what had not happened. And if I were to deny what they say, you would not believe me!" Then I tried to remember the name of Jacob, but I could not remember it, so I said, "But I will speak as did the father of Yûsuf, 'Patience is fine, and God's help is to be sought against what you describe'" (sûrat Yûsuf; XII, v.18).

"I swear, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had not left his seat before God sent down upon him what he used to send; he was wrapped up in his cloak and a pillow of leather was placed beneath his head. As for myself, when I witnessed this, I swear I felt no alarm or concern. I knew that I was innocent and that God would not harm me. However, I swear by Him who bears 'A'isha's soul in His hands, that as soon as the Messenger of God (SAAS) recovered, I thought my parents would expire for fear that confirmation of what people had been saying would come from God.

"Having recovered, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sat up, his face streamed with droplets like a winter's day. He began wiping the sweat from his face and saying, "Rejoice, 'A'isha! God, Almighty and Glorious is He, has sent down (confirmation of) your innocence!" "Praise be to God!" I exclaimed.

"He then went out to the people, addressed them and recited to them what God, the Almighty and Glorious, had revealed from the Qur'an on the subject. He then gave orders about Mistäh b. Uthaθha, Ḥassän b. Thäbit and Ḥamna, daughter of Jaḥsh — these having been the most outspoken in their calumny — and they received the flogging prescribed by law.'"

This hadith is cited in both sahih collections from al-Zuhri. Its text has many virtues. It refers to the punishment for false accusation of fornication having been applied to Ḥassän and those with him. Abū Dāṣūd related it in his Sunan.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "A Muslim spoke the following verses on the flogging of Ḥassän and his associates, 'Ḥassän, along with Ḥamna and Mistäh, tasted what they deserved for speaking a foul calumny.

They engaged in slanders against the wife of their Prophet, incurred the wrath of Him on the noble throne, and were cast down.

They harmed the Messenger of God through her and were exposed to lasting and public disgrace and censure.

Whips lashed them with the force of sudden rain showers from storm clouds.'"

Ibn Ishāq related that Ḥassän b. Thäbit spoke verses in which he criticized Ṣafwān b. al-Muḍṭtal and a group of Quraysh who fought at the well, associates of Jahjāh, as mentioned above. These verses commence,

"These strangers have become powerful and numerous and Ibn al-Furay'a has become top man in the land!

A man's mother is as bereaved, or it is as if he is in a lion's claws, if you fight him;

For the man I come upon and kill, I'll take no blood-wit, nor compensation.

The sea, riding high when the wind blows north and it casts foam on the shore, is not more violent than me when you see me strike like a sudden hail-cloud.

As for Quraysh, I will not make peace with them until they leave error for the right
And abandon al-Lat and al-Uzzā and all of them bow down before the One and Everlasting
And bear witness that what the Messenger of God said to them is true, and they are faithful to God's truth and to the pacts made."

57. "Ibn al-Furay'a" is a reference to Ḥassän himself.
Safwān b. al-Mu‘aṭṭal confronted him and struck him with his sword, saying,

"Receive from me my sword’s blade, for I’m a man who speaks no poetry when attacked!"

He (Ibn Ishāq) related that Thābit b. Qays b. Shamās seized and bound Safwān after he had attacked Hassān. When ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha found him thus, he asked, “What’s all this?” Thābit replied, “He struck Hassān with his sword.” ‘Abd Allāh then asked, “Does the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) know anything of this?” “No,” he replied, and released Safwān. They all then went to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and Ibn al-Mu‘aṭṭal told him, “Messenger of God, he did me harm and ridiculed me, and my anger so overcame me that I struck him.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, “Hassān, would you scorn my people once God gave them guidance?” He added, “Be nice about your injury.” “As ever you say, Messenger of God,” he replied. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) compensated him by awarding him Bīr Há castle that Abī Talḥa had given over as alms, and a Coptic slave-girl named Sirīn; she bore him his son ʿAbd al-Rahmān.

‘A’isha used to say, “Enquiries were made about Ibn al-Mu‘aṭṭal and he was found to be impotent; he did not approach women. Thereafter he was martyred. May God be pleased with him.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “After that, Hassān spoke the following verses in apology for what he had said about ‘A’isha, ‘Chaste and sensible, untouched by suspicion, because of my error she became food for scandal-mongers.

A noble woman of Lu‘ayy b. Ghalib, people of honour, their glory unending.

What was said of you could never apply to you; they were the words of a slanderer.

If I did speak what you claim, then may my hands never raise my whip again!

How could this be, in light of my friendship and support for the illustrious family of the Messenger of God.

Their dignity is such that all others are beneath them, falling far short; may their glory last very long.”

There should be written down here the verses of sūrat al-Nūr, namely from God’s words, “Those who related the calumny are a faction among you. Do not consider it an evil for you; in fact it is good for you. Let each man of them suffer the punishment he has earned” to the words, “Forgiveness and a fine reward” (sūrat al-Nūr; XXIV, v.11–26). Also here should be inserted the traditions, chains of transmission and other relevant matters that have come down from the earliest and later authorities. And success comes through God.
THE HUDAYBIYYA EXPEDITION.

This indisputably took place in Dhū al-Qa‘da, 6 AH. Those who state this include al-Zuhri, Nafi‘, freed-man of Ibn Umar, Qatāda, Mūsā b. Uqba and Muḥammad b. Ishaq b. Yaṣār, along with others too. This is also what was related by Ibn Lahi‘a, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwā – namely, that it occurred in Dhū al-Qa‘da of 6 AH.

Ya‘qūb b. Sufyān stated, “Ismā‘īl b. al-Khalil related to me, from ‘Ali b. Mushir (who said), ‘Hishām b. Urwā narrated to me, quoting his father as having said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) set out for al-Hudaybiyya in Ramadān; (the agreement at) al-Hudaybiyya was made in Shawwāl.”’”

This is very strange to have come from Urwā.

Both al-Bukhārī and Muslim relate from Hudba, quoting Ḥammām, from Qatāda, that Anas b. Malik narrated to him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the ‘umra four times (sic) in Dhū al-Qa‘da, apart from the ‘umra performed along with his pilgrimage. The Ḥudaybiyya ‘umra took place in Dhū al-Qa‘da, that of the following year was in Dhū al-Qa‘da, that of al-Jīrāna was in Dhū al-Qa‘da, when he divided up the booty from the Battle of Ḥunayn, and there was the ‘umra that took place along with his pilgrimage.”

This is the wording of al-Bukhārī.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Medina for Ramadān and Shawwāl; then, in Dhū al-Qa‘da, he left to perform the ‘umra, not to engage in warfare.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He appointed Numayla b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Laythī in command of Medina.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “He invited the local Arabs and the bedouin in neighbouring areas to accompany him, fearing that Quraysh would attack him or block his way to the ka‘ba. But many of the bedouin refrained from joining him.

“Eventually the Messenger of God (SAAS) set forth accompanied by men of the muhājirīn and the anṣār and those bedouin who had joined him. He took with him the animals for sacrifice and dressed in pilgrim garb so that people would feel secure from attack by him and would recognize that he was only leaving to visit this House that he wished to venerate.

Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Shihāb al-Zuhri related to me, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from al-Miswar b. Makhrama and Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, as follows, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) left in the year of al-Ḥudaybiyya intending to visit the ka‘ba and not wanting to engage in battle. With him he took 70 camels for sacrifice and was accompanied by 700 men. Each sacrifice was for 10 persons. Jabir b. ‘Abd Allāh used to say, so I have been told, ‘Those of us present at al-Ḥudaybiyya totalled 1,400.'”

Al-Zuhri stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) travelled as far as Ḫusāf, where he met Bishr b. Sufyān al-Ka‘bi, who told him, ‘Messenger of God, these Quraysh have heard of your travelling and have gone forth accompanied by milk-giving camels accompanied by their young. They have dressed in tiger skins and encamped at Dhū Tuwān, swearing to God that you will not ever enter it (the city) by going past them. And Khalid b. al-Walid is in charge of their cavalry and they have advanced to Kūra‘ al-Ghamīm.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, 'Woe upon Quraysh! They are consumed by the warfare! What harm would it do them to leave my way clear to the other Arabs? If they (the Arabs) should defeat me, that would be what they themselves wanted. And if God gave me victory over them, they (the Arabs) would enter into Islam in droves. Otherwise, they (the Arabs) will fight on for as long as they have strength. What is Quraysh thinking of? I swear by God, I'll keep on striving to accomplish that for which God sent me my mission until He brings it to pass or I myself perish!"

"He then asked, 'What man will direct us by some path other than the one where they are?"

Ibn Ishaq went on, "'Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that a man of Aslam replied, 'I will, Messenger of God!' He then led them along a rough, stony trail between mountain passes. When they emerged from it, the Muslims, who had suffered greatly from this trail, emerged on to easy terrain at the end of the valley. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called out, 'Say: we ask God's forgiveness and turn to him in repentance!' They did repeat this and he then said, 'I swear by God, that was the hitṭa98 put before the Israelites, but they did not say it.'"

Ibn Shihāb stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders to his men as follows, saying, 'Keep to the right, passing between the two sides of al-Ḥamad on a road traversing the pass of al-Murar, on to the slope of al-Ḥudaybiyya, below Mecca.'"

Ibn Shihāb went on, "The army did follow that route, and when the Quraysh cavalry saw by the dust raised by the army that they had diverted from their own path, they raced back to Quraysh.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) went on until having crossed the al-Mīrār pass, his camel knelt. People then said, 'It's turned refractory!' He replied, 'It has not turned refractory; that's not her nature. The One who restrained the elephant from Mecca stopped her. Quraysh shall not today call upon me to respect any ties of kinship that I will not agree to.'"

"He then addressed the men as follows, 'Dismount.' They told him, 'Messenger of God, there's no well in this wādi where we can make camp.' He then took out an arrow from his quiver and gave it to one of his Companions who took it down to one of the water-holes there and stuck it in its centre. It then produced water and they had their mounts lie down there after they had been watered."

58. A word implying a plea for forgiveness of sins.
Ibn Ishq went on, “A scholar related to me, from some men of Banu Aslam, that the man who took the arrow of the Messenger of God (SAAS) down into the water-hole was Najjyya b. Jundab, the driver of his sacrificial camels.”

Ibn Ishq also said, however, “A(nother) scholar maintained that al-Bara’ b. Azib used to say, ‘It is I who went down with the arrow of the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ God knows best what in fact happened.”

Ibn Ishq then gave evidence for the first person named by reporting that an anšari slave-girl came to the well while Najjyya was down filling a bucket.

“She spoke the following verses,

‘Hey, you drawing water, my bucket is before you.
I saw our people praising you
Wishing you well and congratulating you.’

The man then responded to her with the following verses,

‘A Yemeni slave-girl has learned that it is I who draw the water, and that my name is Najjyya.
Many a deep, gushing wound I’ve made, piercing the chests of the enemy.’”

Al-Zuhri stated in his hadith, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had rested, Budayl b. Warqa’, along with some men of Khuzâ‘a, came to talk with him and to ask him why he had come. He told them that he had not come intending to do battle, but to visit the ka‘ba and to venerate its sanctity. He then said to them much the same as he had to Bishr b. Sufyân. The men then returned to Quraysh and told them that they were treating Muhammad too hastily, and that he had only come to visit the ka‘ba. Quraysh responded by making accusations against the men and by calling them cowards, saying, ‘Even if he has come not wanting to fight, he’ll never enter it by compulsion! The Arabs will never say that of us!”

Al-Zuhri stated, “Khuzâ‘a, both their Muslims and their polytheists, were advisers to the Messenger of God (SAAS), hiding from him nothing that happened in Mecca.

“They then sent to him Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ b. al-Akhyaf, a brother of Banu ‘Amir b. Lu‘ayy. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw him approaching, he said, ‘This man is untrustworthy!’ When Mikraz reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and addressed him, the latter replied to him much as he had to Budayl and his companions. Mikraz then returned to Quraysh and reported what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had told him. They then dispatched Hulays b. ‘Alqama, or Ibn Zabbân, who at that time was the leader of the Abyssinian fighters, he being a member of Banu al-Ḥārith b. ‘Abd Manât b. Kinâna. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw him, he commented, ‘This man is from people who are devout; drive out the animals for sacrifice in front of him so he will see them.’ When he saw them going past from the valley side, wearing their neck decorations and having eaten their own hair from having been long confined, he went back to Quraysh without actually having gone to the Messenger of God (SAAS), since they were so impressed with what he had seen. He reported this to them (Quraysh). They told him, ‘Just sit down! You’re only a bedouin, without any sense!’"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "‘Abd Allāh b. Abī Bakr related to me that al-Hulays was angry at this and retorted, ‘Quraysh, it wasn’t for this that we allied with you and made a pact with you! Shall someone who has come to venerate God’s house be barred from it? By Him who holds the soul of al-Hulays, either you allow Muhammad to do what he has come for, or I’ll take away the Abyssinians to the last man of them!’ They responded, ‘Keep silent and leave us alone until we get for ourselves what we want!’"

Al-Zuhri stated in his hadith, “Then they (decided to send) to the Messenger of God (SAAS) Urwa b. Mas‘ūd al-Thaqafi and he told them, ‘Tribe of Quraysh, I saw the violence and bad language you directed at those who came back to you after you dispatched them to Muhammad. You well know that you are as my father and myself the son’ (Urwa was in fact the son of Sabī‘a, daughter of ‘Abd al-Shams). ‘Having heard what has occurred to you, I gathered some of my people who obey me and so have come to you to help you myself.’

“They replied, ‘You speak the truth; you have our trust.’

“So he went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, ‘Muhammad, so have you gathered together a whole mix of people, then brought them to your own home to destroy it with them? Quraysh have come forth with their milch-camels, accompanied by their young and dressed in tiger skins, having sworn to God that you will never enter contrary to their wish. By God, I’ll wager these people will abandon you tomorrow!’

“Abū Bakr, the Trusting, God be pleased with him, was behind the Messenger of God (SAAS) and commented, ‘Go suck al-Lat’s tits! Us abandon him, indeed!’ Urwa then asked, ‘So who is this, Muhammad?’ He replied, ‘This is Ibn Abī Quhāfa.’ Umar then said, ‘If I wasn’t obligated to you, I’d punish you for that. But now we are even.’

“Urwa then began fondling the beard of the Messenger of God (SAAS), while he was speaking to him. Al-Mughira b. Shu‘ba, who was standing close by, dressed in armour, began tapping at Urwa’s hand as it touched the beard of the Messenger of God (SAAS), saying, ‘Remove your hand from the face of the Messenger of God, or you’ll never get it back!’ Urwa commented, ‘Damn you, how churlish and rude you are!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) smiled at this, so Urwa asked him, ‘Who is this, then, Muhammad?’ ‘This’, he replied, ‘is your nephew al-Mughira b. Shu‘ba!’ At this Urwa commented, ‘You wretch, wasn’t it only yesterday you learned how to wash your own private parts!’”
Al-Zuhri went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to ‘Urwa approximately what he had to the others, telling him that he had not come seeking battle. ‘Urwa then left, having observed how the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) treated him. When he washed, they rushed to the water he had used. If he spat, they hurried to retrieve it, and if a hair fell from his head, they would take it. Consequently, when ‘Urwa returned to Quraysh, he told them, ‘Men of Quraysh, I’ve been to Chosroe in his kingdom, Caesar in his and the Negus in his; but I swear, I never saw a king amidst his people like Muḥammad amidst his Companions. I have seen people who would never abandon him for any reason. So draw your own conclusions.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “A scholar related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for Khirāsh b. Umayya al-Khuṣai’ and sent him to Quraysh in Mecca, mounting him on one of his camels called al-Thaʿlab, to tell their leaders on his behalf why he had come. But they hamstrung the camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and wanted to kill him. The Abyssinian troops, however, prevented this and they released him, so he made his way back to the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Ibn Ishāq also stated, “A reliable source related to me, from Ikrima, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that Quraysh had sent 40 or 50 of their men with orders to encircle the camp of the Messenger of God (SAAS), to capture one of his Companions. But they were taken prisoner and brought to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He forgave them and released them. They had hurled stones and shot arrows at the camp of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“He then summoned ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to send him to Mecca to inform the Quraysh leaders for him why he had come. ‘Umar responded, ‘Messenger of God, I fear for myself from Quraysh. There is no one in Mecca of Bana ‘Adi who could protect me. Quraysh are well aware of my enmity towards them and of the roughness with which I have treated them. But I will suggest to you a man they respect more than myself, ‘Uthmān b. ‘Affān.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then summoned ‘Uthmān b. ‘Affān and did send him to Abū Sufyān and the Quraysh leaders to tell them that he had not come to wage war, but to visit the ḱaʿba in veneration of its sanctity. ‘Uthmān set out for Mecca, where he was met by Abān b. Sa‘d b. al-‘Āṣ, either before or after he had entered the city. Abān mounted ‘Uthmān before himself and gave him protection until he delivered the message of the Messenger of God (SAAS). ‘Uthmān went on to meet Abū Sufyān and the other Quraysh leaders. He gave them the message entrusted to him by the Messenger of God (SAAS). When he had done so, they told ‘Uthmān, ‘If what you want is to circumambulate the ḱaʿba, then do so.’ He replied, ‘I could never circumambulate it before the Messenger of God (SAAS) did so.’

“Quraysh then kept ‘Uthmān as their prisoner. The Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims were informed that ‘Uthmān had been killed. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, when he was informed that 'Uthmān had been killed, 'We'll not leave before engaging the enemy in battle!'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called upon the men to pledge allegiance to him. This pledge, the bay'at al-ridwān, the 'willing pledge', was made beneath a tree. People would say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) received a pledge of allegiance unto death. Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh, however, used to say, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not have us pledge allegiance unto death, but had us swear that we would not flee.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) received their pledge and the only Muslim present who abstained from it was al-Jadd b. Qays, brother of Banū Salama. Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh used to say, 'I swear, I can almost see him now, standing glued to the side of his camel, trying to hide from everyone.'

"Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) received the news that the report about 'Uthmān was false."

Ibn Hishām stated, "Wakī recounted, from Ismā'īl b. Abū Khālid, from al-Sha'bī, that the first man to make the bay'at al-ridwān to the Messenger of God (SAAS) was Abū Sinān al-Asadi.

"And a reliable source related to me a tradition from Ibn Abī Mulayka, from Ibn 'Umar, that the Messenger of God himself (SAAS) made the pledge for 'Uthmān, clapping one of his hands to the other."

This tradition mentioned by Ibn Hishām with this line of authority is weak; however, it is confirmed in both sahih collections.

Ibn Ishāq went on, "Al-Zuhri stated, 'Quraysh then sent Suhayl b. 'Amr, brother of Banū 'Amir b. Lu'ayy, to the Messenger of God (SAAS), telling him, 'Go to Muhammad and make peace with him. The only condition for peace with him is that he withdraw from us this year. By God, the Arabs shall never say that he entered it by compulsion!'"

"Suhayl b. 'Amr went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said, seeing him approach, 'The enemy wanted peace when they dispatched this man.'

"When Suhayl reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) he spoke with him at length; they reconciled and made peace. The matter having been concluded, with nothing but a document remaining to be drawn up, 'Umar jumped up and went over to Abū Bakr. He asked him, 'Abū Bakr, is he not God's messenger?' 'Indeed yes,' he replied. 'And are we not Muslims?' he asked. 'Indeed yes,' Abū Bakr replied. 'And are they not polytheists?' 'Indeed yes,' he agreed. 'So why should we agree to something that demeans our religion?' 'Umar asked. Abū Bakr replied, 'Obey whatever he says; for I testify that he is the Messenger of God.' 'Umar added, 'I too testify that he is the Messenger of God.'

"He ('Umar) then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked him, 'Are you not the Messenger of God?' 'Yes, indeed.' 'And are we not Muslims?' 'Indeed yes.' 'And are they not polytheists?' 'Indeed yes.' 'So why then should we demean our religion?’ ‘I’, he replied, ‘am the servant of God and His messenger. I shall not oppose His order and He will not let me fail.’

‘Umar, God be pleased with him, used to say, ‘I have gone on fasting, giving alms, praying and freeing slaves because of what I did that day and out of fear for what I said that day, until I felt that I had made up.’”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then summoned ‘Ali b. Abī Talib, God be pleased with him and told him, ‘Write: “In the name of God the Most Merciful, the Most Beneficent”.’ Suhayl objected, ‘I don’t know that (phrase).’ ‘Write instead, “In Your name, O God.”’ And ‘Ali wrote it.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘Write down: “This is the peace agreement made by Muḥammad, the Messenger of God, and Suhayl b. ‘Amr.”’ Suhayl then said, ‘If I were to testify that you are the Messenger of God, I would not oppose you. Write down your name and that of your father.’

“So the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Write down, “This is the peace agreement made by Muḥammad, son of ‘Abd Allāh, with Suhayl b. ‘Amr. They have made peace by agreeing to put aside warfare from the people for ten years. During this period, people will be safe and leave one another alone. Provided that if anyone from Quraysh comes to Muhammad without permission of his guardian, then he must send him back to them. If, however, anyone goes to Quraysh from Muhammad, they are not to send him back to him. There are to be no secret agreements, bad faith or antagonism between us. Anyone wishing to enter into a pact or agreement with Muḥammad may do so. Anyone wishing to enter into an agreement or pact with Quraysh may do so.”’

“At this Khuzā’ah promptly announced, ‘We have made a pact and agreement with Muḥammad!’ And Banū Bakr responded at once, ‘We have made a pact and agreement with Quraysh!’

“The agreement went on, ‘You shall retire from us this year and not enter Mecca against our will. Next year we will make way for you, and you and your people may enter and stay for three nights, each rider bearing his own weapons — swords in sheaths, that is, and bringing in no other weapons.’

“While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was writing the document, up came Abū Jandal, Suhayl’s son, dragging fetters, having escaped to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“When those with the Messenger of God (SAAS) had gone forth, they had not doubted that there would be victory, because of visions he had seen. Witnessing now the peace being made and their withdrawal being arranged and what the Messenger of God (SAAS) was agreeing to on his own behalf, they were all very disappointed and deathly depressed.

“When Suhayl saw (his son) Abū Jandal, he got up, went to him and struck him in the face, grabbing him by the collar and saying, ‘The matter was agreed to between us before this fellow came to you!’ ‘You are right,’ he agreed. And so Suhayl began dragging his son away to return him to Quraysh custody, while Abī Jandal screamed at the top of his voice, 'Muslims, shall I be returned to the polytheists who will subvert my faith?'

"This increased their sense of depression.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Be patient and control yourself, Abū Jandal! God is preparing relief and succour for you and the others with you who are powerless. We have made a peace pact with the enemy and we and they have sworn to this in God's name; we cannot act falsely with them.'

"'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb jumped up and walked along beside Abū Jandal, saying, 'Be patient! They're only polytheists, their blood worth no more than that of dogs!' He was keeping the hilt of his sword close to Abū Jandal. 'Umar used to say, 'I was hoping he would take the sword and strike his father with it! But the man spared his father, and the matter was settled.'

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished the document, he called upon some of the Muslims and some of the polytheists to witness the peace. These men were Abū Bakr, 'the Trusting', 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf, 'Abd Allāh b. Suhayl b. Amr, Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās, Mahmūd b. Maslama, Mikraz b. Ḥafs (he having been a polytheist at that time), 'Ali b. Abū Ṭālib. It was he, 'Ali, who wrote out the agreement.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) had set up his tent in unhallowed territory and he would say his prayers on sacred ground. When he had concluded the peace, he set about sacrificing his animals. He then sat and had his head shaved; the man who shaved it that day was Khirāsh b. Umayya b. al-Fadl al-Khuza'i. When the Muslims saw that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had made sacrifice and shaved, they hurried to do the same.'

Ibn Ishaq went on, "'Abd Allāh b. Aba Najīḥ related to me, from Mujāhid, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, 'Some men shaved their heads at al-Ḥudaybiyya, while others cut their hair short. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, "May God have mercy on those who shaved!" They asked, "And on those who cut it short, Messenger of God?" "May God have mercy on those who shaved," he repeated. "And on those who cut it short, Messenger of God?" they again asked. He said, "And on those who cut it short."

"'They then asked him, "Messenger of God, why did you emphasize God's mercy for those who shaved and not for those who cut their hair short?" He replied, "They did not doubt."'"

'Abd Allāh b. Abū Najīḥ stated, "Mujāhid related to me, from Ibn 'Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sacrificed one camel among the rest that had belonged to Abū Jahl and had a silver ring on its head; he did this to anger the polytheists."

This is the text given by Muḥammad b. Ishaq; may God be pleased with him for this account. In the text of al-Bukhārī that will follow there are differences in some places with this text, as you will see, if God so wills it and in Him is all trust. We will give it complete, making reference to traditions considered both authentic and good for the benefit in them. If God Almighty wills it; our reliance is upon Him, for He is the one from whom to seek help.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Khalid b. Makhlid related to us, quoting Sulaymān b. Bilāl, who quoted Ṣāliḥ b. Kaysān, from ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh, from Zayd b. Khalid, who said, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) the year of al-Ḥudaybiyya, and at night it rained hard. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prayed the al-ṣubh prayer with us. Later he turned to us and said, “Do you know what your Lord said?” We replied, “God and His messenger know best!” He said, ‘God Almighty said, ‘Of my servants, some have awakened to belief in me, others to disbelief. Those who said, “Our rain comes by God’s mercy and bounty” are believers in me and disbelievers in the stars. Those who said, “Our rain comes by this or that star” is a believer in the stars and a disbeliever in me.’” Al-Bukhārī related this in several places in his sahih collection. Muslim gave the tradition in various lines back to al-Zuhrī. From al-Zuhrī the line of transmission went back to ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh from Abū Hurayra.

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “‘Ubayd Allāh b. Mūsā related to us, from Isrā’īl, from Abū Ḥishāq, from al-Bara’, who said, ‘You use the word al-fath, “the victory”, to apply to the farh of Mecca. That was certainly a victory. We consider al-fath (also) to have been the bay‘at al-ridwān, the “willing pledge”, that occurred at al-Ḥudaybiyya. There were 1,400 of us with the Prophet (ṢAAS). At al-Ḥudaybiyya there is a well; we went down to it and drained it to the last drop. When the Prophet (ṢAAS) heard of this, he came there and sat on its edge and called for a vessel of water, with which he performed the ablution. Then he rinsed out his mouth, prayed, and poured it in the well. We then went a little way off, and later it produced for us (the water that) we and our mounts needed.’”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, regarding the words of God Almighty, “but He made apart from that a near victory” (ṣūrat al-Fath; XLVIII, v.27), (referring to) “the Ḥudaybiyya peace”. “Al-Zuhrī stated, ‘No victory occurred previously in Islam than was greater than it. (Previously) wherever men had met, there had been fighting; when the truce was made, warfare came to an end and all made peace with one another. When they met they would negotiate with one another when they talked. And no one of any intelligence had Islam explained to him without accepting it. In those two years the same number of men entered as before, or even more.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The proof of what al-Zuhrī said is in the fact that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth to al-Ḥudaybiyya with 1,400 men, as Jabir states, and then two years later attended the ‘conquest of Mecca’ with 10,000.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿUṣūf b. Ḥusayn from Sālim, from Jabir, who said, “At al-Ḥudaybiyya the men were thirsty while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had before him a waterskin he would use for ablutions. Eventually the men went over to him and he asked what they wanted. They told him that they had no water for ablutions or for drinking and that all that remained was in his waterskin. The Prophet (SAAS) then placed his hand in the waterskin and the water began spurting out from between his fingers as if it were a spring.” Jābir continued, “So we drank and performed the ablutions.” We asked Jābir, “How many were you there that day?” He replied, “Even if we had been 100,000, there would have been enough for us. We were 1,500 men.”

Al-Bukhārī also related this hadith, as did Muslim, from different lines of transmission, from Ḥusayn, from Sālim b. Abū al-Ja‘d, from Jābir.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by al-Ṣalt b. Muḥammad, quoting Yazīd b. Zūrayr, from Sa‘īd, from Qatāda (who said), “I said to Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab, ‘I have heard that Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh used to say that they were 1,400 strong.’ Sa‘īd replied, ‘Jābir told me that they were 1,500 in number who made the pledge to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-Ḥudaybiyya.’” Abū Da‘ūd traced this tradition back with a line including Qurra, from Qatāda. Al-Bukhārī is alone in thus giving this hadith.

Thereafter al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Ali b. ‘Abd Allāh related to him, quoting Sufyān, that ‘Amr said, “I heard Jābir say, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to us at al-Ḥudaybiyya, ‘You are the best people on earth!’ We were 1,400; and were I able today to see, I would show you the place where the tree stood.’”

Al-Bukhārī also related this tradition, as did Muslim, from several lines of transmission, from Sufyān b. ‘Uuyayn. Al-Ṭayy b. Sa‘īd related it similarly, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said, “A slave belonging to Ḥāṭib came to make a complaint about him. He said, ‘Messenger of God, Ḥāṭib will surely enter hell-fire!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘You have lied; he will not enter hell; he was present at Badr and al-Ḥudaybiyya.’”

Muslim related this.

Muslim also gave, from several lines of transmission, the following from Ibn Jurayj, “Abū al-Zubayr narrated to me that he heard Jābir say, ‘Umm Maysar told me that she heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say, when he was with Ḥafṣa, “None, if God wills it, will enter hell of those who made the pledge beneath the tree.” Ḥafṣa commented, “On the contrary, Messenger of God.” He berated her and she then quoted, “All of you are headed there” (ṣūrat Maryam; XIX, v.71). The Messenger of God (SAAS) then responded, “Almighty God stated, ‘... and then We will deliver those who are pious, and We will leave there the evil-doers, prostrate’”’ (ṣūrat Maryam; XIX, v.72).

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Mu‘āṣah said, “My father related to us, quoting Shu‘ba, from ‘Amr b. Murra, who stated, “Abd Allāh b. Abū Awfā said, “The men at the tree were 1,300 in number; Aslām were one-eighth of the muhājirīn (there).’”’

Muḥammad b. Bašār included in the chain of authorities Abū Dā‘ūd and Shu‘ba.
Al-Bukhārī narrated it with 'Abd Allāh as one of the authorities in the chain. Muslim narrated it from Ubayd Allāh b. Muṭādh, from his father, from Shu‘ba. Also from Muḥammad b. al-Muthanna, from Abū Daʿūd, from Iṣḥāq b. Ibrāhīm, from al-NAḍr b. Shumayl, both of them quoting Shu‘ba.

Thereafter, al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Alī b. ‘Abd Allāh related to him, quoting Sufyān, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, from Marwān and al-Miswar b. Makhrama, who both said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth in the year of al-Ḥudaybiyya with some hundreds of his Companions. While he was at Dhū al-Ḥulayfa, he put ceremonial necklaces on the sacrificial camels, marked them and entered into the ihram, the state of ritual consecration.”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this tradition. This text will follow complete hereafter.

What is implied here is that all these accounts contradict what Ibn Ishaq maintained, namely that those at al-Ḥudaybiyya were 700 in number.

He only said this – though God knows best – because he was using his independent scholastic judgement; since there were 70 sacrificial camels, each one of which would have been for ten men, then those making the sacrifice would have been 700 in number.

But there is no need for all of them to have been participating in the offering, nor that all of them were making the pilgrimage. It is established that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent out one group of them, who included Abū Qatāda. And Abū Qatāda did not adopt the ihram state until after he had killed that wild donkey which he and his companions ate. They carried some of it to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while on the journey, and he asked (those in a state of ihram), “Did any of you order that he bring the meat or make any gesture towards it?” “No,” they said. “Then eat what remains of the donkey,” he told them.

Al-Bukhārī had stated, “Shu‘ba b. al-Rabi‘ related to us, quoting ‘Alī b. al-Mubārak, from Yahyā, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Qatāda, that his father (Abū Qatāda) related to him, as follows, ‘We set off with the Prophet (ṢAAS), the year of al-Ḥudaybiyya, and my companions went in the ihram state, but I did not.’”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Muḥammad b. Rāfiʿ related to him, quoting Shabāba b. Suwār al-Fazārī, quoting Shu‘ba, from Qatāda, from Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab, from his father, who said, “I saw the tree; then I came to it later but did not recognize it.”

(Al-Bukhārī went on) “Mūsā related to us, quoting Abū ‘Awāna, quoting Ṭāriq, from Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab, from his father, that he was among those who made the pledge beneath the tree. So we returned to it the following year; but it was obscure to us.”

Al-Bukhārī also stated that Mahmūd related to him, quoting Ubayd Allāh, from Iṣrā‘il, from Ṭāriq b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, who said, “I set off as a pilgrim, and passed by some people praying. ‘What masjid, place for prayer, is this then?’ They replied, ‘This is the tree where the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for the bay'at al-ridwān, the “willing pledge”.’ I then went over to Sa'īd b. al-Musayyab and related this to him. Sa'īd then said, ‘My father related to me that he was among those who made the pledge to the Messenger of God (SAAS) beneath the tree. He told me, “The following year we had forgotten it and could not find it.”’

“Sa'īd then said, ‘The Companions of Muḥammad did not know it but you people do! You know best, then!’”

Al-Bukhārī related this tradition, as did al-Thawrī, Abū 'Awāna and Shabābā, from Tāriq.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Sa'īd related to him, quoting his brother, from Sulaymān, from 'Amr b. Yahyā, from 'Abbād b. Tamīm, who said, “At the battle of al-Ḥarraq, people were making a pledge to 'Abd Allāh b. Ḥanṭala. Ibn Zayd asked, ‘What is the pledge the people are making to Ibn Ḥanṭala?’ He was told, ‘To the death’. He then said, ‘I will not pledge that to anyone following the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ He had been present at al-Ḥudaybiyya with him.”

Al-Bukhārī also related this, as did Muslim, from various lines, from 'Amr b. Yahyā.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Qutayba b. Sa'īd related to him, quoting Ḥātim, from Yazīd b. Abū Ubayd (who said), “I said to Salama b. al-Akwāf, ‘What pledge was it you made to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-Ḥudaybiyya?’ ‘To the death,’ he replied.”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Yazīd b. Abū Ubayd.

In the saḥīḥ collection of Muslim, it states that he sought the pledge three times – from a first group, from a middle group and from a final group.

In the saḥīḥ there is a hadith from Ma'qīl b. Yāsār that he held the tree branches away from the face of the Messenger of God (SAAS) while he was receiving their pledge. (It also states there) that the first man to give his pledge that day was Abū Sinān, he being Wāḥib b. Miḥṣan, brother of Ḥūṣayn b. Miḥṣan. The name of Sinān b. Abū Sinān is also given.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Shujaʿ b. al-Walīd that he heard al-Nadr b. Muḥammad (say), that Ẓakhrī b. al-Rabīʿ quoted Nāfiʿ as having said, ‘People relate that ʿUmar’s son accepted Islam before ʿUmar, yet it was not so. The day of al-Ḥudaybiyya ʿUmar sent (his son) Ābād Allāh to bring him a mare of his that was with one of the anṣār; this was so that he could ride it to battle. At the time, the Messenger of God (SAAS) was receiving the pledge beneath the tree, though ʿUmar did not know this. Ābād Allāh pledged his allegiance, then left. ʿUmar then went with him and made his pledge to the Messenger of God (SAAS). This is why people say that ʿUmar’s son accepted Islam before ʿUmar did.”

that the people who were with the Prophet (SAAS) at al-Ḥudaybiyya were dispersed in the shade of the tree. Then they all began looking directly at the Prophet (SAAS). He (ʿUmar) then said (to his son), ‘ʿAbd Allāh, go and find out why everyone is looking directly at the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ He (ʿAbd Allāh) found them to be making their pledge, and he did so himself. He then returned to ʿUmar, who went and pledged allegiance.’’" Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this hadith from both these lines of authorities.

An Account of the texts given by al-Bukhārī relating to the pilgrimage of al-Ḥudaybiyya.

Al-Bukhārī stated in his military chronicle as follows, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Sufyān, who said, ‘I heard al-Zuhri when he related this hadith. I learned part of it by heart and Maʿmar corroborated me. (The hadith quotes) from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from al-Miswar b. Makhrama and Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, each of these adding to the account of the other. They both stated, “The Prophet (SAAS) went forth to al-Ḥudaybiyya accompanied by some 1,000 men. When he arrived at Dhū al-Ḥulayfa, he put neck decorations and badges on the sacrificial camels, and went out from there as a pilgrim, sending on ahead a scout of his from the Khuzāʿa.

“The Prophet (SAAS) travelled on till he arrived at the stream at al-Ashtāt, where his scout came to him and said, ‘Quraysh have gathered a force against you. They have assembled the Abyssinian warriors to fight you. They intend to do battle with you and to keep you away from the kaʿba.’ He then asked, ‘Men, give me your advice. Do you think that I should give way for the children and families of those who wish to keep us from the kaʿba? (Better) if they do come and join us, (so) God will have cut out one eye of the polytheists; alternatively, we will leave them defeated.’ Abū Bakr replied, ‘Messenger of God, you have come forth to visit the kaʿba, not intending to do battle or to make war against anyone. Proceed to it, and we will fight anyone who blocks our way.’ He responded, ‘Then proceed onwards, in God’s name.’”"

This is how al-Bukhārī related this tradition here, stopping at this point and adding nothing more.

In his work, Kitāb al-Shahādat, al-Bukhārī stated, that it was related to him by ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad, quoting ʿAbd al-Razzāq, quoting Maʿmar, quoting al-Zuhri, quoting Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from al-Miswar b. Makhrama and Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, each of them corroborating the other’s account. They both stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) left at the time of al-Ḥudaybiyya and proceeded on for part of the way. At that point the Prophet (SAAS) said, ‘Khālid b. al-Walid is at al-Ghamīm with cavalry as Quraysh’s vanguard. Take a route to the right.’ And, by God, Khālid had no awareness of them until he saw their army’s dust. He then raced off to inform Quraysh.
"The Prophet (SAAS) proceeded on until he reached the pass from which the way led down to them. There his camel kneeled down; people said, 'Hal! Hal! Get up! Get up!' but it persisted (in kneeling). People said, 'Al-Qaswa (the camel's name) has become refractory!' The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded to them, 'No, al-Qaswa has not; that's not in her nature. She has been held back by Him who held back the elephant.' He then said, 'By Him who holds my soul in His hand, I'll accept any request that they make of me by which the sanctuaries of God are dignified!' He then scolded his camel and it got up.

"He then veered away from Quraysh and halted beyond al-Ḥudaybiyya at a well there that had little water. His men kept taking the water from it, little by little, and soon they had bailed it out completely. Complaint of thirst was made to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he drew an arrow from his quiver and told them to put it into the water-hole. And, by God, it continued providing them plenty of water until they left.

"While this was going on, Budayl b. Warqā al-Khuzā'ī arrived, accompanied by others of Khuzā'ī. They were the trusted confidants of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from the people of Tihāma. Budayl said, 'I have just left Ka'b b. Lu'ayy and ʿAmir b. Lu'ayy who have encamped at the Ḥudaybiyya wells; they have with them their milch-camels with their young. They are going to do battle with you and prevent you from reaching the kūba.'

"The Prophet (SAAS) responded, 'We have not come to fight anyone. We have come to make a pilgrimage. Quraysh have been consumed by the warfare! It has ruined them. If they want, I will give them respite for a period. They should then give me access to the people. If it (Islam) prevails, and they wish to join into what the people have entered, they could do so. Otherwise, they will have gained in numbers. If they refuse this, then I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand, I will battle them in this cause of mine until I perish! Let God's will be done!'

"Budayl said, 'I will inform them what you say.' He then went off to Quraysh and told them, 'We come to you from that man. We have heard him make certain statements which, if you wish, we will relate to you.' Fools among them said, 'We have no need for you to tell us anything of him.' Those of them who were sensible, said, 'Tell us what you heard him say.' He responded by relating to them what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said.

"Urwa b. Masūd then arose and said, 'People, am I not as your father?' 'Yes, you are,' they told him. 'And are you not as my children?' 'Yes, indeed,' they replied. 'Do you mistrust me?' he then asked. 'No,' they answered. 'Do you not know that I called to the people of 'Ukāz to come forth to war alongside me and that when they put me off I came to you with my family and my son, and all who obeyed me?' 'Yes indeed,' they replied. 'This man', he went on, 'has made an appropriate offer. Accept it, and let me go to see him.' 'Go to him,' they told him.
"When he went to him, he began talking to the Prophet (SAAS), who said to him approximately what he had told Budayl. Urwa at that point said, 'Hey now, Muhammad, haven’t you considered that you are ruining your people? Have you ever heard of any Arab who ruined his people before yourself? And if that doesn’t happen, I swear I don’t see faces here; I just see a hodge-podge of people who are quite capable of fleeing and abandoning you.'

"Abū Bakr said to him, 'Go suck al-Lat’s tits! Would we flee and abandon him!'

"Urwa asked, 'Who is that?' 'Abū Bakr,' people told him. Urwa commented, 'Well, by Him who has my soul in His hand, if I weren’t obligated to you, I’d give you a reply all right!'

"He then went on speaking to the Prophet (SAAS) and while doing so would take hold of the latter’s beard. Al-Mughira b. Shu’ba, who was standing at the head of the Messenger of God (SAAS), wearing a sword and a helmet, would tap his hand with the hilt of his sword each time Urwa stretched it out to touch the beard of the Messenger of God (SAAS) saying, 'Keep your hands off the beard of the Messenger of God!' Urwa raised his head and asked, 'And who is that?' 'That is al-Mughira b. Shu’ba,' they replied. Urwa then said, 'You wretch! I couldn’t match your treachery!'

"Before Islam, al-Mughira b. Shu’ba had stayed with a family and had murdered them and taken their property. Thereafter, he came and accepted Islam, whereupon the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'As for Islam, do accept it. As for money, I’ve nothing to do with that.'

"Then Urwa began watching closely the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He said (later), 'I swear that if the Messenger of God (SAAS) spat, the phlegm would fall into the hand of one of them and that person would rub it on to his face or skin. If he gave them a command, they would carry it out immediately. If he performed the ablutions, they would almost kill one another trying to get to the water he had used. If he spoke, they lowered their voices. And they never looked directly at him, out of their reverence for him.'

"Urwa returned to his companions and told them, 'Well, I’ve gone in to kings, had audiences with Caesar, Chosroe and the Negus and I swear by God I’ve never seen the subjects of any king venerate him the way Muhammad’s people venerate him! I swear, if he spits, the phlegm always falls into the palm of one of them and he will then rub it on to his face or skin. If he gives them a command, they hurry to carry it out. If he performs the ablutions, they almost kill one another for the water he used. If he speaks, they lower their voices in his presence. And they never look directly at him, out of their veneration for him. He has made you an appropriate offer; accept it.'"

"A man of Banū Kināna then asked to be allowed to go to see him and Quraysh agreed. As he was approaching, the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented,
'This is so-and-so; he is from a tribe who much venerate sacrificial camels. Send them out to him.' They were put out for him and people greeted him chanting labhayk, 59 ‘at Your service’, ('O Lord'). When he saw this, he said, ‘All praise be to God! It is not right for these people to be kept from the ka'ba.’ When he returned to his companions, he told them, ‘I have seen the sacrificial camels necklaced and decorated with badges, and I don’t think they should be kept from the ka'ba.’

“One of their men, named Mikraz b. Ḥafs, then arose, and said, ‘Let me go to him.’ ‘Do so,’ they told him. When he approached, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘This is Mikraz; he is an immoral man.’ As Mikraz began to speak to the Messenger of God (SAAS), Suhayl b. ‘Amr arrived.”

Ma’mar stated, “Ayyūb narrated to me, from ‘Ikrima, that when Suhayl b. ‘Amr arrived, the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘Your problem has suhhila, “been eased”!’

Ma’mar went on, “Al-Zuhri stated in his ḥadith, ‘Suhayl then came and said, “Come on now, write an agreement between us.” The Prophet (SAAS) asked for a document to be brought and said, “Write down: Bismi Allāhi al-raḥmān al-raḥīm (in the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent)”. But Suhayl objected, “As for that term al-raḥmān, I swear I don’t know what that is. Instead, put down Bismik Allāhumma (In your name, O God), like you used to write.” The Muslims insisted, “By God, we’ll write it only Bismi Allāhi al-raḥmān al-raḥīm!” But the Prophet (SAAS) said, “Write down Bismik Allāhumma.”

“He then said, ‘This is what Muhammad, the Messenger of God, has determined.’ Suhayl objected, ‘By God, if we knew you to be the Messenger of God, we’d not have blocked your access to the ka'ba, nor would we have battled you. However, write down “Muḥammad, son of ‘Abd Allāh.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘By God, I certainly am the Messenger of God, even though you call me a liar! Write down “Muḥammad, son of ‘Abd Allāh.”’”

Al-Zuhri stated, “This relates to his having said, ‘I’ll accept any request they make of me by which the sanctuaries of God are dignified.’

“The Prophet (SAAS) then said, ‘on condition that you allow us access to the ka'ba so that we may circumambulate it.’

“Suhayl objected, ‘By God, we’ll not have the Arabs say that we accepted pressure; however, that can happen next year.’

“So he wrote it. Suhayl then said, ‘A condition is that any of our men who come over to you, even if in your religion, you will return to us.’

“The Muslims said, ‘Goodness gracious, how could someone be returned to the polytheists if he came as a Muslim?’

“While this discussion was in progress Abū Jandal b. Suhayl b. ‘Amr came along, dragging his chains, having escaped from below Mecca, and threw himself down among the Muslims. Suhayl said, 'This fellow, Muḥammad, is the first whom I charge you to return to me.' The Prophet (SAAS) said, 'But we've not completed the agreement yet.' 'In that case,' Suhayl insisted, 'I'll never make a pact with you over anything.' The Prophet (SAAS) then said, 'Release him to my custody.' 'I'll not release him to you,' Suhayl said. 'I insist that you release him!' 'That I'll not do,' he replied. Mikraz then said, 'Very well, we'll release him to you.'

"Abū Jandal then exclaimed, 'Muslims, shall I be returned to the polytheists? I have come to you as a Muslim. Can't you see how I've been treated?' He had been brutally tortured in God's cause.

"Umar, may God be pleased with him, said, 'So I went to the Messenger of God, God's peace and blessings be upon him, and asked, "Are you not truly the Messenger of God?" 'Yes, indeed," he replied. "And are we not in the right and our enemy in error?" "Yes, indeed," he agreed. "Why, then, are we so demeaning our religion?" I asked. He replied, "I am the Messenger of God, and I will not disobey Him; He is my helper."

"'Well," I asked, 'didn't you tell us how we would come to the ka'ba and circumambulate it?' "Indeed yes," he replied. "But did I tell you we would do that this year?" "No," I replied. "Well," he said, you will go to it and circumambulate it."

"Umar went on, 'I then went down to Abū Bakr and asked, 'Abū Bakr, is this man not in truth God's prophet?' "Yes, indeed," he replied. "But are we not in the right and our enemy in error?" "Yes, indeed," he agreed. "Well?, I asked him, 'then why are we demeaning our religion?' He replied, 'Look, man, he is indeed the Messenger of God and he will not disobey Him; He is his helper. Trust him; he is right.'

"'But', I continued, 'didn't he tell us we would go to the ka'ba and circumambulate it?' "Yes indeed," he agreed. "But did he say you would get there this year?" "No," I said. "You will get there and circumambulate it," he said."

Al-Zuhrī stated, "Umar went on, 'So I therefore did certain things.'

"He went on, 'And when he had completed the document, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told his Companions, 'Make your sacrifices and shave.'

"'And, I swear, not a man of them did so until he repeated this three times. When none of them arose, he went in to Umm Salama and told her how the men were acting. Umm Salama said, 'Prophet of God, do you like that? Go on out without speaking a word to anyone and sacrifice your camel. Then call for your barber and have him shave your head.'

"He went out and spoke to no one until he had done this. He made his sacrifice and called for his barber who shaved his head. When the men saw this, they arose and made sacrifice. Then some so hurriedly shaved the heads of others that it appeared that they were killing each other in their grief.

"Then some believing women went to see him. And so God Almighty revealed the words, "O you who believe! If believing women should come to you as emigrants, then test them ...” and so on to the words, “... the marriage ties of unbelieving women” (ṣūrat al-Mumtaḥana; LX, v.10).

“That day ‘Umar divorced two women who had been his while he was a polytheist. Mu‘awiya b. Abū Sufyān married one of these, while Sa‘wān b. Umayya the other.

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to Medina. There Abū Başir, a Quraysh man, came to him, he being a Muslim. They (Quraysh) sent two men to retrieve him, referring to the pact that had been made. He gave Abū Başir over to them and they left with him and went to Dhū al-Ḥulayfa, where they halted to eat the dates they had. Abū Başir said to one of the two men, ‘By God, I can see that that sword of yours is a very fine one.’ The other man unsheathed it and said, ‘Yes, it is; I swear it is fine. And I’ve put it to the test often.’ Abū Başir asked, ‘Do let me look at it.’ He then took it from him and struck him until he was dead. The other man fled back to Medina where he ran into a mosque. When he saw him, the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘That man has seen something dreadful.’

“When the man reached the Prophet (SAAS), the man exclaimed, ‘I swear by God, my companion has been killed! And I’m as good as dead!’ Then Abū Başir arrived and said, ‘Prophet of God, God has fulfilled your obligation! You returned me to them, and then God saved me from them.’ The Prophet (SAAS) then commented, ‘Woe on his mother! What an inciter to war he would have been if he had had supporters!’

“When Abū Başir heard this, he knew that he would return him to Quraysh, and so he left for the coast.”

He went on, “Abū Jandal b. Suhayl b. ‘Amr escaped from Quraysh and joined Abu Başir. Thereafter, every man who left Quraysh to accept Islam went and joined Abū Başir. Eventually a group of them were formed. Whenever they heard of a Quraysh caravan heading for Syria, they would attack it, killing the men and taking the goods.

“And so Quraysh sent to the Prophet (SAAS) invoking God and family ties (and saying) that if he were to send for those men they would be safe. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) did send for them. Thereafter, God Almighty revealed, ‘And His it was who kept their hands away from you and yours away from them in the valley of Mecca, after He had given you control over them ...’ as far as the words, ‘... their zeal, the zeal of al-jāhiliyya’” (ṣūrat al-Fath; XLVIII v. 24).

Their “zeal” referred to is the fact that they did not agree that he was the Prophet of God, and that they would not accept the words, “in the name of God, the most Merciful and Compassionate”. And the fact that they denied them access to the ka‘ba.

This text has additions and advantages that are absent from the narration of Ibn Ishāq from al-Zuhri. His account quoted al-Zuhri from a group of others, including Sufyān b. ‘Uyayna, Ma‘mar and Muhammad b. Ishāq. All of these quoted al-Zuhri, from ‘Urwa, from Marwān and Miswar, in relating the narrative.

This is the best chain of authority. For Marwan and al-Miswar were young at the time of al-Hudaybiyya. It is obvious that they acquired it from the Companions, may God be pleased with them, in relating the narrative.

Al-Bukhari stated, "Al-Hasan b. Ishq related to us, quoting Muhammad b. Sabiq, quoting Malik b. Mighwal, who said, 'I heard Abu Husayn state, 'Abu Wa'il said, 'When Suhayl b. Hunayf arrived from Siffin, we went to him asking for news. He replied, 'Be sceptical. At the battle of Abu Jandal, if I could have reversed the orders of the Messenger of God (SAAS) I would have done so. And God and His messenger know best. And we never took down our swords from our shoulders for any problem that troubled us without them providing us some solution we could appreciate. Before this affair, that is. Now, we no sooner deal with one contender than another arises before us that we don't know how to deal with them.'""

Al-Bukhari also stated that it was related to him by 'Abd Allah b. Yusuf, quoting Malik, from Zayd b. Aslam, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was travelling one night in the company of Umar b. al-Khattab. Umar asked him a question on some matter, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) made him no reply. Umar asked him again and yet again, receiving no reply from him. Umar b. al-Khattab then exclaimed, "Umar, your mother is as good as bereaved of you! You persisted three times in asking the Messenger of God (SAAS), and despite that he would not respond to you."

Umar related, "So I moved my mount away and advanced to the front of the Muslims, fearing that there was going to be a revelation about me. But immediately I heard someone shouting at me. I responded, 'I was afraid there was about to be a revelation about me.'"

"Then I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and greeted him. He said, 'Tonight a sūra has been revealed to me that is more pleasing to me than anything over which the sun rises.' He then recited, 'We have made for you a clear victory!'" (sūrat al-Fath; XLVIII, v.1).

I note that I wrote about the sūrat al-Fath fully and sufficiently in my Tafsir (Exegesis), to God being due all praise and credit. Those wishing to insert that material here should do so.

Chapter: On the Expedition and missions that took place in 6 AH.

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi, quoting al-Waqidi, gives a summary of these.

61. The footnote of the Arabic printed text reminds us that the statement comes in the context of the conflict between 'Ali and Mu'awiya over succession to the Caliphate.
In Rabī' al-Awwal (or Rabī' al-akhir) of that year, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Uqāsha b. Mihšan with a force of 40 men to Ghawr Marzūq. They fled from him and he encamped at their wells. He sent some men in pursuit of them and took 200 of their camels which he led into Medina.

Also that year was the dispatch of Abū Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ to Dhu al-Qiṣṣa, also with 40 men. He made for them on foot, reaching them in the morning while it was still dark. They fled from him into the mountain heights. He captured one of their men and brought him to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

And there was his dispatch of Muhammad b. Maslama with a force of 10 men. The enemy hid from them until night; all the companions of Muḥammad b. Maslama were killed and he escaped, wounded.

That year too there was the mission of Zayd b. Ḥarátha to al-Jumādā al-Uwāli, to Banū Tha'labā with a company of 15 men. The bedouin fled from him; he captured 20 of their camels, then returned, having been absent for 4 nights.

Zayd b. Ḥarátha also left in Jumādā al-Uwāli that year for al-Ṭis. He (al-Waqidi) also said, "That year the property that had been with Abī al-Likhs b. al-Ramid was taken; he sought refuge with Zaynah, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and she took him in."

Ibn Ishaq related this man’s story, about when the camels that were with him were taken, his companions were killed and he fled from them and went to Medina. His wife, Zaynah, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), had emigrated after Badr. When he arrived in Medina, he sought refuge with her, and she took him in following the al-ṣubh prayer. The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave him over to her custody and told his men to return the camels taken from him. They did return to him everything taken from him, so that he lost nothing. When he returned with his property to Mecca and gave over to those he owed what was due them from their deposits, he accepted Islam. He then left Mecca and returned to Medina. The Messenger of God (SAAS) returned his wife to him by the first marriage, not by remarriage or contract, as was related heretofore. The period between his accepting Islam and her having emigrated was six years; it is also said to have been two years.

We have explained that there is no discrepancy between the two accounts, and that his acceptance of Islam came two years after the time when believing women were prohibited to unbelievers. His acceptance of Islam came in 8 AH, in the year of the conquest (of Mecca), not as is told above in the account of al-Waqidi that it took place in 6 AH. But God knows best.

Al-Waqidi stated that in that year Dhiyya b. Khalīfa al-Kalbi came back from Caesar, who had awarded him money and robes of honour. When he was at al-Ḥusmā he was waylaid by some men of Judhām. They robbed him and left him with nothing. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sent out Zayd b. Ḥāritha, may God be pleased with him, against them.

Al-Waqidi stated, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfār related to me, from Yaʿqūb b. Ṭuba, who said, ʿAlt, may God be pleased with him, went forth with 100 men to a village of Bānū Asad b. Bakr. This was because the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had learned that a group of their men wanted to extend help to the Jews of Khaybar. He approached them at night, keeping hidden by day. He (ʿAlī) captured a scout of theirs who confirmed that he had been sent to Khaybar to suggest to them that they hand over to them their dates.”

Al-Waqidi, may God be pleased with him, said, “In Shaʿbān of 6 AH there was the expedition of ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAwf to Dūmat al-Jandal. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘If they obey, then marry the daughter of their king.’ They did accept Islam and ʿAbd al-Raḥmān married their king’s daughter, Tamāḏur, daughter of al-Isbaʿ al-Kalbiya; she was the mother of Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAwf.”

Al-Waqidi stated, “In Shawwāl of 6 AH the expedition of Kurz b. Jābir al-Fihri against the people of Uraynī took place; they had killed the herdsman of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and had stolen his cattle. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Kurz b. Jābir with 20 horsemen to muck them down and they retrieved them.”

According to texts given by al-Bukhārī and Muslim, quoting Saʿd b. Abū ʿUrūba, from Qatāda, from Anas b. Mālik, what happened was that a group from ʿUkl and Urayna (from ʿUkl or Urayna, according to one version) went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They told him, “Messenger of God, we’re really herdsmen, not farmers and we find Medina unhealthy.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered them to leave with a small herd, in the charge of a shepherd, and told them to live by drinking the milk and urine of the animals. They left and when in the vicinity of al-Ḥarra, they killed the herdsman of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), drove off the herd and denied Islam after having accepted it earlier. The Prophet (ṢAAS) sent men in pursuit of them and had their hands and feet cut off and their eyes gouged out; they were left there at al-Ḥarra in that state until they died.

Qatāda stated, “We have heard that thereafter, whenever the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made an address he would speak in favour of compassion and against exemplary punishment.”

This hadith is related by one group of scholars from Qatāda, while another group relates it from Anas b. Mālik.

In the account of Muslim, from Muʿāwiyah b. Qurra, from Anas, it is stated that a group of Uraynī went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and announced their acceptance of Islam and their allegiance. Then smallpox broke out in Medina, and they told him, “Since this smallpox has broken out, we’d like to go back to the camels.” He replied, “Yes; go and be with them.” They did then leave, but they killed the herdsman and left with the camels.

According to that account, he sent some 20 of the ānṣār in pursuit of them, along with an expert tracker. When they were found, their hands and feet were severed and their eyes were gouged out.

In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, on a line of transmission through Ayyūb, from Abū Qalāba, from Anas, who is quoted as saying, “A group from ‘Ukāl arrived and accepted Islam. They loathed Medina and went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him so. He then said to them, “Then go and join the camels; drink their milk and urine.” They then left and lived among them for a time; but eventually they killed the herdsman and stole the camels. News of this reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and before the sun next arose they had been brought to him. He had iron rods brought and these were heated and used to cauterize them. He then had their hands and feet cut off and they were dumped out in the heat, where they sought water. But they were given none until they died, without protection.

In an account from Anas, he is quoted as saying, “I saw one of them biting the ground in his thirst.”

Abū Qalāba stated, “That gang murdered, stole and apostatized after having declared their faith. They fought against God and His messenger (ṢAAS).”

Al-Bayhaqī related, through ‘Uthmān b. Abū Shayba, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Sulaymān, from Muhammad b. ‘Ubayd Allāh, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent men in pursuit of them, he said, “O God, make them lose their way and make it narrower than a camel’s ankle.” He went on, “They did lose their way and were captured and brought back. He had their hands and feet severed and their eyes gouged out.”

In the sahih collection of Muslim, it states, “The reason he had their eyes gouged was that they had done this to the herdsman.”

Section: Relating to happenings that year, 6 AH.

During that year the obligation of making the pilgrimage was revealed; al-Shāfi‘ī asserts that this came at al-Ḥudaybiyya in the words of the Almighty, “and complete the pilgrimage and the ‘umra for God” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.196).

This is why he (al-Shāfi‘ī) held the view that the pilgrimage could be deferred and need not be performed as an urgent matter, because the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did not himself make the pilgrimage until 10 AH.

His view is opposed by the other three authorities, Mālik, Abū Ḥanīfa and Ḥāmid (Ibn Ḥanbal). According to them, the pilgrimage is to be considered a matter of urgency for all who can make it. They deny that its muḥāb, “necessity” is deduced from the Almighty’s words, “and complete the pilgrimage and the ‘umra for God” but maintain that in this verse the requirement is only to finish it once it has been commenced. They prove this through various citations, to many of which we referred in our explanation of this verse in our Tafsir (Exegesis). And to God is due all praise and credit.

It was during this year that Muslim women were forbidden to polytheists. This was an exception to the general rule established by the truce agreed upon at al- Hudaybiyya that year, namely that members of Quraysh were to be returned to them even if wishing to accept Islam. And so the words of the Almighty were revealed, "O you who believe! If believing women should come to you as emigrants, then test them. God knows best about their faith. If you ascertain them to be believers, then do not return them to the unbelievers. These women are not permitted for marriage to those men, nor are those men permitted for marriage to those women" (sūrat al-Mumtahana; LX, v.10).

That year also there was the expedition to al-Muraysi, during which the gīṣat al-ifk, the calumnious report, arose which ultimately resulted in the Revelation telling of the innocence of the ʿumm al-muʾminin, the mother of the believers, ʿĀʾisha, as was related above.

The ʿumra to al- Hudaybiyya occurred that year too, along with the blockade made by the polytheists against the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Ultimately there resulted peace between them lasting ten years, during which time people lived in security with one another on the understanding that there should be neither fetters used nor swords drawn. Reference is made at length in the appropriate places heretofore; and to God belong all praise and credit. That year the polytheists had control of the pilgrimage.

Al-Waqqīḍī stated, "In Dhū al-Ḥijja of that year, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent forth six men in the company of Ḥāṭib b. Abū Balṭa to al-Muqawqis, the governor of Alexandria. He also dispatched Shujā b. Wahb b. Asad b. Judhayma, who was present at Badr, to al-Ḥārith b. Abū Shammar al-Ghassānī, the king of the Christian Arabs, that is. Also he sent Dihya b. Khalīfa al-Kalbī to Caesar, he being Heraclius, emperor of Rome. And he dispatched ʿAbd Allāh b. Hudhāfa al-Sahmi to Chosroes, king of the Persians. Also he sent Sallī b. ʿAmr al-Āmīrī to Hawdha b. ʿĀlī al-Ḥanāfī, and ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍamrī to the Negus, king of the Christians of Abyssinia, his name being Asḥama b. al-Ḥurr."

THE YEAR 7 AH. THE EXPEDITION AGAINST KHAYBAR, EARLY THAT YEAR.

Shuʿba stated, from al-Ḥakim, who quoted ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā as having said that the words, "and He rewarded them with a near victory" (sūrat al-Fath; XLVIII, v.18), referred to Khaybar.

Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned (to Medina) from al- Hudaybiyya, he remained for some 20 days and then went forth to Khaybar; this was what God had promised to him."

Mūsā narrated, from al-Zuhri, that the conquest of Khaybar was in 6 AH; what is correct is that this occurred early in 7 AH, as stated above.
Ibn Isḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then remained in Medina after his return from al-Hudaybiyya for Dhū al-Hijja and for part of al-Muḥarram. He then went to Khaybar for the remainder of al-Muḥarram.”

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, quoting Muhammad b. Iṣḥāq, from al-Zuhri, from ‘Urwa, that Marwān and al-Miswar stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth in the year of al-Ḥudaybiyya and surat al-Fātih (XLVIII) was revealed to him, while he was between Mecca and Medina. In Dhū al-Ḥijja, he came back and stayed until he went forth to Khaybar, making camp at al-Rajīṭ. That is a valley between Khaybar and Ghaṭafān. He was concerned that Ghaṭafān might give them assistance. Next morning he attacked them.”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Al-‘Uqīdī related similarly on the authority of his sheikhs that he went forth (to Khaybar) early in 7 AH.”

‘Abd Allāh b. Idrīs stated that Iṣḥāq said to him, “‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me as follows, ‘Since the conquest of Khaybar took place following al-Muḥarram, the Prophet (SAAS) arrived (back) at the end of Ṣafar.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He appointed Numayla b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Laythī in command of Medina.”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Affw related to us, quoting Wahib, quoting Khuthaym – Ibn ‘Arak, that is – who quoted his father (as saying) that Abū Hurayra arrived in Medina with a group of his people while the Prophet (SAAS) was at Khaybar, having left Sibā‘ b. ‘Urfitā – of Banū Ghaṭafān, that is – in command of Medina. He, Abū Hurayra stated, ‘When I went to him he was saying the al-subh prayer, at the first rak‘a reciting “kāf hā yā ‘ayn sād” (surat Maryam; XIX), and at the second, the verse, “Woe to those who default” (surat Mūtafijīna (or al-Tātīf); LXXXIII, v.1). I told myself, “Woe to so-and-so who receives full measure but gives short change!”’”

He went on, “When he had prayed, we went back some distance, as far as Khaybar; the Prophet (SAAS) had by then conquered Khaybar. He addressed the Muslims and gave us shares of the booty along with them.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this from a hadith of Sulaymān b. Ḥarb, from Wahib, from Khuthaym b. ‘Arak, from his father, from men of Banū Ghifār, who said, “Abū Hurayra arrived in Medina and related this.”

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) left Medina for Khaybar, he went by way of Mt. Ḥṣr, where a mosque was built for him. He then passed by al-Saḥba‘, advancing with his army and eventually making camp at a wādi by the name of al-Rajīṭ. He made his camp between Khaybar and Ghaṭafān to prevent the latter from giving assistance to the people of Khaybar. They, Ghaṭafān, had declared their support for the Messenger of God (SAAS). I have heard that when Ghaṭafān heard about all this, they met together then went forth to give aid to the Jews against the Messenger of God (SAAS). When they had travelled for a day, however, they heard from home a rumour regarding their property and families. They thought that their enemy had surprised them and so they retraced their steps and stayed with their property and families, leaving the way clear between the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Khaybar."

Al-Bukhari stated that it was related to him by 'Abd Allāh b. Maslama, from Mālik, from Yahyā b. Sa‘īd, from Bashīr, that Suwayd b. al-Nu‘mān related to him that he went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the year of the attack on Khaybar, eventually reaching al-Šahbā', a place below Khaybar. There the Messenger of God (SAAS) led the al-‘asr prayer, then called for provisions to be brought. All that was produced was al-sawīq, barley gruel. He ordered it to be diluted and he ate, as did we. He then arose to perform the al-maghrib prayer, rinsed out his mouth and prayed, without performing the ablutions.

Al-Bukhari stated that 'Abd Allāh b. Maslama related to him, quoting Ḥātim b. Ismā’īl, from Yazid b. Abū Ubayd, from Salama b. al-Akwa', who said, "We went forth for Khaybar with the Messenger of God (SAAS). We travelled by night, and one of our men said to Āmir, 'Āmir, would you recite us a little something you have composed?' Āmir was a poet. So he dismounted to recite for our men, saying, ‘Allāhumma! O God! Without You we would not have been rightly guided,

Nor would we have given alms nor prayed.
We beseech You to forgive what we have done (wrong) – may we be sacrificed for You!
We beseech you to send down Your serenity upon us To make our feet secure when we meet our enemies.
And if they cry out trying to subvert us, we will refuse.
Already have they loudly sought others' help against us.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Who is this camel driver?' 'That's Āmir b. al-Akwa', they replied. 'Yarhamuḥu Allāh! God have mercy on him!' he exclaimed. One of the men then commented, 'Have you then made his martyrdom inevitable, Prophet of God? I wish you had let us enjoy his (company) longer!'

"When we reached Khaybar, we besieged them and were afflicted by great hunger. God then helped us conquer them and that evening – the evening of the conquest – the men lit many fires. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Why all these fires? What do you plan to cook?' 'Meat,' they replied. 'What kind of meat?' he asked. 'The meat of domestic donkeys.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Cast away the meat and break the pots!' One man asked, 'Should we not throw away the meat but wash the pots?' 'Either way,' he replied.

"When the opposing forces were lined up for battle, Āmir's sword was short, and when he aimed it at a Jew's leg, the sharp blade swung back and injured his own knee, causing his death.'"
Salama went on, “When they returned from battle, the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw me (looking sad) and took me by the hand, asking, ‘What is wrong?’ I replied, ‘May my father and my mother be your ransom, they say that ‘Amir failed.’” The Prophet (SAAS) replied, ‘Whoever said that lied; he will receive a double reward.’ He raised two fingers, adding, ‘He was a warrior whose valour few Arabs have ever matched.’”

Muslim related this similarly from a hadith of Ḥātim b. Isma’īl and others, from Yazīd b. Abū Ubayd.

Ibn Ishaq related the story of ‘Amir b. al-Akwa’ from a different chain of authorities. He stated, “Muḥammad b. Ibrāhim b. al-Ḥārith al-Taymī related to me, from Abū al-Haytham b. Naṣr b. Dahr al-Aslami, that his father related to him that he heard the Messenger of God (SAAS), while on his way to Khaybar, say to ‘Amir b. al-Akwa’, he being the uncle of Salama b. ‘Amr b. al-Akwa’, ‘Dismount, Ibn al-Akwa’, and let’s hear one of your compositions.’ So he did and recited the following, ‘Wallāh! By God! Without God we would not have been rightly guided, nor given alms, nor prayed.

We are a people who, if badly treated or subverted, resist strongly.
So send down serenity upon us and steady our feet when we clash with the enemy.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘May your Lord have mercy on you!’ Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb then said, ‘You’ve made it (his martyrdom) inevitable, Messenger of God! I wish you had let us enjoy him longer!’ And he was martyred at Khaybar.”

He went on to related the manner of his death much as al-Bukhārī had done.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “A source I do not doubt related to me, from ‘Aṭā’ b. Abū Marwān al-Aslami, from his father, from Abū Muṭṭib b. ‘Amr, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached a point overlooking Khaybar, he said, ‘Stop!’ Then he spoke as follows before his Companions, of whom I was one, ‘O God, Lord of the heavens and all they shade, Lord of the earths and what they produce, Lord of the devils and their deceptions, Lord of the winds and what they winnow, we implore of You the good of this village and the good of its people and the good of what it contains. And we seek refuge in You from its evil, from the evil of its people, and the evil of what it contains! Go forward, in God’s name!’”

This is a very anomalous hadith indeed, from this line of transmission.

62. Since he had accidentally caused his own death rather than earned martyrdom at the hand of the enemy.
63. Ibn Kathir here comments on a grammatical point relating to the Arabic text; his explanation has been judged of too little interest for inclusion here.
The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi related it from al-Ḥākim, from al-ʿAṣamm, from al-Uṯārīdī, from Yūnūs b. Bukayr, from Ibrahīm b. Ismāʿīl b. Mūṣīm, from Šālīḥ b. Kaysān, from Abū Marwān al-ʿAslāmi, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, “We went forth with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Khaybar. When we were near it and overlooking it, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told the men to stop and when they had done so, he said, ‘O God, Lord of the seven heavens and what they shade, Lord of the seven earths and what they produce, Lord of the devils and their deception, we implore of You the good of this village and the good of its people and the good of what it contains. And we seek refuge in You from the evil of this village, from the evil of its people, and the evil of what it contains! Go forward, in the name of God the most-Merciful and Compassionate!’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “A source I do not doubt related to me, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was about to attack an enemy, he refrained from doing so until it was morning. If then he heard a call to prayer, he would stop. If he did not, he would attack. We made camp at Khaybar overnight and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) rested until morning came, at which time he did not hear a call to prayer. And so he mounted up and we all did so along with him. I rode behind Abū Talḥa, with my foot touching that of God (ṢA). On the way, we met the Khaybar labourers leaving the village with their hoes and baskets. When they saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) they exclaimed, “It’s Muḥammad and his army!” They then turned away in flight. At that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great! Khaybar is ruined! It’s a bad day for an enemy we have warned when we can dismount in their open square!”’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Hārūn related this to us similarly from Ḥumayd, from Anas.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf related to him, quoting Malik, from Ḥamīd al-Ṭawīl, from Anas b. Mālik, (who said), “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived at Khaybar at night. Whenever he reached an enemy at night, he would not attack them until morning. When it was morning, the Jews came out bearing their hoes and baskets and, seeing what they did, they exclaimed, ‘It’s Muḥammad, by God! Muḥammad and his army!’ At this the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘Khaybar is ruined! It’s a bad day for an enemy we have warned when we can dismount in their open square!’”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this account; Muslim did not.

Al-Bukhārī went on to state that Ṣaddāqa b. al-Faḍl related to him, quoting Abū ʿUyyāna, quoting Ayyūb, from Muḥammad b. Sīrīn, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, “We arrived at Khaybar early in the morning as its people were coming out bearing their hoes. When they saw the Prophet (ṢAAS) they called out, ‘By God, it’s Muḥammad and his army!’ At that the Messenger of God, God’s peace and blessings be upon him, commented, ‘Khaybar is ruined!!
It’s a bad day for an enemy we have warned when we can dismount in their square!”

(Anas went on) “We captured some donkey meat. Then the crier of the Prophet (SAAS) called out, ‘God and His prophet forbid you to eat the meat of donkeys; it is unclean!’”

Al-Bukhārī is unique in giving this; Muslim did not.

Imām Ahmad stated that ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to him, quoting Maʿmar, from Qatāda, from Anas, who said, “When the Prophet (SAAS) came to Khaybar, he found them carrying their hoes as they went out to their fields. When they saw him and the army with him, they fled back into their forts. The Prophet (SAAS) then said, ‘Allāhu Akbar! Khaybar is ruined! It’s a bad day for those already warned if we can dismount in their open square!’”

Ahmad is alone in giving this hadith; it conforms to the criteria for both sahih collections.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Sulaymān b. Ḥarb related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Thābit, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, “At Khaybar, the Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the pre-dawn prayer close to Khaybar and then he said, ‘Allāhu Akbar! Khaybar is ruined! It’s a bad day for those already warned if we can dismount in their open square!’

“They (the people of Khaybar) took various paths in flight. And the Prophet (SAAS) killed their warriors and took their families prisoner. Among the prisoners was Safiyya. She went to the lot of Dihya al-Kalbī, and then to the Prophet (SAAS), who set her free as her dowry.

“ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Ṣuhayb said to Thābit, ‘Abī Muḥammad, was it you who asked Anas, “What was it he gave as her dowry?”’ Thābit nodded in affirmation to him.”

He was alone in relating this hadith; Muslim did not. Both al-Bukhārī and Muslim reported the prohibition of eating the meat of domestic donkeys through various chains of transmission in the work Kutāb al-Aḥkām.

The hāfiẓ al-Bayḥaqī stated, “Abū Ṭahir, the jurist informed us, quoting Ḥaṭṭāb b. Aḥmad al-Tūsī; Muḥammad b. Ḥanīd al-Abyūrīdī related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. al-Faḍl, from Muḥammad al-ʿAwar al-Malāʾī, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to visit the sick, follow behind funeral processions and respond to the pleas from slaves, and rode on donkeys. At the expeditions to Banū Qurayṣa and to al-Nādīr, he rode a donkey. At the battle of Khaybar he rode a donkey with a halter made of palm fibre, and his saddle was also made of palm fibre.’”

Al-Tirmidhī related this hadith in its entirety from ʿAlī b. Ḥajr, from ʿAlī b. Mushir, and Ibn Māja, from Muḥammad b. al-Sabāḥ, from Suṭyān, and from ʿUmar b. Rāfīʾ from Jarīr, all of them quoting Muḥammad b. al-Mulḥān al-ʿAwar al-Kūfī, from Anas. Al-Tirmidhī stated, “We know of this only from his hadith; and he is a somewhat weak source.”
I comment that what is well established, in the sahih collection of al-Bukhari from Anas, is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) rode along with a Companion at Khaybar and that in consequence his pants became pulled up to his thigh. It is obvious that he was riding a horse that day, not a donkey.

It may be that this hadith, if true, makes it likely that he did ride donkeys on some days, while he was besieging the enemy. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhari stated that Muhammad b. Sa'īd al-Khuzā‘ī related to him, quoting Ziyād b. al-Rabī‘, from Abū ʿImrān al-Jawnti, who said, “Anas looked out at the people on Friday and saw some *taylasam*64, some shawls. He commented, ‘They look like the Jews of Khaybar!’”

Al-Bukhari stated that ʿAbd Allah b. Maslama related to him, quoting ʿHaṭim, from Yazīd b. Abū ʿUbayd; from Salama b. al-Akwa’, who said, “ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib was lagging behind the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Khaybar, suffering from sore eyes. ʿAlī commented, ‘How should I lag behind the Prophet (SAAS)?’ And he joined him.

“And on the night (before) when Khaybar was conquered, he said, ‘I will certainly give the banner tomorrow to someone (or the words were: ‘may someone tomorrow take the banner’) whom God and His messenger love, and it will be conquered by him.’ We had hoped for that, but it was said that this referred to ʿAlī. So it was given to him, and Khaybar was conquered.”

Al-Bukhari related (this) also, as did Muslim, from Qutayba, from ʿHaṭim.

Al-Bukhari then stated that Qutayba related to him, quoting Yaʿqūb b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, from Abū Ḥazīm, who said, “Sahl b. Saʿd narrated to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said at Khaybar, ‘I will certainly give this banner tomorrow to a man at whose hand God will grant victory, someone who loves God and His messenger and whom God and His messenger love.’”

The account continued, “The men spent that night wondering to which of them it would be given. When morning came, they all went to the Prophet (SAAS), each hoping that it would be given to him. He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) then asked, ‘Where is ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib?’ ‘Messenger of God,’ they told him, ‘his eyes are bothering him.’ ‘Send for him,’ he said. They sent to fetch him and he came. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spat in his eyes and said a prayer for him. And he was cured, there being pain no longer. He then gave him the banner. ʿAlī asked, ‘Messenger of God, shall I battle them until they become as we are?’ He replied, ‘Continue riding until you reach their main square and dismount there. Then invite them to Islam and inform them of their duties to the Almighty therein. And by God, if God gives guidance through you to just one man among them, that will be better for you than for you to have the humr al-na‘īm, the choice part of the herd!’”

Muslim and al-Nasa’ī both related this from Qutayba.

In the sahih collection of Muslim, and in al-Bayhaqī, there is given a hadith of Suḥayl b. Abū Ṣalih, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Tomorrow I shall give the banner to a man who loves God and His messenger and whom God and His messenger love. God will grant victory at his hands.’

“Umar commented, ‘It was only that day that I loved leadership!’”

“He called for ‘Ali and gave him his mission. He then said, ‘Go and fight on till God gives you victory; do not turn aside.’ ‘Ali asked, ‘How long should I battle the enemy?’ He replied, ‘Fight them until they bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muhammad is His servant and His messenger. If they do that they will have saved their blood from us, along with their possessions, except for what is otherwise justified, their accounting being with God.’”

This is the phraseology given by al-Bukhari.

Imām Ahmad stated that Muṣṭāfā b. al-Miqdām and Jaḥsh b. al-Muthannā said that Ḫīrāt related to them, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḫisam al-Qāṭī, (who said), “I heard Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudari, may God be pleased with him, say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took the banner and waved it. Then he asked, “Who will take it properly?” Someone came and said, “I will.” He (the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)), told him to leave. He did so, and another man came up. He told him too to leave. The Prophet (ṢAAS) then said, “By Him who honoured the face of Muhammad, I shall certainly give it to a man who will not retreat.” He then said, “Come here, ‘Ali.”

Ahmad is alone in giving this; its line of transmission is fair, though somewhat strange.

This man ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḫisam is also known as “Ibn Aṣam” and similarly by the honorific Abū ‘Alwān al-Qāṭī. Originally from al-Yamāma, he lived in Kufa. Ibn Mu‘īn classified him as a reliable source. Abū Zur‘a said, “He’s a fairly good source.” Abū Ḥātim said, “A sheikh”. Ibn Hibbān included him among reliable sources, saying, “He makes many errors.” He also included him among weak sources. He commented, “He relates about well-established matters in ways dissimilar to those of the fully reliable authorities, so that one suspects that his reports may be imaginary or invented.”

Yūnūs b. Bukayar quoted Muhammad b. Ishāq as saying, “Burayda b. Sufyān b. Farwa al-Aslāmī related to me, from his father, from Salama b. ‘Amr b. al-Akwa’, may God be pleased with him, who said, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) sent Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him, to several of the forts at Khaybar. He engaged in battle, but then returned, there having been no conquest despite his efforts.

“He then sent Umar, may God be pleased with him, and he battled and returned without conquest. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “Tomorrow I shall certainly give the banner to a man whom God and His messenger love and who loves God and His messenger. God will grant victory at his hands; and he is not someone who retreats.”’” Salama stated, "And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib, may God be pleased with him, whose eyes were bothering him that day. The Messenger of God (SAAS) spat in his eyes, then said, ‘Take the banner and carry on with it until God grants you victory.’

“He went forth with it, travelling fast and with confidence, and we followed directly after him. Eventually he planted the banner in a pile of rocks beneath a fort. A Jew looked down from the fort and asked, ‘And who are you?’ He replied, ‘I am ‘Ali, son of Abū Ṭalib!’ The Jew then said, ‘I swear by what was revealed to Moses, you are victorious!’ And he did not return until God granted victory at his hands!’

Al-Bayhaqi stated that al-Ḥākim informed him, quoting al-Asāmm, quoting al-Ūṣārī, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from al-Ḥusayn b. Wāqid, who quoted ‘Abd Allāh b. Burayda, as having said, “My father narrated to me as follows, ‘At the battle of Khaybar, Abū Bakr took the banner but returned without having been given victory. Maḥmūd b. Maslama was killed, and the army came back.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘Tomorrow I will certainly award my banner to a man who loves God and His messenger and whom God and His messenger love. He will not return until God grants him victory.” We slept well that night, confident that the next day there would be victory. The Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the morning prayer and led for the banner. He arose and then not one among us with good standing with the Messenger of God (SAAS) did not hope that he would be that man. I myself was presumptuous enough to hold my own head high in expectation, because of my standing with him. He called for ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib, whose eyes were bothering him. He (the Messenger of God (SAAS) wiped them and then gave him the banner. And victory was granted him.”

(The narrator went on) “I heard ‘Abd Allāh b. Burayda say, ‘My father related to me that he was a friend of Marḥab.’”

Yūnus stated that Ibn Ishaq said, “The first of the forts at Khaybar to be defeated was that of Nāṣīm. There Maḥmūd b. Maslama was killed; a millstone was dropped from it upon him and it killed him.”

Al-Bayhaqi narrated, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from al-Musayyab b. Maslama al-Azdi, (who said) that ‘Abd Allāh b. Burayda related to him, from his father who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) might well be affected by a bad headache and spend a day or two without going outside to the people. When he made camp at Khaybar he suffered a severe headache and did not come out to the men. Abū Bakr took up the banner of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and then set out to battle where he fought fiercely. He then returned. ‘Umar next took it, fought a battle even more fierce than the first and then he returned. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was informed of this and he said, ‘Tomorrow I shall certainly give it to a man who loves God and His messenger and whom God and His messenger love. He will take it (Khaybar) by force.

"Ali was not present. The men of Quraysh there had aspirations for it, each one hoping to receive it. Next morning 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib came riding a camel of his. He made it kneel nearby. He was suffering from an eye ailment and had bound his eye with a piece of striped cloth. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked him, 'What's wrong?' He replied, 'My eyes became sore after you left.' He told him, 'Come close to me.' He then spat in 'Ali's eye and he suffered no pain from it till he left.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then gave him the banner and he took it and left. He was wearing a purple and red outer garment, the nap of which had worn off. When he reached Khaybar, Marḥab, the commander of the fort, came out, wearing on his head a Yemeni helmet with a stone with a hole in it the size of an egg. He was reciting the following,

'Khaybar knows that I am Marḥab, fully armed, a hero, well tested.
When lions advance and rage, their prey retreats from the victors' attack.'

"Ali, may God be pleased with him, responded with the verse,

'I am he whom my mother named "Ḥaydar", "lion", like those of the forests, extremely fierce I'll give you full measure for measure.'"

He went on, "They exchanged two blows and 'Ali then surprised him with a blow that split the stone, and his helmet and his head, right down to the molars. He then conquered the city."

The ḥāfiz al-Bazzār related from ʿAbbād b. Yaʿqūb, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Bakr, from Hakim b. Jubayr, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, the story of the dispatch first of Abū Bakr, then of ʿUmar at Khaybar, and then the mission of 'Ali at whose hands victory came. In his text there are unsatisfactory and strange elements. His chain of transmission includes persons accused of Shiʿi sympathies. But God knows best.

Muslim and al-Bayhaqi, the following being the wording of the latter, related through ʿIkrīma b. ʿAmmār, from Iyās b. Salama b. al-Akwa', from his father who narrated a long account in which he told of their return from the expedition against Banū Fazāra. He said, "We remained there only three days before going forth to Khaybar. ʿAmir went out and began to recite,

'By God, had it not been for you, we would not have been rightly guided, nor given alms nor prayed.
By your grace, we have not failed; so send down Your serenity upon us
And make our feet firm when we meet the enemy.'
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked who it was speaking. ‘That is ‘Āmir,’ they said. ‘May your Lord forgive you!’ he then said. And the Messenger of God (SAAS) never made such special mention of any person without him being martyred. ‘Umar, mounted on a camel, commented, ‘I wish you had let us go on enjoying ‘Āmir!’

“When we approached Khaybar, Marḥab came out, brandishing his sword and reciting, ‘Khaybar knows that I am Marḥab, fully armed, a hero,

well-tested,
Like lions charging in fury.’

‘Āmir, may God be pleased with him, went out to challenge him, reciting, ‘Khaybar knows that I am ‘Āmir, fully armed, a hero brave.’

“They exchanged two blows, then Marḥab’s sword struck into ‘Āmir’s shield. He charged vigorously at him, and he, ‘Āmir, retreated and struck his own ankle, causing a fatal wound.”

Salama stated, “I then left and came across a group of the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), saying, ‘‘Āmir’s work was all in vain; he killed himself!’

“When I approached the Messenger of God (SAAS) I was weeping and he asked, ‘What’s wrong with you?’ I replied, ‘They say that ‘Āmir’s work was in vain.’ ‘And who said that?’ he asked. ‘Some of your Companions,’ I replied. ‘They lied,’ he said, ‘he shall have a double reward.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked that ‘Ali, who was suffering from sore eyes, be sent for and said, ‘I shall certainly give the banner today to a man who loves God and His messenger.’ I returned with ‘Ali, leading him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spat into his eye and he was cured. He gave him the banner. Marḥab came forth, reciting,

‘Khaybar knows that I am Marḥab, fully armed, a hero,
well-tested,
Like lions charging in fury.’

“‘Ali went out to challenge him, saying,

‘I am he whom my mother named “Haydar”, “lion”; like those of the forests, fearsome in aspect.
I’ll give you full measure for measure.’

“He then struck Marḥab and split open his head, killing him. Then the conquest came.”

Thus according to this text it was ‘Ali who killed Marḥab, the Jew, God damn him!

Abād stated that Ḥusayn b. Ḥasan al-Ashqar related to him that Qābūs b. Abū Zubyān related to him, from his father, from his grandfather, from ‘Ali, who said, “When I had killed Marḥab, I brought his head to the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ).”

Muṣā b. ʿUqba narrated from al-Zuhri that the man who killed Marḥab was Muḥammad b. Maslama. Muḥammad b. Isḥāq stated the same, as follows, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Sahl, of Banū Ḥarīthah, quoted from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh as having said, ‘Marḥab the Jew came forth from the fortress at Khaybar reciting the following,

“Khaybar knows that I am Marḥab, fully armed, a hero, well tested,
Sometimes I thrust and at others I strike, like lions charging in fury.
Those I defend are indeed under protection and shall not be approached.”

“ʿKaʾb b. Mālik responded to him as follows, “Khaybar knows that I am ʿKaʾb, the problem-solver, brave and determined.

When warfare arises and the battle rages, I wield a sharp sword that pierces like lightning.
He will tread you underfoot until the brave are humbled, by the hand of a faultless warrior.”’

“As Marḥab recited (other) verses, he asked, ‘Will anyone engage me in combat?’ The Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) asked, ‘Who will do this?’ Muḥammad b. Maslama responded, ‘I will, Messenger of God! It is up to me to seek revenge, for they killed my brother yesterday.’ He told him, ‘Go at him! O God, give him aid against him!’

“When they drew near one another a brittle old tree was there between them and each of them began using it to avoid his adversary. Whenever one of them took refuge behind it, the other would cut the wood with his sword to get at the other. Eventually the tree stood branchless, like a man. Marḥab then attacked Muḥammad b. Maslama and struck him. He met the blow with his shield and Marḥab’s sword cut into it and remained wedged there. He then withdrew it, and Muḥammad struck at him until he had killed him.”

Imām Ahmad related this from Yaʿqūb b. ʿIbrāhīm, from his father, from Ibn Isḥaq, in similar terms. Ibn Isḥāq went on to state, “Some people say that Muḥammad b. Maslama recited the following verses as he struck him, ‘Khaybar knows that I am a warrior; sweet if I wish, or a deadly poison!’”

Al-Wāqīdī related it thus from Jābir and other early authorities, to the effect that it was Muḥammad b. Maslama who killed Marḥab.

Al-Wāqīdī went on to recount that Muḥammad b. Maslama cut off both of Marḥab’s legs and that Marḥab asked him, “Finish me off!” He replied, “Taste death as did Maḥmūd b. Maslama!” Then ʿAlī passed by and cut off his head.
The two men later disputed over his possessions before the Messenger of God (SAAS), who gave to Muhammad b. Maslama his sword, his spear and his helmet along with its inner lining. Inscribed on his sword were the words, “This is the sword of Marḥab; he who tastes it dies.”

Ibn Ishaq then recounted that Marḥab’s brother Yāsir next came out, asking, “Who will do combat with me?”

Hishām b. Urwa claimed that al-Zubayr went out to fight him and Umm Ṣafīyya, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muttalib, asked, “Messenger of God, will he kill my son?” He replied, “On the contrary, your son will kill him, if God so wills it.” The two men then fought and al-Zubayr killed him.

If anyone thereafter commented to al-Zubayr, “By God, your sword was really sharp that day!” he would reply, “I swear by God, it wasn’t sharp. I just hit him really hard.”

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Ishaq, from one of his people, from Abū Ralī, the freed-man of the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said, “We went forth with ‘Āli to Khaybar; the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent him out with his banner. As he approached the fort, its people came out to him and he battled them. One of them, a Jew, struck him and knocked his shield from his hand. ‘Āli picked up the gate of the fort and used it to defend himself. It stayed in his hand as he fought, until God (SAAS) granted him victory. He then threw it aside. And I, with seven others, myself being the eighth, tried hard to turn that door over, but we could not do it!”

There seems some vagueness about this report, as well as an obvious gap in its chain of transmission.

However, the hāfīz al-Bayhaqi and al-Hakim gave an account through Muṭṭalib b. Ziyād, from Layth b. Abū Salīm, from Abū Jaʿfar al-Baqir, from Jābir, that ‘Āli carried the gate at Khaybar so that the Muslims could climb over it and conquer the town. The account states that afterwards 40 men tried but could not carry it!

There is weakness in this hadith. There is a further weak account, from Jābir, that states, “Then 70 men joined together and it was all they could do to replace the gate.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Makki b. Ibrāhim related to him, quoting Yazid b. Abū Ubayy, who said, “I saw a scar from a blow on Salama’s leg. I asked him, ‘Abū Muslim, what blow caused this?’ ‘This is a wound I got at Khaybar. People told one another, “Salama was wounded!” Then I went to the Prophet (SAAS), and he blew on it three times. And I’ve never suffered from it right up till now.’”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Maslama related to him, quoting Ibn Abū Ḥazīm, from his father, from Sahl, who said, “On one of his expeditions, the Prophet (SAAS) met and battled the polytheists. Then each side returned to their camp. Among the Muslims there was one man who tirelessly chased after all and sundry of the polytheists, striking at them with his sword. Someone said to him, ‘None of us has accomplished so much as so-and-so has.’ He replied, ‘He will go to hell.’ They asked him, ‘Well, if he’s going to hell, which of us will go to heaven?’ One of the men said, ‘I’m going to follow him. Whether he hurries or slows down, I’ll be with him.’ Eventually the man was wounded and wanted to die. So he placed the hilt of his sword in the ground and its tip between his nipples and bore down on it, thus killing himself.

“So the men (who had followed him) came to the Prophet (SAAS) and exclaimed, ‘I do bear witness that you are the Messenger of God!’ ‘What’s up with you?’ he asked him and the man told him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘A man may perform actions like those who belong in paradise and seem to people to belong in paradise, yet be headed for hell, or he may perform actions such as those of the inhabitants of hell and be headed for paradise.’”

He related this also from Qutayba, from Ya’qūb, from Abū Ḥāzim, from Sahl. That account is the same, or almost so.

Then al-Bukhārī stated that Abū al-Yamān related to him, quoting Shu'ayb, from al-Zuhri (who said), “Sa’d b. al-Musayyab informed me that Abū Hurayra said, ‘We took part at Khaybar, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, referring to a man among his force who was pretending allegiance to Islam, “This man belongs in hell.” When the fighting commenced, that man fought very fiercely and received many wounds, so that some people began to have their doubts. The man suffered much pain from his wounds and put his hand into his quiver, took out an arrow and cut his throat with it. Some of the Muslims hurried off and said, “Messenger of God, God has fulfilled what you said! So-and-so has committed suicide!” He then said, “Get up, so-and-so and so-and-so and announce, ‘No one but a believer will enter paradise; and God aids the faith even through an evil man!’”’

Mūsā b. Uqba narrated from al-Zuhri the story of the black slave upon whom God bestowed faith and martyrdom within the same hour. Ibn Lahi’a narrated it similarly from Abū al-Aswad, and from Urwa. Both stated, “There was a black Abyssinian slave who lived in Khaybar who cared for a herd belonging to his master. When he saw that the people of Khaybar were taking up their weapons, he asked them, ‘What are you going to do?’ ‘We are going to do battle with that man who claims to be a prophet.’

“This reference to a prophet had an impact upon him and he took his herd and approached the Messenger of God (SAAS), asking him, ‘To what do you invite?’ He replied, ‘I invite you to Islam, to bear witness that there is no god but God, that I am the Messenger of God, and that you will not worship any other than God.’ The slave then asked, ‘What will I get if I bear witness to that and believe in God?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘Paradise, if you die believing that.’

“The slave accepted Islam and said, ‘Prophet of God, this herd I have is my security.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Drive it out of our camp and throw stones at it. God will discharge your security from you Himself.’ He did so, and the herd returned to its Jewish master, who realized that his slave had accepted Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose and addressed his men.”

He went on to relate the hadith of him having given the banner to ‘Ali, the approach of the latter to the fort of the Jews, and his killing of Marḥab. (The account states) “Also killed (while) with ‘Ali was that black slave, who was borne by the Muslims to their camp and brought into the main tent. They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) looked inside the tent, then turned to his Companions and commented, ‘God has honoured this slave and led him to good. Islam was truly within his heart. At his head I saw two of the houris of paradise.’”

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqī narrated through Ibn Wahb, from Ḥaywa b. Shurayh, from Ibn al-Ḥadd, from Shurahbil b. Sa‘d, from Jabir b. ‘Abd Allah, who said, “We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the expedition to Khaybar. A raiding party went out and they captured a man who was shepherding a herd.”

He went on to relate roughly the same story of the black slave and said of him, “He died a martyr and had not made a single prayer prostration to God!”

Al-Bayhaqī then stated that Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Muḥammad al-Faqīh related to him, quoting Abū Bakr al-Qaṭṭān, quoting Abū al-Azhar, quoting Mūsā b. Ismā‘īl, quoting Ḥammād, quoting Thābit, from Anas, that a man came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, “Messenger of God, I’m a man who is black in colour, ugly of face and who owns nothing. If I fight those people until I’m killed, will I enter paradise?” “Yes,” he replied.

(Anas’s account continues that) “the man then went forth and battled until he was killed. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was brought to his body, he said, ‘God has made your face handsome, sweetened your smell and increased your wealth.’ Then he said, ‘I saw his two wives, houris, competing to take off his gown; they were entering the space between his skin and his gown.”’

Al-Bayhaqī then narrated through Ibn Jurayj as follows, “Ikrima b. Khālid informed me, from Ibn Abī ‘Amma, from Shaddād b. al-Ḥadd, that a bedouin came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), expressed his belief in him and followed him, saying, ‘I will go forth with you.’ The Prophet (SAAS) gave him into the charge of one of his Companions. At Khaybar the Messenger of God (SAAS) received booty and divided it up, including a portion for this man which he gave to the Companions of this man for he had been guarding their rear. When he came to them they gave it to him. He asked, ‘What is this?’ They replied, ‘The portion assigned to you by the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ He responded, ‘It was not for this that I followed you! I followed you so that I might be shot right here.’ And he pointed with an arrow at his throat. ‘So I would die and enter heaven!’ He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) then said, ‘If you keep trust with God, he will keep trust with you.’

“They then arose to battle the enemy. Later he was carried in to the Messenger of God (SAAS); he had been struck with an arrow where he had pointed! The Prophet (SAAS) then asked, ‘That is really him?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. He then said, ‘He kept trust with God, so God kept trust with him.’

“The Prophet (SAAS) then gave his own gown for him to be wrapped in, laid out his body in front and prayed over him. Part of his prayer that is known includes, ‘O God, this is your servant; he went forth in your cause and was killed a martyr. I bear witness for him’”

Al-Nasa'i related this from Suwayd b. Naṣr, from ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, from Ibn Jurayj, in similar words.

DIVISION.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then took possession of the properties one by one as he conquered one fort after the next. The first of their forts conquered was Nā'im. There Maḥmūd b. Maslama was killed; a millstone was tossed down on him and it killed him. The next fort was al-Qamūṣ, that of Banū Abū al-Ḥaqiq.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) acquired captives from them. These captives included Ṣafiyya, daughter of Ḥuyayy b. Akḥtab. She had been the wife of Kināna b. al-Rabi‘ b. Abū al-Ḥaqiq. Also captured were two of her female cousins. The Messenger of God (SAAS) chose Ṣafiyya for himself; Dihya b. Khalīfa had asked him for her; when the Messenger of God (SAAS) chose her for himself, he gave to Dihya her two cousins.

The captives taken at Khaybar were distributed among the Muslims. The men were eating the flesh of donkeys, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) issued a proclamation against their doing this.

Al-Bukhārī devoted his attention to this and reported the prohibition from excellent sources.

Its prohibition has been accepted by most scholars both early and later; all four of the “orthodox Imāms” prohibited its consumption.

However, some early authorities, including Ibn ‘Abbās, maintained that eating it was permissible. These scholars offered varying reasons for discounting the ahādīth that have come down prohibiting it. For example, it was suggested that the prohibition came because they were using the donkeys for transport. Another reason given was that the prohibition related to the fact that the donkeys were booty that had not yet been divided up into the (required) fifths. It is also suggested that it related to the donkeys eating excrement, dung that is.

The truth is that it was prohibited because of its nature. Authentic evidences relate that the crier of the Messenger of God (SAAS) called out, “God and His prophet prohibit your eating the meat of donkeys; it is unclean.”

Affirmation of this is to be found in the work Kitāb al-Ahkām.

when the Messenger of God (SAAS) prohibited people from consuming donkey meat, he also allowed them to eat horsemeat."

The provenance of this is secure in both sahih collections, from a hadith of Hammâd b. Zayd, from ʿAmr b. Dinâr, from Muḥammad b. ʿAlî, from Jâbir, may God be pleased with him. He said, "At Khaybar, the Messenger of God (SAAS) prohibited eating the meat of donkeys and gave permission for horses (to be eaten)."

This is the phraseology given by al-Bukhârî.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "ʿAbd Allah b. Abû Najîh related to us, from Makhûl, that the Prophet (SAAS) prohibited four things that day: intercourse with pregnant women, eating domestic donkeys, eating carnivorous animals, and selling the spoils of war before their (official) allotment."

This hadith is mursal, lacking proper transmission back to the Prophet (SAAS).

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Yazid b. Abû Ḥâbib related to me, from Abû Marzûq, Najîb's freed-man, from Ḥanash al-Ṣan'âni, who stated, ‘We were on an expedition with Ruwayfi’ b. Thâbit, the ansâri, to al-Maghrib, North Africa. One of the towns there, named Jirba, was conquered and a crier stood among us and announced, ‘I am telling you only what I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) tell us at Khaybar. He stood up among us and said, “It is not permissible for a man who believes in God and the last day to mingle his sperm with that of others” – referring to intercourse with pregnant captive women. “It is not permissible for a man who believes in God and the last day to have intercourse with a captive woman before determining that she is without child. It is not permissible for a man who believes in God and the last day to sell any spoils of war before its allotment. It is not permissible for a man who believes in God and the last day to ride any mount from the captured stock of the Muslims and then to return it when it is exhausted. Nor is it permissible for a man who believes in God and the last day to wear any clothing from the captured stock of the Muslims and then to return it when it is worn out.”’"

Abû Dâʿûd narrated this similarly through Muḥammad b. Ishaq. Al-Tirmidhî narrated it from Ḥâfîṣ b. ʿAmr al-Shaybâni, from Ibn Wahh, from Yahyâ b. Ayyûb, from Rabîʿa b. Salîm, from Bishr b. Ubayd Allâh, from Ruwayfi’ b. Thâbit in abbreviated form. He characterized the hadith as hasan, “good.”

In the sahih of al-Bukhârî, from Nâfî, from Ibn ʿUmar, it is stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Khaybar prohibited the meat of domestic donkeys, and also the eating of garlic.

Ibn Ḥazm narrated, from ʿAlî and Shurayk b. al-Ḥunbal, that they accepted the prohibition of onions and raw garlic. What al-Tirmidhî transmitted from them was that (use of them) constituted al-baraha, a practice considered repugnant. But God knows best.

66. That is, something for which there was disapproval but not prohibition.
People speak of the hadith given in both sahih collections through al-Zuhri, from ‘Abd Allâh and al-Hasan, sons of Mu̇ammad b. al-Hanafiyya, from their father, from his father ‘Ali b. Abû Ṭalib, may God be pleased with him, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) prohibited at Khaybar nikâh al-mut’â, “temporary marriage”, and (eating) the meat of domestic donkeys.

This wording in both sahih collections comes down through Mâlik and others, from al-Zuhri. This hadith requires that the prohibition of nikâh al-mut’â applied only to the battle at Khaybar. This is problematic, from two viewpoints. One is that at the battle of Khaybar there were no women to be so married, and their having captive women obviated temporary marriage.

The second problem is that it is established in the sahih of Muslim, related from al-Rabi’ b. Sabra, from Ma‘bad, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave permission to engage in al-mut’a at the time of the conquest (of Mecca), but then prohibited it before he had left Mecca, saying, “God has prohibited it until Judgement Day.”

According to this, then he would have prohibited it, then permitted it and then for it to have been again prohibited. This would have required there to have been abrogation twice. And that is unlikely.

Al-Shâfi‘i, moreover, stated that he knew of nothing that had ever been permitted then prohibited, then permitted and again prohibited, apart from nikâh al-mut’â. And the only reason he made the exception for this was because he was relying upon both these traditions referred to above.

Al-Suhayli and others quote scholars who claim that it was permitted three times and prohibited three times. Others state that this happened four times. This is most unlikely. But God knows best.

The authorities differ as to when was the first time it was prohibited. Some say at Khaybar, others at the ‘umrat al-qadî’, others in the year of the conquest (of Mecca); this latter seems the most likely. Others say it was first prohibited at Awtâs (a time close to that of the alternative preceding it); others say at Tabûk, others at the hijjat al-madâ‘, the “farewell pilgrimage”.

Abû Dâ‘ûd related this.

Some scholars refute the hadith related from ‘Ali, may God be pleased with him, by saying that it contains taqdim wa ta’khir, “an inaccurate sequencing of time”.

The best alternative seems to be what the Imam Ahmad related, as follows, “Sufyân related to us, from al-Zuhri, from al-Hasan and ‘Abd Allâh, the two sons of Mu̇ammad (b. al-Hanafiyya) from their father. Hasan was the more convinced of the two that ‘Ali had said to Ibn ‘Abbâs, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) prohibited nikâh al-mut’â and eating the meat of domestic donkeys at Khaybar.’”

They said, “The narrator believed that the mention of Khaybar was the time and place for the prohibition of both; that was not so, however, since it was one only for the prohibition of donkey meat. There is no time and place mentioned in fact for nikāh al-muṭʿa. He included this only because ‘Ali, may God be pleased with him, learned that Ibn ‘Abbās had permitted the nikāh al-muṭʿa and the meat of donkeys, as is well known. And the Commander of the Believers, (‘Ali) therefore told him, ‘You are misguided. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prohibited nikāh al-muṭʿa and the meat of domestic donkeys at Khaybar.’”

He joined both together in this prohibition for him so that he would retract what he had considered permissible.

Our teacher, the ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Hajjāj al-Mizzi, may God encompass him in his mercy, tended to accept this explanation.

Nevertheless, Ibn ‘Abbās did not retract the permission he had given regarding donkey meat and temporary marriage. He attributed the prohibition against eating donkeys to the fact that they were their baggage animals. As for temporary marriage, he only rendered this permissible in case of need while travelling. As for the prohibition, that referred to when the circumstances involved indulgence of wealth or lust. Various of his associates and followers have adopted his position. This was well known to be the view of the scholars of Hijāz up to the time of Ibn Jurayj and beyond.

There is an account relating that Imam Ahmad b. Ḥanbal took the same position as Ibn ‘Abbās; however, this account is weak.

Certain persons who adhere to the view of permissibility try to relate an account from the Imam (Ahmad) to the same effect. This also is inauthentic, but God knows best. The text relating to this is in the Kitaḥ al-Aḥkām. And help is sought through God.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then began advancing slowly upon their forts and properties. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that it was related to him by someone of Aslam that Bānū Sahm of Aslam came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Messenger of God, we have fought hard and yet we have nothing.’ They had not found the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) able to give them anything. He then said, ‘O God, You well know their state and that they have no strength and that I have nothing to give them. Open up before them the wealthiest of their fortresses and give them sufficiency mainly in fats and food.’ Next morning the fort of al-Saʿb b. Muʿādh was conquered for them. And no fort in Khaybar was wealthier or had richer food than it.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Various fortresses having been conquered and certain properties acquired, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived finally at their forts called al-Watīḥ and al-Sulālīm; those were the last of the Khaybar castles to be conquered. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) besieged the enemy there for some ten days.”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, “Their rallying cry at Khaybar was, Yā Manṣūr! Amit! Amit! ‘O Victor! Kill! Kill!’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Burdayda b. Sufyān al-Azdī al-Aslāmī related to me, from some men of Bānū Salama, from Abū al-Yusr Kaʿb b. ‘Amr, who said, ‘I was with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Khaybar one evening when a herd of sheep belonging to a Jew passed by, heading for their forts which we were besieging. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Which man will feed us from these sheep?’ I replied, ‘I will, Messenger of God!’ 'Then do so,' he told me.

“So I went out, racing as hard as I could, like an ostrich. When he saw me do this, and was about to head back, he exclaimed, ‘O God, let us enjoy him long!’ When I had reached the sheep, the first ones had already entered their fort. But I caught two ewes from their rear, tucked them under my arms and sped back, carrying them as if I bore nothing. I threw them down before the Messenger of God (SAAS), and they slaughtered and ate them both.”

Abū al-Yusr was one of the last of the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to die. He would weep when telling this hadith, and then say, “And they were given my whole life to enjoy; I was the last of them.”

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi stated in Dala‘īl (The Signs) as follows, “Abū Muḥammad ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf al-Īsbaḥānî informed us, quoting Abū Saʿīd b. al-ʿAṭrābī, quoting Saʿdān b. Naṣr, quoting Abū Muʿāwiyah, from ʿĀṣim al-ʿAlwāl, from Abū Uṯmān al-Nahdī (or from Abū Qalābā) who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) advanced on Khaybar, the fruit was unripe. But the men raced for it, became feverish and complained to him of this. He told them to cool water in pots and then to have this poured over them when dawn came and to repeat the name of God. They did this and it was as though they had been hobbled and then had their cords removed.’”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “We related this hadith from ʿAbd al-Rāhḥām b. ʿRāfī’ with an uninterrupted line of transmission. According to it the phrase ‘between the al-maghrib and the al-ʿāshā times for prayer’ was used.”

Imām ʿĀḥmad stated that Yahyā and Bahz both related to him as follows, “Sulaymān b. al-Mūghīrah related to us, quoting Ḥumayd b. Hīlāl, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Mūghaffāl, who said, ‘My share of the booty at Khaybar was a leather bag of lard. I gripped it tight and said, “I’ll not give any of this to any one!” Then I turned and saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) smiling.’”

ʿĀḥmad said, “ʿAffān related to us, quoting Shuʿba, from Ḥāmid b. Hīlāl, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Mūghaffāl, who said, ‘While we were besieging the fortress at Khaybar, someone threw down at us a leather bag containing lard. So I went and took it. Then I saw the Prophet (ṢAAS), and I felt ashamed.’”

Both compilers of the saḥīḥ collections gave it from a hadith of Shuʿba. Muslim also related it, from Shaybān b. Farūkh, from Uṯmān b. al-Mūghīrah.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “Someone whose word I do not doubt related to me from ʿAbd Allāh b. Mūghaffāl al-Mazānī as follows, ‘At Khaybar, I captured a leather bag of lard. I carried it around my neck and went off to my mount and my companions. The man placed in charge of the booty then came up to me and grabbed the side of it, saying, “Come on! Not till it’s divided up among the Muslims.” I replied, “No, by God, I’ll not give it to you!” He then began pulling the bag away from me. Then the Messenger of God (SAA) saw us while we were behaving this way, and he smiled and laughed. He then told the booty-master, "Let him have it." So he released it and I went off with it to my mount and to my companions and we ate it."

Most scholars refer to this hadith in relation to Imam Malik's prohibition of the use of the fat from animals sacrificed by Jews and captured by Muslims. This is because God Almighty stated, "and the food of those to whom the Book came is permissible for you" (sūrat al- Mudā'ida; V, v.5). He (Imam Malik) said, "This is not food for them (the Jews)." (His opponents, however,) cite this hadith against him. Nevertheless, there are doubts about this hadith. This lard could well have been permitted to them. But God knows best. This hadith was also cited to show that food is not subject to the division into fifths. This is supported by what Imam Da'ud related, as follows, "Muḥammad b. al-Ṣalā related to us, quoting Abū Muṭawiya, quoting Isḥāq al-Shaybānī, from Muhammad b. Abū Mujaḍil, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Awfā, who said, 'I asked, " Didn't you divide up (captured) food into the fifths during the time of the Messenger of God (SAA)?"' He (sic) replied, "We did capture food at Khaybar. People would come and take of it what they needed, then leave.'"

Abū Da'ud is alone in giving this; the hadith is hasan, "good".

An Account of the Story of Ṣafiyyya, daughter of Ḥuyayy b. Akhtūb al-Nadriyya, may God be pleased with her.

When the Messenger of God (SAA) forced the Jews of Banū al-Nadīr to vacate Medina, as was related above, most of them went to Khaybar. Their number included Ḥuyayy b. Akhtūb and Banū Abū al-Ḥuqayq, who were persons of wealth and prestige among their people. Ṣafiyyya at that time was a child, not yet having reached maturity. Thereafter, when she was ready for marriage, it was arranged to her cousin. When she was conducted to him after the wedding, he consummated the marriage. Their married life continued for some time. Then in her sleep she saw the moon descend from the sky in her lap. She related this vision to her cousin, who slapped her face and said, "So you yearn to have the 'king of Yathrib' as your husband, do you?"

Soon thereafter the arrival and siege of them by the Messenger of God (SAA) occurred and Ṣafiyyya was among those captured, while her husband was killed.

Then the Messenger of God (SAA) chose her and she became part of his household, to which she now belonged, as will be related. After ascertaining that she was not pregnant and not menstruating he consummated marriage with her and discovered the mark made on her cheek by her husband's blow. He asked her about this, and she related to him what she had seen in those wonderful visions. May God be pleased with her and grant her pleasure.
Al-Bukhārī stated that Sulaymān b. Ḥarb related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Thābit, from Anas b. Malik, who said, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) performed the al-ṣubh, morning prayer, while it was still dark, near Khaybar. He then said, ‘Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great! Khaybar is ruined! It’s a bad day for an enemy who has been warned when we can dismount in their open square!’

“Then the enemy hurried to escape along the alleyways and the Prophet (ṢAAS) killed their warriors and took their children captive. Among the prisoners was Ṣafiyya. She went to Dihya al-Kalbī, and then to the Prophet (ṢAAS), who gave her her freedom as her dowry.”

Muslim also related this from a ḥadīth of Ḥammād b. Zayd which has several lines of transmission from Anas.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Ādam related to him, from Shu‘ba, from ‘Abd al-‘Azīz b. Ṣuhayyab, who said, “I heard Anas b. Malik say, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) took Ṣafiyya captive and then gave her her freedom and married her.’ Thābit asked Anas, ‘Did he not give her a dowry?’ He replied, ‘He gave her herself as dowry, rewarding her her freedom.’”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this from this line.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Abd al-Ghaffār b. Dā‘ūd related to him, quoting Yaṣūb b. ‘Abd al-‘Rahmān, as did ʿĀhmād b. ʿIsā, quoting Wahb (who said), “Yaṣūb b. ‘Abd al-‘Rahmān al-Zuhri informed me, from ‘Arm, the freed-man of al-Muṭṭalib, from Anas b. Malik, who said, ‘We came to Khaybar. After the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had conquered the fortress, mention was made to him of the beauty of Ṣafiyya, daughter of Ḥuyayy b. Akhtūb. Her husband had been killed, she still being a bride. The Prophet (ṢAAS) then chose her for himself. He left with her, travelling in her company until he reached Sudd al-Ṣahbā’ī. She was then free of her menses and so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) consummated his marriage with her. Thereafter, he made some kays, dates with butter, on a small leather mat. Then he told me, “Make an invitation to those around you.” And this was the wedding banquet given for Ṣafiyya. We then left for Medina. I saw the Prophet (ṢAAS) make a cushion behind himself for her with his cloak and would then sit upon his mount. He would bend his knee and she would put her foot on it, then mount up.’”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this; Muslim does not.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Sa‘īd b. Abī Maryām related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Ja‘far b. Abū Kathīr (who said), “Ḥumayd narrated to me that he heard Anas say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed between Khaybar and al-Madd for three nights, Ṣafiyya being brought to him for consummation of their marriage. I invited the Muslims to his wedding banquet. There was no bread or meat; all he did was order Bīlāl to get some leather dishes in which he threw some dates, sour milk cheese and butter. The Muslims asked, “Is she to be considered one of the ummahāt al-muʾminīn, ‘mothers of the believers’, or someone taken captive?” They replied, “If he keeps her veiled, then she is one of the former; if not, then of the latter.” When he rode on, he placed her behind himself and put a veil over her.”

Abū Dā'ūd stated that Musaddad related to him, quoting Hammād b. Zayd, from ‘Abd al-‘Azīz b. Suhayb, from Anas b. Malik, who said, “Ṣafīyya went to Dihyā al-Kalbī, and then to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) had Kināna b. al-Rabi‘ brought to him; he was in charge of the Banū al-Naḍir treasury. When asked about it, Kināna denied knowledge of its whereabouts. Then there was brought to the Messenger of God (SAAS) a Jew who said, ‘I saw Kināna circle around the treasure early every morning.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said to Kināna, ‘Do you realize that I’ll kill you if we find it with you?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that their treasure be dug up and some of it was brought out. He then asked Kināna the whereabouts of the rest, but he refused to hand it over. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awām to go to him, saying, ‘Torture him until you root out what he has.’ Al-Zubayr then repeatedly struck fire on his chest until he was close to death. Finally, the Messenger of God (SAAS) pushed him over to Muhammad b. Maslama, who cut off his head in revenge for the loss of his brother, Maḥmūd b. Maslama.”

DIVISION.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged the people of Khaybar in their two forts al-Waṭṭāḥ and al-Suḷālim. When they were sure that all was lost, they asked him to let them leave, and to spare their blood. He did so. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had seized all the wealth of al-Shiqq, al-Nīṭāt and al-Katiba, and all their forts, except for those two. When the people at Fadak heard what had happened to the others, they wanted the same. So they sent to the Messenger of God (SAAS), asking him to let them leave and to spare their blood on the understanding that they would leave their possessions for him. He agreed. One of the intermediaries between the Messenger of God (SAAS) and them in this matter was Muḥayyīsa b. Masūd, brother of Banū Ḥāritha.

“When the people of Khaybar surrendered on this agreement, they asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to grant them a half share in the properties, saying, ‘We know more about it than you do, and we’ll make it produce more.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) made peace with them on this basis of half shares, provided that, ‘If we wish to expel you, we will do so.’ He made a similar arrangement with the people of Fadak.”

Section: On the Conquest of their Forts and the Division of their Land.

Al-Waḍqīḍ stated, “When the Jews from the forts of Nāṣim and of that of al-Saḥb b. Muṣādī went to that of al-Zubayr, the Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged them for three days. Then one of the Jews, a man named ʿAzāl, came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, ‘Abū al-Qāsim, will you give me protection if I direct you to what refreshes the people of al-Naṭāt and then proceed against those of al-Shiqq? Those at al-Shiqq are deathly afraid of you.’”
He went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) did give this man protection for his family and possessions, and the Jew then told him, ‘If you were to stay a whole month besieging them, they would not care. They have underground springs to which they can go out at night and drink from and then return to their fortress.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then gave orders that their springs be cut off and the Jews came out and fought most fiercely. A number of the Muslims were killed that day, as were ten of the Jews. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then conquered it. The last of these forts (to fall) was al-Naṭṭāt. He then turned his attention to al-Shiqq, which consisted of several forts. The first one he attacked was Ubayy. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then attacked a castle named Samwān and he fought for it most vigorously. One of the enemy there, a man named Azul, came forth and made a challenge for single combat. Al-Ḥabāb b. al-Mundhir went out to fight him and cut off half his arm, the man’s sword dropping from his hand. The Jew fled, but al-Ḥabāb followed him and severed his tendon. Another of them then emerged for single combat and one of the Muslims went forth to meet him. The Jew killed him. Abū Dujāna then went out against him, killing him and seizing his weapons. After that they offered no more challenges for single combat and the Muslims shouted ‘Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great!’ They then mounted an attack on the fortress and entered it, led by Abū Dujāna. Inside they found furniture, furnishings, cattle and food. The fighting men who had been inside fled in great haste, like lizards, until they reached the forts al-Bazāt, at al-Shiqq. There they put up a strong defence; but the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men moved slowly towards them and they exchanged arrows. The Messenger of God (SAAS) actually shot at them in person until their arrows wounded his fingertips. He then picked up a handful of stones which he cast at their fort which shook under their impact and collapsed to the ground. The Muslims then defeated them in hand-to-hand combat.”

Al-Waqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then turned his attention to the inhabitants of al-Akhbiyya, and of al-Waṭīḥ and al-Sulālim, two forts of Abū al-Ḥuqayq. These they defended strenuously, having been joined by all those who had been defeated from al-Naṭṭāt to al-Shiqq. These joined with the rest in defending al-Qamūs and al-Katībā – a very strong fortress – and in al-Waṭīḥ and al-Sulālim. Ultimately they stopped looking down and the Messenger of God (SAAS) erected a catapult to use against them.

“When they were sure their defeat was certain, the Messenger of God (SAAS), having by then besieged them for 14 days, Ibn Abū al-Ḥuqayq came down to him and made peace. The conditions were that he would spare their lives and allow them to withdraw, while they would give him free access to their lands, properties, gold, silver, horses, armour and weapons, while they could keep only what was ʿala zahrī insān, ‘on their backs’, their clothing, that is. The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘But the protection of God and of His messenger is lost to you if you conceal anything.’ They made peace on that basis.”
I note that when they did hide things and told lies, concealing that leather bag in which they had much wealth, it became clear that they were not keeping to their pact. And so he killed both sons of Abū al-Huqayq and part of his family because they had broken their pacts and agreements.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū al-Ḥasan ᄤAli b. Muḥammad al-Muqrī al-Asfarāyīnī stated to him, quoting al-Ḥasan b. Muḥammad b. Ishaq, quoting Yūsuf b. Ya‘qūb, quoting ʿAbd al-Wāḥid b. Ghiyāth, quoting Ḥammād b. Salama, quoting ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿUmar—according to Abū Salām from Nāfī’—from Ibn ʿUmar, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) battled against the people of Khaybar until he forced them to take refuge in their fortress. He thus gained control of their land, their produce and their date-palms. They then made peace with him. The conditions were that they would leave their fortress keeping what their mounts would carry. To the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would go their gold, and silver. They would move away and not hide or fail to disclose anything; if they did so, they would have no valid pact of agreement.

“They then concealed a leather bag containing money and jewels belonging to Ḥuyayy b. Akhtāb; he had carried it with him to Khaybar when Banū al-Naḍīr was expelled. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked at this time, ‘What happened to the leather bag of Ḥuyayy that he brought from al-Naḍīr?’ He replied, ‘Various expenses and the warfare have exhausted it.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, ‘Only a little time has passed and there was more money than that.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then pushed him over to al-Zuhayr who tortured him. Before this, Ḥuyayy had gone inside a ruin and he reported seeing Ḥuyayy circling it. They then went and searched, ultimately finding the bag in the ruin.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then killed the two sons of Abū al-Huqayq, one of whom was the husband of Ṣafiyya, daughter of Ḥuyayy b. al-Akhtāb. He took their women and children captive and divided up their possessions since they had broken their agreement.

“He wanted to expel them, but they said, ‘Muḥammad, let us stay on this land to care for and improve it.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions had no revenues from farming to live on and they themselves were too occupied otherwise to work on the land. And so he gave Khaybar over to them on condition that they would have an equal part of all the produce, dates and other returns, for so long as the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wished.

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa would come to them every year to receive payment for it from them, paying them their half. But they complained to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the zeal with which he performed this task. They had tried to bribe him. He told them, ‘You enemies of God! Would you pay me with ill-gotten gains! By God, I come to you on behalf of the person most dear to me of all. You are more hateful in my view than the monkeys and pigs that are your like! But my hatred for you and my love for him will not lead me to fail to treat you fairly."

"They replied, 'By this, heaven and earth are set.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) noticed some blackness around Ṣafiyya’s eye and he asked her, ‘Ṣafiyya, what is this blackness?’ She replied, ‘My head was in the lap of Ibn Abū al-Ḥuqayq while I slept. I seemed to see a moon drop into my lap. When I told him of this, he slapped me, saying, “You yearn for the ‘king of Yathrib!’’"

"She went on, ‘I thought of the Messenger of God (SAAS) as the most hateful of men. He killed my husband and my father. But he kept on explaining to me, saying, “Your father incited the Arabs against me and did so on and so forth.” Eventually all that left my mind.’"

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to give each of his wives 80 bags of dates and 20 of barley annually. During the Caliphate of 'Umar, they cheated the Muslims, and threw 'Umar’s son down from atop a house, breaking his wrists. 'Umar then said, ‘Those owning a share of Khaybar should come for us to divide it up.’ He did divide it up and their (the Jews’) leader said, ‘Don’t expel us; allow us to remain in it as did the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr too.’ 'Umar responded, ‘Do you consider that what the Messenger of God (SAAS) said does not apply to me! But how would you feel if your mount raced off towards Syria, day after day after day!’"

"'Umar then divided it up between those who were at al-Ḥudaybiyya and then at Khaybar.”

Abū Da‘ūd related this in abbreviated form from a hadith of Ḥammād b. Salama.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Al-Bukhārī appended the following in the margin of his book, ‘Ḥammād b. Salama narrated it.'” I note, however, that I did not see this. But God knows best.

Abū Da‘ūd stated that Sulaymān b. Da‘ūd al-Mahri related to him, quoting Ibn Walb, who said that Usāma b. Zayd al-Laythi informed him, from Naṭī, from ‘Abd Allāh b. 'Umar, who said, ‘When Khaybar was conquered, the Jews asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to allow them to remain on condition that they would work for one-half of what it produced. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, ‘I will allow you to stay in it on that condition for as long as we wish.’"

69. In a footnote to his translation of Ibn Iṣḥaq’s work, (op. cit. p.523) Guillaume points out that this is an authentically Jewish expression and that its inclusion here attests to the accuracy of the narrator here.

70. This is a reference to the charges against the Jews of Khaybar for having broken promises and failed to fulfil contracts.
"And so they did. The dates, of one-half of Khaybar, were divided into shares and the Messenger of God (SAAS) would take a portion of one-fifth. From that fifth, he would provide 100 bags of dates and 20 of barley for each of his wives, annually.

"When 'Umar wished to evict the Jews, he sent to the wives of the Prophet (SAAS) and told them, 'Whichever of you wishes me to set aside for her (land that would produce) 100 bags, she may have the roots, land and water therefor, along with the plants to produce 20 bags of barley. This I will arrange. Those who prefer us to set aside what she owns of the fifth share as it has been, this too we will do.'"

Abū Dā'ūd narrated from a hadith of Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said, "'Nafi' related to me, from 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar, that 'Umar stated, 'O people, the Messenger of God (SAAS) made a pact with the Jews of Khaybar on the understanding that he could expel them if he wished. Those with property there should go to it; I am expelling the Jews.' And he did expel them.'"

Al-Bukhārī stated that Yahyā b. Bukayr related to him, quoting al-Layth, from Yūnus, from Ibn Shihāb, from Sa'īd b. al-Musayyab, (who said) that Jubayr b. Mu'tām informed him as follows, "I and 'Uthmān b. 'Affān walked over to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, 'You gave to Banū al-Muṭṭalib a part of the fifth share of Khaybar but left us out, even though we and they have the same status with you.' He replied, 'Well, Banū Ḥashim and Banū al-Muṭṭalib are one.'" Jubayr b. Mu'tām stated, 'The Prophet (SAAS) gave no share to Banū 'Abd Shams, nor to Banū Nawfal.'"

He is alone in giving this hadith; Muslim did not.

There is one version that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Banū Ḥashim and Banū 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib are one; they were not separate from us before Islam or thereafter."

Al-Shāfiʿī stated, "They went into the defile with them and gave them help after their having accepted Islam just as they had before Islam.

"Abū Ṭalīb expressed displeasure with Banū 'Abd Shams and Nawfal, saying, 'May God punish badly 'Abd Shams and Nawfal for us, and the sooner the better!'"

Al-Bukhārī stated that al-Ḥasan b. Ishāq related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Ṭhābit, quoting Za'ida, from 'Ubayd Allāh b. 'Umar, from 'Nafi', from Ibn 'Umar, who said, "At Khaybar, the Messenger of God (SAAS) awarded a double share to each horse and a single share to each man on foot.

"This pleased 'Nafi', who said, 'So if a man had a horse, he received three shares: two for the horse, one for himself.'"

Al-Bukhārī also stated that Sa'īd b. Abū Maryam related to him, quoting Muhammad b. Ja'far (who said), "Zayd informed me, from his father, that he heard 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb say, 'By Him who bears my soul in His hands, were I not afraid that the other Muslims might be left in poverty, I would divide up (among the warriors) each village conquered for me, just as the Prophet (SAAS) divided up Khaybar. However, I will leave it all to them as a (source of) treasury for them to distribute among themselves."

Al-Bukhārī also related this from a hadith of Mālik; Abū Dā‘ūd did so from Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, from Ibn Mahdi, from Mālik, from Zayd b. Aslam, from his father, from Umar.

This text requires that Khaybar was divided up in its entirely among those who had earned the booty.

Abū Dā‘ūd stated, "Ibn al-Sarh related to us, (who said), ‘Ibn Wahb informed us, saying, ‘Yūnus informed me, from Ibn Shihāb, who said, ‘I learned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) took Khaybar by force, after fighting, and left some of its inhabitants still there after the battles.’’"

Al-Zuhri stated on this, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) divided Khaybar into fifths, allotting it all to those who fought there."

However, there is some disagreement over al-Zuhri’s statement. What is true is that all of Khaybar was not divided up; in fact, only one-half of it was divided between the men, as will be shown.

Mālik and his followers use this argument, stating that the Imam may choose what is best to do with conquered territories. He may divide them up (between those capturing them), or he may set them aside for the benefit of all Muslims. Alternatively, he may, if he wishes, divide up part of them and set aside part to care for whatever circumstances and needs may arise.

Abī Dā‘ūd stated, "Al-Rabi‘ b. Sulaymān, the muezzin, related to us, quoting Asad b. Mūsā, quoting Yahyā b. Zakariyyā (who said) ‘Sufyān related to me, from Yahyā b. Sa‘d, from Bashīr b. Yāsār, from Sahl b. Abū Ḥathma, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) divided Khaybar into two halves; one-half was for his own responsibilities, and one-half went to the Muslims; he divided it up among them on the basis of 18 parts.”’"

Abū Dā‘ūd is alone in giving this hadith. He then related, from a hadith of Bashīr b. Yāsār that is mursal, incomplete in its line of transmission, “he assigned to the half allotted for his needs (responsibilities) al-Watīh, al-Katiba, al-Sulalim and their adjoining properties, and gave to the Muslims the half consisting of al-Shiqq and al-Nāṭāt and their adjoining properties; the portions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) was what adjoined both of these.”

He also stated that Ḥusayn b. ʿAlī related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Fudayl, from Yahyā b. Sa‘d, from Bashīr b. Yāsār, the freed-man of the ansār, from men among the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS). (These men stated) that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gained victory over Khaybar and divided it into 36 shares, each of which combined 100 shares. To the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims went one-half of this. The second half he put aside for those from the delegations who came to stay with him, and for other matters, along with some portions set aside for those who suffered special misfortune.

Abū Dā‘ūd is alone in giving this.
He also stated that Muhammad b. Isâ related to him, quoting Mujmî b. Ya‘qûb b. Mujmî b. Yazîd al-Ansârî (who said), “I heard Abu Ya‘qûb b. Mujmî say, on the authority of his uncle ‘Abd al-Rahmân b. Yazîd al-Ansârî, from his uncle Mujiî b. Ḥârîthah al-Ansârî – he being one of the reciters of the Qur‘ân – say, ‘Khaybar was apportioned to those who had (also) been present at al-Hudaybiyya. He divided it up into 18 parts. The army consisted of 1,500 men, including 300 cavalry. He allotted two shares to each man with a horse, and one share to each man on foot.’”

Abû Dâ‘ûd is alone in giving this hadîth.

Mâlik stated, from al-Zuhârî, that Sa‘îd b. al-Musâyab informed him that the Prophet (SAAS) conquered part of Khaybar by force.

Abû Dâ‘ûd also related this. He then stated, “The following was recited to al-Ḥârîthah b. Mîskîn while I was present, ‘Ibn Wahb informed you all (as follows), “Mâlik b. Anas related to me, from Ibn Shihab, that part of Khaybar was taken by force and part by peace treaty. Most of al-Kâtibah was taken by force, and there was also a peace agreement about it. I asked Mâlik, ‘What is al-Kâtibah?’ He replied, ‘It is land at Khaybar; it consists of 40,000 ‘adhq.”’” Abû Dâ‘ûd stated, “al-‘adhq” means ‘date-palms’; it can also mean date fronds.”

Al-Bukhârî, moreover, stated that Muhammad b. Bashshâr related to him, quoting Ḥaramî, quoting Shu‘bâ, quoting ʿAmâra, from Ḥârîma, from Ṣâ‘îsah, who said, “When Khaybar was conquered, we said, ‘Well, now we’ll have our fill of dates!’ (Al-Bukhari went on) “Al-Ḥâsân related to us, quoting Qurra b. Ḥâbîb, quoting ʿAbd al-Rahmân b. ʿAbd Allâh b. Dinâr, from his father, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, ‘We never had our fill’ – meaning of dates – ‘until we conquered Khaybar.’” Muḥammad b. Ṣâ‘îq stated, “Al-Shiqq and al-Naṭât were part of the share of the Muslims. Al-Shiqq consisted of 13 shares, al-Naṭât of 5. The total was divided into 1,800 shares. This was paid to those who were present at al-Hudaybiyya, both those present at Khaybar and those absent from it. And of those who were present at al-Hudaybiyya only Jâbir b. ʿAbd Allâh was absent from Khaybar; he was awarded his share.

“Those present at al-Hudaybiyya consisted of 1,400 men. With them were 200 horses; 2 shares went to each horse. To each 100 men went a portion consisting of 18 shares. Four hundred shares went to the 200 horsemen; this was for their horses.”

Al-Bayhaqî related similarly through Sufyân b. Ḥuyayna, from Yaḥyâ b. Sa‘îd, from Ṣâ‘îlî b. Kaysân – namely that they consisted of 1,400 men, with whom there were 200 horses.

I note: the Messenger of God (SAAS) used an arrow to select the order of the award of shares. The first share of the allotment of al-Shiqq went to Ṣâ‘îm b. Ḍâd. Ibn Ishâq stated, “Kâtibah was a fifth portion assigned to God Almighty; of it a portion went to the Prophet (SAAS), another to (impoverished) relations, orphans, the destitute and wayfarers, another to feed the wives of the Prophet (SAAS), another to feed the families of those who went out to arrange the peace treaty with the people of Fadak. These included Muhayyisa b. Mas'ud, to whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) allotted 30 bags of dates and 30 bags of barley. Its (Fadak's) two valleys that were set aside for him were named Wādi al-Surīr, and Wādi Khāṣ.

Ibn Ishaq went on to give the details of all the allotments made at Khaybar; he did so fully and very well, may God have mercy on him.

The men placed in charge of the division and the accounting were Jabbar b. Ṣakhār b. Umayya b. Khansa', brother of Banū Salama, and Zayd b. Thābit, may God be pleased with them both.

The commander who had authority over valuation of the date-palms of Khaybar was 'Abd Allah b. Rawāha. He did this for two years. Following his death, may God be pleased with him, at the battle of Mu'ta, Jabbar b. Ṣakhār, may God be pleased with him, took over his work.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Ismā'il related to him, quoting Mālik, from ʻAbd al-Majīd b. Suhayl, from Sa'id b. al-Musayyab, from Abū Sa'id al-Khudari and Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed a man in command of Khaybar who brought him some dates that were janīb, "of very high quality". The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, "Are all the dates of Khaybar like this?" He replied, "No, I swear by God, Messenger of God! We take a sa' weight of this (dates of high quality) for two sa' or three sa' (of lesser quality)." He told him, "No, don't do that. Sell the lesser quality dates for cash and then with that cash buy the janīb dates."

Al-Bukhārī stated that Al-Darāwardī said, quoting ʻAbd al-Majīd, from Sa'id b. al-Musayyab, that Abū Sa'id and Abū Hurayra both related that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent a brother of Banū 'Adi of the āsur to Khaybar and appointed him in charge of it. And the same is related on a different line of transmission from ʻAbd al-Majīd, from Abū Salīḥ al-Samān, from Abū Sa'id and Abū Hurayra.

I note as follows. The properties of Khaybar gained by the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims and all of Fadak, constituted a large part of the territory of Khaybar. They (the Jewish inhabitants) had emerged and made peace with the Messenger of God (SAAS) because of their great fear of him. To all this were added the acquisitions mentioned above from Banū al-Nādīr where the Muslims similarly had no need to use force.

These were the personal property of the Messenger of God (SAAS). From them he would subtract the yearly expenses of his family and then treat the remainder as belonging to God. He would use it to pay for the mounts, weapons

71. According to Ibn Ishaq, when the inhabitants of Fadak heard of the conquest of Khaybar, they sent emissaries to the Prophet (SAAS), offering a treaty of peace under which they would remain there and keep half their produce. and other needs of the Muslims. When he died, Fatima and his wives—or most of them—believed that these properties would be inherited from him. They had not been informed of a statement that has been established to have been made by the Messenger of God (SAAS) as follows, “We prophets do not leave inheritance; what we leave becomes sadaqa, a public charity.”

When Fatima and the wives of the Prophet (SAAS), along with al-‘Abbâs, sought their share of this and asked (Abû Bakr), the Trusting, to pay it to them, he related to them what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said, namely, “We do not leave inheritance; what we leave becomes a sadaqa.” He told them, “I will provide for those whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) cared for; I swear by God, the relatives of the Messenger of God (SAAS) are dearer to me than my own.”

He spoke the truth, may God be pleased with him and give him pleasure!
In that he was faithful, well-guided and adhering to the truth.

Al-‘Abbâs requested, as did ‘Ali on behalf of Fatima, since they had failed to receive an inheritance, that they should have access to that charitable fund and use it for those expenses that the Prophet (SAAS) used to meet. But Abû Bakr refused that, considering it his duty to proceed as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had done, and not to deviate from his path and practices.

Fatima, may God be pleased with her, died six months thereafter. ‘Ali then renewed his oath of allegiance. During the Caliphate of ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭâb, they asked him to give control of this sadaqa to ‘Ali and al-‘Abbâs. They pressured him through a group of the Companions. And ‘Umar, may God be pleased with him, agreed to this. He did so because of the multiplicity of his duties, the extensiveness of his domain and the great spread of his subjects.

‘Ali gained advantage over his uncle al-‘Abbâs in this matter. Then they accompanied each other and quarrelled in front of ‘Umar. And they brought along a group of the Companions to him and asked him to divide up the assets between them in such a way that each would be independent of the other.
But ‘Umar resisted this strongly, fearing that such a division would be similar to the division through inheritance. He said, “Look after it together. And if you can’t, then turn it over to me. By Him at whose command the heavens and earth stand, I’ll never reach any other decision about this!” The property continued to be managed in this way, by their descendants, into the ‘Abbâsîde era, the expenditures continuing to be made as they had been by the Messenger of God (SAAS). (This is what became of) the assets of Banû al-Nadir, from Fadak and the share of the Messenger of God (SAAS), from Khaybar.
The slaves and the women who were there at Khaybar were awarded portions of the booty, but no actual shares in the assets gained.

Abū Da'ūd stated that Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal related to him, quoting Bishr b. al-Mufaddal, from Muḥammad b. Zayd, (who said), "'Umayr, freed-man of Abū al-Laḥm, said, 'I was present at Khaybar with my masters. They talked about me to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he ordered that I be awarded a sword. I was just about to draw it when he was informed that I was a mamlūk, a slave. He then ordered I be given something (suitable) I would enjoy.'" Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, "There were women who were present at Khaybar with the Messenger of God (SAAS). He awarded them part of the booty, but he did not allot them shares.

"Sulaymān b. Suḥaym related to me, from Umayya, daughter of Abū al-Ṣalt, from a woman of Banū Ghifār, whose name was given me. She said, 'I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), along with some women of Banū Ghifār. We asked him, 'Messenger of God, we would like to go forth with you,' - he was then on his way to Khaybar - "to take care of the wounded and give whatever help we can to the Muslims." He replied, "May God bless you.'"

"She went on, 'So we left with him. I was a young girl then and the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed me on his mount behind himself, on a bag of provisions. When he dismounted to perform the al-subh prayer, I got down from the bag. On it I saw blood of mine; this was my first period. I hurried back to the camel, feeling embarrassed. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw I was upset and noticed the blood, he asked, "What is wrong? You probably menstruated." "Yes," I answered. He then said, "Cleanse yourself and then take a vessel of water, put some salt in it and use it to wash the blood off the bag. Then go back to your seat.'"

"She went on, 'When God conquered Khaybar, he awarded us some of the booty. He took this necklace you see around my neck and gave it to me, himself putting it on me. By God, I will never be parted from it.' It was around her neck until she died and she left instructions that it be buried with her.

"She never cleansed herself after her menstruation without putting salt in the water. And she left instructions that it be put in the water to be used to wash her when she died.'"

Imām Aḥmad and Abū Da'ūd related this similarly, from the hadith of Muḥammad b. Ishāq.

'Ali, daughter of Abū al-Ḥakam, from Umayya, daughter of Abū al-Ṣalt, from the Prophet (SAAS).”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Ḥasan b. Mūsā related to us, quoting Rāfīʾ b. Salama al-Ashjaʿi (who said), “Ḥashraj b. Ziyād related to me, from his grandmother, his father’s mother, who said, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the expedition to Khaybar, I being the youngest of six women. When news reached the Prophet (SAAS) that there were women accompanying him, he summoned us. We could see from his face that he was angry. He asked us, “Why have you come, and who gave you permission?” We replied, “We have come to hand out the arrows and to pour the sawīq, we have with us medication for wounds and we can spin hair and use it for God’s cause.” “You may proceed,” he told us.’

“She went on, ‘When God conquered Khaybar for him, he drew arrows (to determine shares) for us, just as he did for the men.’ I then asked her, ‘Grandmother, what was allotted to you then?’ ‘Dates,’ she replied.”

I comment that all he gave them was the produce. He certainly did not give to them shares in the land, as he did to the men. But God knows best.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqi stated, “In my book, (it states) from the ḥāfiz Abū ʿAbd Allāh, that ʿAbd Allāh al-Iṣbahānī informed him, as follows, ‘Al-Ḥusayn b. al-Jahm related to us, quoting al-Ḥusayn b. al-Faraj, quoting al-Wāqidi, (who said) “ʿAbd al-Salām b. Mūsā b. Jubayr, from his father, from his grandfather, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ants, who said, ‘I went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Khaybar, and my wife, who was pregnant, accompanied me. On the way she had a discharge of blood. I reported this to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he told me, “Soak some dates for her and when it all turns liquid, tell her to drink it.” She did so and saw nothing to alarm her. When we had conquered Khaybar, he gave to the women, but did not allot them shares. He gave both to my wife and to my child who was born.’” ʿAbd al-Salām added, “I don’t know whether it was a boy or a girl.”

An Account of the arrival to the Messenger of God (SAAS), while he was encamped at Khaybar, of Jaʿfar b. Abū Talib, may God be pleased with him, and those who had remained in Abyssinia.

These were Muslims who had emigrated there, along with those from the people of Yemen who had joined them.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Muḥammad b. al-ʿAlāʾ, quoting Abū Usāma, quoting Burayd b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Burda, from Abū Burda, from Abū Mūsā, who said, “We learned of the departure of the Prophet (SAAS) while we were in Yemen and so we left as muḥājirin to join him. I was accompanied by my brothers, myself being the youngest. One was called Abū.
Burda, the other Abū Ruhm. We were among a number” (or the narrator may have given the figure 53, or 52) “of men of my people.

“We rode aboard a boat that took us to the Negus in Abyssinia. There we met up with Ja'far b. Abū Tālib, with whom we stayed before all coming on together. We arrived at the Prophet (ṢAAS) after he had conquered Khaybar. Some people there said to us – meaning those who had travelled by boat – ‘We joined in the hijra before you did!’

“Well, we emigrated before you did. And so we have now more right to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) than you do!’ She became angry and replied, ‘That’s not so, by God! All the time you were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he was feeding your hungry and instructing your ignorant, while we were in the ḍār, the domain, of the bu'addā and the bughaḍā in Abyssinia! And we were there serving God and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). I swear by God, I’ll not eat nor drink again before I tell the Prophet (ṢAAS) what you said, and I’ll ask him. And I’ll not lie or distort or add anything to it!’”

“When the Prophet (ṢAAS) arrived, she said to him, ‘Prophet of God, Abū Burda narrated, ‘Asmā’ commented, “When I saw Abū Mūsā, he asked me to repeat this hadith.’”

“Abū Burda said, quoting Abū Mūsā, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) said, “I well know the voices of the ‘ash‘ārī people’, the reciters of the Qur’ān, when they go home at night. And I know their houses from their voices merely reciting the Qur’ān at night, even without seeing their dwellings during the day. One of them is Hakim b. Ḥizām, who, when he meets the enemy” – or he could have said, “cavalry” – “would say to them (the enemy), ‘My companions order you to wait for them.’”’

Muslim related this similarly from Abū Kurayb and ‘Abd Allāh b. Barrād, from Abū Usāma.

Then al-Bukhārī stated that Ishāq b. Ibrāhīm related to him, quoting Ḥafs b. Ghiyāth, quoting Burayd (b. ‘Abd Allāh) from Abū Burda, from Abū Mūsā, who said, “We came to the Prophet (ṢAAS) after Khaybar had been conquered.

73. That is, “those who are far away” and “those who are hateful”. Obviously, the Arabic words have similar patterns and sound almost similar.
He did give us a share (of the booty), though he gave none to anyone who had not been present at the victory except for us."

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this; Muslim did not. Abū Dā'ūd and al-Tirmidhī did relate it, authenticating it from a hadith of Burayd.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Āmīr b. Umayya al-Ḍāmri to the Negus to request him for those of his Companions who had remained in Abyssinia. They arrived in the company of Ja'far, after the Prophet (ṢAAS) had conquered Khaybar.

He went on, "Sufyān b. ʿUyayna related, from al-ʿAjlah, from al-Shaʿbi, that Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the day when he conquered Khaybar. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) kissed him between his eyes and hugged him, saying, 'I don't know which makes me happier - the conquest of Khaybar, or the arrival of Jaʿfar!'"

Sufyān al-Thawrī related it thus from al-ʿAjlah, from al-Shaʿbi, only as mursal, with an incomplete chain of transmission.

Al-Bayhaqī recorded a line of transmission through Ḥasan b. ʿUsayn al-ʿArzami, from al-ʿAjlah, from al-Shaʿbi, from Jābir, who said, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came back from Khaybar, Jaʿfar arrived from Abyssinia. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) kissed him on the forehead when he met him, saying, 'By God, I don't know what makes me happier - the conquest of Khaybar or the arrival of Jaʿfar!'"

Al-Bayhaqī then stated, "The Ḥāfīz Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to us, quoting al-Ḥusayn b. Abū Ismāʿīl al-ʿAlawi, quoting ʿĀhmad b. Muḥammad al-ʿAydrūtī, quoting Muḥammad b. Abī Daʿūd b. Abū Ṭayba (who said), 'Mākkī b. ʿĪrāhīm al-ʿRāyānī related to me, quoting Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said, 'When Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib arrived from Abyssinia, he was met by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When Jaʿfar saw him, he ḥajalā, he hopped on one leg, to show his respect for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). The latter then kissed him between his eyes.!'"

Al-Bayhaqī then commented, "In the chain of authorities back to al-Thawrī there are persons not known."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Those Meccans who remained behind with Jaʿfar until they joined him at Khaybar were 16 men."

Ibn Ishāq then listed their names and those of their wives. They were: "Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib al-Hashimi and his wife Asmāʿ, daughter of ʿUmays, and his son ʿAbd Allāh, who was born in Abyssinia, Khalīd b. ʿAṣ b. Umayya b. ʿAbd Shams and his wife Amina, daughter of Khalaf b. ʿAsad, and his children, ʿAṣ b. ʿĀmā, both born in Abyssinia, his brother ʿAmr b. Saʿd b. al-ʿĀṣ and Muʿayqīb b. Abū Ṭāfirah, a member of the Saʿd b. al-ʿĀṣ family.

"Then there were Abū Māsāḥ al-ʾAshʿārī ʿAbd Allāh b. Qays, ally of ʿUtba b. Rabīʿa, Aswad b. Nawfal b. Khuwaylid b. Asad al-Asadī, Jahm b. Qays b. ʿAbd Shurahbil al-ʾAbdārī, whose wife, Umm Ḥarmala, daughter of ʿAbd al-Aswad, had died in Abyssinia; his son 'Amr and daughter Khuzayma died along with her, may God have mercy on them all. Then there were 'Amir b. Abn Waqqas al-Zuhri, 'Utba b. Ma'sūd, an ally of theirs from Hudhayl, al-Ḥārith b. Khalid b. Ṣakhir al-Taymi, whose wife Rayṭa, daughter of al-Ḥārith, had died there, may God have mercy upon her, 'Utthān b. Rabī'a b. Ahbān al-Jumaḥt, Muḥṣimiyya b. Juz' al-Zabidī, ally of Banū Sahm, Maʾṣmār b. Ṣabd Allāh b. Naḍla al-Ṣadawi, Abū Ḥatib b. 'Amr b. 'Abd Shams, Mālik b. Rabī'a b. Qays b. 'Abd Shams, both from Banū 'Āmir. Along with this Mālik was his wife 'Amra, daughter of al-Saḍī. Then there was al-Ḥārith b. 'Abd Shams b. Laqīt al-Fihri.”

Ibn Isḥāq did not mention those others of Banū Ashūr who were with Aba Masa and his two brothers Abū Burda and Abū Ruḥm, and his paternal uncle Abū Āmir; in fact of the Ashūr he referred only to Abū Mas, not even venturing to mention his two brothers, who were older than him, as is stated in the sahih of al-Bukhārī. It is as though Ibn Isḥāq, may God have mercy upon him, had not seen the hadith of Aba Mas regarding this. But God knows best.

He went on, “In the two boats with them there were also women who had been the wives of the Muslims who had died in Abyssinia. What he did record here was substantial and good.

Al-Bukhārī stated that 'Ali b. Ṣabd Allāh related to him, quoting Suṭyān (who said), “I heard al-Zuhri say, when Ismā'īl b. Umayya asked him a question, ‘Anbasa b. Sa'id informed me that Abū Hurayra came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and made a request of him – that is, he asked him for a share in the booty. At this a man from Banū Sa'id b. al-Ṣās said, “No, don’t give it to him.” Abū Hurayra commented (to the Prophet ṢAAS), “This is the murderer of Ibn Qawqal.” The man replied: “That’s a strange comment to come from a weasel who has come down from Qadām al-Ḍa'n!””

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this hadith; Muslim does not.

Al-Bukhārī went on to state that it was related from al-Zubaydī that al-Zuhri said, “‘Anbasa b. Sa'id informed me that he heard Abū Hurayra informing Sa'id b. al-Ṣās as follows: ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Abān (b. Sa'id) on an expedition from Medina towards Najd.’

“Abū Hurayra stated, ‘And Abān and his companions came to the Prophet (ṢAAS) at Khaybar after he had conquered it; the girdles of their horses were made of palm-fibre rope.’

“Abū Hurayra said, ‘So I said to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “Messenger of God, don’t give them a share!” Abān exclaimed, “You’re just a weasel that’s come down from atop a ḍa'īl, a lotus tree!” At this the Prophet (ṢAAS) said, “Abān, sit down!” And he did not give them a share.’”

74. Qadām al-Ḍa'n is the name of a mountain in the territory of Banū Daws, Abū Hurayra’s tribe.

75. It will be noticed that in this hadith the word for the name of the mountain has been changed to a word meaning a lotus tree.
Abū Dā'ūd gave a line of transmission for this hadith from Sa'īd b. Ma'nūsīr, from Ismā'īl b. ʿAyyāsh, from Muḥammad b. al-Walīd al-Zubaydī with similar wording.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Mūsā b. Ismā'īl related to him, quoting ʿAmr b. Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd (who said), “My grandfather, Saʿīd b. ʿAmr b. Saʿīd b. al-ʿĀṣ informed me that Ābān b. Saʿīd came to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and greeted him. Abū Hurayra then said, ‘Messenger of God, this is the murderer of Ibn Qawqal!’ Abān retorted to Abū Hurayra, ‘How strange! For you, a weasel coming down from Qadūm Daʿān to complain about me for the death of a man whom God honoured with martyrdom at my hand, a man whom God prevented from overcoming me!’”

He is alone in giving this hadith in this position. In his section on al-jihād, warfare, after the hadith of al-Humaydī, from Sufyān, from al-Zuhrī, from ʿAnbasa b. Saʿīd, from Abū Hurayra, he said, “I came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was at Khaybar, after having conquered it. I said to him, ‘Messenger of God, grant me a share!’ Some of the family of Saʿīd b. al-ʿĀṣ said, ‘Don’t give him a share!’ I then said, ‘Messenger of God, this fellow is the murderer of Ibn Qawqal!’” From this point, the hadith is the same as above.

Sufyān stated, “Al-Saʿīdī (by whom he meant ʿAmr b. Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd) related it to me, from his grandfather, from Abū Hurayra.”

In this hadith there is the statement of Abū Hurayra that he was not present at Khaybar, as was asserted in the prior accounts of this engagement. Imām Aḥmad related this through ʿArak b. Mālik, from Abū Hurayra and that he arrived to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) after he had conquered Khaybar and stated, “He addressed the Muslims and they gave us a part of their shares.”

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Rawḥ related to us, quoting Ḥammād b. Salama, from ʿAlī b. Zayd, from Ṭammār b. Abū Ṭammār, who said, ‘I was never present with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at any distribution of booty without him giving me a share, except at Khaybar; it was specifically for those who had been present at al-Ḥudaybiyya.’”

I note that Abū Hurayra and Abū Mūsā both arrived between al-Ḥudaybiyya and Khaybar.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Muʿāwiya b. ʿAmr, quoting Abū Ishāq, from Mālik b. Anas (who said), ‘Thawr related to me, quoting Saлим, the freed-man of Abū Allāh b. Muṭṭiʿ, who said that he heard Abū Hurayra say, ‘When we conquered Khaybar, we did not gain any booty of gold or silver. We did take camels, cattle, personal possessions and properties. We then departed with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for Wādī al-Qurā. With him was a slave of his called Midʿām, who had been presented to him by some of Banū al-Ḍabīb. While he was mounting the saddle of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), a stray arrow came in and struck him. People then said, ‘Lucky for him; paradise!’ But the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Definitely not; by Him in Whose hands is my soul, the cloak he took at Khaybar that the divider of the booty never received will light the fires (of hell) for him!

"'A man then approached, after having heard that from the Messenger of God (SAAS), carrying one or two sandal straps and said, 'This is something I captured.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, 'A sandal strap or two of hellfire!'""

An Account of the poisoned sheep and the clear proof and evidence therein.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Urwa narrated this from ʿĀʾisha, from the Prophet (SAAS). He then stated, "ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf related to us, quoting al-Layth (who said), Saʿīd related to me, from Abū Hurayra, who said, 'When Khaybar was conquered for the Messenger of God (SAAS), a poisoned sheep was presented to him.'"

Thus he gave it here in abbreviated form.

Imām Ahmad stated, "Ḥajjāj related to us, quoting Layth, from Saʿīd b. Abū Saʿīd, from Abū Hurayra, who said, 'When Khaybar was conquered, a poisoned sheep was presented to the Prophet (SAAS). The latter then ordered, 'Gather for me the Jews who were here.' They were brought and the Prophet (SAAS) asked them, 'I am about to ask you something. Will you respond truthfully about it?' 'Yes, we will, Abū Qāsim,' they replied.

'He then asked them, 'Who is your father?' They replied, 'Our father is so-and-so.' He then said, 'You lie; your father is so-and-so!' They responded, 'You correctly speak the truth.' He then asked, 'Are you truthful about something if you are asked about it?' They replied, 'Yes, Abū Qāsim! If we were to lie, you would know of it just as you did about our father.' He then asked, 'Who are those in hell?' They replied, 'We will be there for a short while, then you will remain there after us.' He responded, 'By God, we'll never be there after you.' He then asked them, 'Will you be truthful about something if I ask you?' 'Yes indeed, Abū al-Qāsim,' they replied. He went on, 'Did you put poison in this sheep?' 'Yes,' they replied. 'What made you do that?' he asked. 'We wanted to be rid of you if you were a liar; and if you were a prophet, it would not have harmed you.'"

Al-Bukhārī related this in his section on al-ṣiyya, the poll-tax on non-Muslims, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf. He also gave it in the section on al-maghāzi, the military expeditions, from Qutayba, both of these quoting al-Layth. Al-Bayhaqī stated, "The hāfiz Abū ʿAbd Allāh informed us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās al-ʿAṣamm, quoting Saʿīd b. Sulaymān, quoting ʿAbbād b. al-ʿAwwām, from Sufyān b. Ḥusayn, from al-Zuhri, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, and Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān, from Abū Hurayra, that a Jewish woman presented a poisoned sheep to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He told his Companions, Stop! It is poisoned!’ He then asked her, ‘What made you do this?’ She replied, ‘I wanted to find out if you are a prophet. Because if so, God would make you aware of it. And if you were an impostor, I’d be ridding people of you.’” The narrator concluded, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not detain her.”

Abū Dā’ūd related this from Hārūn b. ‘Abd Allāh, from Sa’īd b. Sulaymān.

Al-Bayhaqī related it similarly through ‘Abd Al-Malik b. Aba Nadra, from his father, from Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Shurayh related to us, quoting ‘Abbād, from Hīlāl – he being Ibn Khabbāb – from Ḥkritima, from Ibn ‘Abbās (who said) that a Jewish woman presented a poisoned sheep to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He sent for her and asked, ‘What made you do that?’ ‘Ahbabtu, I wished’ – ‘or araḍtū, I wanted’ – ‘(to establish) that if you were a prophet, then God would make you aware of it. And if you were not a prophet, people would be rid of you.’”

The narrator continued, “Whenever he experienced pain because of that (poison) he would have blood drawn. He went on, ‘He made a trip on one occasion and when he had performed the pilgrimage, he experienced pain and had blood drawn.’”

Ahmad alone gives this hadith and its chain of transmission is good.

In both sahih collections, from a hadith of Shu‘ba, from Ḥishām b. Zayd, from Anas b. Mālik (it states) that a Jewish woman brought to the Messenger of God (SAAS) a poisoned sheep and that he ate from it. She was then taken to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked her about this, and she replied, “I wanted to kill you!” He then commented, “God would never have given you power over me.” (Or he may have said, “power over that”.) People asked him, “Aren’t you going to kill her?” “No,” he replied.

Anas stated, “I continued thereafter to recognize its effects on the palate of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Abū Dā’ūd stated that Sulaymān b. Dā’ūd al-Mahri related to him, quoting Ibn Wahb (who said), “Yūnus informed me, from Ibn Shihāb, who said, ‘Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh used to relate that a Jewish woman of Khayhar poisoned a roasted sheep then presented it to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who took a shoulder and ate from it. A number of his Companions ate along with him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told them, ‘Take your hands away!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then sent for the woman and asked her, ‘Did you poison this sheep?’ The Jewess replied, ‘Who told you?’ ‘This in my hand told me,’ he answered, referring to the shoulder of meat. She then said, ‘Yes, I did.’ He asked, ‘What did you intend by that?’ She replied, ‘I told myself that if you were a prophet, it would not harm you. And if you were not a prophet, we would be rid of you.’”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then forgave her and did not punish her. Some of his Companions who had eaten of the sheep did die. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had blood drawn from his upper back because of his having eaten... from the sheep. Abū Hind, an anṣāri of Banū Bayḍā', drew the blood with the point and blade of a sword.”

Abū Dā'ūd then stated that Wahb b. Baqiyya related to him, quoting Khalid, from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was presented by a Jewess at Khaybar with a roast lamb. The ḥadīth proceeds as did the above from Jābīr. It goes on, “Bishr b. al-Barāʾ b. Maʿrūr died and so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent for the Jewess and asked her, ‘What made you do this?’” The ḥadīth goes on to recount much the same as did that of Jābīr, but states that he then ordered her execution. This account does not refer to the matter of drawing blood.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “We related this from a ḥadīth of Ḥammād b. Salama, from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra.”

He went on, “It is probable that he did not execute her initially, but did so when Bishr b. al-Barāʾ died.”

Al-Bayhaqī narrated from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Kaʿb b. Mālik, that a Jewess presented a roast sheep to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Khaybar. He asked her, “What’s this?” “A gift,” she replied. She was careful not to say a sadaqa, a charitable donation, for he would not then have eaten it. (The account went on) “He ate from it, as did his Companions. But then he told them, ‘Stop!’ He asked the woman, ‘Did you put poison in it?’ ‘Who told you that?’ she asked. ‘This bone did,’ he replied, referring to a leg of it he had in his hand. ‘Yes, I did,’ she told him. ‘Why?’ he asked. ‘What I wanted was that if you were an impostor, we would be rid of you. And if you were a prophet, it would not harm you.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had blood drawn from his upper back and ordered his Companions to do the same. Some of them died.”

Al-Zuhri stated, “She then accepted Islam and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left her alone.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “This ḥadīth is mursal. Perhaps ʿAbd al-Raḥmān conveyed it from Jābīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, may God be pleased with him.”

Ibn Iḥlāṣ reported from Abū al-Aswad, from ʿUrwa, as did Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from al-Zuhri, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) conquered Khaybar, killing some of its inhabitants, the Jewess Zaynab, daughter of al-Ḥārith, who was the niece of Marḥab, presented to Ṣafīyya some roast mutton that she had poisoned. She included plenty of shoulder and leg because she had learned that these were the parts of a sheep most liked by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came in to Ṣafīyya accompanied by Bishr b. al-Barāʾ b. Maʿrūr, of Banū Salama. She offered him the roast mutton and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took some shoulder and bit from it. Bishr took a bone and bit from it. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) swallowed his morsel, Bishr b. al-Barāʾ swallowed what was in his mouth. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘Take away your hands! The shoulder of this sheep tells me that my death will be announced because of it!’ Bishr b. al-Bara‘ then said, ‘By Him who honoured you, I found that too in the piece I ate! The only thing that prevented me from voicing it was that I respected you too much to want to make you dislike your food! And when you swallowed what you had in your mouth, I could not allow myself to protect my life to the exclusion of you. I had hoped you would not have swallowed it, for in it is my death too.’ And before Bishr could get up, his colour turned ashen and his pains were such that he could not move before he died.”

Al-Zuhri quoted Jabir as saying, “That day the Messenger of God (SAAS) had blood drawn. It was a freed-man of Banū Bayyāda who drew it using a sword point and blade. The Messenger of God (SAAS) lived on for three more years until he suffered the pain from which he died. He said, ‘I have continued to have pains often because of that piece of mutton I ate at Khaybar right on up to now, when my aorta is splitting.’”

“And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) died a martyr.”

Muhammad b. Ishāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) felt secure, Zaynab, daughter of al-Hārith, wife of Sallām b. Mishkam, presented him with a roasted sheep. She had enquired what part of that meat the Messenger of God (SAAS) preferred, and had been told that it was the shoulder. She put a great deal of poison in the shoulder, as well as in the rest of the sheep, and brought it to him. When she placed it before him, he took the shoulder section and bit from it but did not swallow it. With him was Bishr b. al-Bara‘ b. Ma‘ārūr. He had taken some of it just as had the Messenger of God (SAAS) had done, but Bishr had swallowed his. The Messenger of God (SAAS) spat it out and said, ‘This bone tells me it is poisoned!’

“He then summoned her and she confessed. He asked her, ‘What brought you to do this?’ She replied, ‘You well know what you did to my people! So I told myself, “If he is an impostor, I’ll rid of him. And if he is a prophet, he will be told of it.”’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) let her go, but Bishr died of the piece he had eaten.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Marwān b. Uthmān b. Abū Sa‘īd b. al-Mu‘allī related to me as follows, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) said during that illness from which he died, when the sister of Bishr b. al-Bara‘ b. Ma‘ārūr went in to see him, “Umm Bishr, now is the time when my ḥur, my aorta, is severing from that piece of food I ate in the company of your brother, at Khaybar.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The ḥur is the artery attached to the heart.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Muslims consider that the Messenger of God (SAAS) died a martyr as well as having been honoured by God with prophethood.”

76. That is, “when my death is imminent”
The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated, “Hilāl b. Bishr and Sulaymān b. Yūsuf al-Harrānī related to us as follows: ‘Abū Ghiyāth b. Ḥamad related to us, quoting ‘Abd al-Malīk b. Aba Ṣadra, from his father, from Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudari, that a Jewess presented a roasted sheep to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When people put out their hands (to eat it) he called out, “Stop! One of its limbs is telling me that it is poisoned!” He summoned the woman and asked her, “Did you poison your food?” “Yes,” she replied. “Why did you do that?” he asked her. She replied, “If you were an impostor, I would be ridding the people of you; and if you were truthful, then God would tell you of it.” “He then stretched forth his hand, saying, “Eat, bismi Allāhi, ‘in the name of God’.””

The narrator continued, “So we did eat, invoking God’s name, and it did not harm any one of us.”

The ḥāfīz al-Bazzār then added, “This is only related from ‘Abd al-Malīk b. Aba Ṣadra, on this one line of transmission.”

I note that there are very strange and offensive aspects to this hadith. But God knows best.

Al-Waqīdī stated that ‘Uyaynā b. Hisn, before he accepted Islam, saw visions in his sleep while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was besieging Khaybar. These visions inspired in him a desire to battle against the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and to conquer him. When he did go to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), at Khaybar, he found he had already taken it. So ‘Uyaynā said, “Muḥammad, give me some of the booty you have taken from my allies” — meaning the people of Khaybar. But the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), told him, “Your visions lied!” And he then told ‘Uyaynā what he had seen in his dream.

(The account went on) “‘Uyaynā then went home and was met by al-Ḥārīth b. ‘Awf, who said, ‘Did I not say you were putting your loyalty in the wrong place? By God, Muḥammad will triumph over all between East and West! Jews used to inform me of this. I swear, I heard Abū Raḥf Sallām b. Abū Huqayq say, “We envy Muḥammad for the prophethood, since it has now left Aaron’s people. He has been sent, though Jews will not obey me in this. We will suffer two massacres from him — one at Yathrib, the other at Khaybar.”’”

Al-Ḥārīth went on, “So I asked Sallām, ‘Will he govern the earth?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘he will, by the Torah that was revealed to Moses, but I don’t want Jews to be told of what I said of him.’”

DIVISION.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When he had finished with Khaybar, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left for Wādī al-Qurā. He besieged its inhabitants for some days and then returned to Medina.”

He then went on to relate the story of Mid‘am and how he was struck and killed by a stray arrow. (He told) how people then said, “Lucky for him: paradise!” The Messenger of God (SAAS) had responded, “Definitely not; by Him in whose hands is my soul, the cloak he took at Khaybar that the distributor of the booty did not receive will light fires (of hell) for him!”

It has been earlier related in similar form as in the account of Ibn Ishaq from the sahih collection of al-Bukhari. But God knows best.

An account of his battle at Wadi al-Qura will follow.

Imam Ahmad stated that Yahya b. Sa'id related to him, from Muhammad b. Yahya b. Habban, from Abu Umra, from Zayd b. Khalid al-Juhani, that one of the bravest of the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) died at Khaybar. When this was related to the Prophet (SAAS) he said, “Pray for your comrade!” The faces of those present showed their surprise at his saying this and he went on, “Your comrade strayed from God’s path.” (The account states) “So we searched his belongings and discovered one of those Jewish shell necklaces not worth more than a couple of dirhams!”

Abu Da’ud and al-Nasa’i related this similarly from a hadith of Yahya b. Sa’id al-Qatian. Abu Da’ud, Bishr b. al-Mufaddal and Ibn Maja also related it from a hadith of al-Layth b. Sa’d, all three attributing it to Yahya b. Sa’id al-Ansari.

Al-Bayhaqi related that Banu Fazara wanted to do battle against the Messenger of God (SAAS) on his way back from Khaybar and assembled for this purpose. He then sent a messenger to them suggesting a specific site for the battle. Having ascertained this, they fled as fast as they could, moving far outside his path.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded further and when Safiyya was free of her period he consummated his marriage with her at a place called Sudd al-Sahba, on his route to Medina. He served hayts for a wedding feast and stayed there with her for three nights. She accepted Islam and he freed her and married her. He gave her freedom as her dowry. She was one of the ummahat al-mdminin, ‘mothers of the believers’ as his Companions understood when he placed a veil over her when she rode behind him on the same mount. May God be pleased with her.

Muhammad b. Ishaq related in his biography of the Prophet (SAAS) as follows, “When he married Safiyya at Khaybar – on the way back – the woman who combed her hair and prepared her for him was Umm Sulaym, daughter of Millhan, the mother of Anas b. Malik. The Messenger of God (SAAS) spent the night with her in a pavilion of his, while Abu Ayyub kept watch over him, wearing his sword, patrolling around the tent until morning. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw him there, he asked him, ‘What is wrong, Abu Ayyub?’ He replied, ‘I was afraid for you from this woman. She is a woman whose father, husband and people you have killed. And until recently she was a disbeliever. So I feared for you from her.’ They say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘O God, preserve Abu Ayyub, just as he spent the night watching over me.’”

He went on, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from Sa’id b. al-Musayyab, how they had overslept past the morning prayer on their way back from Khaybar. He told how the Messenger of God (SAAS) was the first of them to wake up and that he then asked, ‘What have you done to us, Bilal!’ He replied, ‘Messenger of God,
He who took my soul was He who took yours too! 'You speak the truth,' he agreed. He then rode his camel a little way off and dismounted, performed the ablution and the prayer as he had done previously."

Mālik related it similarly from al-Zuhri, from Saʿid, but mursal, incomplete in its line of transmission. And this too is mursal, from this line as given.

Abū Dārūd stated that Ahmad b. Sāliḥ related to him, quoting Ibn Wahb (who said), "Yūnus informed me, from Ibn Shihāb, from Saʿid b. al-Musayyab, from Abū Hurayra (who said), the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), having finished with Khaybar, travelled on by night until we reached al-Kari, and there he had his wedding. He told Bilāl, 'Keep awake for us tonight.' But Bilāl's eyes closed in sleep as he rested against his baggage and neither the Prophet (ṢAAS) nor he, nor any of the others woke up before the sun struck them. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was the first to wake up. In alarm he called out Bilāl's name. Bilāl replied, 'By my father and mother, Messenger of God, He who took my soul away also took yours!"

"They rode their camels off a little way and then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed the ablution. He gave orders to Bilāl who announced the prayer, and then he led the morning prayer for them. When he had finished it, he said, 'One who forgets a prayer should perform it when he remembers. For God Almighty says, "Perform the prayer for remembrance (of Me)"'" (ṣurat Ta Ḥa, XX, v.14).

Yūnus stated, "Ibn Shihāb used to recite it (the hadith) like that."

Muslim related it the same from Ḥarmala b. Yahya, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Wahb. Therein is stated that this was on their return from Khaybar.

In the hadith of Shuʿba, from Jāmiʿ b. Shaddād, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Abū ʿAlqama, from Ibn Masʿūd, it is stated that occurred on their return from al-Ḥudaybiyya. In one report from him (it states) that it was Bilāl who kept awake for them. And there is a report from him (Bilāl) that it was he who used to keep awake for them.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi stated, "It is likely that this happened twice."

He went on, "And in a hadith of ʿImrān b. Ḥuṣayn and Abū Qatāda (there is reference to) their sleeping through the prayer. Also in it is the reference to the water vessel. It is likely that this makes reference to one of the two occasions in question, or it might be a third."

He went on, "Al-Wāqidi related in a hadith of Abū Qatāda that that happened on their way back from the expedition against Ṭabūk. He stated, 'Zāfir b. Sulaymān narrated, from Shuʿba, from Jāmiʿ b. Shaddād, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Ibn Masʿūd, that that occurred on their way back from Ṭabūk. But God knows best.'"

Al-Bayhaqi then proceeded to relate what the author of the sahih collection reported concerning the anecdote of ʿAwf al-ʿArābī, from Abū Raja, from ʿImrān b. Ḥuṣayn. It tells of their having slept through the prayer and that there was a woman who owned two water skins from which sufficient water was drawn to quench the entire army without diminishing the water in them.
He then recounted what Muslim related from the hadith of Thābit al-Bunānī, from 'Abd Allāh b. Ribāh, from Abū Qatāda. It is a long hadith and tells of their sleeping through the prayer and of the great quantity of water taken from that water vessel. 'Abd al-Razzāq related this from Ma‘mar, from Qatāda.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Mūsā b. Isma‘īl related to him, quoting 'Abd al-Wāhid, from ʿĀṣim, from Abū ʿUthmān, from Abū Mūsā al-Ashʿarī, about the expedition of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) against Khaybar. Abū Mūsā stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) moved out towards Khaybar and when his men looked down into a valley, they raised their voices in a shout of ‘ʿAllāhu Akbar! Lā Ilāha illā Allāh! God is most Great! There is no god but God!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told them, ‘Restrain yourselves! You are not calling out to someone deaf or far away; you are addressing One who is All-Hearing and near at hand; He is with you!’

“I was directly behind the mount of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he heard me as I said, ‘Lā ḥawla wa lā quwwata illā bi Allāh, ‘There is no strength nor power except with God’.’ He said, ‘Abd Allāh b. Qays. I responded, ‘At your service, Messenger of God.’ He then said, ‘Should I not direct you to a phrase from the treasures of paradise?’ ‘Yes, please do, Messenger of God, may my father and mother be your ransom!’ He went on, ‘Lā ḥawla wa lā quwwata illā bi Allāh.’”

The other authorities relate this too, along various lines of transmission, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Mūll, father of ʿUthmān al-Nahdi, from Abū Mūsā al-Ashʿarī.

What is correct is that this incident refers to their return from Khaybar. Abū Mūsā only arrived after the conquest of Khaybar, as is related above.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), so I have been informed, after he had conquered Khaybar, gave to Ibn Luqaym al-ʿAbsī its chickens and livestock. On the conquest of Khaybar, Ibn Luqaym spoke the following verses, ‘Naṭāt was attacked by the Prophet with a well-armed and very powerful squadron;

It was certain for shame when it was divided up and the warriors of Aslam and Ghifār were there in its midst.
They attacked Banū ʿAmr b. Zurʿa early in the morning, and al-Shiqq’s inhabitants had a grim day.
They made its cocks run in its open spaces, and left only chickens squawking in the trees.
Each fort had someone from Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal or Banū al-Najjār working with their horses.
And there were muhijīrs, their badges showing above their helmets, not considering flight.
I knew that Muḥammad would triumph and would certainly stay there for many months of Ṣafar.
Jews there opened their eyelids in the warfare that day beneath the dust.”

DIVISION.

An Account of those of the Companions who were martyred at Khaybar, may God be pleased with them, according to what Ibn Isḥāq b. Yasār, may God have mercy on him, and other authorities on the military engagements reported.

Of the best of the muḥājirūn were Rabi'a b. Aktham b. Sakhbara al-Asadi, freed-man of Banū Umayya, and Thaqif b. 'Amr and Rifa'a b. Masrūh, allies of Banū Umayya, 'Abd Allāh b. al-Hubayy b. Uhayb b. Suhaym b. Ghiṣra of Banū Sa'd b. Layth, ally of Banū Asad, and their nephew. Of the ansār, there were Bishr b. al-Bara' b. Ma'rūr, who ate from the poisoned sheep in the company of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), as is told above, and Fuḍayl b. al-Nu'mān, both these men being of Banū Salam. Then there were Mas'ūd b. Sa'd b. Qays b. Khalid b. 'Amir b. Zurayq al-Zarqī, Mahmūd b. Maslama al-Ashhali, Abū Dayyāḥ Hāritha b. Thābit b. al-Nu'mān al-‘Amri, al-Hārith b. Ḥāṭib, Urwa b. Murra b. Surāqa, Aws b. al-Fā'id, Unayf b. Ḥābit, Thābit b. Athīla, Ṭālḥa, Umāra b. Uqba, killed by an arrow, ‘Āmir b. al-Akwa', and then Salama b. ‘Amr b. al-Akwa'; he was struck in his knee by the edge of his sword and it killed him, as is told above; may God be pleased with him. Then there was al-Aswad, the shepherd. Ibn Isḥāq is alone in telling here the story of the last-mentioned. We already related it early on in the account of the expedition. And to God belong all praise and credit.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “According to Ibn Shihab, those of Banū Zahra who were martyred were Mas'ūd b. Rabi'a, an ally of theirs from al-Qāra. And of the ansār of Banū 'Amr b. 'Awwf there was Aws b. Qatāda, may God be pleased with them all.”

THE INCIDENT INVOLVING AL-HAJJĀJ B. 'ILĀT AL-BAHZĪ, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “When Khaybar had been conquered, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) talked with al-Hājjāj b. 'Ilaḍ al-Sulami, of the sub-tribe of Bahz, who asked him, ‘Messenger of God, in Mecca I own money in the possession of my wife Umm Shayba, daughter of Abū Ṭalḥa (she had earlier borne him his son Muṣ'īd b. al-Hājjāj) and I also have other funds held by various merchants there. Please allow me to go there.’ He did so. Al-Hājjāj then said, ‘Messenger of God, I'll be forced to speak lies.’ ‘Do so,’ he told him.
"Al-Ḥajjāj stated, 'I travelled to Mecca and at the pass al-Bayḍā' there were men of Quraysh listening for news and asking about the activities of the Messenger of God (ṣaas). They had heard that he had gone to Khaybar, which they knew to be the chief village of Ḥijāz, productive, well-fortified and well populated. They were seeking information from travellers.

"When they saw me, they said, "It's al-Ḥajjāj b. Ḥāṭṭ." (They did not know of my acceptance of Islam.) "He'll have news, by God. Tell us, Abū Muḥammad. We have learned that al-Qāṭī, 'the breaker of family ties', has gone off to Khaybar, a town of Jews and the 'farm of the Hijāz'." I replied, "I heard that too; and I have news that will please you." They crowded at both sides of my camel asking, "Well, what is it, Ḥajjāj!" I replied, "He has been badly defeated, such as you could never imagine. Very many of his men have been killed and Muḥammad has been taken captive. And they (the Jews) have said, 'We'll not kill him; instead, we'll send him in to Mecca where they can kill him among themselves in revenge for those of their men he killed.'" (Hearing this) the Quraysh men went off into Mecca shouting, "News has arrived! You need only wait and Mohammed will be brought in to be killed among you!"

"Al-Ḥajjāj went on, 'I asked them, "Please help me collect the money I own and is owed me in Mecca; I want to go to Khaybar and acquire the spoils from Muḥammad and his men before some other merchants precede me there." And they did, gathering my assets faster than I had ever heard before. I then went to my wife and said, "I want my money," (I had left money there with her), "for I want to go to Khaybar to seize opportunities to buy before other merchants precede me there."

"When al-ʿAḥbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib heard the news and about myself, he came and stood beside me in the tent of a merchant. He asked, "Ḥajjāj, what news is this you bring?" I replied, "Could you keep safe what I might entrust with you?" "Yes," he answered. "Then wait", I told him, "till I can meet you alone; I'm collecting my funds, as you can see; please leave me until I finish." When I had finished getting together everything I had in Mecca and was ready to leave, I met al-ʿAḥbās and said, "Abū al-ʿPaḍl, keep private what I tell you for three days, because I fear pursuit. After that, say whatever you like." "I agree," he said. I then told him, "I left your nephew the bridegroom of their king's daughter" - meaning Ṣafiyya, daughter of Huyayy - "after he had conquered Khaybar and had taken away all it contained for himself and his men." "What are you saying, Ḥajjāj?" he asked. "It's true, by God," I assured him, "but keep it confidential about me. I have accepted Islam and only came for my money fearing it might be seized. When three days have elapsed, you can tell what you know as ever you want."

"On the third day, al-ʿAḥbās dressed in a fine robe, put on perfume, took his walking stick and went out to the kaʿba, which he perambulated. When people saw him, they said, “Abū al-Fadl, this must imply, by God, that you are remaining steadfast in the face of some great misfortune!” “Not at all, by God, by Whom you swear oaths. Muḥammad has conquered Khaybar and has married their king’s daughter after seizing all their possessions, which now belong to him and his men.” “Who brought you this news?” they asked. “The same man who brought news to you! He came to you as a Muslim, took his money and has gone off to join Muḥammad and his men!” “O servants of God,” they exclaimed, “God’s enemy has escaped! If we had known this he would have had trouble with us!” Soon after, news came to them confirming this.”

It is thus that Ibn Ishāq related this story, without a full chain of transmission. Imam Aḥmad substantiated it by saying, “Abd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting Maʿmar (who said), ‘I heard Thabit relating from Anas, as follows, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) conquered Khaybar, al-Ḥajjāj b. ʿIlāt asked him, ‘Messenger of God, I have funds and family in Mecca. I would like to bring them. Would I be excused if I maligned you or told lies?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him to say whatever he liked. So he went to his wife after his arrival there and said, ‘Gather up for me what you have; I want to purchase the booty from Muḥammad and his men. They have been captured and their possessions seized.’”

“This news spread throughout Mecca. The Muslims were defeated and the polytheists expressed their jubilation. When the news reached al-ʿAbbās, he was devastated; he could scarcely stand up.”

“Maʿmar stated, ‘Uṭmān al-Khazrajī informed me, from Miqsam, who said, ‘He (al-ʿAbbās) picked up a son of his named Qutham stretched out on the ground and placed him on his chest, reciting the following verse,

‘My darling Qutham, who has such a nice little nose,
A child of affluence, despite what is claimed.’”

“Thabit stated, from Anas, ‘He then sent a young slave of his to Ḥajjāj b. ʿIlāt with the message, “Woe on you for what you brought! What is it you are saying? What God promised is better than what you brought!” Ḥajjāj b. ʿIlāt responded, “Give my greetings to Abū al-Fadl and ask him to let me come to him in one of his houses. I have news that will please him.” The slave went back home and when he got there called out, “Rejoice, Abū al-Fadl!” Al-ʿAbbās jumped with joy and kissed him on the forehead. When the slave told him what Ḥajjāj had said, al-ʿAbbās gave him his freedom.

“Then al-Ḥajjāj came to him and told him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had conquered Khaybar and had captured their possessions, which had been apportioned. He recounted how the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had chosen Ṣafīyya, daughter of Huyayy, for himself and offered her a choice between having her freedom and marrying him, or joining her family; she had chosen for him to free her and to be his wife. Al-Ḥajjāj went on, “But I’ve just come for my funds that are here and I want to take it. I asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) for permission to come and he gave it to me, telling me to say whatever I liked. So keep this private for three days then tell whatever you want.”

“‘So his wife gathered all his funds, jewellery and others of his possessions she had with her, gave them to him and he moved on with it. Three days later al-‘Abbās came to al-Ḥajjāj’s wife and said, ‘What happened to your husband?’ She related to him that he had left on such-and-such a day. She told him, ‘May God not sadden you, Abū al-Faḍl. The news you received did upset us.’ He replied, ‘Indeed not; God does not sadden me and, praise be to God, nothing has happened to displease me. God has conquered Khaybar for His messenger and its properties have been allotted already. The Messenger of God (SAAS) has chosen Ṣafiyya for himself. If you care for your husband, you should join him.’ “By God, am I to think you’re telling me the truth?” she asked. “Indeed I am and the situation is as I have told you,” he assured her.

“‘Al-‘Abbās then went to an assembly of Quraysh. As he went by them, they called out, ‘May nothing but good befall you, Abī al-Faḍl.’ He replied, ‘Nothing but good has, praise be to God! Al-Ḥajjāj b. Ilāt related to me that God has conquered Khaybar for His messenger. Its properties have been allotted, and he has chosen Ṣafiyya for himself. He asked me to keep this confidential for three days. He came back only to collect his money and possessions here, and then he left.’”

“God now reverted to the polytheists that depression that had been upon the Muslims. Having previously taken sadly to their homes, the Muslims now came forth and went to al-‘Abbās and he told them all he knew. They were delighted, their depression, anger and sadness now transferring to the polytheists.”

The chain of authorities for this hadith meets the criteria of both the great authorities. Yet only al-Nasṣāḥ of all six authors of the great collections of ahadith included it. He quoted Ḥishāq b. Ibrāhīm, from ʿAbd al-Razzāq, and his hadith is similar.

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi related it through Maḥmūd b. Ghaylān, from ʿAbd al-Razzāq. He also related it through Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān, from Zayd b. al-Mubārak, from Muḥammad b. Thawr, from Maʿmar in similar form.

Mūsā b. Uqba similarly stated in his work on the military engagements that much betting and wagering now arose among Quraysh. Some people said, “Muhammad and his men will prevail.” Others said, “The two allies and the Jews of Khaybar will prevail.” Al-Ḥajjāj b. Ilāt al-Sulamī, from the sub-tribe of al-Bahz had accepted Islam and witnessed, along with the Messenger of God (SAAS), the conquest of Khaybar. His wife was Umm Shayba, sister of ʿAbd al-Dār b. Quṣayy. Al-Ḥajjāj had much money; he owned mines in Banū Salīm territory. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) prevailed over Khaybar, al-Ḥajjāj asked permission from the Messenger of God (SAAS) to go to Mecca to gather together his funds. He gave permission; the hadith proceeds hereafter as above. But God knows best.
Al-Suhayli, may God be pleased with him, stated, “On the reason for al-Ḥajjāj accepting Islam we narrated a strange story concerning the jinn, ‘the spirits’. He was the father of Naṣr b. Ḥajjāj, who was banished by ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, may God be pleased with him, from Medina because he had seduced some of the city’s young women. Al-Fārīʿa, daughter of Ḥammām, mother of al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf al-Thaqafi, spoke the following line about him, ‘Indeed not; no way to wine for me to drink, and no way to Naṣr b. Ḥajjāj.’

“When he went to Syria, he fell in love with the wife of Abū al-ʿAswad d-Sulami, and wasted away for love of her. He was known as al-Ḍinni, ‘he who wasted away’. He died from this.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Among the poetry composed about the expedition to Khaybar are the verses by Ḥassān b. Thābit, ‘Those of Khaybar fought only badly for the farms and date-palms they had accumulated.

They disliked death and so their possessions became booty; they acted like blameworthy cowards.
Would they flee death? The death of those who starve is not pretty.’”

Kaʿb b. Malik said, according to what Ibn Hishām related from Abū Zayd al-Anṣārī,

“We descended on Khaybar and its wells, the veins of our heroes’ hands standing out,
Men brave in fierce battle, not lacking strength, daring in every encounter.
Many are the ashes beneath their pots each winter, men who strike with Yemeni swords made of Indian steel, Considering death a reward from God if they achieve martyrdom; they hope for it, considering it a success for ʿĀhmād.
Protecting and guarding Muḥammad’s honour, protecting him with tongue and hand, · Helping him in every matter that concerns him, generously offering their lives for that of Muḥammad, Believing sincerely in news of the unknown world, seeking honour and success in the future thereby.”

Section: On the passage of the Messenger of God (ṣaṣaṣ) past Wādī al-Qurā and his besieging the fews and how they made peace with him, as related by al-ʿWaṣqīdī.

Al-ʿWaṣqīdī stated, “ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz related to me, from al-Zuhārī, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) from Khaybar to Wādī al-Qurā. Rifa‘a b. Zayd b. Wahb al-Judhami had presented a black slave named Mid‘am to the Messenger of God (SAAS). It was he who would set the saddle upon the mount of the Messenger of God (SAAS). When we made a halt at Wādī al-Qurā we came up against some Jews, and some bedouin also approached it. While Mid‘am was setting the saddle of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in position – some Jews having already greeted us with arrow shots when we dismounted and we were therefore not ready packed and loaded, they being above us in their fortresses shouting – a stray arrow came in and struck and killed Mid‘am. People said, “Lucky for him: paradise!” But the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Definitely not, by Him in whose hands is my soul. The cloak he took at Khaybar from the spoils that the distributor of the booty did not receive will light fires (of hell) for him!” When people heard this, a man came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) with one or two sandal straps. The Prophet (SAAS) then said, “A sandal strap or two of hell-fire!”’

This story is in both sahih collections from the hadith of Makharij, from Thawr b. Yazid, from Abū al-Ghayth, from Abū Hurayra, from the Prophet (SAAS), in similar form.

Al-Waqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) equipped his men for battle and arranged them in lines. He gave his banner to Sa‘d b. ‘Ubada, a flag to al-Ḥabab b. al-Mundhir, another to Sahl b. Ḥanif and another flag to ‘Ikāb b. Bishr. He then called the enemy to Islam and told them that if they did they would win their possessions and spare their blood and that God would reward them.

“One of the enemy then came out to challenge for single combat and al-Zubayr b. al-Awwām went out against him and killed him. Then another made the challenge and ‘Ali went out against him and killed him. This went on till 11 of them had been killed; each time one of them was killed, the rest were invited to accept Islam.

“When prayer times came that day, he would pray with his Companions then return and call upon them to accept Islam and to come to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, and His messenger. He went on fighting them till evening. Early next morning he attacked them again and the sun had not risen more than the length of a spear before they surrendered. He conquered it by force and so God gave them their possessions as booty; they won large quantities of furnishings and various goods.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained at Wādī al-Qurā for four days. He divided up what he had taken among his men, leaving the land and palm trees in the hands of the Jews, putting them in charge of it. When news reached the Jews of Taymā‘ how the Messenger of God (SAAS) had defeated Khaybar, Fadak and Wādī al-Qurā, they made peace with him, agreeing to pay the jizya, the poll-tax. They kept their possessions.
“Although Umar had later evicted the Jews from Khaybar and Fadak, he did not force out the people of Taymâ‘ and Wādī al-Qūrâ, because the latter extended into the land of Syria; he considered that what was between Wādī al-Qūrâ and Medina to be part of Hijâz, areas beyond any part of Syria.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left to return to Medina, having now finished with Khaybar and Wādī al-Qūrâ and God, Almighty and Glorious is He, having given him much booty.”

Al-Waqidi went on, “Ya‘qūb b. Mu‘āmmad related to me, from ʿAbd al-Rāḥmān b. ʿAbd Allâh b. Abî Ša‘ṣa‘a, from al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd Allâh b. Ka‘b, from Umm Ṭimâra, who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-Jurf saying, “Do not make your way to the women after the ṣalāt al-ʿāshâ’, the late evening prayer.” One man from the quarter did make his way to his family, but found what he did not like. But he left her free and did not himself leave her. He was reluctant to give up his wife by separating from her. He had children by her and loved her. So by disobeying the Messenger of God (SAAS) he had seen what he did not like.’”

DIVISION.

It is established in both sahih collections that when Khaybar was conquered, the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed the Jews in charge of it in return for a half of its dates and other produce.

In some phrases of this hadith it is implied that he was removing it from their ownership, while in others it is stated, “The Prophet (SAAS) stated to them, ‘We will keep you in them for as long as we wish.’”

In the Sunan works it is stated that he would send ʿAbd Allâh b. Rawâḥa to appraise it for them when he came to take the harvest, holding them responsible for it. When ʿAbd Allâh b. Rawâḥa was killed at Mu‘ātâ, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Jabbar b. Šakhūr to do this, as is told above. The place citing these phrases and discussion of their provenance is in the section on temporary sharecropping contracts in the work Kitâb al-Āhkâm, if God so wills it, and in Him is our trust.

Mu‘āmmad b. Ishaq stated, “I asked Ibn Shiḥāb how it was that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had given the Jews of Khaybar their palm-groves. He informed me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) conquered Khaybar by force and after fighting. Khaybar was part of what God bestowed upon him as war booty; he divided its proceeds into fifths, distributing it among the Muslims. After the fighting, some of its inhabitants came out to leave and the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for them to approach and told them, ‘If you wish, I will make over these properties to you on condition that you work them; their proceeds will be divided between us. I will let you stay for as long as God lets you stay.’

“They accepted and worked the land in accord with this agreement. The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to send ʿAbd Allâh b. Rawâḥa to divide up the proceeds, treating them fairly in the appraisal.
"When God took to Himself His Prophet (SAAS), Abū Bakr affirmed Khaybar in their control on the same basis as that which the Messenger of God (SAAS) had maintained before he died. ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb reconfirmed them in this from the beginning of his rule. But then ʿUmar learned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said during that illness during which God took hold of him, 'Two religions shall not be together in the Arabian peninsula!' ʿUmar examined this issue closely until he became utterly convinced of its authenticity, at which point he sent a message to the Jews saying, 'God has granted me permission to evict you. I have learned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Two religions shall not be together in the Arabian peninsula." Anyone with a contract with the Messenger of God (SAAS) should bring it to me and I will enforce it. Those without such contracts should prepare to leave.' And ʿUmar did evict those who had no contracts with the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

I comment that the Jews of Khaybar in latter-day times, after 300 (years) claim to have in their possession a document from the Messenger of God (SAAS), in which it states that he exempted them from paying the jizya, the poll-tax. Some scholars have been so deluded by this document as to advocate exempting them from the jizya, this being Sheikh Aḥmad b. Khayrūn, of the Shāfiʿī school. The document is spurious and fake, devoid of authenticity; I have demonstrated its foolishness from many viewpoints in a separate book.

A number of colleagues have referred to it and to its foolishness in their writings, such as Ibn al-Ṣibāgh, in his work Masāʾil and Sheikh Abū Hāmid in his commentary. Ibn al-Maslama devoted a separate section to refer to and to refute it. Now, 700 years later, they are all excited about this and have brought out a book with a copy not mentioned by the early authorities. I have examined it and found it to be fake. It contains testimony of Saʿd b. Muʿādh, though he had died before the date of Khaybar. It also gives the testimony of Muʿāwiya b. Abū Sufyān, though he had not yet accepted Islam. At its end it states, "And ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib wrote it." This is incorrect, a mistake. It refers to the jizya, too, even though this had not yet been legislated. This tax was first introduced and taken from the people of Najrān. They are said to have arrived at the end of 9 AH. But God knows best.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, "Nāfi', freed-man of ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar related to me, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, 'I, al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām and al-Miqdād b. al-Aswād went out to inspect our properties at Khaybar. When we arrived there, we separated and went to our properties. During the night, while I slept on my bed, an attack was made on me and my wrists were dislocated. When I cried out for my companions, they came and asked me who had done this. I told them I did not know. They administered to my hands and then took me to ʿUmar, who declared, "This is the work of the Jews of Khaybar!"

"He then stood up before the people to make a speech and said, "People, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had an agreement with the Jews of Khaybar that we should evict them if we wished. They have attacked 'Abd Allāh b. Umar and dislocated his hands, as you have learned, having attacked one of the ānṣār before him. We have no doubt that it was they who did it; we have no enemies here besides them. Those who have property at Khaybar should proceed to them; I am going to evict the Jews.” And he did evict them.”

I note that Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb had a share of the booty at Khaybar. He left it as a waqf, a charitable endowment, in God’s cause, stipulating that it be managed in accord with the instruction set by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), recorded in the sahih collections. He directed that it be managed by the most righteous of his male and female descendants.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqi stated (in a heading) in his work Dala’īl (The Signs), “A summary of the chapters on the military expeditions which are mentioned as having occurred after the conquest of Khaybar and before the umrāt al-qadār, even though the date of some of these is not considered clear by the scholars of the military chronicles.”

THE EXPEDITION OF ABŪ BAKR AL-SIDDIQ TO BANŪ FAZĀRA.

Imām Ahmad stated that Bahz related to him, quoting Ikrima b. ʿAmmār, quoting Iyās b. Salama (who said), “My father related to me, saying, ‘We went forth with Abū Bakr b. Abū Quḥāfa, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) having given him command over us. We attacked Banū Fazāra, and when we arrived near the well, Abū Bakr gave us orders and we dismounted to rest for the night. When we had performed the al-ṣubh prayer, Abū Bakr ordered us to attack. We killed at the well those who passed before us.’”

“Salama went on, ‘I then looked over at the mass of the enemy which included children and women moving towards the mountain while I pursued them. I was concerned that they would get to the mountain ahead of me, so I cast an arrow which fell between them and the mountain. I then led them back to Abū Bakr whom I reached at the well. Among the enemy there was a woman of Fazāra wearing a worn-out leather garment. With her she had her daughter, an unusually attractive Arab girl. Abū Bakr presented her daughter to me. I did not sleep with her before we reached Medina, then again I went to bed without sleeping with her. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) met me in the market and asked me, ‘Salama, give the woman to me!” I replied, “By God, Messenger of God, she attracts me greatly but I’ve not slept with her.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) remained silent and left me. Next day he met me in the market and said, “Salama, give the woman to me!” I replied, “By God, Messenger of God, she attracts me greatly, but I’ve not slept with her!’” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) remained silent and left me. Next day the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) met me in the market and said, “Salama, give the woman to me, may God preserve your father!” I replied, “I swear by God, Messenger of God, I’ve not slept with her, but she is yours.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent her to the people of Mecca who had in their hands some Muslim prisoners. The Messenger of God (SAAS) ransomed them with this woman."

Muslim and al-Bayhaqi related this from a hadith of Ikrima b. 'Ammār.

THE EXPEDITION OF 'UMAR B. AL-KHATTĀB, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM, TO TURBA, IN HAWĀZIN TERRITORY, FOUR MILES BEYOND MECCA.

Then al-Bayhaqi related, through al-Waqidi with the lines of tradition given by him, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent 'Umar b. al-Khattāb, may God be pleased with him, along with 30 riders and a guide of Banū Hilāl. They travelled by night and kept concealed by day. When they reached the enemy territory, they fled and so 'Umar returned to Medina. He was asked, "Would you like to do battle with Khathām?" He replied, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered me only to battle Hawāzin in their lands."

THE EXPEDITION OF 'ABD ALLĀH B. RAWĀHA TO YUSAYR B. RIZĀM, THE JEW.

He then related, through Ibrāhīm b. Lahi'a, from Abū al-Aswad, from 'Urwa, and through Mūsā b. 'Uqba, from al-Zuhri, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāha with 30 riders – inclusive of 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāha – to Yusayr b. Rizām, the Jew, whom they reached at Khaybar. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had heard that he was joining with Ghaṭafān to attack him along with them. When they (the Muslims) met with him, they told him, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) has sent us to you to place you in charge of Khaybar." They stayed with him until he eventually followed them with 30 men, each of whom had a co-rider from the Muslims. When they all reached Qarqara Niyar, a place some 6 miles from Khaybar, Yusayr b. Rizām regretted what he had agreed and reached for the sword of 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāha. The latter was aware of this and first held back his mount, then rushed ahead, leading the others. When he could overcome Yusayr, he struck his leg, cutting it off. Yusayr then charged ahead, wielding a cudgel of fir wood and with it struck at the face of 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāha, hitting him on top of his head. Each of the Muslims then turned upon his co-rider and killed him. (All were killed) except one Jew whom they were unable to catch. None of the Muslims were killed; and the Messenger of God (SAAS) spat upon the wound of 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāha. The wound did not fester and it did not hurt him for as long as he lived.

ANOTHER EXPEDITION WITH BASHĪR B. SĀ'D.

A hadith is related through al-Waqidi, with its chain of transmission, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Bashīr b. Sā'd with 30 riders to Banū Murra, in Fadak territory. He drove off their camels and they did battle with him. The Jews killed all the men with him; Bashîr displayed great courage that day and fought most fiercely. Eventually he took refuge in Fadak, spending the night with a Jew there. After that he made his way back to Medina.

Al-Wâqíḍî stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then sent forth Ghalib b. ‘Abd Allâh against them, along with a group of his chief Companions.” He then mentioned Usâma b. Zayd, Abû Mas‘ûd al-Badrî, and Ka‘b b. ‘Ujra.

Thereafter al-Wâqíḍî went on to relate how Usâma b. Zayd killed Mîrdas b. Nuhayk, an ally of Banû Murra. He told how, when he held his sword over him, Mîrdas spoke the words, La Ilaha illa Allâh! “There is no god but God!” and that those with him criticized Usâma since the man had gone on saying this until he had brought his sword down. Al-Wâqíḍî said that Usâma later regretted what he had done.

Yûnûs b. Bukayr related this story from Ibn Iṣḥâq, from a sheikh of Banû Salama, from men of his tribe, to the effect that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Ghalib b. ‘Abd Allâh al-Kalbî to the territory of Banû Murra. He captured Mîrdas b. Nuhayk, an ally of theirs from al-Ḫurqa, and Usâma killed him.

Ibn Iṣḥâq stated, “Muḥammad b. Usâma b. Muḥammad b. Usâma related to me from his father, from his grandfather Usâma b. Zayd, who said, ‘I and one of the ansâr captured him’ (meaning Mîrdas b. Nuhayk). ‘And when we drew our swords over him, he said, ‘I testify that la Ilaha illa Allâh!’ But we did not put down our swords and killed him. When we went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and related this to him, he asked, ‘Usâma who will be for you (regarding such a case where it has been testified) that la Ilaha illa Allâh ‘there is no god but God?’ I replied, ‘But Messenger of God, he only said it to avoid being killed.’ He repeated, ‘Usâma, who will be for you (regarding such a case where it has been testified that) la Ilaha illa Allâh?’ And, I swear, he kept on repeating this to me until I wished I had not previously been a Muslim, that I had only become one that day and that I had not killed him. So I told him, “Messenger of God, I give my word that I will never kill any man who says, ‘la Ilaha illa Allâh.’” He then asked me, “And what about after me?” “And after you (your death) too,” I replied.”

Imâm Ahmad stated that Hushaym b. Bashîr related, quoting Ḥuṣayn, from Abû Zûbâyûn, who said, “I heard Usâma b. Zayd relate as follows, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out to al-Ḫurqa of Juḥayna. We attacked them in the morning. One of their men fought extremely well against us, and when they retreated, it was he who defended their rear. I and an ansârî overcame him and as we did so, he said, ‘la Ilaha illa Allâh’. The ansârî stood back from him, but I killed him. News of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he asked, ‘Usâma, did you kill him after he said, ‘la Ilaha illa Allâh?’” I replied, “But Messenger of God, he only said that to avoid death.” But he kept on asking me the same until I wished I had only become a Muslim that day.”

Al-Bukhārî and Muslim gave this account from a hadith of Hushaym in similar terms.
Ibn Isḥāq stated, “Yaʿqūb b. Ṭutba related to me, from Muslim b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Juhani, from Jundub b. Makith al-Juhani, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAṢ) sent Ghālib b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Kalb, Kalb of Layth, to Banū al-Mulawah at al-Kadid with orders to attack them. I was with his expedition and we went out as far as al-Qudayd, where al-Ḥarīth b. Mālik b. al-Barqāʾ al-Laythi met us and we took him prisoner. He said, “I came out only to accept Islam.” Ghālib b. ʿAbd Allāh told him, “If you were on your way to accept Islam, then it won’t hurt you to be tied up for a day and a night. And if you really had some other purpose, then we’ll have you secured.”

“So he tied him up and left him under the charge of a young black man we had with us, whom he told, “Stay with him until we come back for you; if he gives you trouble, cut off his head!” So we went on to the al-Kadid valley, where we made a halt in the early evening and my companions sent me on towards al-Kadid. I made my way to a hill that would allow me to overlook the village. I stretched out on the ground. It was before sunset. One of their men came outside and saw me stretched out on the hill. He told his wife, “I can see something dark on this hill that I did not notice earlier in the day. Look and see whether the dogs have dragged out some of your utensils.” She did look, then said, “I swear, I’m not missing anything.” The man then said, “Hand me my bow and two arrows from my quiver.” She did so and he shot an arrow at me that struck me in the side’ (or he may have said, ‘on my forehead’). ‘I pulled it out and put it aside, without moving. He then shot the other arrow at me, piercing the top of my shoulder. I withdrew it too and put it aside without moving. The man then told his wife, “I’m sure my arrows would have hurt him; if he were a scout, he would have moved. In the morning, go out and retrieve my arrows; I don’t want the dogs to chew them up.”

He went on, “We left them alone until their herd had been milked and were lying down quietly and a part of the night had passed. We then launched an attack upon them. We killed some and drove off their herd, heading away with them. Their shouts soon aroused others of them nearby. We raced off, eventually passing by al-Ḥarīth b. Mālik b. al-Barqāʾ and his companion. We continued on, with him accompanying us, until we heard the shouts of our pursuers who were too numerous for us to tackle. Soon all that separated us from them was the Qudayd valley. Then God sent down a flood of water from wherever He wished; we had not previously seen any rain, nor conditions for it. It came down so hard that no one could withstand it. I saw the enemy force standing there staring at us, unable to get at us, while we drove off their animals” – or “led them off” (al-Nufaylī was uncertain). “We hurried away with them until we reached the track; when we had proceeded down it, they were unable to retrieve what we had taken.”

Abū Dāūd related it from a hadith of Muhammad b. Isḥāq; in his account the narrator’s name is given as ʿAbd Allāh b. Ghālib, whereas the correct name is Ghālib b. ʿAbd Allāh, as above.
Al-Waqidi gave this story with a different line of authorities and in his version it was stated that he was accompanied by 130 men.

Al-Bayhaqi at this point narrated, through al-Waqidi, the expedition of Bashir b. Sa’d also in the vicinity of Khaybar. They encountered a large force of Arabs and seized much livestock. His dispatch on this expedition had been at the suggestion of Abû Bakr and 'Umar, may God be pleased with both. With him there were 300 Muslims, along with their guide Ḥusayl b. Nawbara; it was he who had been the guide of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Khaybar. Al-Waqidi stated this.

THE EXPEDITION OF ABÛ HADRAD TO AL-GHĀBA.

Yûnus stated, quoting Muḥammad b. Ishaq, "It was Ja'far b. 'Abd Allāh b. Aslam who related to me the story of Abû Hadrad to al-Ghāba. He quoted Abû Hadrad as saying, ‘I arranged marriage with a woman of my tribe, promising her a dowry of two hundred dirhams. So I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to seek his help in my wedding. He asked me, “How much dowry did you promise her?” “Two hundred dirhams,” I told him. He exclaimed, “Goodness gracious, I swear by God, if you were just picking up the money from a valley floor, you couldn’t have given more! I swear, I don’t have enough to help you.” A few days later a man from Jasham b. Mu'awiya approached; his name was Rifā'a b. Qays - or Qays b. Rifā'a. He was accompanied by a large group of Jasham men, with whom he encamped at al-Ghāba, with the intention of combining with Qays to fight against the Messenger of God (SAAS). He was a man of fine birth and reputation among Jasham.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) summoned myself and two other Muslims and said, “Go out and get some information about this man.” He then gave us a decrepit old she-camel, mounting one of us on it. I swear, it was so weak it could only get up with him, when some men pushed it up from behind. It could scarcely stand up. He told us, “Make do with her.”

"So we left bearing arms consisting of swords and arrows. When we arrived at sunset close to the village, I hid on one side and told my companions to hide on another. I told them, “If you hear me crying Allâhu Akbar! and running to their camp, then you shout the same and follow me.”

"We remained waiting to attack them by surprise until night overcame us. The darkest part of the night passed. They had a shepherd who had gone out to graze their flock. He was late in returning and they were worried about him. Their leader, Rifā'a b. Qays eventually got up and took his sword, which he hung around his neck, saying, “By God, I'm going out to find out about our shepherd; something must have happened to him.” Some of those with him said, “By God, don’t you go; we'll do it for you.” "No," he replied. “Only I will go. I don’t want any of you to follow me.”

"He then came out and passed by me. When he was in my range, I shot an arrow at him, piercing him in the heart. I swear, he did not utter a sound!
I jumped out at him and cut off his head, then raced towards their camp, shouting Allāhu Akbar! My companions did the same. I swear, they fled in disorder, taking with them their women, children and those possessions they could. We drove off large numbers of their camels and livestock which we took back to the Messenger of God (SÀAS). I went to him carrying the man’s head. He gave me 13 baggage camels from those we captured as my dowry. So I concluded my marriage.”

THE EXPEDITION IN WHICH MUHALLIM B. JUTHĀMA KILLED ĀMIR B. AL-ḌABAT.

Yazid b. ‘Abd Allah b. Qusayt related to me, from Ibn ‘Abd Allah b. Abū Ḥadrad, from his father, who said, “The Messenger of God (SÀAS) sent us out against Iḍām. Our group of Muslims included Abū Qatāda al-Ḥarīth b. Ribāt and Muḥallim b. Jaththāma b. Qays. We went on until we were in the Iḍām valley. There Āmir b. al-Ḍabat al-Ashja’ī passed us by; he was riding a young camel, carrying a few provisions and a vessel of yoghurt. He saluted us with the Muslim words of greeting and so we refrained from attacking him. But Muḥallim b. Jaththāma attacked and killed him because of some earlier unresolved problem and seized his camel and provisions. When we reached the Messenger of God, (SÀAS) we told him our news and it was about us that the following verses of the Qurān were revealed, ‘O you who believe! When you go forth in God’s cause, be circumspect. Do not say to those who greet you in peace, “You’re no Muslim!” and seek for worldly gain. With God there will be many rewards. That is the way you behaved previously, but God has now favoured you. Be aware that God has knowledge of what you do’’ (sūrat al-Nisāʾ; IV, v.94).

Ibnm Aḥmad related this from Ya’qūb, from his father, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, from Yazid b. ‘Abd Allah b. Qusayt, from al-Qa‘qa’ b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Ḥadrad, from his father.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Muḥammad b. Ja‘far related to me, saying, ‘I heard Ziyād b. Ḍumlāra b. Sa‘d al-Ḍamrī narrating a ḥadīth from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from his father and from his grandfather, both of whom said – they had both been present at Ḥunayn – “The Messenger of God (SÀAS) performed the al-ṣuhr, noon prayer, then went under the shade of a tree where he sat. ‘Uyayna b. Badr went over to him and demanded the blood of Āmir b. al-Ḍabat al-Ashja’ī, chief of (Banū) Āmir. ‘Would you agree to now accept 50 camels and another fifty when we return to Medina?’ the Messenger of God (SÀAS) asked. ‘Uyayna b. Badr responded, ‘By God, I’ll not leave him alone till his women experience the same sorrow my women have.’ ”

“‘A man from Banū Layth named Ibn Mukayl, a short man, arose. He said, ‘Messenger of God, I find nothing comparable to this death since the beginnings of Islam. All I can compare it to is the rear sheep that flee when their leader out in front is shot. Keep to the traditional ways today and bring change tomorrow!’
""‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) reiterated, ‘Will you agree to accept 50 camels now and 50 when we return to Medina?’ He kept on at them till they accepted the blood-wit. The family of Muḥallim b. Jaththama now asked, ‘Bring him over so that the Messenger of God (SAAS) may forgive him.’

""‘They brought a tall, thin man dressed in a gown in which he was prepared to he executed, and he stood before the Prophet (SAAS), who then spoke, ‘O God, do not pardon Muḥallim!’ He repeated this three times. Muḥallim arose, wiping away his tears with the hem of his gown.’"

Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq stated, “His people claim that after that he did forgive him.”

Aḥū Dāʾūd related this similarly through Ḥammād b. Salama from Ibn Iṣḥāq. Ibn Māja related it from Aḥū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from Abū Khalīd al-ʿAlīmar, from Ibn Iṣḥāq, from Muhammad b. Jaʿfar, from Zayd b. ʿAmīr, from his father and his uncle. His account contains part of the hadith.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “Ṣālim Aḥū al-Naḍr related to me that the account states, ‘They did not accept the blood-wit until al-Aqrāʾ b. Ḥabīb addressed them privately, saying, “People of Qays, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked you to give up a dead man to make peace between people thereby, but you refused him this. Are you secure against the possibility that he will be angry at you, and that God will be angry at his anger? Or that he will curse you and that God will curse you because of his curse? Give him over to the Messenger of God (SAAS), or I will bring 50 men of Bānū Tamīm who will all swear that the dead man was an unbeliever who never performed the prayer, and that therefore no compensation for his death should be sought.” When he said this to them they accepted the blood-money.’”

This hadith is munqatū, “without a complete chain of transmission”, and is muḍīl, “problematic”.

Ibn Iṣḥāq related from a reliable source, from al-Ḥasan al-Ḥāṣrī, that when Muḥallim sat before the Messenger of God (SAAS) the latter asked him, “Did you offer him security then murder him?” and that he then cursed him.

“Al-Ḥasan said, “And I swear Muḥallim lived only seven days more thereafter before he died. The earth spat him out. Then they buried him again, but the earth again spat him out. When this happened yet again, they covered him over with stones to hide him. When news of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, ‘The earth covers over worse than him, but God wishes to warn you of what conduct is impermissible, by showing you this.’”

b. Juththāma on a mission. ʿĀmir b. al-Aḍbaṭ encountered them and saluted them with the Muslim greeting. But there had been a dispute between them before the coming of Islam and Muḥallim shot an arrow at him and killed him. When news of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), he spoke with ʿUyayna and al-Aqrāʿ about it. Al-Aqr‘a said, “Messenger of God, keep to custom today and make changes tomorrow.” ʿUyayna said to him, “No, by God, not until his women taste the same bereavement.” Muḥallim approached, dressed in two outer garments, and sat before the Messenger of God (SAAS), asking his forgiveness, but the latter told him, “May God not forgive you!” They related that to him and he (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) said, “The earth accepts those worse than your companion, but God wished to warn you of what is impermissible to you.” They then threw him down and dumped him on a mountain side, covering him with stones. And there was revealed, “O you who believe! When you go forth in God’s cause, be circumspect.”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related this from al-Zuhri. Shuʿayb related it from al-Zuhri, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Wahb from Qubaysa b. Dhuʿyib, his story being similar to this. However, his account does not name Muḥallim b. Juththāma, nor ʿĀmir b. al-Aḍbaṭ. Al-Bayhaqi related it in a similar account from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. That account stated, “And it was about him that the words of the Almighty were revealed, ‘O you who believe! When you go forth in God’s cause, be circumspect.’”

I note that I have sufficiently discussed the reasons for the revelation of this verse and its import in my Tafsir (Exegesis). And to God belong all praise and credit.

THE EXPEDITION OF ʿABD ALLĀH B. ḤUDHĀFA AL-SAḤMĪ.

It is established in both saḥih collections through al-ʿAmash, from Saʿd b. ʿUbayda, from Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Ḥubalī, from ʿAli b. Abī Ṭālib, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS) gave charge of an expedition to one of the ansār, telling those men he sent with him to listen well and to obey him. For some reason they angered him, so he said, ‘Get some firewood!’ They did so. He then said, ‘Light it!’ They did so. He then said, ‘Enter the fire!’ The men looked at one another and said, ‘But the only reason we fled to the Messenger of God (SAAS) was to avoid the fire!’ His anger subsided and the fire was extinguished. “When they came back to the Prophet (SAAS) they related this to him and he said, ‘If they had entered it, they would never have come out of it, for obedience is only in that which is good.’”

This anecdote is also firmly established in both saḥih collections, through Yaʿāq b. Musallam, from Saʿd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās. We have discussed this sufficiently in the Tafsir (Exegesis). And to God belong all praise and credit.

It is (also) known as al-qišās. Al-Suhaylī preferred this. It is otherwise called ʿumrat al-qadīyya, “the decision pilgrimage”. The first name relates to fulfilment of what was arranged at al-Ḥudaybiyya. The second name is taken from the words of the Almighty, wa al-ḥurumātū qisāsun, “Those things forbidden are subject to retaliation” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.194). The third name comes from the decision he made with them based on his retiring from them that year provided that he would return the next, and that he would enter Mecca only with his sword still sheathed and that he not stay longer than three days.

This ʿumrā is the one referred to in the words of the Almighty in the sacred ṣūrat al-Fath: “God will fulfil the true visions of His messenger: you will certainly enter, if God wills it, the holy mosque in safety, with your heads shaved and cut, not fearing” (ṣūrat al-Fath; XLVIII, v.27). We have examined this verse sufficiently in our work, Taʾṣīr (Exegesis).

It was this that was promised in the words of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Responding to ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb’s question, “Did we not say that we would come to the house and would circumambulate it?” he replied, “Yes indeed; but did I tell you you would go there this year?” “No,” ʿUmar replied. “Well,” he reiterated, “you will go there and you will circumambulate it.”

It was also referred to in the verses of ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa when he entered Mecca before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), the day of the ʿumrat al-qadā, saying,

“Unbelievers, clear out of his path; today we will fight you about its interpretation
Just as we already fought you about its revelation.”

This refers to interpretation of the vision the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) used to see that came to pass like the break of day.

“He then set forth on the ʿumrat al-qadā, in Dhū al-Qi‘dā, that same month when the polytheists had previously blocked his path; this was in place of the ʿumra they had denied him.”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, “He placed ʿUwayf b. al-ʿAḍbaṭ al-Duwati in command of Medina. It is also called the ʿumrat al-qišās because they blocked the way of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Dhū al-Qi‘dā, the holy month of 6 AH. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) retaliated against them by entering Mecca in Dhū al-Qi‘dā, the holy month when they had blocked him, in 7 AH. We have been informed that Ibn ʿAbbās said, ‘It was concerning that that God Almighty revealed the words, “Those things forbidden are subject to retaliation.”’”
Mu'tamir b. Sulaymān quoted his father as saying about the maghāzi, the military expeditions, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from Khaybar, he remained in Medina, sending out his expeditions until Dhū al-Qa‘da arrived. He then called out to the people, ‘Get ready for the ‘umra.’ They gathered their baggage and left for Mecca."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The Muslims whose way had been blocked went forth with him on that ‘umra of his, it being 7 AH. When the Meccans heard of this, they kept out of their way. Quraysh meanwhile told one another that Muḥammad was in great difficulty and distress.

"A reliable source related to me, from ʿAbd Allah b. ʿAbbās, who said, ‘They lined up at the assembly hall to look at him and those with him. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) went inside the mosque, he tossed the hem of his mantle over his left shoulder, exposing his right arm and said, “May God have mercy upon a man who today demonstrates his strength to them.”

“‘He then saluted the al-rukn, the “corner”, and came outside again, jogging, as did his Companions with him. He continued on until the ka‘ba concealed him from them; he saluted the rukn al-yaman, the “south” or “Yemen” corner. Then he walked on and saluted the rukn al-aswad, the “black stone” corner. He then jogged three circuits and walked the rest.’ Ibn ʿAbbās used to say, ‘People used to think that this (procedure) was not incumbent upon them. They thought this on the grounds that the Messenger of God (SAAS) only did this because of that tribe of Quraysh and what he had heard of them, until the hijājat al-wadā‘, the “farewell pilgrimage”; the sunna, the normative Muslim practice, continued it.’"

Al-Bukhārī stated that Sulaymān b. Harb related to him, quoting Ḥammād, he being Ibn Zayd – from Ayyūb, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived, the polytheists said, ‘Here comes a delegation of people whom the Yathrib fevers have weakened!’ And so the Prophet (SAAS) ordered them to jog for the three courses and to walk between the two corners. All that prevented him telling them to jog throughout all the circuits was his wish to spare them (the effort).”

Abū ʿAbd Allāh stated, “Ibn Salama – meaning Ḥammād b. Salama – added, from Ayyūb, from Sa‘īd, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the latter said, ‘When the Prophet (SAAS) came (to Mecca) that year when it was safe, he said, “Jog, so that the polytheists can see your strength. The polytheists will be positioned in front of Mt. Qu‘ayqu‘ān.”’"

Muslim related this from Abū al-Rabī‘ al-Zahrānī, from Ḥammād b. Zayd. Al-Bayhaqī traced the hadīth through Ḥammād b. Salama.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿĀli b. ʿAbd Allāh related to him, quoting Sufyān, quoting Ismā‘īl b. Abū Kha‘lid, (who said) that he heard Ibn Abū Awfā say, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the ‘umra, we shielded him from the polytheist youngsters and from the polytheists themselves in case they might harm him.”

78. A black spherical stone, thought to be a meteorite; it is still embedded in a corner of the Ka‘ba.
There will come hereafter the rest of the commentary concerning that event.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca to perform that pilgrimage, ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa kept hold of his camel’s halter and recited, “Unbelievers, clear out of his path; clear out, for all good is in His messenger.

O Lord, I am a believer in his words; I know God’s truth in accepting it

We fought you about its interpretation, just as we fought you about its revelation,

With blows that remove heads from necks and divert friend from friend.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The words, ‘We fought you about its interpretation’ to the end of the lines are verses of ‘Ammār b. Yāsir relating to a different occasion — meaning the battle of Siffin.” Al-Suhaylī stated this.

Ibn Hishām further stated, “The proof of this is that Ibn Rawāḥa was referring only to the polytheists, who never had accepted the (fact of) revelation. And only those who accept the revelation would do battle over the interpretation.”

Ibn Hishām’s statement is open to dispute. The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqī related, from a different line of transmission, from ‘Abd al-Razzāq, from Ma‘mar, from al-Zuhri, from Anas, who said, “When the Prophet (ṢAAS) entered Mecca on the ‘umrāt al-qādā, ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa walked in front of him; in one account he did so while he held his leather stirrup. As he walked, he spoke the lines, ‘Unbelievers, clear out of his path; the al-Rahmān, the Most Merciful, has given revelation in revealing it;

That the best fight is in His cause; we have fought you over its interpretation.”

In another version, with precisely the same chain of transmission, the words are, “Unbelievers, clear out of his path; today we fight you over its revelation,

With blows that will remove heads from necks and divert friend from friend.

O Lord, I believe in what he says.”

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, from Hishām b. Sa‘d, from Zayd b. Aslam, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca the year of al-qādiya, the ‘umrā in question, and circumambulated the ka‘ba mounted on his camel. He saluted the al-rukān, “the corner (with the Black Stone)”, using his staff. Regarding this, Ibn Hishām said, “He did so not due to any illness, while the Muslims were crowding around him, and ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa was reciting, Miisa b. 'Uqba stated, from al-Zuhri as follows, “Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth the year following that of al-Ḥudaybiyya on the ’umra pilgrimage, in Dhū al-Qa‘da of 7 AH. This was the same month that the polytheists blocked him from entry to the sacred mosque. When he reached Ya‘jij, he laid down all their weapons — leather shields, armour, spears and arrows. They then entered carrying the swords borne by mounted men. The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Ja‘far b. Abī Talib on ahead of himself to Maymūna, daughter of al-Ḥārith, the al-‘Amiri woman, and proposed marriage to her. She appointed al-‘Abbās in charge of her affairs; his wife, Umm al-Fadl, daughter of al-Ḥārith, was her sister. Al-‘Abbās then agreed to her marriage to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived, he ordered his Companions, ‘Uncover your shoulders, and be vigorous as you circumambulate.’ This was so that the polytheists would see their skin, and their strength. He outwitted them all he could. The people of Mecca, men, women, and children, gathered around him, staring at the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions, as they circumambulated the ka‘ba. Meanwhile, ‘Abd Allah b. Rawāḥa walked ahead of him, speaking verse and brandishing his sword, saying,

‘Unbelievers, clear out of his path; I am a witness that he is His messenger;
The al-Rahmān, the Most Merciful, sent down about His revelation, in sheets that are recited to His messenger.
Today we will fight you over its interpretation, as we fought you over its revelation,
With blows that will remove heads from necks and divert friend from friends.’

“Some polytheist chiefs remained away rather than look on with anger, resentment and envy towards the Messenger of God (SAAS). They went off to Mt. al-Khanda‘yna. The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Mecca for three nights, at which point the period of safe access agreed upon at al-Ḥudaybiyya ended.

“When morning of the 4th day came, Suhayl b. ‘Amr and Ḥuwaytib b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza arrived, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was seated with his Companions, conferring with Sa‘d b. Ubāda. Ḥuwaytib b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza shouted, ‘We invoke God and the pact to you, because you have not left our land and the three nights are over!’ Sa‘d b. Ubāda replied, ‘You lie, may you have no mother! It is not your land, nor that of your forefathers. By God, he will not leave! The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called out to Suhayl and Huwayḥib, saying, 'I have arranged marriage with one of your women. It will not harm you for me to stay until I consummate the marriage with her. We can prepare food and you can eat with us.' They replied, 'We will insist on invoking God and the pact unless you leave us.'

'The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders to Abū Rāfiʿ and he announced the departure. The Messenger of God (SAAS) rode off and halted in the valley of Saraf. The other Muslims had remained behind; the Messenger of God (SAAS) had entrusted Abū Rāfiʿ with bringing Maymūna. He stayed at Saraf until Maymūna arrived to him there. Maymūna had been caused great distress and been harmed by the foolish polytheists and their children. When she arrived to the Messenger of God (SAAS), at Saraf, he consummated his marriage with her. Thereafter, at night, he travelled on and reached Medina.

'God decreed that Maymūna's death should occur at a later day at Saraf; she died where the Messenger of God (SAAS) had consummated marriage with her.'

He then went on to relate the story of the daughter of Ḥamza and concluded by saying, "God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed concerning that 'umra, the words, 'The holy month for the holy month, and the things forbidden are subject to retaliation.'" The Messenger of God (SAAS) had made the pilgrimage in that same holy month in which they had blocked his path.

Ibn Lahiʿa related from Abū al-Aswad, from Ḥurwa b. al-Zubayr approximately this same text, which is further substantiated by numerous witnesses in many aḥādīth.

In the ṣaḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī it is stated, through Fūlayh b. Sulaymān, from Nāfiʿ, from Ibn ʿUmar, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) went out to make the 'umra pilgrimage, but the Quraysh unbelievers blocked his path to the kaʿba. He made sacrifice and shaved his head at d-Hudaybiyya and made a pact with them that they would make the 'umra the following year; the only arms (the Muslims) would bear would be swords and he would remain only so long as they agreed.

He did perform the 'umra the following year and entered it in accord with the pact he had made. After he had been there for three days, they told him to leave, and he did so.

Al-Waqīḍī stated, "Abd Allāh b. Nāfiʿ related to me, from his father, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, 'This pilgrimage was not retaliatory but accorded with the conditions placed upon the Muslims; that in exchange they would perform the 'umra in that same month that the polytheists had previously blocked them.'"

Abū Dāʾūd stated, "Al-Nufaylī related to me, quoting Muḥammad b. Salama, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, from ʿAmr b. Maymūn (who said), 'I heard Abū Ḥaḍīr al-Himyārī relate that Maymūn b. Muhrān said, 'I went out to make the Cumra pilgrimage the year the Syrians besieged Ibn al-Zubayr in Mecca. Men of my tribe sent some animals with me for sacrifice.

"When we encountered the Syrians, they prevented us from going inside the sacred area. So I sacrificed the animals where I was, performed the other pilgrimage rites and then returned home. When I went out the following year to complete the ‘umra, I went to see Ibn ‘Abbās and I asked him and he replied, "You should change the animals for sacrifice; the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered his Companions to sacrifice different animals than they had in the year of al-Hudaybiyya on the ‘umrat al-qadā’.""

Abū Dā‘ūd was alone in giving this, from a hadith of Abū Ḥādir Uthmān b. Ḥādir al-Himyari, from Ibn ‘Abbās.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated, "Al-Ḥākim narrated to us, quoting al-‘Āsamm, quoting Ahmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbār, quoting Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishaq, who said, ‘Amr b. Maymūn related to me as follows, "My father used to ask often, ‘Did the Messenger of God (SAAS) change the animals he sacrificed when the polytheists blocked him from the ka‘ba?’ He never got any information on this until I heard him ask Abū Ḥādir al-Himyari about that and he told him, ‘You’ve found an expert! I went on the pilgrimage the first year Ibn al-Zubayr was engaged in the siege. I was given some animals to sacrifice, but they (the Syrians) came between us and the ka‘ba. So I slaughtered them in the sacred area and returned to Yemen where I told people, ‘I have in the Messenger of God an example!’ The following year I again went on the ‘umra; I encountered Ibn ‘Abbās and asked him whether or not I should change the animals for sacrifice. He replied, ‘Yes; do change. The Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions did change the sacrificial animals from those they slaughtered when the polytheists blocked their path to different ones on the ‘umrat al-qadā’. They found camels expensive for them, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave them permission to sacrifice cattle.’’’"

Al-Waqīqī stated, "Ghanīm b. Abū Ghānim related to me, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Dinār, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed Nājiyya b. Jundab al-Aslami in charge of the animals to be sacrificed. He would go on ahead searching for fodder among the trees, accompanied by four young men of Aslam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) took out 60 head on the ‘umrat al-qadīyya.’"

Muḥammad b. Nuʿaym al-Mujammir related to me, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “I was with the man in charge of the sacrificial animals, driving them.”

Al-Waqīqī stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth reciting Labbayka! ‘I am at Your service!’ and the Muslims with him recited the same. Muḥammad b. Maslama went on with the cavalry to Marr al-Zahrān, where he encountered a few men of Quraysh. They asked Muḥammad b. Maslama some questions and he replied, ‘This is the Messenger of God (SAAS); he will arrive at this place tomorrow morning, if God wills it.’ They (the Quraysh) noticed that Bashîr b. Sa‘d had many weapons with him and so they left in a hurry and went to Quraysh whom they informed of the weapons and cavalry they had seen. Quraysh were scared by this. They told one another that they had not stirred up any trouble and they were maintaining their pact of a truce, and they wondered why the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men were attacking them.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) made a halt at Marr al-Zahrān. He sent on the weapons to the Yaljij valley, from where they could see the stones marking the limits of the sacred territory. Quraysh sent out Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ b. al-Ahnaf with a party of Quraysh and they encountered him at the valley of Ya‘jij; the Messenger of God (SAAS) was there with his men having met up with the animals to be slaughtered and the weapons. The Quraysh asked, ‘Muḥammad, you’ve never been known to break your word for any excuse, whether the issue is major or minor; are you now entering the sacred territory with your men bearing arms, even though you agreed to enter only with weapons such as travellers carry, swords in sheaths?’ The Prophet (SAAS) replied, ‘I will not bring in weapons against them.’ Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ commented, ‘This is what you are known for — piety and trustworthiness.’ He then hurried back to Mecca with his Companions.

“When Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ brought the news of the Prophet (SAAS), Quraysh left Mecca for the mountain heights. As they left Mecca, they told one another that they would not look at him or his Companions.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS), ordered the animals for slaughter to be driven ahead and they were corralled at Dḥū Ṭuwā. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went on with his men; he was riding his camel at-Qaswā and they kept their eyes on him, calling out Labbayka! ‘At Your service, O Lord!’ and brandishing their swords. When they arrived at Dḥū Ṭuwā, he stood up on his mount al-Qaswā, while Ibn Rawāḥa took its reins and spoke lines of impromptu poetry, saying, ‘Unbelievers, clear out of his path.’”

In both sahîh collections there is a hadîth from Ibn ʿAbbâs in which he stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men arrived in the morning of the 4th — meaning of Dḥū al-Qa‘da, 7 AH — and the polytheists said, ‘A delegation is approaching you who have been rendered weak by the fevers of Yathrib.’ So the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered his men to jog for the three circuits and to walk between the two comers. All that prevented him having them jog throughout all the circuits was his wish to spare them (the effort).”

Imâm Aḥmad stated, “Muḥammad b. al-Ṣabâḥ related to us, quoting Ismāʿîl b. Zakariyyâ, from ʿAbd Allâh b. ʿUthmân, from Abû al-Ṭūfâyî, from Ibn ʿAbbâs, (who said) that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) halted at Marr al-Zahrân on his umra, his men learned that Quraysh were saying, ‘They’ll never recover from their emaciation.’ His Companions told him, ‘If we were to butcher our mounts and eat their meat and sip soup made from them, we’d gain some strength for when we go out among people tomorrow.' He replied, ‘No; don’t do that; gather up all the provisions you have.’ They did so, spread out the scraps of food and ate until satisfied; each of them stuffed the remainder in their bags.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went out and entered the mosque, while Quraysh squatted over towards the Black Stone. He gathered up the left sleeve of his gown, then said, ‘Do not let the enemy see any insufficiency in you.’ He saluted the rukn, the corner, ran until hidden behind the south corner, then walked to the rukn al-aswad, the corner with the Black Stone. Quraysh commented, ‘They’re not satisfied with walking; they race around like gazelles!’ He did this for three circuits and it became sunna, orthodox practice.”

Abū al-Tufayl went on, “Ibn ‘Abbās informed me that the Messenger of God (ŠAAS) also did this on the hijājat al-wadāʾ, ‘the farewell pilgrimage’.”

Ahmad is alone in giving this hadith through this line.

Abū Dā’ūd stated that Abū Salama Mūsa related to him, quoting Ḥammād—meaning Ibn Salam—quoting Abū ʿAjīm al-Ghanawi, from Abū al-Tufayl, who said, “I commented to Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘So your people say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) ran at the ka’ba, and that that practice is sunna, “customary orthodox practice”.’ He replied, ‘They both spoke the truth and lied.’ ‘What was true and what lies?’ I asked. He replied, ‘They did speak the truth when they said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) ran. They also lied; it is not sunna. At the time of al-Hudaybiyya, Quraysh said, “Let Muhammad and his Companions alone until they die of worms!” Then they made a truce on the understanding that he would return the following year and stay in Mecca for three days. When he came, the polytheists went over towards Mt. Qurayyān. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told his Companions, “Run three times at the ka’ba. But that is not sunna.”’”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Sā’d al-Jarirī, ʿAbd Allah b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Husayn and ʿAbd al-Malik b. Saʿd b. Abjar, all three of them quoting Abū Ṭufayl ʿAmir b. Wāthila, from Ibn ʿAbbās, in much the same words.

The act of running while circumambulating is considered sunna by most scholars. The Messenger of God (ŠAAS) did run during the ‘umrat al-qadh, and also at the ‘umrat al-Jirāna, as Abū Dā’ūd and Ibn Māja related, from a hadith of ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUthmān b. Khuthaym, from Abū al-Ṭufayl, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who so stated.

It is clearly established in the hadith of Jābir given by Muslim and others, that the Messenger of God (ŠAAS) ran at the hijājat al-wadāʾ, the “farewell pilgrimage”, as he made the circumambulations. This is why ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb stated, “Why run, when God has made Islam long-lasting?” However, we should not abandon any practice performed by the Messenger of God (ŠAAS). This is fully substantiated in my book kitāb al-Ahkām.

It is very well known that Ibn ʿAbbās did not consider this practice sunna, as is substantiated in both saḥīh collections, from a hadith of Sufyān b. ʿUyayna, from 'Amr b. Dinar, from 'Atā, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS) only hurried at the ka'ba, al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa to demonstrate his strength to the polytheists.”

This is the terminology given by al-Bukhārī.

Al-Waqīdī stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished his duties at the 'umrat al-qaddā, he went inside the ka'ba. He remained inside until Bilāl, from atop the ka'ba's roof, made the call to the al-zuhr, noon, prayer; the Messenger of God (SAAS) had given him orders to do this. 'Ikrima b. Abū Jahl commented, ‘God honoured Abū al-Ḥakam?’ by not having him hear this slave say what he is saying!’ Ṣafwān b. Umayya said, ‘Praise be to God who took away my father before he saw this!’ Khalīd b. Usayd agreed, ‘Praise be to God who took the life of my father so that he did not witness this day when Bilāl climbs on top of the ka'ba and brays!’ Suhayl b. 'Umar and the men with him covered their faces when they heard this.”

The Ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated, “God honoured most of them with Islam.”

I note that the Ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī narrated this through al-Waqīdī to the effect that this took place on the 'umrat al-Qaddā, even though it is well-known that this happened in the year of the conquest of Mecca. But God knows best.

The Story of the Marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Maymūna.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abān b. Ṣāliḥ and 'Abd Allah b. Abū Najīh related to me, from ‘Atā and Mujāhid, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) married Maymūna, daughter of al-Ḥārith, on that journey of his when he was ḥarām, in a state of ritual purity. It was al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib who married her to him.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “She had appointed her sister, Umm al-Fadl, to represent her and she in turn entrusted the task to her husband al-‘Abbās. It was he who married her to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and gave her from him a dowry of 400 dirhams.”

Al-Suhaylī reported that when the proposal of the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached her, she was mounted on a camel. She said, “Both the camel and what is on it belong to the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

He also stated, “It was about her that the verse was revealed, ‘(We have made lawful to you) a believing woman! If she gives herself to the Prophet, if the Prophet wished to marry her. This provision is only for you, apart from all the believers.’” (ṣūrat al-Ahzāb; XXXIII, v.50).

Al-Bukhārī related on a line of transmission through Ayyūb, from 'Ikrima, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) married Maymūna while muḥrim, in a state of ritual conservation. When he consummated marriage with her, he was ḥalāl, free of the iḥrām. She died at Saraf. Al-Suhaylī stated and

79. That is, the speaker's father, Abū Jahl, killed at Badr.
al-Darqutni related through Abū al-Aswad, the orphan of 'Urwa, and through Maṭr al-Warrāq, from Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbās, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Maymūna while ḥalāl.

He said, "And they interpreted the first version of the account from Ibn 'Abbās – that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was muhrim, 'in a ritual state', to mean that it was in the holy month. As a poet said,

"They killed Ibīn 'Affān, the Khalīfa, when he was muhrim and prayed; and I never saw the like of him abandoned."

"That is, this occurred in the holy month."

I note that this interpretation is open to dispute, because the accounts from Ibn 'Abbās contrary to that predominate, especially since he said, "He married her while he was muhrim and consummated marriage with her when he was ḥalāl." This also occurred in the month of Dhū al-Qa'da, another holy month.

Muḥammad b. Yahyā al-Dhuḥli stated that ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to him, "Al-Thawri said to me, 'No attention should be paid to the words of the people of Medina. 'Amr informed me, from Abū al-Shāṭhā, from Ibn 'Abbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married while muhrim.'"

Abū ʿAbd Allah stated that he told ʿAbd al-Razzāq, "Suḥyān related both aḥādīth from 'Amr, from Abū al-Shāṭhā, from Ibn 'Abbās and Ibn Khuthaym, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, 'Yes; regarding the hadith of Ibn Khaytham, he related it here' – meaning in al-Yaman. 'Regarding the hadith of 'Amr, he related it there' – meaning in Mecca.'"

Both authors of the sāḥīḥ collections included this tradition, from ʿAmr b. Dinār.

In the sāḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī, through al-Awzā'ī, it states, "Aṭā' related to us, from Ibn 'Abbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Maymūna while muhrim." Saʿīd b. al-Mußayyib stated, "Ibn 'Abbās made a mistake, even though she was his aunt; he did not marry her until after he had become ḥalāl."

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Ishāq, "Baqiyya quoted Saʿīd b. al-Mußayyib as having said, 'This ʿAbd Allah b. ʿAbbās claimed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Maymūna while he was muhrim'. And he (Saʿīd) went on to relate what he had said. He (Saʿīd) continued, 'However, when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went on to Mecca, both the hill, and the marriage were at the same time. Ibn ʿAbbās was confused about this.'"

Muslim and the ahl al-sunan related from lines of transmission from Yazīd b. al-ʿAṣāmīl-ʿĀmīrī, from his aunt Muymūna, daughter of al-Ḥārith, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married me while we were both ḥalāl, at Saraf." However, al-Tirmidhī stated, "Several authorities related this hadith

80. This refers to the assassination of ʿUthmān; his death is said to have come while he was in prayer.
81. The state of being ḥalāl.
regarding the marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Maymūna, from Yazid b. al-ʾAṣāmīn mursal, 'with an incomplete chain of transmission'."

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi stated that the ḥāfīz Abū ʿAbd Allāh informed him, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-ʾAshāhānī al-Zāhīd, quoting Ismāʿīl b. Isḥāq al-Qāḍī, quoting Sulaymān b. Ḥarb, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, quoting Mātur al-Warrāq, from Rabīʿa b. Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Sulaymān b. Yaṣār, from Abū Rāfīʾ, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) married Maymūna while he was ḥalāl and he consummated the marriage when he was ḥalāl. I was the messenger between them."

Both al-Ṭirmidhī and al-Nasāʾī related this, from Qutayba, from Ḥammād b. Yazid. Al-Ṭirmidhī went on to state, "It is ḥasan, 'good'; we know of no other authority who gave its line from Ḥammād, from Mātur." Mālik related it from Rabīʿa, from Sulaymān, but as mursal, incomplete in its chain”.

And Sulaymān b. Bilāl related it from Rabīʿa, as mursal.

I note that her death came at Saraf in 63 AH, or, according to others, in 60 AH. May God be pleased with her.

An Account of the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from Mecca after the completion of his ʿumra pilgrimage.

It has been narrated above by Mūsā b. ʿUqba how Quraysh sent Ḥuwayṭīb b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzza to the Messenger of God (SAAS) four days later so that he would leave, as had been stipulated in the agreement. He offered to hold a feast for them in honour of his marriage to Maymūna, his only purpose having been to reconcile with them thereby. They refused him, telling him to leave. And he did. Ibn Isḥāq related it similarly.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿUbayd Allāh b. Mūsā related to him, from Isrāʾīl, from Abū Isḥāq, from al-Barāʾ, who said, “The Prophet (SAAS) made the ʿumra pilgrimage in Dhu al-Qaʿda. The people of Mecca refused to invite him to enter Mecca until he compacted with them that he would stay there three days. When they drew up the document, they wrote, ‘This is what Muḥammad, the Messenger of God, has agreed.’ They (the Meccans) commented, ‘We don’t agree to this. If we knew you to be God’s messenger, we would not have opposed you at all. You are, however, Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allāh.’ He stated, ‘I am the Messenger of God, and I am Muḥammad, the son of ʿAbd Allāh.’ He then told ʿAli b. Abū ʿṬālib, ‘Erase the words “Messenger of God”.’ He replied, ‘No, by God, I’ll not erase you, ever!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then took the document – he could not write well – and wrote, ‘This is what Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allāh, has agreed to. No weapons will enter Mecca except swords in sheaths. And he will not take away any of its people who wishes to follow him. Also, he will not prevent any of his men from staying if they wish to do so.’
When he did enter and the period for the stay was over, they came to ‘Ali and said, ‘Tell your master to leave us, since the time is over.’ The Prophet (SAAS) therefore went to leave, but he was followed by Ḥamza’s daughter calling out, ‘Uncle! Uncle!’ ‘Ali took her by the hand and told Fāṭima, ‘Take care of your cousin.’ She carried her away. ‘Ali, Zayd and Ja’far then began quarrelling over her. ‘Ali said, ‘I should take her; she is my uncle’s daughter.’ Ja’far said, ‘She’s the daughter of my uncle too, and her aunt is my wife.’ Zayd said, ‘She’s my brother’s daughter.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) decided that she should go with her aunt, saying, ‘An aunt has the same standing as a mother.’ He then said to ‘Ali, ‘You are from me, and I am from you.’ To Ja’far, he said, ‘You resemble me in appearance and character.’ To Zayd, he said, ‘You are our brother and our companion.’ ‘Ali then asked, ‘Will you not marry Ḥamza’s daughter?’ He replied, ‘She is the daughter of my foster-brother.’”

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this hadith with this line of transmission.

Al-Waqīḍī narrated the story of Ḥamza’s daughter. He stated, “Ibīn Umni Ḥabība related to me, from Daḍūd b. al-Ḥusayn, from Ḥkrīma, from Ibīn Abbās, that Umnāra, daughter of Ḥamza b. Ṭālīb and her mother Salmā, daughter of Umayz, were at Mecca.

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālīb spoke with him, saying, ‘How can we abandon the daughter of our uncle, an orphan, amidst the polytheists?’ The Prophet (SAAS) did not forbid bringing her out, and he (‘Ali) did so. Zayd b. Ḥāritha, the wasī, the executor, of Ḥamza, now spoke up; the Prophet (SAAS) had made Zayd and Ḥamza brothers when he had established brotherly relationships between the emigrants (and the ansār). Zayd said, ‘I have the greater right to her; she is my brother’s daughter.’ When Ja’far heard that, he said, ‘An aunt is (as) a mother. I have more right to her because her aunt, Asmā, daughter of Umayz, is with me.’ ‘Ali commented, ‘Do I really see you fighting? She is my uncle’s daughter and I brought her out from among the polytheists. You have no claim better than mine; I have more right to her than you do.’ The Prophet (SAAS) said, ‘I will judge between you. As for you, Zayd, you are the agent of God and of His messenger. You, Ja’far, are similar to me as my features and my disposition. You, Ja’far, have most right to her; your wife is her maternal aunt, and a woman cannot be wed along with her maternal or her paternal aunt.’ And he judged that she should go to Ja’far.”

Al-Waqīḍī stated, “When he awarded her to Ja’far, Ja’far arose and skipped around the Messenger of God (SAAS). The latter asked, ‘What’s this then, Ja’far?’ He replied, ‘Messenger of God, whenever the Negus was pleased with someone, he would get up and skip around him.’ Then he said to the Prophet (SAAS), ‘You marry her.’ He replied, ‘She’s the daughter of my foster-brother.’ So the Messenger of God (SAAS) married her to Salama b. Abū Salama. The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to say, ‘Did I reward Abī Salama?”'
I note that al-Waqidi and others report that it was because he had arranged the marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to his mother, Umm Salama. This was because he was older than his brother Umar b. Abū Salama.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to Medina in Dhū al-Ḥijja, and the polytheists were in charge of that pilgrimage (that year).”

Ibn Hishām stated, “It was regarding that ‘umra, so Abū Ubaydā related to me, that the words of the Almighty were revealed, ‘God will fulfil the true visions of His messenger: you will certainly enter, if God will it, the holy mosque in safety, with your heads shaven or shorn, not fearing. He knew what you did not know and vouchsafed for you a victory close at hand’” (ṣūrat al-Fāṭḥ, XLVIII, v.27).

Division.

Al-Bayḥāqī related here the expedition of Ibn Abī al-Awāja al-Sulāmī to Banū Sulaym.

He then traced the line of transmission from al-Waqidi, “Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Muslim related to me, from al-Zuhrī, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from the ‘umrat al-qādiya in Dhū al-Ḥijja, 7, AH. He then sent forth Ibn Abū al-Awāja al-Sulāmī along with 50 horsemen. But the scout sent out by that tribe warned them and gave them information. They gathered a large force and so when Ibn Abū al-Awāja came to them, they were well prepared. When the men of the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw their force, they invited them to accept Islam. The enemy pelted them with arrows, refusing to listen to them, saying, ‘We don’t need what you’re offering.’ They shot at them for a while then called up reinforcements that overlooked them (the Muslims) from all sides. The (Muslim) force fought fiercely until most of them had been killed. Ibn Abū al-Awāja suffered numerous wounds. He withstood his pain and returned to Medina with his remaining men, arriving there on the 1st of Ṣafar, 8 AH.’”

Division.

Al-Waqidi stated, “In the pilgrimage of that year – that is, 7 AH – the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned his daughter Zaynah to her husband Abū al-Āṣ b. al-Rabī‘. We have made reference to this above. That same year Ḥāṭib b. Abū Balṭa‘a arrived from having been with al-Muqawqis; with him were Māriyya, and Sirīn. They both accepted Islam en route, as did a eunuch.”

Al-Waqidi went on, “That same year, the Messenger of God (SAAS) adopted as his minbar a seat above two steps.” He went on, “However, what we are certain is that he did this in 8 AH.”

82. This is in reference to the conquest of Khaybar.
Their arrival occurred early in 8 AH, according to what follows.

Part of this has been referred to heretofore in the account given by Ibn Ishaq following the execution of Abī Rāṣīl, the Jew; this took place in 5 AH.

However, the ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi gave this information here, following his account of the ʿumrat al-qaḍāʾ. He narrated through al-Waqqāḍi, “ʿAbd al-Ḥāmid b. Jaʿfar informed us, from his father (who said) that ʿAmr b. al-Ṭāʾī stated, ‘I was stubbornly opposed to Islam. I was present at Badr with the polytheists and escaped. Then I was present at Uhud and escaped. Finally I was present at al-Khandaq and escaped.

‘I told myself, “What suffering! I swear by God, may Muḥammad prevail over Quraysh!” So I took my assets and moved to al-Raḥṭ. And I diminished my contacts with people. When the al-Hudaybiyya pact was agreed and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left in peace and Quraysh returned to Mecca, I began saying, “So Muḥammad is going to come to Mecca with his men; Mecca is no place to be in, nor is al-Taʿīf. The best thing to do is to leave.” I was then still hostile to Islam. I think that if all Quraysh accepted Islam, I would not do so.

‘I went to Mecca and gathered together some men of my tribe who saw things as I did, repeated my views and sought my advice in matters concerning them. I asked them, “How am I in your view?” They replied, “As our adviser and our protector, a man of fine character and wise decision.”

“He went on, ‘I then told them, “You well know, by God, that I consider this matter of Muḥammad as serious and reprehensible; I have reached a decision.” “What is that?” they asked. “We should go and join the Negus”, I told them, “and live with him. If Muḥammad prevails, we will be there with the Negus; and we would be far better off under his control than under that of Muḥammad. And if Quraysh prevail, they already know us well.”

“‘This is the right decision (they responded).” I told them, “Then gather up presents for him.” The gift he most appreciated from our land was leather. So we gathered much leather for him, then left and went to the Negus. While we were there, who should arrive but ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍāmiri. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had sent him with a document he had prepared marrying him to Umm Ḥabiba, daughter of Abī Sufyān. He went in to see the Negus and then came out again. I told my companions, “That is ʿAmr b. Umayya al-Ḍāmiri. If I had gone in to the Negus and asked him for him, and he had given him to me and I had cut off his head, then Quraysh would have been delighted and I would have been rewarded for killing Muḥammad’s emissary.”

“‘I did go in to the Negus and bowed down before him as I was accustomed to do. He said, “Welcome to my friend! Have you brought something as a gift for me from your country?” “Yes, O king,” I told him. “I have much better leather to give to you.” I then presented it to him and he was delighted. Some of it he distributed to his generals and the rest he had stored away and had a record of it written and kept.

“When I saw he was in a good mood, I asked, “Your majesty, I just noticed a man leaving your presence. He is the messenger from an enemy of ours. He has caused us much trouble and has killed some of our leaders and best men. Please hand him over to me, so that I may kill him.” He became angry at this, raised his fist and brought it down so hard on my nose that I thought he had broken it. My nostril soon flowed with blood that dripped on to my clothing. I felt so humiliated I wished the earth would open up and swallow me.

“I eventually said, “Your majesty, if I had known you would be upset at what I said, I would not have asked you.”

“He went on, ‘He then became embarrassed and said, “Amr, how could you ask me to hand over to you for execution the messenger of the man to whom the al-nâmûs al-akbar, the Archangel Gabriel, comes, just as he did to Moses and to Jesus?”

“Amr went on, ‘God then changed my attitude from the way it had been, and I asked myself, “When the Arabs and non-Arabs alike recognize this truth, how can you oppose it?” I then said to the Negus, “Your majesty, do you really testify to that?” “So testify to God, ‘Amr,” he replied. “Obey me and follow him. I swear by God that he is right and that he will definitely prevail over those who oppose him, just as Moses prevailed over Pharoah and his armies.”

“I asked him, “Will you accept my allegiance to him in Islam?” “Yes,” he replied. He then stretched forth his hands and accepted my allegiance. He called for someone to bring a wash basin and the blood was washed from me and he presented me with garments in which to dress. My own clothing was soaked in blood and I cast it aside. Then I went out to my companions and when they saw the garments from the Negus they were delighted. They asked, “Did you receive what you wanted from your friend?” I told them, “I was reluctant to talk about it with him on the first occasion; I told him I would come back.” “We agree with that,” they said.

“Amr went on, ‘So I left them, as if I had something specific to do and made my way to where the boats were moored. I found one ship that was loaded and about to leave. I embarked with them and they sailed it away to al-Shu'ba, where I went ashore, carrying my money. I bought a camel and headed for Medina, passing by Marr al-Zahrân. I then went on until I reached al-Hadda, where I met two men who had preceded me there shortly before. They were looking for accommodation, one man entering a tent, while the other held their mounts. Then I saw that one of them was Khâlid b. al-Walid! I asked him, “Where are you headed?” “To Muhammad,” he replied. “The people are all joining Islam and there’s no one left with any power. I swear by God, if I were to oppose, he’d have us by the neck, like a hyena’s neck is caught in his cave.”
"I swear by God," I told him, I too am headed for Muhammad and am accepting Islam." Then Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa emerged and welcomed me. We all three lodged together.

"We then reached an agreement and went to Medina. I'll never forget what a man said whom we met at the Abū Utba well who shouted out, "Ya rabāh! Ya rabāh! Ya rabāh!" We were much cheered by this and proceeded further. Then the man looked closely at us and I heard him say, "After (losing) these two, Mecca has given up the leadership!" I assumed he was referring to myself and to Khalid b. al-Walid. He then turned and hurried off into the mosque; I assumed that he was going in to tell the Messenger of God (SAAS) of our arrival and it was as I thought.

"We dismounted at al-Ḥarrā and dressed in our best clothes. Then the call was made for the 'asr prayer and we went off to see him. His face was exultant, and the Muslims around him were delighted at our acceptance of Islam. Khalid b. al-Walid went forward and gave his allegiance. Then Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa advanced and gave his. I then went forward but, I swear by God, no sooner had I sat down before him than I could not raise my gaze towards him, I felt so ashamed. I then expressed my allegiance to him, provided that I be forgiven my prior sins and that he would not bring up the past. He said, "Islam cuts off what preceded it and the hijra cuts off what preceded it."

"And I swear by God, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave to none of his Companions consideration equal to that he gave myself and Khalid b. al-Walid after we had accepted Islam. We had the same status with Abū Bakr and I enjoyed the same with 'Umar; 'Umar was somewhat critical towards Khalid."

'Abd al-Ḥamīd b. Ja'far, al-Waqīḍī's sheikh, teacher, stated, "I narrated this hadith to Yazīd b. Ḥabīb, and he said, 'Rāshid, the freed-man of Ḥabīb b. Aws al-Thaqafi, quoted his master Ḥabīb as relating much the same from 'Amr b. al-ʿĀṣ.'"

I note that Muḥammad b. Ishāq related it similarly, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Rāshid, from his freed-man Ḥabīb, who said, "'Amr b. al-ʿĀṣ in person related to me." And he then narrated the above as occurring in 5 AH, after the killing of Abū Rāfī. The text of al-Waqīḍī is more simple and better.

Al-Waqīḍī quoted his sheikh 'Abd al-Ḥamīd as saying, "I asked Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, 'Did he say when 'Amr and Khalid accepted Islam?' 'No', he replied, 'except that he did say it was before the conquest of Mecca.' I then said, 'My father told me that 'Amr, Khalid and Ṭalḥa came forward at the beginning of Ṣafar in 8 AH.'"

In the sahih collection of Muslim there is material testifying to the course of his acceptance of Islam, his fine companionship with the Messenger of God (SAAS) during his life, and how he died repenting his conduct during the period of his leadership after that of the Messenger of God (SAAS), along with a description of his death. May God be pleased with him.

83. A cry of surprise and delight.
THE PATH BY WHICH KHĀLID B. AL-WALID ACCEPTED ISLAM.

Al-Waqidi stated that Yaḥyā b. al-Mughīra b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Ḥārith b. Hisām related to me, “I heard my father quote Khalīd b. al-Walīd as saying, ‘When God wished for good for me, he instilled Islam into my heart and gave me good sense. I then told myself, ‘I have witnessed how all these lands are against Muhammad (SAAS); yet whatever I witness in these places makes me want to leave them, feeling that I am out of place in them and that Muhammad will prevail.’”

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) left for al-Ḥudaybiyya, I went forth with some of the polytheist cavalry and encountered the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men at ʿUsfān. I positioned myself directly facing and opposing him. He and his men performed the al-zuḥr, the noon prayer, before us and we thought we should attack him then, but could not make up our minds to do so; which was a very good thing! He saw what we were about to do and he and his men performed the al-‘aṣr, late afternoon prayer, as a ṣalāt al-khawf; “prayer in fear of attack.” This made an impression on us and I said, “The fellow is denied us!” We moved back and he avoided our horsemen by taking the route to the right.

“When Quraysh made peace with him at al-Ḥudaybiyya and put him off till the following year, I asked myself, “What is left? Where can I go? To the Negus? He follows Muhammad, whose men are safe with him. Shall I go to Heraclius and abandon my faith for Christianity or Judaism? Should I go and live with foreigners, or stay at home with those who remain?”

“When I was in this quandary, the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca to perform the ʿumrat al-qaḍiyya. I pretended to be absent and did not witness his entry. My brother, d-Walīd b. al-Walīd, had come in with the Prophet (SAAS) on the ʿumrat al-qaḍiyya and he asked after me but could not locate me. He wrote me a letter in which he said, “In the name of God the Most Merciful, the Most Compassionate. I know of nothing more strange than your antipathy for Islam, being as intelligent as you are. Could anyone disregard something like Islam? The Messenger of God (SAAS) has asked me about you. He said, ‘Where is Khalīd?’ I replied, ‘God will bring him.’ He then asked, ‘Could someone like him disregard Islam? If he were to put his energy and bravery to work with the Muslims it would be better for him. We would certainly give him precedence before others.’ Take note, brother, of what good things you are missing.”

“When his letter reached me, I got ready to come out and experienced a strong desire for Islam. The question the Messenger of God (SAAS) had asked about me pleased me greatly. I dreamt of being in a constrained and barren land and emerging into one that was spacious and fertile. I told myself that this was a vision. And when I went to Medina, I decided to relate it to Abū Bakr. He said, “Your exiting to which God led you was to Islam. The constrained land where you had been was polytheism.”

84. See above, pp.
“'And so when I made up my mind to come out to the Messenger of God (SAAS), I wondered in whose company I would go to him. Then I met up with Şafwân b. Umayya and asked him, ‘Abû Wahb, don’t you see what we are doing? We’re (as useless) as molars! Muḥammad may defeat the Arabs and the non-Arabs alike. If we joined and followed Muḥammad, then honour gained by him would be honour for us all.” But Şafwân rejected this vigorously, saying, “If I were the very last, I’d never follow him!”

“We parted and I told myself that this was someone whose brother and father had been killed at Badr. Then I met İkrîma b. Aba Jahl to whom I said the same as I had to Şafwân b. Umayya. He responded just as Şafwân had done. I asked him to keep confidential what I had said, and he agreed.

“I went off home, had my camel readied and left on it. On the way I met Úthmân b. Ṭalḥâ; knowing him to be a friend, I thought I would tell him my plan. I then recalled the names of some of his elders who had been killed and I thus became reluctant to mention this to him. But I said to myself, “What does it matter to me now that I’m about to leave?” So I told him what had transpired and said, “We’re like a fox in a hole that would be sure to come up if doused with buckets of water.” I said to him what I had earlier told my other two friends and he responded positively at once. I told him, “I got up this morning ready to proceed forth; over there at the road, kneeling down, is my mount.” We then agreed to meet at Ya’jij. If he got there first, he would wait; if I arrived there before him, I would wait there.

“We set off at night, before dawn, and we met at Ya’jij. We proceeded on together to al-H̄adda, where we found Āmr b. al-‘Āš. He welcomed us warmly, as we did him. He asked us where we were headed and we asked him why he had left. He wanted to know our purpose in leaving, and we replied, “To enter Islam and follow Muḥammad (SAAS).” He said that that was his purpose too.

“So we travelled on together into Medina and dismounted at the back of al-Ḥarra. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was informed of our arrival, and he was delighted with us. I dressed in my best clothes and headed for the Messenger of God (SAAS). My brother met me and said, “Hurry along; the Messenger of God (SAAS) has been told about you, is delighted at your arrival and is awaiting you.”

“We stepped up our pace and when I looked at him I saw him smiling all the time until we stopped before him. I addressed him as “Prophet” and he returned a greeting, his face beaming. I said, “I bear witness that there is no god but God and that you are the Messenger of God.” He then said, “Come here.” And then he said, “Praise be to God who guided you. I considered you to have intelligence that I hoped would only lead you to good.” I replied, “Messenger of God, I used to agree with those others I have seen to be stubbornly opposed to the truth; please pray to God that He will forgive me this.” He replied, “Islam cuts off what preceded it.” I asked, “Messenger of God, and so hence ...” He then said, “O God, forgive every action Khalid b. al-Walid took to block God’s cause.”
“Khalid went on, ‘Uthmān and ‘Amr then came up and expressed their allegiance to the Messenger of God (SAAS). Our arrival was in Safar of 8 AH. And, I swear by God, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave precedence to none of his Companions over myself.’”

THE EXPEDITION OF SHUJĀʾ B. WAHB AL-ASAIDI TO SOME MEN OF HAWAZIN.

Al-Waqidi stated that Ibn Abī Sabra related to him, from Ishāq b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Farwa, from ʿUmar b. al-Ḥakam, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) dispatched Shujāʾ b. Waḥb with 24 men out against a group of Hawāzin with orders to attack them. He left, travelling by night and remaining hidden by day. When he came to them, they were taken by surprise. He, Shujāʾ, had told his men not to pursue them vigorously. They seized many camels and goats. They drove them off to Medina, where each man received 15 camels as booty.”

Others maintain that they also took many captives and that the leader (Shujāʾ) chose from them one modest girl and that their people then accepted Islam. The Prophet (SAAS) advised their leader to return the women to them, and he agreed. He gave a choice to the girl he had with him, and she chose to stay.

This expedition may be the one to which al-Shāfīʻi referred, quoting Malik, from Nāfiʻ, from Ibn ‘Umar, to the effect that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent an expedition towards Najd, ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar being among them. The latter said, “We captured many camels and our share of the booty was 12 camels apiece, which the Messenger of God (SAAS) awarded us camel by camel.”

This is included in both saḥīḥ collections in a hadith from Malik. Muslim also related it in a hadith of al-Layth, and from a hadith of ʿAbd Allah. All of these quoted Nāfiʻ, from Ibn ‘Umar, in similar words.

Abū Daʿūd stated that Hanād related to him, quoting ʿAbda, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, from Nāfiʻ, from Ibn ‘Umar, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent an expedition out to Najd and I took part in it. We captured many camels and our leader divided them up to each of us, camel by camel. Then we went on to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he divided up our booty between us, so that each of us acquired 12 camels, after the khumus (the one-fifth for the bayt al-mdl, the treasury) had been set aside. The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not include in our counts the camels our leader had given us, nor did he criticize him for what he had done. Each one of us received 13 camels, after he had made his distribution.”

THE EXPEDITION OF KAʿB B. ʿUMAYR TO BANŪ QUĐĀṢA, IN SYRIA.

Al-Waqidi stated that Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh related to him, from al-Zuhri, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Kaʿb b. ʿUmar al-Ghifārī with 15 men out as far as Dhāḥ Aṭlāḥ, in Syria. There they found a very large body of men. The Muslims invited them to accept Islam, but they did not agree and showered them with arrows. When the men of the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw this, they fought the enemy fiercely until they (the Muslims) were killed. One of their men was wounded badly and lay among the dead. In the cool of the night he managed to make his way back to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was about to send out an expedition against them when news reached him that they had gone elsewhere."

THE EXPEDITION TO MU'TA.

This is the expedition of Zayd b. Ḥāritha with approximately 3,000 men to al-Balqa' territory in Syria.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, following his account of the 'umrat al-qadīyya, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Medina for the duration of Dhū al-Ḥijjah – the polytheists having controlled that pilgrimage – throughout al-Muharram, Safar and both Rabi’ al-Awwal and al-Thānī. In Jumādā al-Uwālā he sent out into Syria those who were afflicted at Mu’ta."

"Muḥammad b. Ja’far b. al-Zubayr related to me, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent out his expedition to Mu’ta in Jumādā al-Uwālā, 8 AH. He appointed as their leader Zayd b. Ḥāritha, saying, 'If Zayd should be killed, then Ja’far b. Abū Ṭālib will take command. If he should fall, then 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa will lead.'"

"The army, consisting of 3,000 men, then prepared to leave."

Al-Wāqidi stated that Rābi‘a b. 'Uthmān related to him, from 'Amr b. al-Ḥakam, from his father, who said, 'Al-Nu‘mān b. Fanḥās, the Jew, came and stood with the men looking over at the Messenger of God (SAAS), when he said, 'Zayd b. Ḥāritha will be commander and if Zayd should be killed, then it will be Ja’far b. Abū Ṭālib. If Ja’far is killed, then ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa will be commander. If he should be killed, then the Muslims should choose one from among themselves to appoint over them.'"

"Al-Nu‘mān then said, 'Abū al-Qāsim, if you are a prophet and were to so name them, few or many in number, they would all be killed. When the prophets of Banū Isrā‘il named a commander and then went on to name his successor if he should be killed, then they would all be killed, even if they named 100.' He told Zayd, 'Attend to your affairs. For you will never return, if Muḥammad is a prophet.'"

"Zayd replied, 'I do testify that he is a prophet, a man of truth and piety; may God's peace and blessings be upon him.'"

Al-Bayhaqī related this.

Ibn Ishaq went on, "When time came for their departure, the men said farewell to the commanders of the Messenger of God (SAAS). When ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa said goodbye with the rest, he wept. When people asked him why, he replied, ‘I swear by God, it’s not because of my love for this life or my affection for you; I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) reciting a verse from God’s Book which mentions hell-fire and says, “All of you will go to it; this is determined and decreed by your Lord” (surat Maryam; XIX, v.71). And I don’t know how I’ll be able to escape from it after I’ve gone into it!’

“The Muslims then said to him, ‘May God accompany you, protect you and return you all to us in safety.’

‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha spoke the following lines,

‘But I ask the All-Merciful for forgiveness, and a large wound that bleeds profusely
Or a spear from a warrior armed with one that goes through my intestines and my liver.
So that it will be said when people pass by my grave, “God gave him guidance as a warrior, and he behaved well.”’

Ibn Ishaq continued, “The men then were about to leave when ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha came over to the Messenger of God (SAAS), said farewell to him and recited the following verses, ‘May God affirm the good He presented you, as he gave affirmation to Moses, and a victory like they won.

I sensed the goodness in you to be a gift; and God knows me to have fine sight.
You are the Messenger and whoever is deprived of your gifts and sight of you has been diminished by fate.’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The army then set forth and the Messenger of God (SAAS) went out with them to bid them farewell. When he had said goodbye to them and turned away, ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha spoke the following verse, ‘May peace persist for a man to whom I have said farewell amidst the palm trees, the best friend and escort.’”

Imām Ahmad stated that ‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Abū Khalid al-Aḥmar, from al-Ḥajjāj, from al-Ḥakm, from Miṣqam, from Ibn ‘Abbās (who said that) the Messenger of God (SAAS) dispatched a mission out to Muṭā, appointing Zayd as its leader. If Zayd were killed, then Jaﬀar was to take charge and if he were killed Ibn Rawāha would be in command. Ibn Rawāha stayed back and went into the mosque with the Prophet (SAAS), who saw him and asked, ‘What keeps you back?’ ‘I wanted to attend the prayer with you,’ Ibn Rawāha replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘To go forth (to battle) in the morning or the evening is better than the world and all in it.’”
Ahmad stated that Abu Mu'awiya related to him, quoting al-Hajjaj, from al-Hakam, from Miqsam, from Ibn 'Abbás, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent out 'Abd Allah b. Rawāha on an expedition, and that day coincided with a Friday. His companions went on ahead, while 'Abd Allah b. Rawāha said, ‘I’ll stay back and perform the Friday prayer with the Messenger of God (SAAS), then rejoin them.’ When the Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the prayer, he saw 'Abd Allah and asked him, ‘What prevented you leaving with your comrades?’ He replied, ‘I wanted to perform the Friday prayer with you, then catch them up.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Were you to spend all there is on earth you would not attain their departure.’”

Al-Tirmidhi related it similarly, from Ahmad b. Munic, from Abu Mu'awiya. He then added, “We know of this tradition only from this line.”

Shu'ba observed, “Al-Hakam only heard five aḥādīth from Miqṣam.” He enumerated them and concluded, “And this hadith is not one of them.”

I observe that the al-Hajjaj b. Arpt in his account is controversial. But God knows best.

The purpose of giving this hadith is that it establishes that the leaders left for Muta on a Friday. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “They then proceeded and encamped at Maṣan in Syria. There news reached them that Heraclius had encamped at Ma'āb, in al-Balqa' territory, with a force of 100,000 rūm, ‘Byzantines’. To them were joined another 100,000 men of Lakhm, Judhām, al-Qayn, Bahrā and Bali, commanded by a man from Bali tribe and the Irsha clan named Malik b. Zafila.”

In an account of Yūnus, from Ibn Ishaq, it is stated, “News reached them that Heraclius had encamped at Ma'āb with 100,000 Byzantines and 100,000 mustribs‘Afabs.”

It is also stated that the Byzantines numbered 200,000, along with 50,000 others. The smallest figure given is that the Byzantines numbered 100,000, while there were also 50,000 Arabs (allied to them). Al-Suhayli related this.

(Ibn Ishaq went on) “When this news reached the Muslims, they remained at Ma'ān for two nights to discuss the matter. Some said, ‘We should send a message to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and tell him of the size of our enemy force. He will then either reinforce us or give us some order we can carry out.’ But 'Abd Allah b. Rawāha encouraged the troops, saying, ‘Men, what you dislike is what you have come forth to seek - martyrdom! We are not fighting by means of our numbers or strength; we are combating them only with this religion with which God has honoured us. Go forth; it will only result in one of two good outcomes - either victory or martyrdom!’

“The others said, ‘By God, Ibn Rawāha is right.’ And so the army went forth.

85. The word implies persons of Arabic language but mixed ancestry. The tribes named in the passage were quasi-Christian.
"Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa spoke the following lines regarding this interruption of theirs,

'We brought our horses forward from Mt. Aja' and Mt. Farā', their bellies distended with grass.

The shoes with which we shod them were of stones as smooth as leather.

They remained for two nights at Ma'ṣān and after their period of rest they were fully restored.

When we went ahead our horses had free rein, the veins in their nostrils pulsing hard.

I swear by my father, we will go on to Ma'āb, even though both Byzantines and Arabs are there.

We gripped their reins and they galloped ahead vigorously, their dust swirling up,

Their noise loud and the points of their helmets glinting like stars.

Many a contented woman our spears rendered divorced, women who can remarry or stay widowed.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated further, "Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that it was related to him from Zayd b. Arqam, who said, 'I was an orphan living in the care of 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa. He took me forth on that journey, riding behind him on his saddle bag. I swear that by night I heard him recite the following lines,

"Since you (my mount) have brought me near and borne my baggage for four nights' distance from the marshes,

Then you deserve pleasure and freedom from blame; and I will not return hereafter to my people.

The Muslims having come will leave me in Syria where I long to stay

And those with whom I am joined in relationship to the Most Merciful, though not my brothers, will take you back.

There I will not worry about plants sprouting, nor about palm trees whose roots need water.'"

"When I heard these words from him I cried and he tapped me with his whip and said, "Why be sad, silly boy, if God grants me martyrdom and you ride home on a saddle?""

"Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa also spoke the following line of verse on one of his journeys,

'Zayd, Zayd of the lean, fast camels, you have been led forward throughout a long night, so dismount now.'"
Ibn Ishaq stated, "The army then advanced to the outskirts of al-Balqâ'. There they were met by the Roman and Arab troops of Heraclius, at one of the villages of al-Balqâ' called Mashārīf. The enemy advanced and the Muslims withdrew to a village called Mu'ta. There the forces clashed. The Muslims arranged their forces to meet the enemy, putting a man of Banū ʿUdhra named Quṭba b. Qatāda in command of the right flank and an ansārī named ʿUbāya b. Mālik in charge of the left flank."

Al-Waqidi stated, "Rabī'a b. Uthmān related to me, from al-Maqburi, who quoted Abū Hurayra as saying, 'I was present at the Battle of Mu'ta. When the polytheists approached, we saw such equipment, weapons, horses, brocade, silk and gold as no one ever before witnessed! I was dazzled. Thābit b. Arqam said to me, 'Abū Hurayra, don't you think that's a huge force?' "Yes," I replied. "But you weren't present at Badr with us. Superiority in numbers won't defeat us.'""

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

Ibn Ishaq went on, "The forces then engaged and battle commenced. Zayd b. Ḥaritha fought, bearing the banner of the Messenger of God (SAAS), until he perished amidst the enemy spears. Ja'far then picked it up and fought on until he was killed. Ja'far was the first Muslim to hamstring his mount in battle."

He continued, "Yahyā b. ʿAbbād b. ʿAbbād Allāh b. al-Zubayr quoted his father ʿAbbād as saying, 'My foster-father, of Banū Murra b. Ḥuf, who was present at the Battle of Mu'ta, related to me, 'I swear I can see Ja'far jumping off his sorrel mare, hamstringing her and fighting on until he was killed, reciting the lines,'"

'Hail to paradise approaching, its waters fine and cool
The punishment of the Byzantines is near, unbelievers of doubtful descent.
It's up to me to strike them when we clash.'""

Abū Dā'ūd related this from a ḥadīth of Abū Ishaq, but he did not quote the poetry.

Those who permit the slaughter of animals if there is concern that the enemy may make use of them make reference to this ḥadīth. Similarly, Abū Ḥanīfa states, concerning al-ağhnām, sheep or goats, that if they cannot keep up with the pace and it is feared that the enemy will capture and use them, they may be slaughtered and burned to prevent this. But God knows best.

Al-Suhayli stated, "No one criticizes Ja'far for this. This action is permissible unless (the animals) are safe from seizure by the enemy. This has nothing to do with the prohibition of killing animals for amusement."

Ibn Hishām stated, "A reliable source, a scholar, related to me that Ja'far took the banner in his right hand which was cut off. He then took it in his left hand, and it was cut off. He then hugged it to himself with his upper arms until he was killed. He was 33 years of age. God rewarded him for his valour by giving him two wings in heaven with which he could fly wherever he wished."
It is said that one of the Byzantines gave him a blow that day that cut him in two."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Yahya b. ‘Abbād b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, quoting his father ‘Abbād, as follows, ‘My foster-father, a man of Banū Murra b. ‘Awf, related to me, saying, ‘When Ja‘far was killed, ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa took up the banner and advanced with it, on his horse. Then he began to waver and to hesitate somewhat and so he spoke the following verses,

‘I swear, my soul, that you will indeed do battle or be forced to do battle
Even though the men are shouting and screaming; why is it I see you hating paradise?
For long you have been at ease; are you anything but a drop of liquid inside a skin bag?’"

“He also said,

‘My soul, even if you’re not killed you’ll die any way; this is the fate of death you are exposed to.
What you hoped for has been given to you; if you do what they both did, you will have been well directed.’"

“The reference here is to his two companions, Zayd and Ja‘far. Then he dismounted. When he did so a cousin of his came up carrying a meat bone and said, ‘Take strength from this; you have suffered much recently.’ He took it from his hand and took a bite out of it. Then he heard a great commotion among the men. He said (to himself), ‘And are you still alive!’ He threw away the bone, took up his sword and advanced, fighting until he was killed. May God be pleased with him!”

“Thabit b. Aqram, brother of Banū al‘Ajlān, then took the banner. He said, ‘Muslims, form around one of you!’ ‘Let it be around you,’ they shouted. ‘No, I will not do it,’ he replied. So they formed around Khalīd b. al-Walīd. When he (Khalid) took the banner he defended his men, keeping them safe, then withdrew and the enemy distanced from him so that he could leave with the men.”"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When the army suffered great loss, the Messenger of God (SAAS) — so I have been told — said, ‘Zayd b. Ḥarītha took the banner and fought with it until he was martyred. Ja‘far then took it and fought, bearing it until he was martyred.’ After that the Messenger of God (SAAS) became silent and the faces of the ansār changed as they wondered whether there was something terrible about ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa. Then he said, ‘‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa has taken it now and fought with it until martyred.’

“He then said, ‘They have been raised up to heaven — I saw in a vision — upon couches of gold. I noticed that the couch of ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa was slanting away from those of his comrades and I asked, ‘Why is this?’ I was told, ‘They went straight ahead, whereas 'Abd Allah b. Rawāḥa hesitated somewhat before proceeding."

This is related thus by Ibn Ishāq munqāṭš, with an incomplete chain of transmission.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Aḥmad b. Wāqīd related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Ayyūb, from Ḥamīd b. Hilāl, from Anas b. Mālik, (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) announced to the people the deaths of Zayd, Jaʿfar and Ibn Rawāḥa before they received the news. He said, "Zayd took the banner, then was struck down. Jaʿfar took it and was struck down. Ibn Rawāḥa took it and was struck down." His eyes then brimmed with tears. He went on, 'And then one of the Lord's swords" (Khalid b. al-Walīd, that is) "took it until God gave them victory."

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this. He also related it elsewhere saying that he (the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) was on the minbar when he said, "And it would not please them to be with us."

Al-Bukhārī stated that Aḥmad b. Abū Bakr related to him, quoting Mughṭira b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Makhzūmī, not al-Ḥazāmī, from 'Abd Allāh b. Ṣaʿīd, from Nāfiʿ, from 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) appointed Zayd b. Ḥarīta in command of the expedition to al-Muṣṭa. He also said, 'If Zayd should be killed, then Jaʿfar (will take over); if Jaʿfar is killed, then 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa.' 'Abd Allāh said, 'I was among those at Muṣṭa. We searched for (the body of) Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalīb and found him among those slain. On his body we found some 90 sword wounds or arrow holes.'" Al-Bukhārī is alone also in giving this hadith.

Al-Bukhārī went on, "Aḥmad related to us, quoting Ibn Wahhāb, from 'Amr, from Ibn Abū Hilāl, he being Saʿīd b. Abū Hilāl al-Laythī, who said, 'Nāfiʿ informed me that Ibn Umar informed him that he stood over Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalīb on that day, he having been killed, (and that Ibn Umar said), "I counted 50 wounds made by spears or swords, and none were in his back.""

"This too is a hadith only given by al-Bukhārī.

This account may be reconciled with the previous one; Ibn 'Umar saw that number of wounds, whereas others saw more than that. Or that those he saw on his front were inflicted before his death and that when he fell to the ground, they also gave him blows in his back. Ibn 'Umar counted those in his front suffered while he faced the enemy, before he was killed. May God be pleased with him!

The testimony quoted by Ibn Hisḥām, regarding his right arm being severed while it held the banner and then the same happening to his left, is upheld by what al-Bukhārī related: "Muḥammad b. Abū Bakr related to us, quoting 'Umar b. 'Alī, from Iṣmāʿīl b. Abū Khalīd, from 'Amīr, who said, 'When Ibn 'Umar greeted Ibn Jaʿfar, he would say, "Peace be upon you, O Son of him who has two wings!"'

He related it also in al-Manāqīb (Virtues). Al-Nasāʾī gave it from a hadith of Yazīd b. Hārūn, from Iṣmāʿīl b. Abū Khalīd.
Al-Bukhari stated that Abū Nu‘aym related to him, quoting Sufyan, from Isma‘īl, from Qays b. Abī Ḥāzim, who said, “I heard Khalīd b. al-Walid say, ‘At the battle of Mu’ta, nine swords were broken in my hand; I finally held only a Yemeni broad-sword.’”

He then narrated it from Muḥammad b. al-Muthannā, from Yahȳa, from Isma‘īl, who quoted Qays as having said, “I heard Khalīd b. al-Walid say, ‘At the battle of Mu’ta, nine swords were broken in my hand; a Yemeni broad-sword was left in my hand.’”

Al-Bukhari is alone in giving this hadith.

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqi stated that Abī Naṣr b. Qatāda related to him, quoting Abī ʿAmr Maṭar, quoting Abī Khalīfa al-Fāḍir b. al-Ḥabāb al-Jumāḥi, quoting Sulaymān b. Ḥarb, quoting al-Aswad b. Shaybān, from Khalīd b. Samir, who said, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Rabāḥ al-Anṣārī came to us; the anṣār themselves would ask him for legal opinions. The people swamped him; I was among them as they did so. He said, ‘Abū Qatāda, the horseman of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), sent out the jaysh al-ʿumariʿ, the “army of the commanders”, saying, “Zayd b. Ḥarīthah will command. If he should be struck down, then Jaʿfar will command. If Jaʿfar is struck down, then ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawḥa will command.” Jaʿfar jumped up and said, “Messenger of God, I didn’t want you to appoint Zayd over me!” He replied, “Go forth; you do not know which would be better.”

“They did leave, staying only for as long as God wished. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) (later) mounted the minbar, gave an order and the summons was announced, “A full prayer assembly!” People gathered around the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he then said, “I will give you news of this army of yours. They have gone forth and encountered the enemy. Zayd has been martyred.” He then prayed for forgiveness for Zayd. He went on, “Then Jaʿfar took the banner and he charged the enemy and was eventually martyred.” He then bore witness that Jaʿfar had attained martyrdom and sought forgiveness for him. He went on, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawḥa then took the banner and planted his feet firmly until he was martyred.” He prayed for forgiveness for ʿAbd Allāh. He went on, “Then Khalīd b. al-Walid took the banner; he was not one of the (appointed) commanders, but took command himself.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, “O God, he is truly one of Your swords; may You help him.” And from that day on Khalīd was known as “God’s sword.””

Al-Nasāʾī related it from a hadith of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, from al-Aswad b. Shaybān. His account is similar, but has a nice addition: “Bābu khayrīn! Bābu khayrīn! A good beginning!” He then went on to relate the hadith as above.

Al-Waqīḍī stated that ʿAbd al-Jabbar b. ʿAmāra b. Ghaziyya related to me, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, from ʿAmr b. Ḥazm, who said, “When the army joined in battle at Muʿta, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sat on the minbar and God revealed to him what lay between him and Syria so that he could observe their conflict. He said, ‘Zayd b. Ḥarīthah took the banner and Satan came to him and made life seem good to him and death hateful, making life on earth attractive to him. He (Zayd) said, “Now that the faith is firmly planted in the hearts of the believers, would you make life on earth seem good to me?” He then advanced until he was martyred.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then performed the prayer for him and said, ‘Ask forgiveness for him; he has entered paradise as a martyr.”

Al-Waqidi stated that Muhammad b. Šāliḥ related to him, from ‘Āṣim b. ‘Amr b. Qatāda, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “When Zayd was killed, Ja’far b. Abū Ṭālib took the banner. Satan then came to him and made life seem good to him, death hateful, and he made life attractive to him. But Ja’far said, ‘Now, when faith has become firm in the hearts of the believers, would you have me wish for life?’ He then advanced until he was martyred. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke the prayer for him. He said, ‘Seek forgiveness for your brother; he is a martyr and has entered paradise. He is flying in heaven with wings of sapphire, going wherever he wishes there.’”

He went on, “Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa then took the banner and was martyred. He then entered heaven muṭarīḍ, ‘indirectly’. This upset the anṣār and someone asked, ‘Messenger of God, why “indirectly”? He replied, ‘When he suffered wounds, he drew back. But he criticized himself, regained his courage, was martyred and entered paradise.’

“His people were much relieved by this.”

Al-Waqidi stated that ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith b. al- Fuḍayl quoted his father as saying, “When Khālid b. al-Walid took up the banner, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Now the fighting is fierce.’”

Al-Waqidi also stated, “Al-Ḥāf b. Khālid related to me as follows, ‘Ibn Rawāḥa having been killed in the evening, Khālid b. al-Walid spent that night (without engaging the enemy). Next morning, he attacked, having placed his vanguard at the rear and exchanged the forces of the left and right flanks. The enemy were no longer familiar with their banners and disposition and, believing them to have been reinforced, were frightened and retreated in disarray. And so they suffered a defeat as no enemy had inflicted upon them before.’”

This accords with the account given by Mūsā b. ‘Uqba, may God be pleased with him, in his work on the military campaigns. He stated, after recounting the ‘umrat al-Ḥudaybiyya, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went to Medina and remained there for six months. He then despatched an army to Muṭa, appointing Zayd b. Ḥarīthah as their commander. He ordered, ‘If he is struck down, then command is to go to Ja’far b. Abū Ṭālib. If Ja’far is struck down, then ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa is to be their commander.’ They travelled on until they encountered Ibn Abū Sabra al-Ghassāni at Muṭa, where there was a large force of Christian Arabs and Byzantines, including men of Tanūkḥ and Bahra’. Ibn Abū Sabra closed the gate of the fortress against the Muslims for three days. The armies then clashed on a red field, where the fighting was intense. Zayd b. Ḥarīthah took... the banner and was killed; Ja‘far then took it and he was killed. ‘Abd Allah b. Rawāḥa took it next and was killed. Then the Muslims chose Khalid b. al-Walīd al-Makhzūmi to succeed those three commanders chosen by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). God then defeated the enemy and gave victory to the Muslims. “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent them forth in Jumādā al-Uwla, of 8 ah that is.”

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “And they claimed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Ja‘far passed me by amidst the angels, flying as they did, and he had two wings.’

He went on, “They also claim — but God knows best — that Ya‘lā b. Umayya came with news of the men at Mu‘ta to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who asked, ‘If you wish, you can tell me or, if you prefer, I will tell you.’ ‘You tell me, Messenger of God,’ he asked. So the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told them all the news of them and described it all to them. He (Ya‘lā) then commented, ‘By Him who sent you with the truth, you have not left out a word — what happened to them is exactly as you stated!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘God raised the earth up before me so that I could see their battlefield.’”

This text has many nice details that are absent from the account of Ibn Ishaq. It contradicts somewhat the latter’s account, which suggests that Khalid only disengaged the enemy to escape from the Byzantines and the Christian Arabs.

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba and al-Wāqidi stated clearly that they defeated the Byzantines and the Arabs with them, which is evident from the ḥadīth given above from Anas directly quoting the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as saying, “And then one of God’s swords took it until God gave them victory.” Al-Bukhārī related this. This account is preferable and is the one to which the ḥāfiṣ al-Bayhaqī referred after recounting both the statements to such effect as we have stated.

I note that it is possible to reconcile between the account given by Ibn Ishaq and that given by the others. This would be as follows: when Khalid took the banner he drew away the Muslims until he had removed them from the reach of the Roman and quasi-Arab unbelievers. Next morning he switched the rearguard and vanguard and both flanks, as al-Wāqidi related, and so the Byzantines thought these to be reinforcements that had arrived for the Muslims. And when Khalid attacked them, he defeated them, with God’s permission. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Muḥammad b. Ja‘far related to me, from ‘Urwa, who said, ‘When those who had fought at Mu‘ta approached, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and the Muslims met them. The boys rushed out to meet them while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went out on his mount with the other people. He said, ‘Take the boys away and give me Ja‘far’s son.’ ‘Abd Allāh was brought to him and he picked him up and carried him. The people then began tossing dirt at the army, saying, ‘You runaways! You fled from God’s path!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'They are not runaways but men who will fight again, if God, Almighty and Glorious is He, wills it.'

This hadith is incomplete with this line of transmission, and is somewhat strange.

It is my opinion that Ibn Ishāq is using his imagination in this text by thinking of these men as being the army, whereas they were men who had fled when the armies clashed. The remainder did not flee, but were awarded victory, as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had told them while on the minbar when he said, "Then one of God’s swords took it until God gave them victory." The Muslims would never have called them runaways after that, but would have met them with honour and respect. Rebuking and throwing dirt would only have been done to those who had fled and abandoned them there. Among them was 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar, may God be pleased with them both.

Imām Ahmad stated that Ḥasan related to him, quoting Zuhayr, quoting Yazīd b. Abū Ziyād, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā, from ʿAbd Allāh b. 'Umar, who said, "I took part in one of the expeditions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and some of the men fled, myself among them. We wondered what we should do, having fled and caused anger. We thought we might be killed if we returned to Medina. Then we decided we should present ourselves before the Messenger of God (SAAS), in which case we would either be forgiven or we would leave. We went to him before the pre-dawn prayer. He came out and asked, 'Who are you?' 'We are the runaways,' we replied. 'No', he replied, 'you’re the ones who will fight again. I’m one of you, and I’m one of the believers.' We then went forward and kissed his hand."

He then went on to relate it from Ghundar, from Shu'ba, from Yazīd b. Abū Ziyād, from Ibn Abū Laylā, from Ibn 'Umar, who said, "We were on a military expedition, but fled. We wondered whether we should go overseas. Then we went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘Messenger of God, we are the runaways.’ He replied, ‘No; you’re the ones who will fight again.’"

Abū Dā'ūd related it, as did al-Tirmidhi and Ibn Māja, from a hadith of Yazīd b. Abū Ziyād. Al-Tirmidhi stated, "It is hasan, ‘good’; we know it only from his hadith."

Aḥmad stated, "Ishāq b. ʿIsā and Aswād b. Ṭāmīr related to us as follows, 'Shurayk related to us, from Yazīd b. Abū Ziyād, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā, from Ibn 'Umar, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out on a military expedition. When we encountered the enemy we fled in the first clash and went back to Medina by night, as a group, and went into hiding. Then we wondered if we should go to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and apologize to him."

"‘We did go to him, and when he met us we told him, ‘We are the runaways, Messenger of God.’ He replied, ‘No; you are those who will fight again, and I’m of your party.’’"

Al-Aswād said (that the words used were) “I am of the party of every Muslim.”
Ibn Ishq stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. ‘Amr b. Ḥazm related to me, from ‘Amir b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, that Umm Salama, the wife of the Messenger of God (SAAS), asked the wife of Salama b. Hishām b. al-Mughīra, ‘Why don’t I see Salama attend the prayer with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims?’

“She replied, ‘He can’t go outside. Whenever he does, people cry out, ‘Runaway! You ran away from God’s path!’ So he sits at home and never goes out; he was present at the battle of Mu’ta.”

I comment that it is possible that some of them fled when they saw the great size of the Byzantine force, who were many times larger in number; the Muslims numbered 3,000, while the enemy, so they say, was 200,000 strong. Such circumstances do permit flight, as is well established. When this group fled, the rest remained firm and God gave them victory, and released them from the clutches of the enemy, many of whom they killed, as al-Wāqīdī and Mūsā b. ‘Uqba before him recorded.

This is further affirmed and substantiated by what Imām Ahmad related: “Al-Walīd b. Muslim related to us, quoting Safwān b. ‘Amr, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Jūbayr b. Nufayr, from his father, from ‘Awf b. Mālik al-‘Ashja’ī, who said, ‘I was among those who accompanied Zayd b. Hāritha and the other Muslims to the battle of Mu’ta. I went with a madādi, an “auxiliary”, from Yemen whose only equipment was his sword. One of the Muslims slaughtered a camel and the auxiliary asked him for a piece of its leather. He gave it to him and the madādi used it as a shield.

“We advanced and encountered a force of the Byzantines, among whom was a man riding a sorrel equipped with a gilded saddle and a gilded sword. The Roman began attacking the Muslims, and the auxiliary crouched down behind a rock. When the Roman went by, the madādi hamstrung his horse and when its rider fell, he jumped on him and killed him. And so he seized his horse and weapon. When God gave victory to the Muslims, Khālid b. al-Walīd sent to him and took the booty.’

“‘Awf went on, ‘So I went to Khālid and said, “Khālid, haven’t you heard that the Messenger of God (SAAS) has decreed that the spoils (from a dead enemy) belong to the person who killed him?” “Yes”, he replied, “but I thought this excessive.” I told him, “If you don’t give it back to him, then I will report you to the Messenger of God (SAAS).” But he refused to return it.’

“‘Awf continued, ‘When we had a meeting with the Messenger of God (SAAS), I related to him the story of the madādi and what Khālid had done. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, “Khālid, return to him what you took.” I then said, “So there, Khālid! Didn’t I tell you I would!” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “What’s all this?” So I related it to him and he got angry. He said, “Khālid, don’t give it back to him! Would you disobey one of my commanders? You expect only what in their commands is trouble-free, while assigning them the troublesome!”’” Al-Walīd stated, “I asked Thawr about this And he related it to me from Khalid b. Ma'dan, from Jubayr b. Nufayr, from 'Aowf, in similar form."

Muslim and Ibn 'Aowf related it from a hadith of Jubayr b. Nufayr, from 'Aowf b. Malik in similar words. This story substantiates that they took booty from them, and despoiled and killed some of their officers.

It is related above from al-Bukhari that Khalid, may God be pleased with him, said, "At the battle of Mu'ta nine swords were broken in my hand and only a Yemeni broad-sword remained."

This requires that they engaged them in heavy combat; if this had not been the case, they would not have been able to disengage from them. This by itself is an independent proof. But God knows best. This hadith was chosen by Mūsa b. Qqba, al-Wāqidi and al-Bayhaqi, and Ibn Hishām related it from al-Zuhri.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "The authorities on the military expeditions differ over their having fled or withdrawn. Some maintain that this was so, while others claim that the Muslims prevailed over the polytheists, and that the latter were defeated."

He went on, "The hadith of Anas b. Malik that quotes the Messenger of God (SAAS) as having stated, 'Then Khalid took it (the banner) and God gave him victory,' indicates their victory over the enemy. But God knows best."

I note that Ibn Ishaq related that Qutba b. Qatāda al-Udhri, who commanded the Muslim right flank, attacked Malik b. Zāfila (whom Ibn Hishām names "Rāfīla"), the commander of the Christian Arabs there, and killed him. Boasting of that, he spoke the following verses,

"I stabbed Ibn Zāfila b. al-Arāsh with a spear that passed through him then broke. I gave him a blow on his neck that made it bend like a mimosa branch. We led away his tribe's women at Raquqayn like sheep."

This substantiates our view. Because it usually happens that when an army commander is killed his men flee. Moreover, Qutba states clearly in his verses that they took their women prisoner. And this is plain in what we have related. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq adopts the view that what happened was disengagement and withdrawal from the Byzantines, and he calls this a success and a victory, in view of the superiority in numbers of the enemy and their having the Muslims surrounded. This would normally have meant that they would have been totally decimated; and so when they disengaged and withdrew, this constituted the most that could be hoped for in such circumstances.

This is quite likely; however, it does contradict the clear statement of the Messenger of God (SAAS) that "God gave them victory over them."

Ibn Ishaq did give evidence for his view. He stated, "Regarding the discussion about Khalid b. al-Walid and his protecting and withdrawing his men, the verses of Qays b. al-Muḥṣir al-Yaʿmuri are relevant. He said, apologizing for his actions and those of the others that day,

'I swear by God, my soul criticizes me persistently for stopping when the horses were excited, staring ahead. I stopped then, neither moving aside nor advancing, and not defending those for whom death was near. However, I modelled myself on Khalid; is it not true that there is none like Khalid among our men? I grieved much for Jaʿfar at Muʿta, when arrows were of no use to archers.

He joined up to us both our flanks, men who were muhājirin, not polytheists, men not defenceless.'”

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “Qays clarified in his poetry what had been the subject of disagreement among people; this is, that the army avoided conflict and were unwilling to die and, moreover, that Khalid did disengage with his men.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Al-Zuhri stated, as we have been informed, ‘The Muslims appointed Khalid b. al-Walid as their commander, and God gave them victory. He remained their leader until he returned to Medina.’”

DIVISION.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me, from Umm ʿIsā al-Khuṣayyā, from Umm Jaʿfar, daughter of Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. Abū ʿĀlib, from their grandmother Asmāʾ, daughter of Umays, who said, ‘When Jaʿfar and his men had suffered casualties, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came in to see me just after I had tanned 40 manna weight of skins, kneaded my dough and washed, oiled and cleaned off my children. He said to me, “Bring Jaʿfar’s sons to me.” I brought them to him, he smelt them and his eyes welled with tears. I asked, “Messenger of God, by my father and my mother, do tell me what makes you cry! Do you have news of Jaʿfar and his men?” “Yes”, he replied, “they have been struck down today.” I arose screaming, and the women gathered around me. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then went outside to his people and said, “Don’t neglect Jaʿfar’s family; make food for them. They are preoccupied by the fate of their master.””

Imām Ahmad told it thus from the hadith of Ibn Isḥāq who related it through ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, from Umm ʿIsā, from Umm ʿAwn, daughter of Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar, from Asmāʾ. He made reference to preparing the food. What is correct is that it referred to Umm Jaʿfar and Umm ʿAwn.

Imām Ahmad stated that Sufyān related to him, quoting Jaʿfar b. Khalid from his father, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Jaʿfar, who said, “When the news came of the death of Jaʿfar, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Prepare food for Jaʿfar’s 86. Guillaume gives this name as Musahhar al-Yaʿmuri. op. cit. p.536.

family. A matter has come to them that preoccupies them.” Or the words were, “something that occupies them has come”.

This is similarly related by Abū Dā'ūd, al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Māja from a hadīth of Sufyān b. Uyayna, from Ja'far b. Khālid b. Sārat al-Makhzūmī al-Makki, from his father, from 'Abd Allāh b. Ja'far. Al-Tirmidhī categorized this hadīth as hasan, “good”.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq went on, “Abd al-Rahmān b. al-Qāsim related to me, from his father, from Ṭīṣa, wife of the Prophet (ṢAAS), who said, ‘When news of the death of Ja'far arrived, we could see the sadness in the face of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’

“She commented, ‘A man went in to him and said, “Messenger of God, the women are distressing and annoying us.” He told him, “Go back in to them and quieten them down.”

“She said, ‘He left, then he came back and said the same to him. And (as the saying goes) “Persistence often harms”, that is, those who engage in it. He then told the man, “Go off and quieten them; and if they keep it up, then toss dirt in their mouths!” I said to myself, “May God remove you, fellow! You neither relieved yourself, nor will you be able to obey the Messenger of God!” I well knew he could not toss dirt in their mouths.””

Ibn Ishāq is alone in giving it from this chain; it is not in any of the compendia.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Qutayba related to him, quoting 'Abd al-Wahhāb (who said), “I heard Yahyā b. Sa‘īd say, ‘Amra told me the following: “I heard ‘Ā’isha say, ‘When Zayd b. Hāritha, Ja'far b. Abū Ṭalib and 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa were killed, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was sitting with sorrow evident on his face. I was peeping at him through a chink in the door. Then a man came in and said, “Messenger of God, I'm afraid Ja'far's women...” And he went on to tell of their weeping. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him to forbid them from doing so. So the man left but returned and said, “I swear, they were too much for me.” I then heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, “Go and toss dirt in their mouths!”

“‘“‘Ā’isha, may God be pleased with her, went on, ‘May God smack you in the nose! By God, you'll not do that nor will you relieve the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of his cares!”’”

Muslim, Abū Dā'ūd and al-Nasā’ī related this from various lines, from Yahyā b. Sa‘īd al-Anṣārī, from ‘Amra, who quoted her.

Imām Ahmad stated that Wahh b. Jarir related to him, quoting his father, who said, “I heard Muḥammad b. Abū Ya'qūb relate from al-Hasan b. Sa‘īd, from 'Abd Allāh b. Ja'far, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent out an army under the command of Zayd b. Hāritha, saying, “If Zayd should be killed or martyred, then your leader will be Ja'far; if he should be killed or martyred, then your leader will be 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa.” When they clashed with the enemy, Zayd took the banner and fought until he was killed. Then Ja'far took the banner and fought until he was killed. 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa then took the banner and fought until he was killed. Khalid b. al-Walid then took the banner and God gave him victory. When their news reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), he went out to the people and gave thanks and praise to God. He then said, “Your brothers have met the enemy. Zayd took the banner and fought until he was killed or martyred. Then Ja‘far b. Abū Tālib took the banner and fought until he was killed or martyred. ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāha took the banner and fought until he was killed or martyred. Then one of God’s swords, Khalid b. al-Walid, took the banner, and God gave him victory.” He then gave Ja‘far’s family a respite of three days before going to them. Then he went to them and said, “Do not grieve for my brother after today. Summon to me all my brother’s family.” We were then brought there as if we were a flock of birds. He said, “Summon the barber to me.” The barber was brought and he shaved our heads. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Muhammad is just like our uncle Abū Tālib. As for ‘Abd Allāh, he is just like myself in character and appearance.” He then took my hand and raised it, saying, “O God, let Ja‘far live on in his family; and bless ‘Abd Allāh in his affairs.” He said this three times. Then our mother came and spoke of those of us who were orphaned and began arousing his sympathy. Then he said, “How can you worry about your family when I am their protector in this world and the next?”

Abū Da‘ūd related this in part; al-Nasā’i gave it in its entirety in his biography, from a hadith of Wahb b. Jarir.

This hadith determines that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave them permission to mourn for three days and that thereafter he forbid them from mourning. This perhaps indicates the meaning of the hadith related by Imām Ahmad from that of al-Ḥakam b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Shaddād, from Asmā‘ who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told her, when Ja‘far was killed, “Wear mourning for three days, then do as you wish.”

Aḥmad is alone in giving this hadith. It is probable that he gave her permission to mourn — by which is meant extreme behaviour in weeping and tearing at clothes — because of the severity of the pain at the loss of Ja‘far, the father of her children. It may also be that this constituted an instruction to her to engage in al-tasallub, “mourning”, this word implying extreme mourning, for three days, and thereafter to mourn as she wished in the ways usual for widows. But God knows best. The phrase is also read with the spelling tasallubā (instead of tasallabi) for three days, this word meaning “act with restraint”. This interpretation contradicts the other reading. God knows best.

Then there is the hadith given by Imām Aḥmad to the effect that Yazīd related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Talḥa, quoting al-Ḥakam b. ‘Uuyayna, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Shaddād, from Asmā‘, daughter of ‘Umays, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) came in to us on the third day following the death of Ja‘far and said, ‘Do not mourn further after today.’” This hadith is another of those unique to Aḥmad; its chain of authorities is fairly acceptable. However, it is problematic.
if interpreted for its obvious meaning. Because it is established in both \textit{sahih} collections that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “It is not appropriate for a woman who believes in God and the Judgement Day to mourn for her dead longer than three days, except in the loss of her husband, whom she may mourn for four months and ten days.”

If what Imām Ahmad related was accurate, then it should be considered applicable specifically to that (case) and otherwise the statement given above relating to extreme mourning for three days would apply. But God knows best.

I note that Asmā', daughter of 'Umays, eulogized her husband in an ode in which she stated,

“I swear, my soul will never cease to be sad over you,
and my skin will always wear dust.
No one ever saw the like of him, a hero who persisted so valiantly in the fray.”

Eventually her \textit{'idda}, waiting period, ended and Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him, became engaged to her. He then married her and gave a feast to which people came. 'Ali b. Abū Talib was one of those attending and when the others had gone he asked permission of Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him, to speak with Asmā' through the curtain. He gave him leave to do so. When 'Ali approached the curtain, the scent of her perfume reached him and he asked her — in general terms — who was the person speaking in the above verse,

“I swear, my soul will never cease to be sad over you,
and my skin will always wear dust.”

She replied, “Away with you, Abū al-Ḥasan, you’re always joking!”

She bore Muḥammad to Abū Bakr, giving birth at a tree between Mecca and Medina, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was on his way to the \textit{hijjat al-wadaf}, the “farewell pilgrimage”. He told her to wash herself and recite prayers; this will be discussed in its appropriate place. When later Abū Bakr died, 'Ali b. Abū Bakr married her and she bore him children. May God be pleased with him, her and them.

\textbf{Division.}

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Muḥammad b. Ja'far b. al-Zubayr quoted to me Urwa b. al-Zubayr as saying, ‘When they drew near Medina, the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the people came out to meet them. The boys were racing around, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) came forward on a mule. He said, “Take away the children; carry them off and bring me Ja'far’s son.” ‘Abd Allāh, Ja'far's son was brought and he (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) carried him in his hands. The crowd began tossing dirt at the army, shouting, “You runaways! You ran away from God’s path!” The Messenger of God (SAAS) was calling out, “They’re not runaways! They’ll fight again, if God wills it!”’”
This hadīth is mursal, incomplete in its chain.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Abū Muʿāwiya related to him, quoting Āṣīm, from Muʿrīq al-Ṭjīl, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came back home from a journey, he would meet the boys from his family household. On his return from one trip, I was led out to him and he mounted me before him. He then said, ‘Bring me one of Fāṭima’s sons’ – it was either Ḥasan or Ḥusayn. He mounted him behind him and we went on into Medina, three on a mule.”

This was given by Muslim, Abū Daʿūd, al-Nasāʾī and Ibn Māja from a hadīth of Āṣīm al-Ḥāwal, from Muʿrīq.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Rawḥ related to him, quoting Ibn Jurayj, quoting Khālid b. Sāra, that his father related to him that ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar said, “You should have seen myself and Qūtham and Ṣubayd Allāh, the two sons of ʿAbd-Allāh, all three of us boys playing, when the Prophet (ṢAAS) passed by us on his mule. He said, ‘Lift up this one to me.’ He lifted me up in front of him. He then said, referring to Qūtham, ‘Lift up this one to me.’ He then placed him behind himself. Ṣubayd Allāh was more favoured by ʿAbd-Allāh than Qūtham, and he was not pleased at his uncle carrying Qūtham rather than himself. He then touched Jaʿfar’s head three times and said, each time he did so, ‘O God, let Jaʿfar live on in his son.’”

He (Sāra) went on, “I asked ʿAbd Allāh, ‘What eventually happened to Qūtham?’ ‘Was he martyred?’ he replied. I said, ‘God and His messenger know best what is good.’ ‘Yes,’ he said.”

Al-Nasāʾī related it in his work Al-yawm wa al-layla, from a hadīth of Ibn Jurayj.

This was after the conquest (of Mecca). ʿAbd-Allāh only arrived in Medina after the conquest. The hadīth related by Imām Aḥmad is as follows, “Ismāʿīl related to us, quoting Ḥābib b. al-Shahid, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Malika, who said, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar asked Ibn al-Zubayr, “Do you remember when we met the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), me, you and the son of ʿAbd-Allāh?” “Yes,” he replied. “He carried us and left you.””

It is this text that al-Bukhārī and Muslim give, from a hadīth of Ḥābib b. al-Shahid. It is considered one of the al-ajwābat al-muskita, “a silencing response”.

It relates also that it was ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd-Allāh who answered Ibn al-Zubayr in this way. This anecdote is another one that came after the conquest, as explained above. But God knows best.

Section: On the virtues of those three commanders, Zayd, Jaʿfar and ʿAbd Allāh, may God be pleased with them.

was the freed-man of the Messenger of God (SAAS). This came about because Zayd's mother went to visit her family and they were attacked by horsemen who took him away. Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām purchased him for his aunt Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid; it is also said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) purchased him for her. She in turn presented him to the Prophet (SAAS), before he received the Prophethood. His father discovered his whereabouts, but he chose to stay with the Messenger of God (SAAS), who manumitted him and brought him up. He was known as Zayd b. Muḥammad; the Messenger of God (SAAS) loved him greatly.

He was the first of the freed-men to accept Islam. Verses of the Qurʾān were revealed about him. These include: “And He has not made to be your sons those you merely claim to be your sons” (sūrat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.4). “Affirm their relationship to their fathers; that is more just in God’s view” (Ibidem; XXXIII, v.5). “Muḥammad is not the father of any of your men” (Ibidem; XXXIII, v.40). “And when you said to him whom both God and you had favoured, ‘Retain your wife and fear God,’ you concealed in yourself what God was about to reveal. And you feared men, but God has greater right to be feared. (But) when Zayd had finished his union with her, We married her to you” (Ibidem; XXXIII, v.37).

There is a consensus that these verses were revealed about him. The words anʿama Allāhu ʿalayhi “him God had favoured” refer to his accepting Islam. And the words, anʿama ʿalayhi, “you had favoured” refers to his having manumitted him. We have discussed these verses in our Tafsir (Exegesis).

The point is that God Almighty named in the Qurʾān no other Companion (of the Prophet (SAAS)) except him. He led him to Islam, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) freed him and married him to his freed-woman Umm Ayman, whose name was Baraka, and she bore him Uṣāma, son of Zayd. He used to be known as al-ḥibb ibn al-ḥibbi, “the dearest of all”. He then married him to his maternal aunt’s daughter, Zaynab, daughter of Jahsh. He established him as a brother to his uncle Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and gave him precedence as commander over his nephew Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib at the battle of Muṭa, as we related above.

Imām Aḥmad and the Imām and ḥāfiẓ Abū Bakr b. Abū Shaybā – whose words these are – stated, “Muḥammad b. Ubayd related to us, from Wāḥil b. Daʿūd, ‘I heard al-Bahi relate that ʿAṣifa used to say, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed Zayd as commander of every expedition, without exception, to which he dispatched him; and if he were still alive, he would have left him in command.”’”

Al-Nasāʾī related this from Aḥmad b. Salmān, from Muḥammad b. Ubayd al-Ṭanāfusi.

This chain of authorities is excellent and firm and consistent with the criteria of the saḥīḥ collections. This hadith was regarded as gharib, “anomalous”. God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Sulaymān related to him, quoting Ismāʾil, quoting Ibn Dinār, from Ibn Umar, may God be pleased with him, that the latter sent out an expedition in command of which he placed Usāma b. Zayd, but some people complained about his appointment. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arose and said, “You complain about his being made commander; you used to complain earlier about his father being made commander, even though, by God, he was certainly qualified to be commander, and moreover was extremely dear to me. Well, this man too is extremely dear to me.”

This ḥadīth is included in the saḥīḥ collections, from Qutayba, from Ismā'īl b. Jāfār b. Abī Kāthīr al-Madani – he being the son of Ja'far b. Abī Kāthīr al-Madani – from ‘Abd Allāh b. Dīnār, from Ibn ʿUmar. Al-Bukhārī related it from a ḥadīth of Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from Salīm, from his father. Al-Bazzār related it from a ḥadīth of ʿAṣim b. ʿUmar, from Ubayd Allāh b. ʿUmar al-ʿAmrī, from Nāfiʿ, from Ibn ʿUmar, and pronounced the chain of transmission as being gharīb, “anomalous”.

The ḥāfīz Abī Bakr al-Bazzār stated that ʿUmar b. Ismā'īl related to him, from Mujalid, from al-Shaʿbī, from Masrūq, from ʿAisha, who said, “When Zayd b. ʿHāritha was killed and Usāma, Zayd’s son, was brought to him and placed before him, the eyes of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) welled with tears and he put off the meeting. Next day, when Usāma was brought back before him, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘You make me feel today just as you did yesterday.’”

There are strange aspects to this ḥadīth. But God knows best.

It has been related above how it is recorded in both saḥīḥ collections that when, upon the minbar, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spoke of their deaths, he said, “Zayd took the banner and was struck down; then Jaʿfar took it and was struck down. Then ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa took it and was struck down. Then one of God’s swords took it and God gave him victory.”

And it stated, “His eyes welled with tears.” Then he said, “They would not be pleased with us.” In another ḥadīth it is said that he bore witness that they had been martyred and were assured of paradise.

Ḥassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses eulogizing Zayd b. ʿHāritha and Ibn Rawāḥa, “O eyes, weep generously, to your last tear, and recall, in your ease, those in the grave.

Remember Muʿtā and what happened there, that day they went off to defeat in battle.

When they left, abandoning Zayd there, in a resting place fit for the destitute or powerless.

That dear friend of the very best of mankind, that lord of men, beloved by all.

That Ahmad who knows no equal, that man who has both my pleasure and my pain.

The status Zayd had among us was not that of a man who tells lies and is conceited.

And weep tears generously, eyes, for the Khazraji (ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa); a lord who was not niggardly there.
We have suffered much by their deaths; we pass our night in sorrow, not pleasure."

The genealogy of Ja'far b. Abü Talib is as follows. He was the son of the paternal uncle of the Messenger of God (SAAS), being older than his brother 'Ali by ten years. (Another brother) 'Aqil was also ten years older than Ja'far; another, Talib, was ten years older than 'Aqil.

Ja'far was early in accepting Islam. He emigrated to Abyssinia and performed many famous and praiseworthy actions and functions there, and gave fine responses to questions. We have dealt with all these previously, in the section on the emigration to Abyssinia; and to God be all praise.

At the battle of Khaybar he arrived back to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said to him then, "I don't know what pleases me more - Ja'far's arrival or the conquest of Khaybar!" He went up to Ja'far, embraced him and kissed him on the forehead. And the day they went forth to the 'umrat al-qad̄yya, he said to him, "You, Ja'far, resemble me in both appearance and character." It is said that he was embarrassed and delighted to hear this, as was related in the correct sequence above. And to God be all praise and credit.

When he dispatched him to Mu'ta, he appointed him as deputy commander to Zayd b. Hāritha. When the latter was killed, they discovered 90 wounds upon him, some from swords, others from spears and arrows. All of these were on his front, not his back. His right arm was severed, then his left and he held the banner. When he lost both, he held it to himself, until he was killed, still hugging it. It is said that a Roman split him into two with his sword. May God be pleased with Ja'far and curse his killer!

The Messenger of God (SAAS) told of him that he was a martyr and one of those destined for heaven. There are hadith in which he referred to him as having two wings.

Al-Bukhārī related, from Ibn Umar, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) greeted Ja'far's son 'Abd Allāh, he would say, "Peace be upon you, son of him with the two wings!"

Some authorities quote this from 'Umar b. al-Khattāb himself, but the authentic tradition comes from Ibn Umar.

They say that it is as compensation for his two arms that God awarded him wings in paradise. Some material relating to this was given above.

The hāfiz Abū Ḥāṣim al-'Tirmidhi stated that 'Alī b. Hīr related to him, quoting 'Abd Allāh b. Ja'far, from al-'Alā' b. 'Abd al-Rahmān, from his father, who quoted Abū Hurayra as saying, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'I saw Ja'far flying in paradise with the angels.'"

It is related above in a hadith that he was killed at the age of 33. Ibn al-Athir stated in al-Ghāba (The Forest), "His age when he was killed was 41. Though some state otherwise."

I note that regarding his being said to have been 10 years senior to 'Ali would require his age to have been 39 at his death. This is because 'Ali accepted Islam when he was 8 years old, as is well known, and remained in Mecca for 13 years thereafter. When he emigrated he was 21. The battle of Mu‘a took place in 8 AH. But God knows best.

Ja‘far was referred to after his death as al-‘ayyār, “the flyer”, for the reason given above. He was a man who was noble, generous and much praised. For his charity he was known as abū al-masākin, “father of the poor”, because of his generosity to them.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAffān b. Wahīb related to him, quoting Khalīd, from ‘Ikrima, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “No one wore shoes or sandals, rode his mount or wore his clothes, apart from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), more impressively than did Ja‘far b. Abū Ta‘lib.”

This hadith has a fine chain of transmission back to Abū Hurayra. It seems that he finds him superior only in his noble qualities. Regarding superiority in his religious qualities, it is well known that Abū Bakr, ʿUmar and ʿUthmān were better than him. As for his brother ʿAlī and himself, may God be pleased with both, it is clear that they were equal or that ʿAlī was superior to him. Abū Hurayra only wished to establish his superiority in noble qualities. This is proven by what al-Bukhārī related, as follows, “Aḥmad b. Abū Bakr related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿIbrāhim b. Dinār Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Juhani, from Ibn Abn Dhi‘b, from Sa‘īd al-Maqburi, from Abī Hurayra (who said) that, ‘The people used to say, “Aba Hurayra does too much.”’ I used to keep close to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), content to fill my stomach with (unleavened) bread. I never ate leavened bread, never wore silk and never had men or women serve me. I would press my belly against the pebbles in my hunger. I would teach people about a verse of the Qur’ān I already knew to get him to take me home to feed me. The person who was best to the poor was Ja‘far, son of Abū Ta‘lib. He would take us home and feed us whatever he had there. He would even bring out to us an empty leather butter vessel we would split open and lick out its contents.”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this.

Ḥassān b. ʿAbbās Thābit spoke the following verses eulogizing Ja‘far,

“I wept, for the death of Ja‘far, the dear friend of the Prophet, was hard on all mankind. I was very upset, and when your death was told me, I called out, ‘Who is for fighting in the shade of the eagle (banner)?’ With swords which, when drawn from their sheaths striking and spears continually piercing, After Fātimah’s blessed son, Ja‘far, the best of men, the worst To lose; the most noble of all in lineage, the most active when wronged and most submissive

87. In his zeal to collect traditions, that is.
To the right when it occurs, unaffected by falsehood, most generous and least Immoderate, most open-handed when appropriate, most evident in Generosity, except for Muḥammad, the like of whom does not exist in all mankind.”

Ibn Rawḥa’s genealogy is as follows. His full name was ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawḥa b. Thaʿlabah b. Imru al-Qays b. ʿAmr b. Imru al-Qays al-Akbar b. Malik b. al-Agharr b. Thaʿlabah b. Kaʾb b. al-Khazraj b. al-Ḥarīth b. al-Khazraj, Abū Muḥammad, known as Abū Rawḥa and as Abū ʿAmr, al-Anṣāri, al-Khazrajī. He was the maternal uncle of al-Nuʿmān b. Bashīr, and his sister was ʿAmra, daughter of Rawḥa.

He was early in accepting Islam and was present at al-ʿAqaba. That evening he was one of the leaders of Banū al-Ḥarīth b. al-Khazraj. He participated in the battles of Badr, Uḥud, al-khandaq, al-Ḥudaybiyya and Khaybar. He (the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) would send him out to negotiate these, as is told above. He was present on the ‘umrat al-qaḍāʾ pilgrimage and on that occasion went in holding the reins of the camel of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Some say it was its leather stirrup he held. As he did so, he called out,

“Clear the unbelievers from his path.”

The rest of his verses are reported above.

He was one of the commanders martyred at the battle of Muʿta, as told above. He urged on the Muslims to battle the Byzantines when they discussed that issue. He also encouraged himself and dismounted (to take the banner) after his two comrades were killed. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) testified to his martyrdom and he was one of those promised entry to paradise.

He is also related to have addressed the Prophet (ṢAAS) in verse when he said farewell to him, as follows,

“May God affirm the good He presents you, as he gave affirmation to Moses, and a victory they won.”

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “May God keep you firm.” Hishām b. ʿUrwa commented, “And God did keep him firm so that he was martyred and entered paradise.”

Ḥammād b. Zayd related, from Thābit, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā, that ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawḥa went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was making an address and heard him tell everyone to sit down. So he did sit down, right where he was, outside the mosque, until people had finished listening to his address. Word of ʿAbd Allāh’s action reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he said, “May God increase your zeal in obedience to God and to His messenger!”
Al-Bukhari stated in his saihth collection, “Muṣādh (b. Jabal) said, ‘Let’s sit down and pray for a while.’”

There is a hadith similar to that having a complete chain of transmission going back to ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAbd al-Ṣamad related to him, from Amāra, from Ziyād b. Naḥwī, from ‘Umm, who said, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa used to say when he met one of his comrades, ‘Come, let’s sit and express faith to our Lord sāʿatan, “for a while’.” One day he said this to a man who got angry and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘Messenger of God, don’t you know about Ibn Rawāḥa? He’s encouraging people to abandon your faith for that of sāʿatan!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘May God have mercy on Ibn Rawāḥa; he loves those sessions when the angels try to outdo one another.’”

This hadith is very strange.

Al-Bayhaqī stated that d-Ḥākim related to him, quoting Aḥbāb, quoting Aḥmad b. Yūnūs, quoting a sheikh of Medina, from Ṣafwān b. Salīm, from Ṭāḥā b. Yāsir, (who said) that ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa said to a comrade of his, “Come; let’s express faith for sāʿatan.” He replied, “But aren’t we believers?” “Why yes”, he replied, “but by mentioning God we increase our faith.”

The hāfīz Abū al-Qāsim al-Lūkī related, from a hadith of Abū al-Yāmān, from Ṣafwān b. Salīm, from Shurayh b. Ubayd, that ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa used to take one of his comrades by the hand and say, “Let’s go and express faith for a while; we’ll sit in a dhikr session.”

This hadith is mursal, lacking a complete chain, from both authorities. We have examined this extensively in our commentary on the work of al-Bukhari. And to God be all praise and credit.

In the saihth collection of al-Bukhari, Abū al-Dardāʾ is quoted as saying, “We were out on a journey with the Messenger of God (SAAS), on a very hot day. The only ones of us fasting were the Messenger of God (SAAS) and ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, may God be pleased with him.”

He was one of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS), who was well known for his poetry. His verses on the Messenger of God (SAAS), quoted by al-Bukhari, include the lines,

“With us there is the Messenger of God; we recite his document, when it emerges clear and shining from the dawn.

88. Presumably the misunderstandings related in this and following ahādīth stem from the similarity in the sound of the word shayṭan, “Satan” or “a devil”, to the word sāʿatan, “for a while”.

89. This word, meaning “to make mention of”, connotes repetition of the name of God. It is used specifically by Muslim Ṣūfī groups who achieve a mystical unity with God by repetition, dhikr, of God’s name, “Allah”. It is interesting to see the word used in this apparent context in this presumably early hadith.
He spends the night keeping his body outside his bed, when the polytheists lie heavily upon theirs.

He brought us guidance after blindness, and our hearts are certain that what he spoke is true.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʻImrān b. Maysara related to him, quoting Mūḥammad b. Fuḍayl, from Ḥusayn, from Ṭāhir b. al-ʻAṣwad b. Ṣa`dī, who said, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawaḥa once fainted, and his sister ʻAmra began crying and wailing and lamenting him. When he came to, he said, ‘Whenever you said something (about me) I was asked, ‘Are you really like that?’”’

“Qutayba related to us, quoting Khaythama, from Ḥusayn, from al-Šaḥīḥī, from al-ʻAṣwad b. Bashīr, who said, ‘ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawaḥa fainted once’ as above. But when he died she did not weep for him.”

We have given above the lament spoken by Ḥassān b. Thābit about him and others.

A Muslim poet who returned with others from Muʿṭā – may God be pleased with them all – spoke the following verses, “Sad enough it is that I returned, while Jaʿfar, Zayd and ʿAbd Allāh are buried in graves.

Their end came as they passed away on their path, leaving me to misery and with all that changes.”

Hereafter, if God so wills it, will be given more of the verses composed about these three commanders by Ḥassān b. Thābit and by Kaʿb b. Mālik, may God be pleased with them both.

THOSE MUSLIMS MARTYRED AT MUʿṬĀ.

From among the muḥājirīn there were Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalīb, their freed-man Zayd b. Ḥāritha al-Ḵalībī, Masʿūd b. al-ʿAṣwad b. Ḥāritha b. Naḍla b. Ṣaʿdī and Wāḥb b. Saʿd b. Abū Sārḥ; these total four.

From among the anṣār there were ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawaḥa and ʿAbbād b. Qays, both of Khazraj, al-Ḥārith b. al-ʻAṣwād b. Isāf b. Naḍla al-Najjārī, and Surāqa b. ʿAmr b. ʿAṭiya b. Khansaḍ al-Māzīnī; these numbered four.

The total of Muslims killed that day was these eight men, according to the account of Ibn Ishaq. However, Ibn Hishām stated, “According to Ibn Shiḥāb al-Zuhārī, those killed at Muʿṭā included Abū Kulayb and Jabir, both sons of ʿAmr b. Zayd b. ʿAwf b. Mabḍūl, both of Māzin, both full brothers, along with ʿAmr and ʿĀmir, sons of Saʿd b. al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbbād b. Saʿd b. ʿĀmir b. Thaʿlaba b. Mālik b. Afṣā.” These four were also anṣār and so according to these two authorities the total killed should be twelve men.

That two armies of opposing faiths, one consisting of those fighting for God’s cause and numbering three thousand men, and the other of disbelievers totalling two hundred thousand, one hundred thousand Byzantines and one hundred thousand Christian Arabs, could battle together with the resulting deaths of only twelve Muslims is truly wonderful! And a large number of unbelievers were killed.

Khālid alone stated, “Nine swords were broken in my hand; I finally held only a Yemeni broad-sword.” How many must he have killed with all those swords, not to mention all the other brave bearers of the Qurʾān like him, who sentenced to death those crucifix worshippers, upon whom be the curses of the Most Merciful at that time and for ever!

This relates to the words of the Almighty, “There was a sign for you in the two sides that clashed. One side fought for God’s cause, while the others were unbelievers whom they saw to be twice as numerous as themselves. Yet God assists with victory whomever He pleases. There is surely a lesson in this for those who have sight” (ṣūrat ʿAl ʿImrān; XIII, v.12).

A HADĪTH THAT ACCORDS GREAT MERIT TO THE COMMANDERS OF THIS EXPEDITION.

These were Zayd b. Hāritha, Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib and ʿAbd Allah b. Rawāḥa, may God be pleased with them all!

The imām, scholar and ḥāfiẓ Abū Zurāʾ ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Karīm al-Rāzī, may God make his visage glow, stated in his fine book Dalāʾil al-Nubuwwa as follows, “Both Ṣafwān b. Śāliḥ al-Dimashqī, quoting al-Walīd, quoting Ibn Jarīr, and ʿAbd al-Rāḥmān b. Ibrāhīm al-Dimashqī, quoting al-Walīd and ʿAmr, that is, Ibn ʿAbd al-Wāḥid, related to him that Ibn Jarīr stated that he heard Salīm b. ʿAmīr al-Khabāʾirī say, ‘Abū Umāma al-Bahīlī informed me, “I heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, ‘While I was sleeping two men came to me, gripped me by the arm and took me to a desolate mountain. They told me, ‘Climb!’ “I can’t,” I replied. ‘We’ll make it easy for you,” they said. I then climbed on up until I was at its centre and there I heard loud noises. “What are those noises?” I asked. “That is the groaning of those in hell,” they replied. Then they took me on to where there were people suspended by their tendons, their mouths split open and streaming blood. “Who are these?” I asked. “These”, they replied, “are those who eat before their fast has ended.” Then he said, “The Jews and Christians will fail.””

Salīm (b. ʿAmīr) asked, “Did he hear it from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), or was this his opinion?”

“The two men then took me on to where there were people exceedingly distended and exuding a foul odour like that of a toilet. “Who are these?” I asked. They replied, “These are unbelievers who have been killed.” They then took me further where there were others even more distended and even more foul in smell, their odour also toilet-like. “Who are these?” I asked. “These are men and women who engage in prostitution,” they replied. They then took me further and I saw women whose nipples were being bitten by snakes. "What did these people do?" I asked. They replied, "They are women who denied milk to their children." They then took me further off to where there were children playing between two lakes. "Who are these?" I asked. "These are the children of believers," they told me.

"Then they took me up to a high place where there were three men drinking wine. "Who are these?" I asked. "These are Ja'far b. Abū Ṭalib, Zayd b. Ḥarīthah and ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa," they replied. Then they took me to yet another high point where I found myself with three other men. The two men said, "These are Abraham, Moses and Jesus, upon all of whom be peace. They await you.""

Section: On the Poetry Verses spoken about the Expedition to Mu'ta.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "The following verses of Ḥassān (b. Thabit) are among those spoken in mourning for those killed at Mu'ta,

'A difficult night I had in Yathrib, worry that kept me sleepless while others slept deep.
Remembering a friend, my tears flowed copiously, and memory often causes weeping.
Indeed, the loss of a friend is a tragedy, and what a lot of noble men suffer yet persist!
I saw the finest Muslims go off in groups, while others behind them delayed.
May God not keep distant those dead men who followed on at Mu'ta, including Ja'far who has wings
And Zayd and ʿAbd Allāh, all of whom followed on, when the ropes of death swung.
That morning they went forth with the believers, led on to death by that happy man of splendid character, Fine as the light of the moon, of Hāshim's line, proud before injustice, valiant.
He thrust on until he lay down without a cushion on a battlefield, a broken spear in him.
His reward is with that of the martyrs - a paradise of gardens, under a canopy of green.
In Ja'far we saw someone faithful to Muhammad, a man of decision when he gives orders.
May there never cease to be in Islam men of Hāshim's line, perpetual pillars of glory and the source of pride.
They are Islam's mountain, and those around them are large rocks rising up to splendid, towering heights.
Fine leaders, who include Ja'far and his brother ʿAlī, as well as ʿAlīmad, the one chosen.
Hamza and al-ʿAbbās are of them too, as is ʿAqīl, the sap of the tree from which he was pressed.

Through them all hardships are alleviated at every dismal and difficult time when people suffer.

They are God's friends to whom He revealed his wisdom, including that of absolute purity.'

"Ka'b b. Malik, may God be pleased with him, spoke the following verses,

'While others slept, your eyes shed like water dripping from the seam of a waterskin.

That night when cares overwhelmed me so that sometimes I moaned, at others tossed and turned,

Sorrow kept returning, and I spent the night as though guardian of Ursa and Pisces.

It felt as though a flame burned inside me, between my ribs and intestines

In pain for those who followed one another at Mu'ta and lay piled high, unremoved.

May God bless them, heroes all, and may fine rain water their bones.

They endured at Mu'ta for God's sake, ignoring death and fearful of cowardice.

They went on ahead of the Muslims, as though they were young stallions accoutred with full armour,

Being led ahead by Ja'far and his banner; he was first and how fine a leader!

Until the lines were breached and Ja'far lay stretched out where the ranks had clashed.

The light-giving moon was changed then, and the sun was obscured and almost set.

A leader of mighty stature, of Hāshim's line, most honourable in his power, unmovable.

Men by whom God protected his servants, to whom the revealed Book came down.

They were superior to other tribes in their honour and dignity, their fine qualities overwhelming the ignorant.

They would not expend their efforts on trivial matters, and their spokesman would be seen to decide with justice.

Noble of visage, their hands would be open and flow with generosity, even when bad times excused them.

For their leadership, God was pleased at His creation, and because of their bravery the God-sent Prophet was made victorious.'"
IN THE NAME OF GOD, THE MOST MERCIFUL AND BENEFICENT.

THE BOOK ON THE DISPATCH BY THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) OF MISSIONS TO RULERS ABROAD AND HIS DOCUMENTS TO THEM INVITING THEM TO GOD, ALMIGHTY AND GLORIOUS IS HE,
AND TO ENTER THE FAITH OF ISLAM.

Al-Waqqādī related that this happened at the end of year 6 AH, in Dhū al-Ḥijja, after the ‘umra to al-Hudaybiyya. Al-Bayhaqi gave this section in this position, following his account of the expedition to Mu’ta. But God knows best.

There is no dispute among scholars that this activity began before the conquest of Mecca, and following al-Hudaybiyya. This accords with Abū Sufyān’s response to Heraclius. When asked by him, “Would he betray?” Abū Sufyān replied, “No; we are into a period of time with him during which we do not know what he will do.”

In al-Bukhārī’s phrase, “That was the period in which Abū Sufyān had agreed to a truce with the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated, “(This activity) took place in the period between al-Hudaybiyya and the death of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

We note here that comment, even though the statement of al-Waqqādī is preferable. But God knows best.

Muslim related, from Yūsuf b. Ḥammād al-Maṣʿī, from Ṭabą b. Al-Ḥālī, from Saʿīd b. Abū Urūba, from Qatāda, from Anas b. Mālik (who said) that the Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote, before the battle of Mu’ta, to Chosroes, to Caesar and to the Negus and to every tyrant, inviting them to God, Almighty and Glorious is He; this does not apply to the Negus, for whom he had prayed.

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Muḥammad b. Ishaq as having said, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from Ḥubayd Allah b. Ṭabba, from ʿAbd Allah b. Ṭabba, from ʿAbd Allah b. ʿAbbās, who said, ʿAbū Sufyān related to me personally as follows, “We were a mercantile people. The warfare had so blocked us in that our merchandise was spoiled. When the truce came – that of al-Hudaybiyya – between us and the Messenger of God (SAAS), we were still not sure that we were safe. I went away to Syria on a trading expedition with a group of Quraysh. I swear, I didn’t know anyone in Mecca, man or woman, who did not consign goods to me. Our objective upon leaving Syria was to proceed to Gaza in Palestine.

""We left and reached Syria. That was at the time when Caesar, commander of the Byzantines, defeated the Persians in his country and expelled them, retrieving his great cross that they had stolen from him. News of this reached him when he was in his palace at Hims, in Syria. He left there on a march of thanks to Jerusalem, to pray there. Carpets were laid out to welcome him, and these were spread with aromatic plants. Eventually he reached Aelia (Jerusalem) and prayed there.

""One morning he got up depressed and turned his sight up to the sky. His patriarchs asked him, 'O King, are you worried this morning?' He replied, 'Yes, I am.' 'Why is that?' they enquired. He asked them, 'Did you notice that last night the mulk al-khitan,' the ""king of the circumcised"" was ascendant?' They swore in response that the only nation they knew who practiced circumcision was that of the Jews. They pointed out that they were under his power and sovereignty and that if this vision had come to him about them, then he should send throughout his kingdom and kill all the Jews and so relieve himself of this concern.

""While they were discussing this a messenger arrived from the governor of Buṣrā bringing in an Arab whom they had captured. The messenger told Caesar, 'Your majesty, this is an Arab, one of those people of sheep and camels. He will tell you about an event in his land if you would care to question him.' When the man was before him, Caesar told his interpreter, 'Ask him for news of what is going on in his country.' He did ask him and the man told him that there was news of an Arab of Quraysh who had come forth claiming to be a prophet and that some groups were supporting, others opposing him. He said that battle had occurred in several places and that all this had been in progress when he had left home.

""When he had related this, Caesar said, 'Strip him!' And he was found to be circumcised! Caesar commented, 'I swear by God, it was this I saw, not what you said. Give him back his clothes.' The Arab then left, free.

""Caesar then summoned his chief of police and told him, 'Turn Syria upside down until you bring me someone from that man's tribe I can question about him.'"

Abū Sufyān went on, ""I and my companions were there in Gaza when he burst in on us demanding which tribe we were from. We told him and he took us all in to him.

91. The account in Ibn Ishāq's text as translated by Guillaume omits the reference to the mulk al-khitan but includes information that Caesar had a vision in which it was revealed to him that ""the kingdom of a circumcised man"" would overwhelm his own empire. The hadith in al-Bukhari's compendium quoted hereafter pp.358 et seq makes it clear that there has been an omission from Ibn Ishāq's text as quoted here.
“Eventually there we were before him. And I swear I never saw a man more astute than him,” — he was referring to Heraclius.

He went on, “Caesar asked us, ‘Which of you is most closely related to that man?’ I told him that I was and he asked me to approach closer. He then seated me before him and told my companions also to sit behind me. He told them, ‘If he lies, then refute him.’ I knew that they would not refute me even if I did lie, but I was a man of dignity and honour and would have been ashamed to lie. I also knew that if I did it was likely that they would report what I had said to others and that people would talk about me in Mecca. So I did not lie to him.

“Caesar asked, ‘Tell me about this man who has come forth among you.’ I responded by telling him a little about him, minimizing his importance. He was not impressed by this and told me to answer his questions about him. I said I would.

“He then asked, ‘How do you view his lineage amongst you?’
“‘To be pure and of our finest lineage,’ I replied.
“‘Tell me’, he asked, ‘has any other member of his family made claims similar to his and is he imitating that person?’
“‘No,’ I replied.
“‘Tell me’, he went on, ‘is there any property involved that you have taken from him which might make him say these things so that you will return them to him?’
“‘No,’ I replied.
“‘Tell me about his followers,’ he asked. ‘Who are they?’
“‘They are the young, the powerless and the poor; his followers include no chiefs of high birth.’
“‘Tell me about his companions; do they love and honour him, or (do they come to) despise and abandon him?’
“‘No man who has accompanied him has ever abandoned him,’ I replied.
“‘Tell me about the warfare between yourselves and him,’ he asked.
“‘Well’, I replied, ‘it varies; sometimes it goes in our favour, sometimes in theirs.’
“‘Tell me, would he betray?’ This was the only thing he had asked that I could deceive him about, so I said, ‘No; we now have a truce with him, yet we don’t feel secure against some treachery by him.’ But, I swear, Caesar took no account of this remark of mine.

“He went on to talk further. He commented, ‘You say he is of your purest lineage. God selects prophets that way; He only takes men from the purest lines in their people. I asked you whether any others of his family members were saying similar things that he is imitating; you said no. I asked whether he had some property you might have seized and suggested he might be saying what he is to get you to return it to him. But you said no. I asked you about his followers and you maintain that they are young, powerless and poor. That's how the followers of prophets are in every age. I asked you whether those who follow him like and respect him or despise and abandon him. You claim that only rarely does someone follow him then abandon him. In such circumstances the sweetness of faith does not enter a person’s heart then leave again.

"I asked you about the warfare between you. You replied that sometimes it favours you, sometimes him. That is how warfare is for prophets, yet they win in the end. I asked you if he betrayed, and you said he did not.

"If what you have said is the truth, then he will conquer the land beneath these feet of mine. I wish I were with him so I could wash his feet!"

"He then told me to go on about my business. So I arose, clapping my hands together and commented, 'This affair of Ibn Abū Kabsha has got to the point where the kings of those of pale skin fear him within their own domain!'"

Ibn Ishaq stated that al-Zuhri related to him that a Christian bishop who lived at that time told him, "Dihya b. Khalīfa took a message to Heraclius from the Messenger of God (SAAS) that said, 'In the name of the Most Merciful and Beneficent: From Muhammad, Messenger of God, to the Great Heraclius of Byzantium. Peace be upon those who follow the guidance. Accept Islam and be safe; God will then give you reward twice over. If you refuse, then the sin of al-akkārin, "the cultivators" will be upon you.'"

"When the letter reached him he read it and placed it between his thigh and his waist. He then wrote to one of the Byzantines who read Hebrew asking what he had read that was relevant to what had come from the Messenger of God (SAAS). He wrote back, 'He is the prophet who is awaited; there is no doubt about this, so follow him.'"

"Caesar then summoned the Byzantine leaders and they were assembled for him in his capital chamber and he ordered that they be locked inside. He then looked down from an upper room at them, since he was afraid of them and said, 'Fellow Romans, I have received a message from Ahmad! He is, I swear by God, the prophet we were awaiting and about whom there is information in our book. We recognize him by his qualities and time. Accept him and follow him and you will be safe both on earth and in the hereafter.' They snorted in disbelief, as one man, and rushed to the doors of the chamber, which they found locked against them.

"Caesar feared them and ordered, 'Bring them back!' He then said, 'Romans, I spoke to you these words only to test your commitment to your faith. I have been delighted by what I saw.' They all then fell in obeisance to him, he had the doors unlocked and they left.'" collection so that the disparity between that he gives and that of Ibn Ishaq may be ascertained, along with the former's useful additions.

Al-Bukhārī related the story of Aba Sufyān's contact with Heraclius with certain additions. I would like to give his account verbatim from his ṣaḥīḥ 92. Perhaps a reference to the parable of the evil grape-growers given in Matthew, XXI, v.33-46.

Al-Bukhari stated, prior to the section of his saikh collection that deals with faith, as follows, "Abū al-Yaman al-Hakam b. Naṣīr related to us, quoting Shu'ayb, from al-Zuhri, (who said), "Ubayd Allah b. 'Abd Allah b. Utba b. Mas'ūd informed me, that 'Abd Allah b. Abbās informed him that Abū Sufyān informed him that Heraclius sent for him while he was with a group of companions of Quraysh. They were merchants and in Syria and it was during the period in which he, the Messenger of God (SAAS), had made a truce with Abī Sufyān and the Quraysh unbelievers. They (Caesar's men) went to them in Aelia (Jerusalem) and he (Caesar) invited them to a meeting with him. Around him were the Byzantine dignitaries. He invited them (the Quraysh merchants) to come forward and summoned his translator. Caesar then asked, "Which of you is closest in relationship to this man claiming to be a prophet?"

"Abū Sufyān went on, 'I am closest in relationship to him.'

"Caesar said, "Bring him close to me and move his companions forward to sit at his back."

"He then told his interpreter, "Tell them I want to ask him about this man. If he lies to me, then they should contradict him." And I swear by God, were it not for my embarrassment at having them attribute lies to me, I would have lied about him!

"The first thing he asked was, "How do you regard his lineage among yourselves?" I replied, "He is of good lineage." He next asked, "Has any one of your people made such claims as he makes prior to him?" "No," I replied. He then enquired, "Was any of his forebears king?" "No," I replied.

"Is it your chiefs who are his followers, or your powerless?" "It is our powerless." "Are they increasing in number or decreasing?" he asked. "They are increasing," I told him. "Do any of his followers apostatize in anger at his faith after adopting it?" "No," I replied.

"Did you accuse him of telling lies prior to his making his claim?" "No," I replied. "Does he betray?" he enquired. "No," I told him. "We are in a truce and we don't know what he is doing now." This comment was the only one in which I could offer inference of anything (negative).

"Have you battled with him?" he asked. "Yes," I answered. "And how did the fighting between you turn out?" "The warfare between us has sometimes favoured him, sometimes us," I replied. "What is it that he commands you to do?" he asked. "He says", I responded, "as follows: 'Worship God alone. Do not associate anything with Him. And abandon what your forefathers used to say.' He orders us to pray, to be truthful, chaste, and to maintain our family ties."

"He then told the translator, "Tell him, 'I asked you about his lineage, and you claimed that he is of high lineage. Messengers are sent among their people's nobility.'"
"He went on, "I asked you whether any one else among you made such claims before him. You said not. If anyone had said the same before him, I would have said he was imitating him.

"I asked you whether any of his forebears was king. You said not; if one had ruled, I would have said, 'He is a man seeking his father's kingdom.'

"I asked you whether you accused him of lying before he made his claims. You said not. I then knew that he was not someone who would tell lies to people or lie about God.

"I asked you whether it is his people's leaders or the powerless who follow him. You said it was the powerless; they are the ones who do follow prophets.

"I asked you whether his supporters were increasing or decreasing. You said they were increasing. That is the way it is with a faith until it comes to fruition.

"I asked you whether any of his supporters later renege after becoming displeased with his religion. You said not. That is how it is with a faith, when joy with it pervades the people's hearts.

"I asked you whether he betrays. You said not. Similarly, prophets do not betray.

"I asked you what he orders you to do. You replied that it was to worship God, to associate no others with Him, not to worship idols, to pray, to be truthful and to be chaste.

"If what you say is true, then he will have dominion over the land beneath my feet. I knew he was going to come, but I did not think he would be one of you. If I knew I could reach him, I would rush to meet him. If I were with him, I would wash his feet.'"

He then called for the letter dispatched by the Messenger of God (SAAS) with Dihya to the governor of Busrā which the latter had sent on to Heraclius. Its contents were as follows, "In the name of God the Most Compassionate, the most Merciful. From Muhammad, the servant of God and His messenger to Heraclius, the leader of the Byzantines. Peace be upon him who follows the guidance. I invite you to Islam; accept it and you will be safe and God will give you double reward. If you turn away, then yours will be the sin of the al-arṣiyyin, the peasants. Moreover, O people of the scriptures, agree to a joint statement with us: that we will worship only God and will associate nothing with Him. That some of us will not take others as masters besides God. And if they turn away, say, 'Bear witness that we are Muslims'" (ṣūrat Al-ʾImrān; III, v.64).

Abū Sufyān stated, "When he had said this and had finished reading the letter, there was an uproar in the court. Voices were raised and we were expelled.

93. See last footnote, above, p.357.
After we had left, I told my companions, 'This Ibn Abū Kabsha affair has got to the point where he even scares the king of those of pale skin!' Thereafter I was convinced that he would prevail; and eventually God drew me into Islam.'

Al-Bukhārī continued, "Ibn Naṭūr, governor of Aelia when Heraclius had been appointed leader of the Christians of Syria, would relate that after Heraclius had arrived in Aelia, he awoke one morning in a bad mood. Some of his patriarchs asked him why and expressed concern. Heraclius, Ibn Naṭūr related, was a soothsayer who interpreted the stars. When they asked him about his mood, he replied, 'When I looked up at the stars, I saw that the "kingdom of the circumcised" was ascendant. Who is it of this nation who are circumcised?' They replied, 'Only the Jews practise circumcision; and you should definitely not fear them. Issue orders to your provincial town to kill all the Jews there.'

'While they were discussing this, in came to Heraclius a man sent by the king of Ghassān and he told them of the activities of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Heraclius questioned him further and gave orders for them to go and discover whether or not he (the messenger from Ghassān) was circumcised. They went and looked and reported that he was. Heraclius then asked whether or not the Arabs practised circumcision and was told that they did. Thereupon he said, 'The kingdom of this nation is ascendant!' He wrote to a colleague in Rome who was as knowledgeable as himself.

'Then Heraclius went to Ḥimṣ, where he had scarcely arrived before a letter came from his colleague agreeing with his own conclusion that the prophet who had emerged was indeed genuine. Heraclius had his dignitaries taken into a chamber in Ḥimṣ, the doors of which were locked. Looking down at them, he said, 'Byzantines! Is it your desire for success and right guidance and to have stability in your country? If so, then you will give allegiance to this prophet.'

'The dignitaries raced for the doors like wild onagers, but found them locked. When Heraclius saw their negative reaction, he despaired of them (accepting) the faith and ordered for them to be reassembled before him. He told them, 'I only spoke as I did before to test the strength of your allegiance to your faith. Now I have seen.'

'They bowed low before him and expressed their satisfaction with him. And this brought the (involvement) of Heraclius to an end.'

Al-Bukhārī stated, "Ṣāliḥ b. Kaysān, Yūnus and Maʿmar related this from al-Zuhri."

Al-Bukhārī related this story in many places in his sahih collection, with idiomatic variants it would take long to examine. All the other scholars, except for Ibn Mājah, gave it in various lines of transmission back to al-Zuhri.

We have discussed this hadith at length and sufficiently early in our (Tafsīr) (Exegesis) of the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, along with reference to its distinctive linguistic and contextual qualities.
Ibn Lahi'a stated, from al-Aswad, from ʿUrwa, “Abū Sufyān b. Harb left on a mercantile expedition to Syria, accompanied by some colleagues. News of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) reached Heraclius and he wished to ascertain what was known about him. So he sent word to the leader of the Arab community in Syria within his domain and ordered him to dispatch to him some Arabs so that he could question them about the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He therefore sent to Heraclius 30 Arabs, including Abū Sufyān b. Harb. They went in to him in the church in the centre of Aelia. Heraclius said, ‘I sent for you to give me information about the activities of this man of Mecca.’ They replied, ‘He is a magician and a liar and no prophet.’

“Heraclius asked them, ‘Then tell me, which of you knows him best and is closest to him in relationship?’ They replied that that would be Abū Sufyān, his uncle, and that he had fought against him.

“When they told him that, he had them removed. Then he seated Abū Sufyān and questioned him. He asked, ‘Now tell me, Abū Sufyān.’ He replied, ‘He is a magician and a liar.’

“Heraclius went on, ‘I don’t just want you to slander him; tell me about his lineage among you.’ ‘He is of the house of Quraysh,’ he replied.

“How is his intelligence, his reasoning?” ‘We never found fault with his views.’

“Was he deceitful, lying and wont to swear oaths in his business dealings?” ‘No, I swear by God; he was not like that.’

“Perhaps he is seeking some kingship or high honour that had previously been held by a forebear of his?’ ‘No,’ Abū Sufyān replied.

“Do any of those (who follow him) come back to you?’ ‘No,’ he replied.

“And did he renege after making an agreement?’ Heraclius asked. ‘No’, he replied, ‘except that he might renege on this truce,’ Abū Sufyān replied.

“And what are your fears about this truce?’ ‘My people and their allies have given a truce to him and his allies.’ Heraclius commented, ‘If you begin (the fighting) then it is you who will be the ones betraying.’

“Abū Sufyān became angry at this and said, ‘He only ever beat us once, and I was absent that day! That was at Badr. Then I attacked him twice while they were in their homes, slitting open stomachs, cutting off their ears and private parts!’

“‘And do you consider him a liar, or truthful?’ Heraclius enquired. ‘Oh, he’s a liar,’ he replied.

“Well, if there is a prophet among you, you should not kill him. The Jews are the ones best at doing that!’ Heraclius commented.

“Abū Sufyān then returned home.”

There are strange aspects to this text, as well as some good points absent from the accounts of Ibn Ishaq and al-Bukhārī.

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related in his work on the military expeditions an account similar to that of ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr. But God knows best.
Ibn Jarir stated in his work on history as follows, “Ibn Ḥamdūl related to us, quoting Salama, quoting Muḥammad b. Ḥishāq, from a certain scholar, who said, ‘Heraclius said to Dihya b. Khalīfa al-Kalbi, when the latter brought him the letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “I swear by God, I know well that your leader is a prophet sent by God and that he is the one whom we have been awaiting and whom we find mentioned in our scripture. But I fear for myself from the Byzantines; if I did not, I would follow him. Go and see Bishop Saghāṭīr, and tell him about your leader. The Byzantines actually consider him more highly and more persuasive than myself. See what he tells you.”’

“Dihya went and told him what he had brought to Heraclius from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and informed him of what was the latter’s message. Saghāṭīr responded, “I swear by God, your leader is a prophet; we know him from his qualities and we find him with his own name in our scriptures.”

“He then went and exchanged black clothing he had been wearing for white. He took his staff and went out to address the Byzantines in the church. He said, “Byzantines, a letter has reached us from Aḥmad inviting us to God. I bear witness that there is no god but God, and that Aḥmad is His servant and messenger.” They attacked him immediately in unison, hitting him until they had killed him.

“When Dihya returned and informed Heraclius what had happened, the latter commented, “I told you! We fear for ourselves from them. And Saghāṭīr was more respected and effective in speaking with them than myself.”’

(The account continues) “Caesar was informed that there was a man at his gate claiming to be an envoy from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Caesar was disturbed at this and ordered that the man be brought in. This was done; he had his bishops present with him.”

(Dihya continued) “I gave him the letter which stated, ‘In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Beneficent. From Muḥammad, Messenger of God, to Caesar, leader of the Byzantines.’ A nephew of Caesar’s, tall, red-haired and blue-eyed, snorted in anger at this and said, ‘Don’t read out this letter today! He began it with himself and then wrote, “leader of the Byzantines” instead of “king of the Byzantines”.’

“The letter was read to its end and Caesar ordered everyone out and sent for me. I went in and he asked me questions to which I answered. He then sent for his bishop, their most prominent figure, a man whose opinion and statements were influential, and when he read the letter, he said, ‘By God, he is the prophet Moses and Caesar foresaw and whom we have awaited!’ ‘What do you advise me?’ Caesar asked. The bishop replied, ‘As for myself, I believe and follow him.’ ‘I too know’, Caesar commented, ‘that he is genuine, but I can do nothing. If I did, my kingdom would be lost and the Byzantines would kill me.’”
On this subject, Muhammad b. Ishaq quoted Khālid b. Yasar as relating that a Syrian elder said, “From what news he had heard of the Prophet (-SAAS), and having decided to leave Syria for Constantinople, Heraclius assembled the Byzantines and addressed them as follows, ‘Byzantines, I have certain issues I wish to present to you. Tell me what are your wishes regarding them.’

“They asked what they were and he went on, ‘You will know, by God, that this man certainly is a prophet who has been sent. We find him to have those qualities by which he has been described to us (before); let us proceed and follow him and thus find peace in this world and the next.’

“They replied, ‘But then we would be under the control of the Arabs; and we are more numerous, powerful and have a more extensive domain than they do!’

“He continued, ‘Let us pay him the jizya, the poll-tax, every year. That will relieve pressure on me from him and by what I give him I will be spared possible warfare.’

“They responded, ‘Why should we give to the despised and powerless Arabs tax money they would take from us, when we are the more numerous, have a more powerful nation and a larger domain? No, by God, we’ll absolutely never do that!’

“Well then,’ Caesar suggested, ‘let’s make peace with him by my giving him Suriyya, while he leaves me the land of al-Shām.’ He explained that Suriyya consisted of Palestine, Jordan, Damascus and Ḥimṣ, up to al-darb94, while the lands beyond al-darb constituted al-Shām.

“They objected, ‘Why should we give him Syria when you know well that it is the very navel of al-Shām! We’ll never do that!’

“When they refused, he asked them, ‘Do you think, by God, that you’ll have defeated him if you defend yourselves from him in your towns?’

“He then rode away on his mule, eventually looking down upon al-darb and approaching the land of al-Shām. He then said, ‘Peace be upon you, land of Suriyya; this is my farewell greeting.’ He then hurriedly returned to Constantinople. But God knows best.”

An Account of the dispatch by the Messenger of God (SAAS) of a message to the King of the Christian Arabs in Syria.

94. Lane, in his Lexicon states, “The Arabic name of the ancient Derbe, near the Cilician Gates, which were the chief mountain pass, from the direction of the countries occupied by the Arabs, into the territory of the Greek (sic) Empire.” Derbe lay some 100 miles due east of Tarsus, some 120 miles north of Cyprus, well inside the boundaries of present-day Turkey. c.f. Guillaume (op. cit. p.657).
Al-Waqidi stated, “He wrote a letter to take with him that said, ‘Peace be upon him who follows the true path and believes in Him. I invite you to believe in God alone, and without associate who will preserve your kingdom for you.’

“When Shujā’ b. Wahb arrived, he read it (to the king) who responded, ‘Who is it who would take my kingdom away from me? I will go to him.’

An Account of the delegation the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent to Chosroe, King of the Persians.

Al-Bukhārī related, from a hadith of al-Layth, from Yūnus, from al-Zuhri, from Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Utba, from Ibn ‘Abbās (who said), “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent his message with an envoy to Chosroe with orders that he deliver it to the governor of al-Bahrayn. The governor forwarded it to Chosroe who tore it into shreds after he had read it.

“And I95 believe that Ibn al-Musayyab said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) cursed them, saying, ‘May they be completely torn into shreds!’”

‘Abd Allāh b. Wahb quoted al-Zuhri, from Yūnus, as saying, “Abd al-Rahmān b. al-Qāri related to me, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) climbed the minbar one day to make an address and gave praise and thanks to God, spoke the shahāda, then said, ‘I wish to send some of you forth to foreign kings; do not dispute among yourselves about me as Bani Isrā’îl did about Jesus, son of Mary.’

“The muhājirīn said, ‘O Messenger of God, we would never disagree about you over anything; order us to go forth.’

“He then dispatched Shujā’ b. Wahb to Chosroe who had his palace decorated and assembled the dignitaries of Persia. He then brought in Shujā’ b. Wahb. When he entered, Chosroe ordered that the letter be taken from him, but Shujā’ b. Wahb told him, ‘No; I will hand it only to you, as the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered me.’ Chosroe had him brought forward and Shujā’ then gave him the letter.

“Chosroe called for one of his scribes, a man from al-Ḥira, who read it to him. It said, ‘From Muhammad, servant and Messenger of God, to Chosroe, leader of Persia.’ It angered Chosroe that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had begun the letter with a reference to himself, and he shouted in anger and tore up the letter before he learned what it said. He then had Shujā’ b. Wahb taken outside.

“Having seen what he had, Shujā’ mounted his camel and left, saying, ‘Well, I swear, I don’t care which of the two routes I am on, since I did deliver the letter from the Messenger of God (SAAS).’

“When the force of his anger had abated, Chosroe sent for Shujā’ to go in to him. They searched but he could not be found. He was sought for as far as al-Ḥira, but he had gone on ahead.

95. Presumably it is ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Urba who is quoted here.
“When Shujā' went in to tell how Chosroe had behaved and how he had torn up the letter, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘May Chosroe tear up his kingdom!’”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq narrated, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, from Abū Salama, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent out ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥudhāfa with his message to Chosroe. When he read it, he tore it into shreds. When news of this reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he said, “May he tear up his kingdom!”

Ibn Jarir stated that Ibn Ḥamīd related to him, quoting Salama, quoting Ibn Ishaq, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, who said, “He dispatched ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥudhāfa b. Qays b. ʿAdī b. Saʿīd b. Sahm to Chosroe, son of Hurmuz, the king of Persia with a message saying, ‘In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Beneficent. From Muhammad, Messenger of God, to Chosroe, leader of Persia. Peace be upon those who follow the guidance, believe in God and His messenger and bear witness that there is no god but God who is unique and without associate, and that Muhammad is His servant and His messenger. I call upon you with God’s invitation. I am God’s messenger to all people, to warn all who live that the word (of God) bears witness against all unbelievers. If you accept Islam, you will be secure; if you refuse, then the sin of Magūs will be upon you.’

“When he had read this, Chosroe ripped it up, saying, ‘How dare he write this to me when he is my slave!’

“Chosroe then wrote to Badham, his governor over Yemen, saying, ‘Dispatch two strong men of yours to this man in Ḥijāz to bring him to me.’

“Badham then sent off Qahramān, a scribe adept in Persian writing, along with a Persian named Kharkhara, carrying a message to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordering him to accompany them to Chosroe. And he told Abadaway, ‘Go into this man’s country, talk to him and bring me news of him.’

“The two men left and when they reached Tā’if, they found there a man of Quraysh whom they questioned about the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He told them, ‘He is in Medina.’ The people of Tā’if – and Quraysh too – welcomed the two men joyfully. They told one another, ‘Rejoice! Chosroe, the King of Kings, is going after him! We’ll be rid of him!’

“They left and when they reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) Abadaway told him, ‘The Shāhinshāh and King of Kings Chosroe wrote to King Badhām ordering him to send to you those who would conduct you to him. He has sent me to you for you to leave with me. If you do so, a message will be sent on your behalf to the King of Kings that will be to your advantage and will protect you from him. If you refuse, then you know his reputation. He will destroy you and your people and lay waste to your country.’

“The two men then entered to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They had shaved off their beards but left their moustaches intact. He hated the sight of them. and asked, ‘Poor fellows! Who told you to do that?’ They replied, ‘It was our Lord’ – meaning Chosroe. The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘Well, my Lord ordered me to spare my beard but cut off my moustache!’ He then told them, ‘Leave now and come back to me tomorrow.’

“Then news came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) from heaven that God had empowered Chosroe’s son Shirawayh to kill his father. And on such-and-such a night of such-and-such a month Shirawayh did attack and kill his father.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) called in the two men and told them of this. They responded, ‘Do you know what you are saying? We don’t hate you so much as that! Shall we write to King Badha about you regarding this?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘Do tell him this from me. Say to him, “My faith and my power will attain that reached by Chosroe and will ultimately encompass all creatures.” Tell him, “If you accept Islam, I will award you the land beneath your feet and make you and your sons kings over your people.”’

“He then presented to Kharkhara a belt decorated with gold and silver that a king had given to him. The men left, returned to Badham and told him their news. He told them, ‘I swear by God, those are not the words of a king; I see the man to be a prophet as he claims. Let it be as he said, for if it turns out as he predicted, he is indeed a prophet sent by God: Otherwise we will reconsider what to do.’

“Soon thereafter, a letter arrived from Shirawayh which said, in part, ‘I have killed Chosroe. I did so because of the anger in Persia at his killings of his nobility and having them stabbed in their mouths. When this letter reaches you, require those under your charge to give obedience to me. And ensure immediately that no attack is made against that man about whom Chosroe wrote to you, until you receive my order about him.’

“When this letter from Shirawayh reached Badham, he said, ‘This man certainly is a Messenger of God.’ He then accepted Islam, as did all other Persians in Yemen.

“Badhawayh said to Badham, ‘I never spoke to anyone I found more awe-inspiring.’ Badham asked him, ‘Did he have armed guards with him?’ ‘No,’ he replied.”

Al-Waqidi, may God have mercy on him, stated, “The assassination of Chosroe by his son Shirawayh took place during the night of the 13th of Jumâdâ al-Åkhira, 7 AH at 6 o’clock.”

I note that there is poetry saying that his death occurred in a harâm, a sacrosanct, month, as follows,

“They killed Chosroe during the night of the sacrosanct month; he passed away and was accorded no shroud.”

And an Arab poet97 spoke the verses,

97. These verses are ascribed in Vol. 1 p.33 above to Khâlid b. Hiqq al-Shaybânî.
“And there was Chosroe, sliced up by his sons with swords as if he were meat. On one day fate brought him to term; is not there a term for every pregnant mother?”

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi narrated from a hadith of Hammād b. Salama, from Ḥamīd, from al-Ḥasan, from Abū Bakra, that a Persian came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and that the latter told him, “This night my Lord has killed your lord.”

(The narrator continued) “And when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was told that Chosroe’s daughter had been appointed to succeed him, he commented, ‘No people governed by a woman will prosper.’”

Al-Bayhaqi also said, “It is related in a hadith from Dihya b. Khalīfa that when he returned from visiting Caesar, he found emissaries from Chosroe meeting with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). This was because Chosroe had sent a threatening message to the governor of Ṣan‘a asking, ‘Can’t you rid me of this man who has appeared in your land and has asked me to accept his religion? Take care of him, or I will of you!’”

“And so the governor sent envoys to him who received the response from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), ‘Notify him that my Lord has killed his lord tonight.’ They found it to be as he said.

“And Dā‘ūd b. Abū Hind related much the same, from ‘Āmir al-Sha‘bī.”

Then al-Bayhaqi narrated through Abū Bakr b. ‘Ayyāsh, from Dā‘ūd b. Abū Hind, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “Sa‘d went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who said, ‘I see some news from Sa‘d’s face!’ Sa‘d then said, ‘Messenger of God, Chosroe is dead!’ He (the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) commented, ‘God curse Chosroe! The first people destroyed will be the Persians, and then the Arabs!’”

I note that it is clear that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) first told this to the two envoys of Chosroe who had come to him on behalf of the governor of Yemen, Badhān. Then the news came of the accuracy of the statement of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Sa‘d being the first to hear it. And so he then came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him of this accuracy. Al-Bayhaqi, may God have mercy on him, thus gave this account.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated through more than one line, from al-Zuhri, as follows, “Abū Salama b. ‘Abd al-‘Rahmān informed me that it had reached him that while Chosroe was in his palace reception chamber a petitioner was brought – or sent – to him, seeking his rights and to his great surprise a man walked up bearing a staff, saying, ‘Chosroe, will you accept Islam before I break this staff?’ Chosroe answered, ‘Yes; don’t break it!’ The man turned and left. When he had gone, Chosroe sent to his chamberlain and asked, ‘Who permitted this man access to me?’ The replied, ‘But no one went in to see you.’ ‘You lie!’ he insisted. He was angry and threatened them, then left them.
“When the new year came, the man returned, carrying the staff. He said, ‘Chosroe, will you accept Islam before I break this staff?’

“Yes; don’t break it,” he agreed.

“When the man had left, he called for his chamberlain and questioned him as he had the first time.

“Next year back came that man carrying the staff. He asked Chosroe, ‘Will you accept Islam before I break this staff?’ ‘Don’t break it! Don’t break it!’ Chosroe asked. But the man did break it. And thereupon God destroyed Chosroe.”

Imām al-Shāfi‘ī stated that Ibn Uyayna informed him, from al-Zuhri, from Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “When Chosroe perishes, there will be no Chosroe after him; and when Caesar perishes, there will be no Caesar after him. And, I swear by him who holds my soul in His hands, their treasures will be spent in God’s cause.”

Muslim gave this from a ḥadīth of Abū ‘Uyayna, and both of these quoted it as a ḥadīth from al-Zuhri.

Al-Shafici stated, “(It is said that) When the letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was brought to Chosroe, he tore it up and the former commented, ‘May his kingdom be torn up!’ But we maintain that Chosroe honoured the letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and placed it in musk98 and that what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said was, ‘May his kingdom be preserved!’”

Al-Shafici and other scholars say that when Arabs, some of whom having accepted Islam, went out on merchant ventures to Syria and Iraq, they would complain to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of their fear of the kings of those two countries. And he would respond, “When Chosroe perishes, there will be no Chosroe after him; and when Caesar perishes, there will be no Caesar after him.”

He (al-Shafici) stated, “And the kingdom of the Chosroes did indeed die out completely, and that of Caesar and Syria also ended completely, even though in general their reign persisted. This was grace to the prayer spoken for them by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when they honoured his letter. But God knows best.”

I note that in this there is a fine announcement that the rule of the Romans will never return to Syria.

The Arabs used to use the term Qaysar, “Caesar”, to denote the Roman who ruled Syria, along with the (Arabian) peninsula. The term Kīsrā, “Chosroe”, was applied to whomever ruled the Persians, al-Najāshi, “the Negus”, to the ruler of Abyssinia, al-Mugawqis for the ruler of Alexandria, Fārsīn, “Pharoah” for whomever ruled Egypt as an unbeliever, and Bātlaymūs (Ptolemy), for the ruler of India. They also accorded other generic titles; we have mentioned these elsewhere.99 But God knows best.

98. Presumably to perfume and preserve it.
Muslim related, from Qutayba and others, from Abū ‘Awāna, from Simāk, from Jābīr b. Samra, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘A group of Muslims will discover the treasures of Chosroe in the white fortress.’”

Asbāt narrated, from Simāk, from Jābīr b. Samara, a ḥadīth similar to that and added, “I and my father were among them, and we acquired 1,000 dirhams from that.”

THE EMBASSY OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS) TO AL-MUQAWQIS, RULER OF THE CITY OF ALEXANDRIA; HIS NAME WAS JURAYF B. MĪNĀ THE COPT.

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as stating, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from ‘Abd Al-Raḥmān b. ‘Abd al-Qārī, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Ḥāṭīb b. ‘Abū Balṭ’ā to the Muqawqis, ruler of Alexandria. When Ḥāṭīb delivered to him a letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he kissed it, honoured Ḥāṭīb and entertained him well. He then sent him back to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), dispatching to him with Ḥāṭīb a ceremonial gown, a mule and saddle and two slave girls, one of whom became Ibrāhīm’s100 mother. The other girl was presented by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Muḥāmmad b. Qays al-‘Abdī.”

Al-Bayhaqī related this also.

He then narrated through ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Zayd b. Aslām, from his father (who said) “Yahyā b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥāṭīb related to him, from his father, from his grandfather, ‘Abū Balṭ’ā, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent me to the Muqawqis, the ruler of Alexandria. I took him a letter from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he gave me accommodation in his home and there I stayed with him. He then sent for me, having assembled his patriarchs. He said, “I have questions for you and would like you to help me reach understanding.” I replied, “Please ask.” He said, “Tell me about your master; is he not a prophet?” “He is indeed,” I replied. “He is the Messenger of God.” “Then why,” he asked, “if he is so, why did he not curse his people, since they evicted him from his country to another?” I replied, “Take Jesus, son of Mary; do you not bear witness that he was the Messenger of God?” “Yes, indeed I do,” he replied. “Well,” I asked, “what about when his people took him and wanted to crucify him; could he not have cursed them and had God destroy them when God raised him up to the earthly heaven?” He replied, “You are a wise man who has come from a wise man. These are presents I am dispatching with you to Muḥāmmad. And I am sending with you a guard who will conduct you to your safe haven.”

“He presented to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) three slave girls, including one who was the mother of Ibrāhīm, son of the latter. One girl the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) presented to Ḥassān b. Ṭhābit, the anṣārī. He also sent some of his treasures to him.”

100. The son of the Prophet (ṢAAS).
Ibn Ishaq recounted that he presented four girls to the Messenger of God (SAAS), one of whom was Mariya, Ibrahim's mother. Another was Sirin, whom he gave to Hassan b. Thabit; to him she bore 'Abd al-Rahman b. Hassan.

I note that among these presents was a black eunuch named Ma'bur, a pair of plain black slippers, and a white female mule named al-Daldal.

This Ma'bur was a eunuch. At first no one knew this, so when he began going in to Mariya, as had been his habit in Egypt, people gossiped. They did not know the truth of the matter, that he was a eunuch. Eventually someone noted that he was the one the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered 'Ali b. Abü Talib to kill, but he let him go when he found him to be a eunuch. The hadith relating this is contained in the Sahih collection of Muslim, with a line of transmission through Hammad b. Salama.

THE EXPEDITION TO DHU AL-SALASIL

The hafiz al-Bayhaqi related it here, before the account of the conquest (of Mecca). His line of transmission leads through Musa b. Uqba and Urwa b. al-Zubayr, both of whom said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Amr b. al-As to Dhu al-Salasil in the Syrian uplands, in territory of Bali and 'Abd Allah and those of Quda'a allied to them."

Urwa b. al-Zubayr stated, "Banu Bali were uncles of al-As b. Wajil. When he travelled there, he was afraid at the large numbers of the enemy. So he sent word to the Messenger of God (SAAS) asking for reinforcements. The Messenger of God (SAAS) assigned the first muhajirin; Abu Bakr and Umar volunteered, along with a group of muhajirin leaders, may God be pleased with them all. The Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed Abu Ubayda b. al-Jarrakh as their leader."

Musa b. Uqba stated, "When they reached 'Amr, he told them, 'I am your leader; it was I who sent to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to seek reinforcements.' The muhajirin replied, 'No; you are leader of your men, while Abu Ubayda is in command of the muhajirin.' 'Amr insisted, 'No; you're just reinforcements provided to me.'

"When Abu Ubayda, who was a man of fine disposition and easy-going nature, said, 'You know, 'Amr, that the last instruction he gave me was to say, 'When you reach your comrade, obey him.' If you disobey me, then I will obey you.' Abu Ubayda gave the leadership over to 'Amr b. al-As."

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated, "Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Rahman b. 'Abd Allah b. al-Husayn b. al-Tamimi related to me, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent
'Amr b. al-'As to bring the Arabs into Islam. This was because the mother of al-'As b. Wa'il was from Banu Bali. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent him to them, for he would therefore be at ease with them. When he arrived at a well in Judham territory known as al-Salasil -- this expedition being known by that name -- he became concerned. And so he sent to the Messenger of God (SAAS) for reinforcements. The latter sent him Abū Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ along with the first muhājirūn, among whom were Abū Bakr and Umar. When he dispatched Abū Ubayda, he told him, "Do not quarrel."

"Abū Ubayda then set forth and when he arrived, 'Amr said to him, "You have merely come to reinforce me." Abū Ubayda said, "No; but I will do my duty, as you will."

"Abū Ubayda was a mild and easy-going man. 'Amr told him, "I insist; you are my reinforcements." Abū Ubayda replied, "'Amr, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, 'Do not quarrel.' So even if you disobey me, I will obey you." 'Amr told him, "Well, I am your commander, and you are my reinforcement."

"So be it," he replied.

"And 'Amr went and led the prayers with the men."

Al-Waqidi stated that Rabi'a b. Urwān related to him, from Yazid b. Rūmān, that when Abū Ubayda reached 'Amr b. al-'As they totalled 500 men and travelled on day and night into Bali territory, overrunning it as they went. Whenever they arrived at some settlement, they were told that those who had been there had dispersed on hearing of their approach. Eventually they reached the furthest part of the territory of Bali, Udhrā and Balqīn. There they finally encountered a small force with which they briefly fought, engaging in exchanges of arrows. 'Amir b. Rabī'a suffered a wound in his arm. The Muslims attacked and defeated the enemy, who dispersed and fled. 'Amr plundered the area for a few days, hearing nothing of any enemy force being gathered, and receiving no information where they had gone. He sent out his cavalry to bring in sheep and camels which they slaughtered, but they captured nothing more; there were no spoils to be distributed.

Abū Dā'ud said that Ibn al-Muthannā related to him, quoting Wahb b. Jarir, quoting his father, (who said), "I heard Yahyā b. Ayyūb relate from Yazid b. Abū Habīb, from 'Imrān b. Abū Anas, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Jubayr, from 'Amr b. al-'As, who said, 'I involuntarily discharged semen on a very cold night during the expedition to Dhū al-Salāsīl. I was afraid that if I were to wash, I would perish. So I performed the ablutions with sand, then performed the morning prayers with my men. They later reported that to the Messenger of God (SAAS). God asked, "'Amr, did you really pray with your men while in a state of junub, ritual impurity?" I then told him what had prevented me from washing myself and said, “I heard God say, ‘Do not kill yourselves; God is compassionate towards you’” (ṣūrat al-Nīṣā; IV, v.29). The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) laughed and said no more.”

101. The Arabic printed text notes that Ibn Hishām's version of Ibn Ishāq substitutes "into Syria" for "into Islam".

Muḥammad b. Salama related to us, quoting Ibn Wahb, quoting Ibn Lahiʿa and ʿAmr b. al-Ḥārith, from Yazid b. Ṭabīb, from Ṭımrān b. Anas, from ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. Jubayr, from Abū Qays, the freed-man of ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀs— who had been on an expedition, and related the ḥadīth similarly. He said, “He washed under his thighs, performed the ablutions for prayer and prayed with the rest.” He then related approximately the same as above, but he did not refer to having cleaned himself with sand.

Abū Dāʿūd stated, “This anecdote is related from al-Awzāʿī, from Ḥassān b. ʿĀṭiyah, who said in it that he cleaned himself with sand.”

Al-Waqādī stated, Aflāḥ b. Saʿīd related to me, from Ābū ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. Raqīsh, from Ābū Bakr b. Ḥazm, who said, “While away on an expedition, ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀs involuntarily discharged semen during a night of exceeding cold. He asked his men, ‘What do you think? I had a discharge, but if I wash, I’ll die!’ He had water brought and did perform the ablutions, washing his private parts and cleaning himself with sand. He then went on and performed the prayer with the rest. ʿAwf b. Mālik was sent on ahead to report. He said, ‘I reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in the pre-dawn, while he was praying in his home. I greeted him and he said, ‘You’re ʿAwf b. Mālik?’ I said I was and he said, ‘The one who slaughters camels?’ I said yes, and he added nothing more. He then asked, ‘Well, tell me the news.’ I made a report to him on our expedition and of the disagreement between Abū ʿUbayda and ʿAmr, and how Abū ʿUbayda had submitted to ʿAmr. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘May God be pleased with Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāḥ!’

‘I then told him that ʿAmr had prayed with the men while he was in a state of junub, and that even though he had water, he had only washed his private parts in performing the ablutions. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) remained silent.

‘When ʿAmr returned, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked him about his performance of the prayer and he related it to him, commenting, “I swear by Him who sent you with the truth, that if I had washed completely, I would have died; I never experienced cold like that. And the Almighty had said, ‘Do not kill yourselves; God is compassionate towards you.’”

‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) laughed; and we have not heard that he made any comment.’”

Ibn ʿIshāq stated, “Yazid b. Abū Ḥabīb quoted ʿAwf b. Mālik al-ʾAshjaʿī as saying, ‘I was present on the expedition to Ḍhū al-Ṣalāsīl sent out by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) under ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀs. I went in the company of Abū Bakr and ʿUmar. We passed by some people who had slaughtered some camels but did not know how to cut them up properly. I was a proficient butcher, so I told them, ‘If you will give me a tenth share, I’ll divide it up between you.’ They agreed and so I took a sharp knife and cut it up, right then and there. I took a portion for myself and carried it off to my companions and we cooked and ate it. Abū Bakr and ʿUmar then asked, “Where did you get this meat, ʿAwf?” I told them and they said, “By God, you did not do well to feed us this!” Then they arose and brought back up the food from their stomachs.

“When we set off for home from that trip, I was the first to reach the Messenger of God (SAAS), as he was praying in his house. I greeted him, al-salāmu ʿalayka, ‘peace be upon you’, Messenger of God!” He responded, “You’re ʿAwf b. Malik?” “Yes, indeed I am, I swear.” “The one who did the butchering?” he asked, but made no further comment.”

Muḥammad b. Ṣaḥāq related it thus, from Yaẓīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from ʿAwf b. Malik, and the ḥadīth is missing links in its chain of transmission and is, moreover, muʿḍal, “enigmatic”.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī stated, “Ibn Lahi’a and Saʿīd b. Abū Ayyūb related this from Yaẓīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Rabīʿa b. Lāqīṭ, from Malik b. Zuhdūm from ʿAwf b. Malik. I believe he (ʿAwf) related it as above except for his using the words, ‘I offered it to ʿUmar; he asked me about it, and I told him. He then said, “You have accelerated your reward!” and he did not eat it.”

He then narrated it similarly from Abū ʿUbayda and in that version made no mention of Abū Bakr. It ends approximately as above.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfiz and Abū Saʿīd b. Abū ʿAmr informed him as follows, “Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb al-Āsamm related to us, quoting Yaḥyā b. Abū Ṭālib, quoting ʿAlī b. ʿAlīm, quoting Khālid al-Ḥadhidha, from Abū Uṯmān al-Nahḍī (who said), ‘I heard ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀs say, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent me forth in command of the army sent to Dhū al-Salāsīl. Among us were Abū Bakr and ʿUmar. I told myself that he would only have given me command over Abū Bakr and ʿUmar because of some very high regard he had for me. So once I went to him, sat down before him and asked, ‘Messenger of God, who is your favourite person?’ “Aʿisha,” he replied. ‘I wasn’t asking you about your family,’ I told him. ‘Then it would be her father,’ he replied. ‘Who after that,’ I enquired. ‘ʿUmar,’ he replied. I went on asking until he had mentioned a number of men. Then I told myself that I had better stop asking!””

This is the text given by al-Bukhārī. In one account ʿAmr is quoted as saying, “I fell silent, fearing that he would place me last!”
THE EXPEDITION OF ABU 'UBAYDA TO THE SEA COAST.

Imam Malik quoted Wahb b. Kaysan as stating that Jabir said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent out an expedition towards the coast; in command he appointed Abu 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrah. The force consisted of 300 men. And I was one of them.

"Having travelled part of the way, our food supply became depleted. Abu 'Ubayda ordered all the remaining food to be gathered together. The food consisted of dates. He would distribute a very little of it to us each day until eventually all we received was one date per day. I asked him, 'What good is one date?' He replied, 'You'll find out when it has run out!'

"At last we arrived at the sea where we found a whale as big as a hillock. The army ate from it for 18 days; then Abu 'Ubayda ordered that two of its ribs be set up. He then had his mount saddled and he passed beneath them without touching them."

This anecdote is given in both sahih collections from a hadith of Malik in similar form.

It is also included in both sahih collections through Sufyan b. Uwayna, from 'Amr b. Dinhar, from Jabir, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out with a force of 300 mounted men, our commander being Abu 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrah. We were to look for caravans belonging to Quraysh. We were overcome by intense hunger, so that we were forced to eat al-khabat, 'tree leaves'. The army therefore became known as the khabat army. Then a man slaughtered 3 camels then 3 more and yet 3 more. Ultimately Abu 'Ubayda forbade him from doing this. Then the sea cast up a creature called an 'anbar, a sperm whale. We ate of it for half a month and we grew fat and our bodies became healthy."

He then went on to relate about the ribs. The reference here to looking for caravans belonging to Quraysh indicates that this expedition occurred before the truce of al-Hudaybiya. But God knows best. The man in the anecdote who butchered the camels was Qays b. Sa'd b. Ibada, may God be pleased with him.

The hafiz al-Bayhaqi stated that Abu Bakr b. Ishaq narrated to him, quoting Isma'il b. Qutayba, quoting Yahya b. Yahya, quoting Abu Khaythama - he being Zuhayr b. Muzawiya - from Abu al-Zubayr, who quoted Jabir as saying, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out on an expedition under the command of Abu 'Ubayda to seek caravans belonging to Quraysh. He provisioned us with leather bags full of dates; that was all we had. Abu 'Ubayda would ration them out one by one.

"I (Abu al-Zubayr) asked Jabir, 'What did you do with them?' He replied, 'We would chew on them like the children do, then we would drink water with them, and that would last us all day until the night. We also would knock down leaves with our sticks, pour water over them and eat them.
“We went to the sea coast and there on the beach something as big as a sand dune was cast up. When we approached it, we found it to be a creature called an ʿanbar, a sperm whale. Abū ʿUbayda first said that it was dead. But he then said, “No; after all, we are messengers on behalf of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and pursuing God’s cause. You are forced to do so; eat it.” So we ate off it for a month, all 300 of us, and put on weight again. We would ladle the fat out of its eye sockets with leather bottles and cut meat off it the size of a bull. Abū ʿUbayda took 13 of us and sat them in its eye. He also took one of its ribs, stood it upright, saddled the biggest of his camels and passed under it. We provisioned ourselves with strips of its meat dried, and when we returned to Medina and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him this, he said, “It was bounty that God brought forth for you; do you have any of its meat you could give us to eat?” And we did send some to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he ate it.”

Muslim related this from Yahyā b. Yahyā, and Ahmad b. Yahyā and Daṭūd related it from al-Nuʿayīn, all three of them deriving it from Abī Khaythama Zuhayr b. Muʿawiyah al-Jawfi al-Kiifi, from Abī al-Zuhayr, Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Tadrus al-Makki, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh the ansārī.

Most of these texts require this expedition to have preceded the truce of al-Hudaybiyya. However, we have given it here following the example of the hāfit al-Bayhaqī, may God have mercy on him. He positioned it following Muʿta and before the conquest. But God knows best.

After examining the Muʿta expedition, Al-Bukhārī related that of Usāma b. Zayd to al-Ḥaraqāt of (Bani) Juhayna. He stated that ʿAmr b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Hushaym, quoting Ḥuṣayn b. Jundub, quoting Abū Ūbyān, who said, “I heard Usāma b. Zayd say, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out against al-Ḥaraqā; we attacked them in the morning and defeated them. I and an ansārī chased after one of their men and when we caught up with him, he said La Ilāha illā Allāh, “there is no god but God”. At this the ansārī stopped, but I stabbed at him with my spear until I had killed him. When we returned home, this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he asked me, “Usāma, did you really kill him after he had said, La Ilāha illā Allāh?” “He was only trying to save himself,” I replied. But he kept on asking me the same question until I wished I had not accepted Islam before that incident.”

We have quoted and discussed this hadith heretofore.

Al-Bukhārī then went on to narrate the hadith of Yazid b. Abū ʿUbayd, from Salama b. al-Akwaʿ, who said, “I participated in seven military expeditions with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and fought also in nine others on which he sent us. On one we were commanded by Abū Bakr, and on another by Usāma b. Zayd, may God be pleased with both.”

102. Muslims are prohibited from eating the flesh of an animal that has not been slaughtered in accord with Islamic practice and after the invocation of God’s name over it.
At this point the ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi recounted the death of the Negus, the ruler of Abyssinia, in a state of being Muslim, the announcement of his death to the Muslims being made by the Messenger of God (SAAS), and the latter’s prayer for him.

It was narrated through Mālik, from al-Zuhri, from Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) announced the death of the Negus on the day he died, led the people to the mosque where he lined them up and that he then pronounced Allāhu Akbar! “God is Most Great”, four times.

Both these authorities derive their accounts from a hadith of Mālik and also from a hadith of al-Layth, from ‘Uqayl, from al-Zuhri, from Sa‘īd and Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra in similar terms.

They both also gave it from a hadith of Ibn Jurayj, from ‘Ala‘, from Jābir, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Today a fine man died; pray for Aḥma.’”

These accounts have also been quoted and discussed heretofore; and all praise be to God!

I note that it seems that the death of the Negus occurred a substantial time before the conquest (of Mecca). In the sahih collection of Muslim, it is said that when he wrote to the foreign rulers, he also wrote to the Negus and that he was not a Muslim. Others, like al-Waqidi, claim that he was. But God knows best.

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi narrated through Muslim b. Khālid al-Zanjī, from Mūsā b. ‘Uqba, from his father, from Umm Kulthūm, (who said), “When the Prophet (SAAS) married Umm Salama, he told her, ‘I have sent to the Negus some ounces of musk and a copper pot as presents, but I believe that he has died. I expect the presents to be returned to me. If that happens’ – I believe he said this – ‘then I will divide them between you.’ Or he may have said, ‘and they will be yours’.

“And it was as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said. The Negus did die and the presents were returned. He then gave an ounce (of the perfume) to one of his wives and all the rest to Umm Salama.”

THE GREAT CONQUEST OF MECCA. IT OCCURRED IN RAMADĀN, 8 AH.

God, Almighty is He, made reference to it in several places in the Qurʾān. He stated, “Not equal among you are those who spent before the conquest, and did battle; these are higher in rank than those who spent and fought thereafter. But to all (of these) God has promised reward” (sūrat al-Ḥadid; LVII, v.10).

He also stated, “When God’s help comes and the conquest and you see people entering God’s religion in droves, then celebrate with praise of your Lord and seek His forgiveness. He is indeed forgiving” (sūrat al-Ñaṣr; CX, v.1–3).

The cause of the conquest, following the truce of al-Ḥudaybiyya, was as Muhammad b. Iṣḥāq stated. He said, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, who said that al-Miswar b. Makhrama and Marwān b. al-Ḥakam both told him as follows, 'It was stipulated in the truce of al-Ḥudaybiyya that whoever wished to enter into an alliance with Muḥammad could do so, and that those wishing to ally with Quraysh could also do that. Thereafter Khuzā‘a stated that they wished to be allied with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while Banū Bakr joined with Quraysh.

"The truce remained in effect for some 17 or 18 months. But then Banū Bakr attacked Khuzā‘a at night at a well called al-Watir, close to Mecca. Quraysh, thinking that it was night and that they would not be observed, assisted Banū Bakr by providing horses and weapons, and they fought along with them in order to express their hatred for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

"When the conflict between Khuzā‘a and Banū Bakr became intense, 'Amr b. Salim rode off to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to tell him the news. He had composed some verses on the subject and spoke these to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when he arrived,

"O Lord, I address Muḥammad and invoke his father's pact with our ancient forebears.

You were as children and we as parents and then we accepted Islam and never held back.

So Help the Messenger of God with a final victory, and call for God's servants to come up as reinforcements Including the Messenger of God, accoutred for war; when angry, his face becomes stern.

With an army broad as the sea and foaming; Quraysh have broken their pacts.

They have destroyed their clear treaty with you and sent guards for me up on Mt. Kādā.

They claim that I will not inspire (to help) yet they are more lowly and fewer in number.

They attacked us at night while we slept at al-Watir, and killed us as we bowed in prayer."

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, "You have been helped, 'Amr b. Salim!"

"Soon a cloud passed overhead in the sky and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, "This cloud is bringing aid to Banū Ka'b."

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then told his men to prepare for battle, but he hid from them his destination. He asked God to blind Quraysh to news of him so that he could surprise them in their own territory."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The reason for the trouble was that a man named Malik b. ʿAbbād, of Banū al-Hadrami, allied to al-Aswad b. Rizn, went out on a trading trip. When he was deep in Khuzā‘a territory, they attacked him, killed him and robbed him. Banū Bakr then attacked a man of Banū Khuza‘a and killed him. Khuza‘a, just before accepting Islam, had attacked the sons of al-Aswad b. Rizn al-Dili, Salmā, Kulthūm and Dhu‘ayb, leaders who were the pride of Banū Kināna, and killed them at 'Arafa at the boundary rocks marking the sacred area.

“A man of al-Dil related to me that Banū al-Aswad b. Rizn, due to their high prestige, were paid double blood-wit in the pre-Islamic period, while Banū al-Dil received single blood-wit.

“While Banū Bakr and Khuzā‘a were engaged in this conflict, Islam came between them. When the agreement at al-Ḥudaybiyya was made, Banū Bakr made a pact with Quraysh, as did Khuzā‘a with the Messenger of God (SAAS). Then the truce went into effect. But Banū al-Dil, (a clan) of Banū Bakr, used it to gain revenge from Khuzā‘a for the men killed. Nawfal b. Mu‘awiya al-Dili went out at the command of their men; not all of Banū Bakr followed him, however. He attacked Khuzā‘a, killing one of their men, at al-Wattir, a well of theirs. The sides then disengaged, then battled on. Quraysh supplied Banū Bakr with weapons and some of them participated in the fighting, using the dark of night to conceal their identity, until eventually they forced Khuzā‘a inside the sacred territory. Once inside it, Banū Bakr pointed out to Nawfal, ‘We have entered the sacred territory! (Think of) your God! Your God!’ He (Nawfal) then said an awful thing, ‘There is no God today! Banū Bakr, gain your revenge! I swear by my life that you steal within the sacred area, so can you not also gain your revenge?’

“Khuzā‘a took refuge in the house of Budayl b. Warqā‘ in Mecca and in that of a freed-man of theirs named Rafi‘. Al-Akhzar b. Lu‘f al-Dili spoke the following verses on this subject,

‘Have the people of furthest Abyssinia learned that we defeated Banū Ka‘b with our arrow heads? We imprisoned them in the home of the slave Rafi‘, and also with Budayl we kept them, inactive. In the home of a base and passive man, once we had satisfied our anger by the use of our swords, we confined them to their great distress, having descended upon them like a rain torrent from a mountain gully Slaughtering them like goats, as if we were lions, slashing our swords into them. They had wronged us and acted aggressively and were the first to murder at the sacred boundary, So scared when attacked that they were like ostrich chicks, their flight blocked by Mt. Thawr.’

“Budayl b. ‘Abd Manāt b. Salama b. ‘Amr b. al-Ajabb, known as Budayl b. Umm Aṣram, answered him back with the following verses:

‘A boastful people made a pact, but we have left them only Na‘fil as their chief to assemble them. Was it fear of the prime people, whom you disdain, that you went beyond al-Wattir, panicking, not to return?"
Every day we favour those we protect by paying the blood-wit, but no one needs to favour us.

We attacked your homes at al-Talâ’â with our swords that forestalled any complainer’s blame.

We defended against the tribe’s attack from all the way from between Bayḍ and Ṭāṭid to the slopes of Mt. Raḍwâ.

At the battle at al-Ghamîm ʿUbays retreated in haste; we terrified him by our brave chief.

Perhaps it was because the mother of one of you had diarrhoea that you fled and we did not fight?

By God’s house, you lie! You did not do battle; but we left your affairs in confusion.’”

Ibn Ishâq stated that ʿAbd Allâh b. Abû Salama related to him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “You can expect to see Abû Sufyân come to you to re-establish the pact and extend its duration.”

Ibn Ishâq stated, “Then Budayl b. Warqâ went with a group of Khuzâ’â to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told how they had been attacked and how Quraysh had joined with Banû Bakr against them. They then left and on their way back, at ʿUsfân, encountered Abû Sufyân. Quraysh had dispatched him to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to reaffirm and extend the pact, since they were now worried by what they had done.

“When Abû Sufyân met Budayl he asked him whence he had come, thinking that he had come from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Budayl replied that he had been travelling in that valley and along the coast with Banû Khuzâ’â. Abû Sufyân thereafter went to where Budayl’s camel had knelt and examined its droppings; he found it to contain date stones. He said, ‘I swear, Budayl has been to Muhammad!’

“Abû Sufyân then made his way to Medina to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), where he went in to see his own daughter, Umm Ḥabiba. When he was about to sit on the rug of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), she rolled it up. He then commented to her, ‘I wonder whether you consider this rug undesirable for me or me for it?’ She replied, ‘It is the rug of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and you are a dirty polytheist! I won’t have you sit on his rug!’ He responded, ‘Well, daughter, you’ve certainly turned out badly since you left me!’

“He then went to see Abû Bakr whom he asked to speak on his behalf with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), but he refused. He next visited ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭâb and spoke with him, but ʿUmar replied, ‘Me intercede for you with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)! I swear, if ants were all I had to fight you with, I’d do it!’

“Abû Sufyân then made his way to (the home of) ʿAli b. Abû Ṭâlib, where he also found Fatîma, the daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). She was sitting playing with her son Hasan. Abû Sufyân said, ‘Ali, you are the man closest in relationship to me. I have come with a request and I don’t want to leave disappointed. Please intercede with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on my behalf.’
He replied, 'I sympathize, Abū Sufyān, but once the Messenger of God (SAAS) has determined something, we just can't talk to him about it.' Abū Sufyān then turned to Fāṭima and said, 'Muḥammad's daughter, won't you have this son of yours bring protection between our men so that he may then become the lord of all the Arabs till the end of time?' She replied, 'My son is not old enough to bring such protection, and no one could provide protection against the Prophet (SAAS).'

"Abū Sufyān then addressed ʿAlī, 'I'm really in desperate circumstances; what advice can you give me?' ʿAlī replied, 'I swear, I don't know what would help you. But you are chief of Banū Kināna. Why don't you arise in public, guarantee protection against them, then return home?' 'You think that might well do me some good?' he asked. ʿAlī replied, 'Well, I really don't, but that's all I think you can do.'

"So Abū Sufyān stood up in the mosque and said, 'I guarantee protection between our men.' He then mounted his camel and rode off. When he reached Quraysh, they asked what he had accomplished. He reported how he had gone and visited Muḥammad and spoken with him but had received no response, gone on to Ibn Abī Quḥāfa" without avail, and then to ʿUmar whom he had found very antagonistic. He commented that he had found ʿAlī the most sympathetic and reported that he had given him advice which he had followed, though without any expectation that it would prove useful. They asked what he had advised. Abū Sufyān reported how ʿAlī had advised offering protection, which he had done. They enquired whether the Prophet (SAAS) had approved that, and Abū Sufyān said no. They commented that ʿAlī had been toying with him and that Abū Sufyān had gained nothing. He replied that he had not known what else to do."

Al-Suhaylī makes a useful addition to this account. He commented on Fāṭima's words in this hadith, "No one gives protection against the Messenger of God (SAAS)". This contradicts what is in the hadith, "Their least powerful will give protection for all Muslims". He stated that he reconciled both versions by saying that the hadith refers to one who will grant protection to an individual or a few people only. As for Fāṭima's words, they refer to the giving of protection to a large number of people upon whom the Imām has declared war; in such a case no one can offer protection. He (al-Suhaylī) went on, "Saḥnūn and Ibn al-Majishawn both say, 'The protection that a woman grants is dependent upon the permission given by the Imām, because of his (the Prophet's) words to Umm Ḥānī', "We give protection to those you protect, Umm Ḥānī." This is also related from ʿAmr b. al-ʿAs and Khalīd b. al-Walīd. Abū Ḥanīfa said, 'The protection granted by a slave is not valid.' Yet his statement, 'their least powerful will give protection' requires inclusion of women and slaves. But God knows best."

Al-Bayhaqī related through Ḥammād b. Salama, from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, who said, "Banū Ka'b spoke the following,
O God, I appeal to Muhammad by the pact between his father and our forebears.

Give much help, may God give you guidance, and call for God's servants to come in reinforcement."

Mūsā b. Uqba said with regard to the conquest of Mecca, "Then Banū Nufātha, of Banū al-Dīl, attacked Banū Ka'b during the truce between the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Quraysh. Banū Ka'b were at peace with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and Banū Nufātha were at peace with Quraysh. Banū Mudlij kept withdrawn from them and honoured the pact they had made with the Messenger of God (SAAS). In Banū al-Dīl there were two men who were their chiefs, Salmā b. al-Aswad and Kulthūm b. al-Aswad. It is said that those who helped them were Safwān b. Umayya, Shayba b. Uthmān and Suhayl b. 'Amr.

"Banū al-Dīl made a raid against Banū 'Amr and their dependants, including their women, children and the weak. They fought them and forced them to seek refuge, ultimately making them withdraw to the home of Budayl b. Warqā in Mecca.

"Riders from Banū Ka'b then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him what they had suffered and the part that Quraysh had played in it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told them to go back home and then to disperse into the land.

"Abū Sufyān then left Mecca for the Messenger of God (SAAS), worried at what had happened. He said, 'Muhammad, strengthen the pact and extend it for us.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'That is why you have come? Has something bad happened?' 'God forbid! We are keeping to our pact and to the truce of al-Hudaybiyya; we are not changing anything.'

"He then left the Messenger of God (SAAS) and went to Abū Bakr, to whom he said, 'Review the pact and extend it for us.' Abū Bakr replied, 'My protection is with the Messenger of God (SAAS). I swear by God, if all I had was ants to fight you with, I'd take their help against you!'

"He then went to 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb and spoke to him. 'Umar replied, 'Nothing new ever happened without God having created it and nothing was ever firmly set that God could not destroy, and nothing was ever cut asunder that God could not join together.' Abū Sufyān commented, 'May you be punished badly by a close relative!'

"He then went to see Uthmān and when he had spoken to him, Uthmān told him, 'My protection rests with that of the Messenger of God (SAAS).' Abū Sufyān then pursued Quraysh nobles and spoke with them, but all said that their pact was made with the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"When he despaired of their help, he went in to see Fāṭima, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and spoke with her. She replied, 'I'm just a woman. That is up to the Messenger of God (SAAS).' He told her, 'Then give orders to one of your sons.' She replied, 'But they are just children; they couldn't..."
grant protection.' 'Then speak to 'Ali,' he asked her. She replied, 'You talk to him.'

"He did speak to 'Ali, who said to him, 'Abū Sufyān, none of the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would ever act contrary to his wishes by granting protection. You are the leader of Quraysh, their most important and powerful figure. Give protection on behalf of Quraysh. You are the leader of Quraysh, their most important and powerful figure. Give protection on behalf of Quraysh. 'Yes,' Abū Sufyān replied. 'You speak the truth; I am as you say.' He then left and called out, 'I grant protection. And, by God, I do not believe that anyone will betray me.'

"He then went in to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him, 'Muḥammad, I have declared protection between the people and I don't think anyone will betray me by revoking my protection.' 'As ever you say, Abū Ḥanzāla,' he told him, and at that Abū Sufyān left.

"They claim, but God knows best, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said when Abū Sufyān had left, 'O God, close over their hearing and their seeing so that they only see us suddenly and only hear us too late!'

"Abū Sufyān returned to Mecca and there Quraysh asked him, 'What happened? Did you bring some letter or pact from Muḥammad?' 'No, by God,' he replied. 'He refused me that. I watched his men closely and I never saw any people more obedient to a king who ruled them than they were to him. However, 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalīb told me to grant them protection without claiming it for myself or my people. He told me I could do this without having it revoked by anyone because of my high status and leadership. I got up and made the announcement, then went in to tell Muḥammad that I had done so; I told him that I did not think it would be revoked. He merely said it was I who was saying so.' Quraysh responded, 'You have no reason to be pleased. You return with nothing of any use to you or us. 'Ali was merely toying with you! Your offer of protection was invalid and useless.'

"He then went in to see his wife and she told him the same. She exclaimed, 'What a terrible envoy you are! You gained nothing at all.'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) saw a cloud and commented, 'These clouds are gently raining down victory for Banū Ka'b!'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed there for that period that God wished after the departure of Abū Sufyān. He began equipping for battle. He told 'A'isha that she should prepare his food, and to hide that fact.

"He then went out to the mosque, or for some other purpose, and Abū Bakr came in to see 'A'isha. He found her busy pounding and sifting wheat. Abū Bakr asked her why she was preparing the food but she made no reply. 'Is the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) preparing for battle?' he asked. She was still silent. He then asked, 'Is he going to attack the "yellow skins"?' meaning the Byzantines. She said nothing. He then said, 'Perhaps he is heading for Najd?' She was silent. 'Maybe he is heading for Quraysh then?' She said nothing.

"When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned, Abū Bakr asked him, 'Messenger of God, are you leaving on a campaign?' 'Yes,' he replied. 'Are you perhaps heading for the "yellow skins"? 'No,' he replied. 'Then to Najd?' 'No,' he answered. 'So maybe you are going after Quraysh?' he suggested. 'Yes,' he replied. Abū Bakr then said, 'But, Messenger of God, don’t you have a valid truce with them?' 'Haven’t you heard what they did to Banū Ka‘b?' he asked.

"Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) announced to everyone that there was to be a campaign. At that Ḥātib b. Abū Balṭā’a wrote a message to Quraysh, but God made His messenger (SAAS) aware of the letter."

He proceeded to relate the account that follows.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq said that Muḥammad b. Ja‘far related to him, from ʿUrwa, from ʿA‘isha, who said that Abī Bakr came in to see her while she was sifting wheat. Abī Bakr asked her, "What’s this? Has the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked you to prepare supplies for a campaign?" "Yes", she replied, "to prepare for a campaign." "Where to?" he asked. "He did not tell us anything, except to make preparations."

Ibni Ishāq went on to say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) then made an announcement to the people that he was going to Mecca. He ordered them to act seriously and to make preparations. He said, "O God, take away sight and information from Quraysh so that we may take them by surprise in their land."

And so the people made their preparations.

(Ibn Ishāq went on) "Ḥāsān b. Thābit spoke the following verses to arouse the people and to refer to the men killed by Khuzā‘a,

'It hurt me greatly, even though I did not witness, as men of Banū Ka‘b were having their heads cut off in the Mecca valley

By men who did not unsheathe their swords; and there were many men killed who were unburied.

How I wish that my (poetry’s) help, with its heat and hurt could harm Suhayl b. ‘Amr!

And Ṣafwān, an old fellow who grunts from his arse; this is the time when war had been saddled for battle.

Do not feel secure, Ibn Umm Mujālīd when war is fully prepared for and about to break out.

But don’t worry about it, for our swords will have their impact and death’s door will open wide!'"

THE INCIDENT INVOLVING ḤĀṬIB B. ABU BALṬĀ‘A.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that it was related to him by Muḥammad b. Ja‘far, from ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr and others, from various of our scholars, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) had decided to attack Mecca, Ḥāṭib b. Abū Balṭā’a wrote to Quraysh informing them of how the Messenger of God (SAAS) was about to move against them. He gave the letter to a woman; Muḥammad b. Ja‘far claimed her to have been of Muzayna, while others maintained that she was Sāra, a freed-woman of someone from Banū ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. He paid her to take it to Quraysh and she placed it on her head, tied it up in her hair and left with it."

Ibn Ishaq went on, "News came from heaven to the Messenger of God (SAAS) of what Ḥāṭīb had done and he sent ‘Alī b. Abū Ṣāliḥ and al-Zubayr b. al-'Awwām in pursuit, telling them, ‘Seize a woman with whom Ḥāṭīb b. Abū Balṭa'a has sent a letter to Quraysh warning them of what we have decided to do about them.’

"The two men caught up with her at al-Ḥalifa of Banū Abū Aḥmad. They made her dismount and searched her baggage but found nothing. ‘Alī then told her, ‘I swear by God, the Messenger of God (SAAS) has not been misinformed, nor has he lied to us. Either you produce this letter for us, or we will search you for it!’ When she saw how serious he was, she told him to turn away and untied her hair, took out the letter and gave it to him. He took it to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) summoned Ḥāṭīb and asked him, ‘Ḥāṭīb, what made you do this?’ He replied, ‘I really am, I swear, a true believer in God and in His messenger. I have not changed at all. But I'm not a man with any claims to nobility or tribal influence and there, living among Quraysh, I have my son and family and I wanted to protect them.’

"ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said, ‘Messenger of God, let me cut off his head! The man has turned hypocrite! The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, ‘What makes you so sure, ʿUmar? Perhaps God looked down upon those who fought at Badr and said, ‘Do as you wish; I forgive you!’’

"It was about Ḥāṭīb that God revealed, ‘O you who believe: do not consider My enemies and yours to be allies to whom you give friendship?’ (sūrat al-Mumtaḥana; LX, v.1).

Ibn Ishaq related this story as being mursal, with an incomplete line of authorities. Al-Suhaylī narrated that in Ḥāṭīb’s letter it said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) may well send forth an army against you that will descend upon you like nightfall. And I swear by God, that even if he were to attack you alone, then God would give him victory over you. He fulfils what He promised him."

Al-Suhaylī went on, "And in the Tafsir (Exegesis) of Ibn Sallām it is stated that Ḥāṭīb wrote, ‘Muḥammad has assembled an army for war; he is either heading for you or for others. You should beware!’"

Al-Bukhārī stated that Quraysh related to him, quoting Sufyān, from ‘Amr b. Dīnār, who said that al-Ḥasan b. Muḥammad told him that he heard ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Abū Rāfī‘ say that he heard ‘Alī relate, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) dispatched me, al-Zubayr and al-Miqdād saying, ‘Go to the well at Khākh. There you will find a woman in a howdah who has a letter. Take it from her.’ So we left, our horses racing us along, and we arrived at the well, where we found the woman in the howdah. We told her to produce the letter, but she denied having it. We then told her that if she did not produce it, we would strip her clothes off her.

“She then brought it forth from her hair wrappings and we took it to the Messenger of God (SAAS). The letter said, ‘From Ḥāṭib b. Balṭā‘a to the polytheists of Mecca, informing them of some of the actions of the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) asked Ḥāṭib about this and he replied, ‘Messenger of God, don’t act harshly with me! I was just associated with Quraysh, allied with them but not of them. Some of your muḥājirīn have relatives among Quraysh who can look after their families and possessions. What I wanted was to find someone among them who would protect my relatives. I did not do this to apostatize from my faith, nor to express my acceptance of disbelief after Islam.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘Well, he has spoken the truth to you.’ Umar asked, ‘Messenger of God, let me strike off the head of this hypocrite!’ (He replied) ‘But he fought at Badr. And what makes you so sure; perhaps God looked down upon those who fought at Badr and said, “Do as you wish; I forgive you.”’

“God then sent down, ‘O you who believe, do not consider My enemies’ up to the words, ‘has strayed from the right path.”’ (ṣūrat al-Mumtaḥana; L.X, v.1).

The other compilers of the tradition also gave it, except for Ibn Maja, from a hadith of Sufyān b. ‘Uyayna. Al-Tirmidḥi stated that it was hasan, saḥīh, “good and authentic”.

Imām Āḥmad said that it was related to him by Ḥujayn and Yūnus, both of whom said that Layth b. Sa‘d related to him, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jabir b. ‘Abd Allah, that Ḥāṭib b. Abū Balṭa‘a wrote to the people of Mecca telling them that the Messenger of God (SAAS) intended to attack them. However, the Messenger of God (SAAS) was provided information about the woman who had the letter and so he sent after her and retrieved the letter from her head. He then asked Ḥāṭib whether he really did this and he confessed. He explained, “I did not do it to betray the Messenger of God (SAAS), nor am I a hypocrite. I knew that God would make His messenger prevail and allow him to complete his mission. However, I’ve always been a stranger amidst them (Quraysh) and my mother is there with them. And I wanted to have some favour with them.” Umar asked, “Should I cut off this fellow’s head?” But the Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “Would you really kill someone who fought at Badr? What makes you sure; perhaps God looked down at those who fought at Badr and said, ‘Do as you wish.’”

Only Imām Āḥmad gives this tradition from this line of transmission; its chain of authorities meets the criteria of Muslim. And all praise be to God!

DIVISION.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated that Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Shihāb al-Zuhṛī related to him, from Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Urbā, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then proceeded on his journey, having appointed Abū Ruhm Kulthsūm b. Ḥusayn b. Ṣūba b. Khalaf al-Ghifhārī in command of Medina. He departed on the 10th of Ramādān and fasted, as did those with him. Having arrived at al-Kadād, between Ḫasfān and Amaj, he broke his fast and thereafter travelled on to Marr al-Zahrān, where he and 10,000 Muslims made camp.”

ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayrå stated, “He had 12,000 men with him.” Al-Zuhri and Mūsā b. ʿUqba said the same. Sulaym totalled over 700 men; some say they were over 1,000 strong. Muzaynā were over 1,000 strong, and each tribe was represented in both force and faith in Islam. The muhājirūn and the anṣār accompanied the Messenger of God (ṢaaS) en masse, none of them remaining behind.

Al-Bukhārī narrated a similar account from Māḥmūd, from ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri.

Al-Bayhaqī narrated, from a ḥadīth of Āṣim b. ʿAlī, from al-Layth b. Saʿd, from ʿUqayl, from al-Zuhri (who said), “ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh informed me, from Ibn ʿAbbas, that the Messenger of God (ṢaaS) went forth on the expedition that led to the conquest in Ramādān.”

Al-Zuhri went on, “I heard Saʿd b. al-Musayyab make a similar statement, that he did not know whether he started out with some days left of Shaʿbān and that then Ramādān arrived, or whether he left in Ramādān, after it had begun. However, ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh informed me that Ibn ʿAbbas said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢaaS) fasted until he reached Ḫasfān. Then he called for a vessel and drank from it, allowing the people to see this. He continued to eat normally (without fasting) throughout the month.’”

Al-Bukhari related this from ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf, from al-Layth. He, however, did not mention the confusion between Shaʿbān and Ramādān.

Al-Bukhārī stated, that ʿAlī b. ʿAbd Allāh related to us, quoting Jarīr, from Māṣūr, from Mūjahid, from Ṭawus, that Ibn ʿAbbas said, “The Messenger of God (ṢaaS) set out in Ramādān, fasting until he reached Ḫasfān. Then he called for a vessel and drank from it, allowing the people to see this. He continued to eat normally until he reached Mecca.”

He went on, “Ibn ʿAbbas used to say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢaaS) both fasted and ate normally while travelling. Those who wished, fasted; those who wished, ate normally.’”

Yūnus quoted Ibn Ishāq, from al-Zuhri, from ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh as stating that Ibn ʿAbbas said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢaaS) set forth on the conquest of Mecca, he placed Abū Ruhm Kulthsūm b. Ḥusayn al-Ghifhārī in command of Medina. He left on the 10th of Ramādān, fasting, as did those accompanying him. When he arrived at al-Kadād, between Ḫasfān and Amaj, he broke his fast. When he entered Mecca, he was eating normally and people saw that this was his latter practice, having abrogated his former, his fasting.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “His statement, ‘he left on the 10th of Ramādān’ is interpolated in the ḥadīth, as is his reference to ʿUbayd Allāh b. Idrīs, quoting Ibn Ishāq.”
He then related through Ya'qūb b. Sufyān, from Jābir, from Yaḥyā, from Ṣādaqā, that Ibn Iṣḥāq said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left on the 10th of Ramaḍān, 8 AH.”

Al-Bayhaqi narrated from the hadith of Abū Iṣḥāq al-Faẓārī, from Muḥammad b. Abū Ḥafṣa, from al-Zuhrī, from ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The conquest occurred 13 days into Ramaḍān.” Al-Bayhaqi then commented, “This dating is fanciful; it relies only on al-Zuhrī’s statement.”

He went on to narrate through Ibn Wahb, from Yūnūs, from al-Zuhrī, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went out from Medina in Ramaḍān on the campaign for the conquest – the conquest of Mecca. He was accompanied by 10,000 Muslims. This coincided with the beginning of 8 and one-half years following his arrival at Medina. Mecca was conquered with 13 days remaining of Ramaḍān.”

Al-Bayhaqi also narrated through Ṭāḥaf al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhrī, from ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Ibn ʿAbbās, (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left in Ramaḍān, accompanied by 10,000 Muslims. He fasted until he reached al-Kadid, then he broke his fast.

Al-Zuhrī stated, “Only the most recent being acceptable, then that would be what follows.” He said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went to Mecca on the morning of the 13th of Ramaḍān.” He then recounted the conquest in accord with both saḥīḥ collections, through Ṭāḥaf al-Razzāq. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated through Saʿīd b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-Tantāmī, from ʿAṣiyya b. Qays, from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudārī, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told us to set forth in the year of the conquest on the 2nd of Ramaḍān. We fasted en route until we reached al-Kadid, where the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) advised us to break the fast, being pleased with both those who continued fasting and those who did not. When we reached the first staging post where we encountered the enemy, he told us to break the fast, and we all did so.”

Ibn ʿAbd al-Muḥyrā, from Saʿīd b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz (who said) that ʿAṣiyya b. Qays related to him, from someone who had told it to him, who quoted Abū Saʿīd al-Khudārī, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told us to set forth in the year of the conquest on the 2nd of Ramaḍān. We fasted en route until we reached al-Kadid, where the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told us to break the fast. Thereafter some continued fasting, while others did not. When we reached the first staging post where we encountered the enemy, he told us to break the fast, and we all did so.”

I note from al-Zuhrī’s account that the conquest was on the 13th of Ramaḍān, and from that of Abū Saʿīd that they left Medina on the 2nd of Ramaḍān; their trip between Mecca and Medina must therefore have taken 11 days.

However, al-Bayhaqi related, from Abū al-Ḥusayn b. al-ṣafl, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfār, from Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān, from al-Ḥasan b. al-Raḥīm, from Ibn Idrīs, from Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, from al-Zuhrī, and Muḥammad b. ʿAlī b. al-Ḥusayn, and 'Āsīm b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda and ʿAmr b. Shuʿayb, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr and others, all said that the conquest of Mecca took place with 10 days remaining of Ramaḍān in 8 AH.

Abū Daʿūd al-Ṭayālīsī stated that Wahīb related to him, from Jaʿfar b.
Muḥammad, from his father, from Jābir, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth in the year of the conquest and was fasting until he reached Kurāʾ al-Ghamīm. Some of the men accompanying him were on foot, while others rode; this journey was during Ramaḍān. He was told, ‘Messenger of God, the men are suffering from fasting, but are watching to see what you will do.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called for a vessel of water and drank, while the men watched. Some of the men then broke the fast, while others continued it. When he was told that some men were still fasting, he commented, ‘They’re disobedient.’”

Muslim narrated it from a hadīth of al-Thaqāfī and al-Darāwardī, from Jaʿfar b. Muḥammad.

Imām ʿAbd Allāh narrated from a hadīth of Muḥammad b. Isʿāq, who said that Bashīr b. Yaṣār related to him, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) left in the year of the conquest in Ramaḍān. He fasted, as did the Muslims with him, until he reached al-Kadid. There he called for water in a wooden cup, while he was mounted. He drank while the men looked on. This was to inform them that he had broken his fast. The Muslims then broke their fast.”

Aḥmad was alone in giving this hadīth.

Section: On the Acceptance of Islam by the following relatives of the Prophet (SAAS).

These were al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb, his uncle, Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥārith
b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb, his cousin, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Umayya b. al-Mughfrat al-Makhzūmī, the brother of (his wife) Umm Salama, “mother of the believers”.
They went out to meet him while he was on his way to the conquest of Mecca.

Ibn Ishaq stated that al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb met the Messenger of God (SAAS) while the latter was en route. Ibn Hishām stated that he met him at al-Juhfa, having emigrated with his family. Previously he had been living in Mecca engaged in his function of providing water for the pilgrims. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was, according to Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhri, satisfied (at that).

Ibn Ishaq stated that Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Umayya met the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Niq al-ʿUqāb, a place between Mecca and Medina. There they sought to meet with him and Umm Salama spoke to him about them. She said, “Messenger of God, it is your two cousins, your maternal uncle’s son and your maternal aunt’s son, along with your brother-in-law.” He replied, “I don’t need to see the two of them; my maternal uncle’s son offended my honour, while my maternal aunt’s son slandered me in Mecca.”
Ibn Ishaq continued, “When news of this response reached them, Abū Sufyān, who had a young son with him, said, ‘By God, if he does not see me, I’ll take this young son of mine by the hand and we’ll go off somewhere and die of thirst and hunger!’ When the Prophet (SAAS) heard this, he took pity on them and allowed them both to come in and they did so and accepted Islam. Abū Sufyān then recited to him the verses that concerned his acceptance of Islam and apologized for his former behaviour:

‘By your life, I swear that day I carried a banner so that al-Lāt’s cavalry would overcome those of Muḥammad,

I was like a traveller lost in a dark night, but now is a time when I am led aright and lead others well.

A guide other than myself gave me guidance and there gave me guidance to God someone whom I had vigorously opposed.

I kept myself and others actively away from Muḥammad and was called his relative, though I claimed no such ties.

They (Muslims) are as they are; those who do not agree with them – even men of wisdom – are blamed and rejected.

I wished to please them, but could not agree with them so long as I was not guided.

Tell Thaqif that I do not want to battle them, and tell Thaqif, “Threaten others!”

I was not in the army that struck Ḥam, nor had I any part in it, by hand or voice.

Tribes came from far away lands, strangers out of Sahām and Surdād.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “They claim that when Abū Sufyān recited to the Messenger of God (SAAS) the line, ‘and there gave me guidance to God someone whom I had vigorously opposed,’ the latter struck the former in the chest and commented, ‘Yes, you did oppose me vigorously, all right!’”

DIVISION.

Having dismounted at Marr al-Zahrān, the Messenger of God (SAAS) made camp and stayed there. As al-Bukhārī related it, from Yahyā b. Bukayr, from al-Layth and Muslim, from Abū al-Ṭāhir, from Ibn Wahb, both of the latter quoting from Yūnus, from al-Zuhri, from Abū Salama, from Jābir, who said, “We were at Marr al-Zahrān with the Messenger of God (SAAS), gathering kibāth, the fruit of the arāk thorn tree. He told us, ‘Look out for the black ones; they are the best.’ The men asked him, ‘Messenger of God, were you ever a shepherd?’ ‘Yes, I was; was there ever a prophet who was not?’”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asamm, from Ḥam b. ‘Abd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Sinān b. Ismā’īl, from Abū al-Walīd Sa'id b. Minā, who said, "When the Meccans had finished and left, the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered the men to proceed to Mecca. Having reached Marr al-Zahrān, he made camp at al-‘Aqaba and sent out the pickers to gather al-kibāth. Sinān asked (Abū al-Walīd) Saʿīd what this word meant and he said it was the fruit of the thorny arīk tree."

Saʿīd went on, "Ibn Masʿūd was one of those who was picking. As they found a nice fruit, they would promptly eat it. They were laughing as they observed the thinness of Ibn Masʿūd's legs as he climbed up a tree and the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Are you amused at his thin legs? By Him who holds my soul in His hands, they weigh heavier in the scales (of righteousness) than Mt. Uhud!'

"The choicest fruits Ibn Masʿūd picked he would offer to the Messenger of God (SAAS). And on this subject he, Ibn Masʿūd, spoke the following line,

'This is the finest I have picked (for you), while the hand of every picker goes to his mouth.'"

In both saḥīḥ collections Anas is quoted as saying, "We disturbed a rabbit while we were at Marr al-Zahrān and the men took it to Abū Ṭalḥa who slaughtered it. He sent its thighs and legs to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he accepted them."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) halted at Marr al-Zahrān, having kept any news from reaching Quraysh; they had no information at all about what he was doing. During those nights, Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām and Budayl b. Warqā came out to gather any news from what they might see or hear."

Ibn Lahī'a recounted from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent out horsemen as scouts to catch any spies. Khuzā'ī were not allowing anyone to pass by them, and so when Abū Sufyān and his companions came they were seized by the Muslim horsemen. Umar went up to him, (Abū Sufyān) intending to stab him in the neck, but al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib gave him protection; he was a friend of Abū Sufyān.

Ibn Ishāq quoted al-ʿAbbās as saying that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached Marr al-Zahrān, he, al-ʿAbbās, said, "Woe upon Quraysh! If the Messenger of God (SAAS) enters Mecca by force before they come out and seek peace, it will mean their destruction forever!

"So I mounted the white mule belonging to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and rode out on it to al-ʿArāk, hoping to encounter some logger, milkman or someone else who could go to Mecca to tell them where the Messenger of God (SAAS) was, so that they could come out and seek peace with him before he conquered it and them by force.

"I was engaged in this when, to my surprise, I heard the voices of Abū Sufyān and Budayl b. Warqā engaged in discussion. Abū Sufyān was saying, 'I swear, I've never seen so many fires or such a camp as tonight!' Budayl replied, 'I swear, this must be Khuzā‘a fired up by war!' Abū Sufyān answered, ‘But Khuzā‘a are too weak and few in number for these to be their fires and encampment.’

‘Having recognized his voice, I called out, ‘Is that you, Abū Ḥanṣāla?’ He knew my voice and replied, ‘Is that Abū al-Fadl?’ ‘Yes,’ I replied. ‘Well what are you up to, may my father and mother be your ransom!’ he exclaimed.

‘I told him, ‘Woe on you, Abū Sufyān! That is the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his forces!’ ‘Then woe on Quraysh, by God,’ he burst out. ‘What should we do?’ I replied, ‘If he conquers you, he’ll cut off your head! Ride (with me) on the back of this mule, so that I can take you to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and I’ll ask him to guarantee your safety.’

‘He rode behind me and his two companions returned home.”

Urwa said this was not so, and that the other two men had gone to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and accepted Islam and he had asked them for news about the people in Mecca.

Al-Zuhri and Mūsā b. ‘Uqba said that they went with al-‘Abbās to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

Al-‘Abbās went on, “So I set off with him. And whenever we passed by one of the fires of the Muslims, they asked, ‘Who is that?’ When they noticed the mule of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) they said, ‘Oh, it’s the uncle of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), riding his mule.’ Eventually I passed by the fire of ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb and he asked who I was and came over to me. When he saw Abū Sufyān on the rear of the mule, he exclaimed, ‘It’s Abū Sufyān, the enemy of God! Thanks be to God who has handed you over without any pact or agreement!’”

Urwa b. al-Zubayr claims that ‘Umar stabbed Abū Sufyān in the neck, intending to kill him, but al-‘Abbās prevented him.

Similarly, Mūsā b. ‘Uqba narrated from al-Zuhri that the scouts of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took hold of the bridles of their camels and asked who they were. They replied that they were a delegation for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Al-‘Abbās met them and took them in to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who talked with them in the course of the night and then invited them to witness that there is no god but God. They did so and he then asked them to bear witness that “Muḥammad is the Messenger of God”. Ḥakīm and Budayl testified to this, but Abū Sufyān said, “I do not know this.” After morning came, he did accept Islam. They then asked him (the Prophet (ṢAAS)) to grant Quraysh safety. He replied, “Those who enter the house of Abū Sufyān shall be safe,” his house being in the heights of Mecca. He went on, “Whoever enters the house of Ḥakīm b. Hizām shall be safe,” his house being in the lower part of Mecca. And he added, “Whoever locks his own door shall be safe.”

Al-‘Abbās’s account states, “Then ‘Umar hurried off towards the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while I rode the mule and arrived before him, but only by the amount that a slow-moving mule can outpace a slow-moving man. I jumped off the mule and went in to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). ‘Umar did the same and said, 'Messenger of God, this is Abū Sufyān whom God has delivered without any pact or agreement! Let me cut off his head!' I said, 'Messenger of God, I have given him my protection.' I then sat down with the Messenger of God (SAAS), holding his (Abū Sufyān's) head and said, 'I swear, no man apart from myself is willing to protect him tonight!'

"When Umar kept on complaining about him, I told him, 'Take it easy, Umar! I swear, if he were from Banū 'Adī b. Ka'b you'd not be saying this! But you well know that he is from Banū 'Abd Manāf. 'Take it easy yourself,' 'Abbās, he replied. 'Your accepting Islam the day you did was more welcome to me than if al-Khaṭṭāb (his father) 'had been the one to do so! And this was only because I knew that your accepting Islam was more welcome to the Messenger of God (SAAS) than that of al-Khaṭṭāb would have been.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Take him away to your tent, 'Abbās, and bring him to me when morning comes.'"

Al-'Abbās continued, "So I went off with him to my tent where he spent the night with me. Next morning I hurried him over to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said, when he saw him, 'Woe on you, Abī Sufyān! Is it not time for you to know that there is no god but God?' He replied, 'How wise, noble and kind you are! Had there been any other besides God he would have already given me some aid!'

"'Well, Abī Sufyān,' continued the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'is it not time for you to know that I am the Messenger of God?' 'How wise, noble and kind you are', Abī Sufyān replied, 'but I'm still having some trouble with that.'"

Al-'Abbās then told him, "Woe on you, accept Islam! Bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muhammad is the Messenger of God, before your head is cut off!"

He then gave true testimony, accepting Islam.

Al-'Abbās went on, "So I said, 'Messenger of God, Abū Sufyān is a man to whom prestige is important; do something for him."

"He then stated, 'Yes; whoever enters Abū Sufyān's house shall be safe.'"

Urwa added that he went on to say, "Whoever enters the house of Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām shall be safe." And Mūsā b. 'Uqba stated similarly, from al-Zuhri, that he said, "And whoever locks his own door shall be safe, as will be anyone who goes into the mosque."

As he was about to depart, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to al-'Abbās, "Keep him at where the valley narrows, and the mountain projects, until God's forces pass him by, so that he sees them."

Mūsā b. 'Uqba narrated, from al-Zuhri, that Abū Sufyān, Budayl and Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām stood along with al-'Abbās at the mountain projectory, and that when Sa'd b. Ubāda spoke the verse,

"Today is that of the great battle; today sanctuary is disallowed" to Abū Sufyān, he complained to the Messenger of God (SAAS). The latter then took back the banner of the ḥadīthūn from Saʿd and gave it to al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām. He took it to the upper part of Mecca and planted it in al-Ḥājūn. Khālid entered from the lower part of Mecca, where Bani Bakr and Hudhayl confronted him. He killed 20 men of Bani Bakr and 3 or 4 of Hudhayl. They were defeated and killed at al-Ḥazwara,105 the fighting there reaching the door of the mosque.

Al-ʿAbbās went on, "I proceeded out with Abū Sufyān, keeping him in the narrow part of the valley to which the Messenger of God (SAAS) had asked me to restrict him.

"The tribes went past flying their banners. As one went by, Abū Sufyān asked, 'Who are those, 'Abbās?' I replied, 'Sulaym,' and he commented, 'Well, Sulaym don't concern me.' When another passed, he asked who they were and I told him they were Muzayna. He commented, 'Muzayna don't concern me.' This went on until all the tribes had gone by; he asked me about each one, and he always replied that they were of no concern to him. Eventually the Messenger of God (SAAS) went past with his 'green squadron' that consisted of muhājirūn and ʿaṣār; their armour allowed only their eyes to be seen. He then exclaimed, 'Glory be to God, 'Abbas! Who are those?' I replied, 'That is the Messenger of God (SAAS) with his muhājirūn and his ʿaṣār.' He commented, 'No one could ever withstand those men! By God, Abī al-Fadl, your brother's domain this morning is immense!'"

"I replied, 'Abū Sufyān, it is that of the prophethood.'

"I agree," he said. I told him, 'You should hurry to your people.'"

(Al-ʿAbbās continued) "When he reached them he shouted at the top of his voice, 'Quraysh, this is Muḥammad who brings a force against you that you cannot withstand. Whoever goes into the house of Abī Sufyān will be secure.'

"Hind, daughter of 'Utba, stood up to him and gripped him by the mustache and said, 'Kill this overweight bag of fat! He is too disgraceful to lead our people!' Abī Sufyān replied, 'Woe upon you, do not allow this woman to deceive you. You cannot withstand the force against you. Whoever enters the house of Abī Sufyān will be secure.'

"People shouted, 'God kill you! What good will your house do us?'

"He replied, 'Those who lock their doors will be secure. Those who enter the mosque will be secure.'

"The people then dispersed to their homes or into the mosque.'

Urwa b. al-Zubayr related that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by, Abī Sufyān asked him, "I see many faces I do not recognize. Are all these faces against me?" The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "It is you and your people who have done this; these people believed me when you called me a liar. They assisted me when you exiled me."

105. The market-place of Mecca.
Abū Sufyān then complained to him how Sa‘d b. Ubāda had spoken the following line as he passed him,

“Today is that of the great battle; today sanctuary is disallowed.”

At this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, “Sa‘d lied; this is a day when God is glorifying the ka‘ba, a day by which the ka‘ba will be adorned.”

Urwa related that in the early morning after that night he spent with al-ʿAbbās, Abū Sufyān saw the people gathering for prayer, spreading forth to perform their ablutions and he felt afraid. He asked al-ʿAbbās, “What are they doing?” He replied, “They have heard the call to prayer and are spreading out to perform the prayer.” When the prayer began and he saw them prostrating and bowing along with him (the Prophet (ṢAAS)), Abū Sufyān asked, “Would they do anything he asked of them?” “Yes, they would,” he replied. “If he ordered them to give up food and drink, they would obey him.”

Mūsā b. Ṭq wa related, from al-Zuhri, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed his ablutions, the men scrambled for the leftover water with which he had washed and Abī Sufyān commented, “ʿAbbās, I’ve never seen anything like tonight, not even in the kingdoms of Chosroe or Caesar!”

The ḥāfid al-Bayhaqī related from al-Ḥākim and others, from al-ʿAṣāmm, from Almah b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishāq, who said that al-Ḥusayn b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭubayd Allāh b. ʿAbbās related to him, from Ibn ʿAbbās (a certain hadīth). The last-mentioned then proceeded to narrate this story in its entirety, just as Ziyād al-Bakkāṭ related it, from Ibn Ishāq, munqattān, with an incomplete line of transmission. But God knows best.

However, al-Bayhaqī narrated through Abī Bilāl al-Ashʿarī, from Ziyād al-Bakkāṭ, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, from al-Zuhri, from Ṭubayd Allāh, who quoted Ibn ʿAbbās as saying that al-ʿAbbās brought Abū Sufyān to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and so on. However, in this account he is quoted as saying that Abū Sufyān accepted Islam that night, before he came next morning to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). This account also says that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “Whoever enters Abū Sufyān’s house will be secure,” Abū Sufyān asked, “But what if my house is not large enough?” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, “And whoever enters the ka‘ba will be secure.” “And what if the ka‘ba is not large enough?” Abū Sufyān enquired. He replied, “And whoever enters the mosque shall be secure.” “What if the mosque is not large enough?” He replied, “Whoever locks his door will be secure.” Abū Sufyān then said, “There will be sufficient space.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Ṭubayd b. Ismāʿīl related to him, quoting Abū Usāma, from Hishām, from his father, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) set forth in the year of the conquest of Mecca and this news reached Quraysh, Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, Ḥākīm b. Ḥizām and Budayl b. Warqā came out to look for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They travelled as far as Marr al-Ẓahrān.
where they saw so many camp fires that they seemed like those on Mt. 'Arafât (in the pilgrimage season). Abû Sufyân commented on this and asked whose fires they could be and Budayl b. Warqa' responded that they must be the fires of Bani 'Amr. Abû Sufyân objected that they were fewer in number. The two men were seen by the guards of the Messenger of God (SAAS), who seized them and took them to him. Abû Sufyân then accepted Islam.

"As Abû Sufyân was returning home, he (the Prophet (SAAS)) said to al-ʼAbbâs, 'Keep Abû Sufyân where the mountain projects so that he sees the Muslims.' Al-ʼAbbâs did restrain him there while the tribes went past, squadron by squadron, with the Messenger of God (SAAS). As one squadron went by, Abû Sufyân asked al-ʼAbbâs who they were. He replied, 'These are Ghifâr.' 'Well, what are Ghifâr to me?' Abû Sufyân commented. Then Juhayna passed by and he said the same. Sa'd b. Hudhaym and Sulaym then passed and he made the same comment. Then another squadron passed that was unlike the others and he asked their identity. Al-ʼAbbâs replied, 'They are the ansâr under the command of Sa'd b. ʻUbâda with the banner.' Sa'd called out, 'Hey, Abû Sufyân, today's the day of the great battle; today the ka'ba will be no sanctuary!' Abû Sufyân commented, 'Abbas, would that this were a day of honour!'

"Then there passed a squadron smaller than the rest; the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions were with them, his banner being borne by al-Zubayr b. al-ʻAwwâm. As the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by Abû Sufyân, the latter called out, 'Do you know what Sa'd b. ʻUbâda said?' 'What did he say?' asked the Messenger of God (SAAS). Abû Sufyân repeated it and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Sa'd lied; this is a day when God will assert the glory of the ka'ba, a day when the ka'ba will be adorned.' He then ordered that his banner be planted at al-Hajûn.'

ʻUrwa related that he was told by Nâfî b. Jubayr b. Muṭṣîm that he heard al-ʼAbbâs ask al-Zubayr b. al-ʼAwwâm, "Was it here that the Messenger of God of (SAAS) ordered the banner to be placed?" "Yes," he replied.

He (Nâfî) went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered Khalîd b. al-Walîd to enter the upper part of Mecca, at Kadhâ, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) went in from Kadhâ. That day two of the cavalry under Khalîd b. al-Walîd, Ḥubays b. al-ʻAshâr and Kurz b. Jâbir al-ʻFihî were killed."

Abû Daʿûd said that ʻUthmân b. Abû Shayba related to him, quoting Yahyâ b. ʻAdam, quoting Idrîs, from Muḥammad b. Ishâq, from al-Zuhîrî, from Ubayd Allâh b. ʻAbd Allâh b. Ṭuba, from Ibn ʻAbbâs who said that his father al-ʻAbbâs b. ʻAbd al-Muṭṣalîb brought Abû Sufyân b. Harb to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Marr al-Zahrân and he accepted Islam. Al-ʻAbbâs told him, "Messenger of God, Abû Sufyân is a man who likes to enjoy prestige; perhaps you could do something for him." "Yes," he replied. "Whoever goes into Abû Sufyân's house will be secure. And whoever locks his door will be secure."
An Account of the entry of the Messenger of God (SAAS) into Mecca.

It is established in both sahih collections from a hadith of Malik, from al-Zuhri, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca wearing a helmet. When he took it off a man came who said, “Ibn Khatal is clinging to the hangings of the ka’ba.” “Kill him,” he ordered.

Malik stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was not, we believe, in a state of ihram though God knows best.”

Ahmad stated that ‘Affan related to him, quoting Hammad, quoting Abü al-Zubayr, from Jabir, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca following its conquest he was wearing a black turban.

The ashâb al-sunan relate this from a hadith of Hammad b. Salama. Al-Tirmidhi said that it was hasan sahih, “good and authentic”.

Muslim related it from Qutayba, as did Yahya b. Yahya from Musawiya b. Ammar al-Duhni, from Abü al-Zubayr, from Jabir, who stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca wearing a black turban and that he was not in a state of ihram.

Muslim narrated from a hadith of Abu Usama, from Musawiir al-Warrâq, from Ja’far b. ‘Amr b. Hurayth, from his father, who said, “It’s as if I can still see the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the day Mecca was conquered; he was wearing an ash-black turban, its end hanging down between his shoulders.”

Muslim narrated in his sahih collection, as did al-Tirmidhi and al-Nasa’i from a hadith of Ammar al-Duhni, from Abü al-Zubayr, from Jabir, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was wearing a black turban when he entered Mecca.

The ashâb al-sunan narrated from a hadith of Yahya b. Adam, from Shurayk al-Qadi, from Ammar al-Duhni, from Abü al-Zubayr, from Jabir, who said, “The banner of the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he entered Mecca was white.”

Ibn Ishaaq stated, from ‘Abd Allah b. Abu Bakr, from ‘A’isha, who said, “The banner of the Messenger of God (SAAS) the day Mecca was conquered was white; his black flag was known as al-qubah, ‘the eagle’. It was made of a piece of variegated wool.”

Al-Bukhari stated that Abu al-Walid related to him, quoting Shu’ba, from ‘Abd Allah b. Qurra, who said, “I heard ‘Abd Allah b. Mughaffal say, ‘On the day Mecca was conquered, I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) mounted on his camel reciting the sirat al-Fath (XLVIII) in a vibrant, quivering tone. And if it had not been for the people crowding around me, I would have recited in the same tone as he did.’”

106. The physical and psychological state required of a pilgrim before he performs the umra or the hajj pilgrimages. During this state certain actions are prohibited that are permissible at other times.

107. The scholars, apart from al-Bukhari and Muslim, who assembled the sahih collections of ahâdith.
Muhammad b. Ishâq stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd Allâh b. Abû Bakr who said that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) reached Dhû Ṭuwalâ, he halted on his mount; he was wearing a turban made of striped red cloth from Yemen. He bowed his head so low in submission to God, having seen how He had honoured him with the conquest, that his beard almost touched the middle of his saddle.

The ʿhâfīz al-Bayhaqî stated that Abû ʿAbd Allâh al-Ḥâfîz told him that Daʿîlî b. Ahmad related to him, quoting Ahmad b. ʿAlî al-Abbâr, quoting ʿAbd Allâh b. Abû Bakr al-Maqdîsî, quoting Jaʿfar b. Sulaymân, from Thâbit, from Anas, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca the day of the conquest of Mecca with his chin resting in submission (to God) on his saddle.”

(Al-Bayhaqî) went on to say that Abû ʿAbd Allâh al-Ḥâfîz informed him, quoting Abû Bakr b. Bâlawayh, quoting Ahmad b. Ṣâʿîd, quoting Ismâʿîl b. al-Ḥârîth, quoting Jaʿfar b. ʿAwn, quoting Ismâʿîl b. Abû Khalid, from Qays, from Ibn Masʿûd, who said that a man spoke to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the day of the conquest and he began to tremble. Then he said, “Tread softly! I’m the son of a woman of Quraysh who ate cheap desiccated meat!”

(Al-Bayhaqî continued) “Muhammad b. Sulaymân b. Fâris and Ahmad b. Yahyâ b. Zuhayr related this similarly, from Ismâʿîl b. Abû al-Ḥârîth as being mawṣûlan, with full lines of transmission.”

He then related it from Abû Zakariyyâ al-Muzakkt, from Abû ʿAbd Allâh Muhammad b. Yaʿqûb, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Wâhhabit, from Jaʿfar b. ʿAwn, from Ismâʿîl b. Qays, but with an incomplete line of transmission, which is how it is accepted.

This modesty in this place on the part of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as he entered with such a huge army contrasts completely with those fools of Banû Isrâʾîl, the “ancient Israelites”, who were ordered to enter the temple (at Jerusalem) bowing down—that is prostrating—while saying “Wipe out (our past sins)”. However, instead they entered creeping forwards on their behinds saying, “Wheat in barley!”

Al-Bukhârî stated that he was informed by al-Qâṣîm b. Khârîja, quoting Ḥâṣ b. Maysara, from Hishâm b. Urwa, from his father, who said that ʿAṭîsha told him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca in the year of the conquest from Kâdâ, which is in the upper part of the town. Abû Usâma and Waḥb agreed that it was from Kâdâ.

ʿUbâyd b. Ismâʿîl related to us, quoting Abû Usâma, from Hishâm, from his father, that at the conquest, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered from the upper part of Mecca, from Kâdâ.

This tradition should only be considered more authentic if one views an account with an incomplete chain of authorities more authentic than one fully complete, as given in the text above! Alternately, this Kâdâ may be spelled either Kâtâ or Kâdâ.

108. A reference to the Qurʾân, sūrat al-Arâf; VII, v.161. The passage narrates how the Israelites were told to use the word ḥîṣâ, “put down, remove”, when beseeching God for the forgiveness of sins. However, they mistakenly used the word ḥîma, “wheat”.
with a madda, an alif of elongation or an alif maqṣūra, a final yā and without ḥamza. Kūdā, spelled with a u, is in the lower part of Mecca. This is widely accepted and preferable.

It is stated above that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent Khālid b. al-Walid in from the upper part of Mecca, while he himself entered from below, at Kūdā; that is given in the saḥīh collection of al-Bukhārī. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “Abū al-Ḥusayn b. ‘Abdān informed us, quoting Aḥmad b. Ḫubayy al-Ṣaffār, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥabīb b. al-Mundhir al-Khuzāmī, quoting Ma’n, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. ʿUmar b. Ḥafṣ, from Nāfi’, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, ‘When, in the year of the conquest, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca, he saw the women striking at the heads of the horses with their veils. He smiled at Abī Bakr and said, “And what was it, Abū Bakr, that Ḥassān said?” Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him, then recited the lines,”

“May I be deprived of my ‘young daughters’ (i.e. horses) if you do not see them making the dust rise at both sides of Kādū?
As they race ahead, pulling at their reins, fully saddled, as the women strike at them with their veils.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, “Add those verses to those spoken by Ḥassān!””

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that Yahyā b. ‘Abbād b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to him, from his father, from his grandmother Asmāʾ, daughter of Aba Bakr, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) halted at Dhu Ṭawā, Abū Quḥāfa said to a daughter, one of his youngest children, ‘Daughter, lead me up on Mt. Abū Qubayṣ.’ Asmāʾ commented that his sight was very weak.”

She went on (quoting the daughter in question), “She said, ‘I took him up there and he asked me, “Well, what do you see?” “I can see a black mass.” “That must be horses,” he said. I then said, “Now I see a man hurrying to and fro in front of that mass, going back and forth.” “That”, he said, “must be the wāṣī” – meaning the man who goes out to and gives orders to the cavalry.

“I then said, “The black is now spreading out!” Abū Quḥāfa exclaimed, “The cavalry has been dispatched, then! Hurry me back home!” I led him down, but the cavalry met him before he reached home.”

Asmāʾ went on, “The girl was wearing a silver necklace and a man confronted her and cut it off her neck. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca and went into the mosque, Abū Bakr came in, guiding his father. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) saw him, he said, ‘Why did you not leave the sheikh at home for me to attend him there?’ Abū Bakr replied, ‘Messenger of God, it is more fitting for him to come to you rather than you to him.’”

109. They differ from those lines said to have been spoken by Ḥassān on this occasion. See hereafter, p.420 lines 8–10.
The account went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then had Abū Quḥafā sit down before him and rubbed his chest, saying, ‘Accept Islam!’ Abū Quḥafā did so. Abū Bakr then guided him back home. Abū Quḥafā’s hair was as white as a thaghāma plant. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Change his hair (colour).’

“Abū Bakr then arose and, taking his sister’s hand, he said, ‘I invoke God and Islam; (who has) my sister’s necklace?’ No one replied. He then said, ‘Forget your necklace; I swear by God, there’s little trust in people today!’”

Abū Bakr meant that specific day, because the army was so numerous that almost no one concerned himself with anyone else, and there were people scattered everywhere. Perhaps the person who took it considered it spoils of war. God knows best.

The hāfīz al-Bayhaqi stated, “Abd Allāh al-Hāfīz informed us, quoting Abū al-‘Abbās al-Aṣamm, quoting Bahr b. Naṣr, quoting Ibn Wahb (who said that) Ibn Jurayj informed him, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, that ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb took Abū Quḥafā by the hand and led him to the Prophet (SAAS). When he brought him before him, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Change him (his hair colouring). But don’t make him almost black.’”

Ibn Wahb stated that ‘Umar b. Muḥammad related to him, from Zayd b. Aslam, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) congratulated Abū Bakr on his father’s acceptance of Islam.

Ibn Ishāq stated that ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Najīḥ related to him that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth the various parts of his army from Dhū Ṭawā he ordered al-Zuhayr b. al-‘Awwām to enter with some of the men from Kadā; al-Zubayr was in command of the left flank. He ordered Sa’d b. Uṣāda to take some of the others in from Kudā.

He went on, “Some scholars claim that when Sa’d proceeded inside, he said, ‘Today is the day of the great battle; today the sanctuary will lose its sanctity.’

“A man heard this (according to Ibn Hishām that man was ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb) and he asked, ‘Messenger of God, do you hear what Sa’d b. Uṣāda says? We can’t be sure he won’t assault Quraysh. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told ‘Ali, ‘Go after him and take away the banner from him; you enter with it.’”

Sources other than Muḥammad b. Ishāq recount that when Abū Sufyān complained to him about what Sa’d b. Uṣāda had said when he passed him by. The words Sa’d had used were, “Abu Sufyān: today’s the day of the great battle. The hurma, the sanctuary” – by which he meant the kaḥā – “will lose its sanctity.”

The Prophet (SAAS) then said, “No; this is a day on which the kaḥā will be glorified.” He then ordered that the banner – that of the ansār – be taken away from Sa’d b. Uṣāda as a way to teach him a lesson. It is said that it was given over to his son, Qays. Mūsā b. ‘Uqba stated, from al-Zuhri, that he gave it to al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām. But God knows best.
The hafiz b. 'Asakir stated in his biography of Ya'qiub b. Ishaq b. Dinār that it was related to him by 'Abd Allāh b. al-Sirrī al-Anṭakī, quoting 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū al-Zinād and that it was also related to him by Mūsā b. Uqba, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh, who said, “On the day of the conquest of Mecca, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave the banner to Sa'd b. Ubāda who began waving it and saying, ‘Today the sanctuary will lose its sanctity!’ This angered Quraysh and they greatly resented it. The wife of the Messenger of God (SAAS) then stood in his way and recited,

'O Prophet of the right guidance, the tribe of Quraysh took refuge in you and it was too late. When all the space of earth was too narrow for them when the God of heaven became hostile towards them The two ends of the strap met together and we were brought to the famous disaster. Sa'd wants to deliver a mortal blow to the people of al-Ḥajāt and al-Bathā A Khazaṣrāṭ, he he would in his rage set vultures and dogs upon us! Stop him, for he is the black lion, and a lion thirsts for blood. If he were to involve the banner and were to call out, “O defenders of the flag! People of the flag!” Then Quraysh will be there in the valley bottom in the hands of the female slaves. He is living in the past, wanting (for Mecca) a decision to strike it out, like a deaf serpent.”

He went on, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard this poem feelings of mercy and compassion for them entered him and he asked for the banner, taking it from Sa'd b. Ubāda. It was then given to his son, Qays.

“It is related that the Prophet (SAAS) wished not to disappoint her in something in which she requested his help. Yet he did not want to anger Sa'd, and so he took the banner from him and gave it to his son.”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Ibn Abū Najih recounted to him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered Khalīd b. al-Walīd to enter with some men from al-Laytī, in the lower part of Mecca. Khalīd was in command of the right wing, which consisted of Aslam, Sulaym, Ghifār, Muzayna, Juhayna and other Arab tribes. Abū Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ charged in with a column of Muslims upon the people of Mecca, straight ahead of the Messenger of God (SAAS), who himself entered from Adhākhīr and halted at the upper part of the city where his tent was pitched.

Al-Bukhārī narrated, from a hadith of al-Zuhri, from 'Alī b. al-Ḫusayn, from 'Amr b. Uthmān, from Usāma b. Zayd who said that at the time of the conquest he had asked, “Messenger of God, where will you make camp tomorrow?” He replied, "Has 'Aqil left any house for us?" He then added, "No believer shall inherit from an unbeliever, nor shall any unbeliever inherit from a believer."

Al-Bukhari went on to state that Abū al-Yamān related to him, quoting Shu'ayb, quoting Abū al-Zubayr, from 'Abd al-Rahmān who quoted Abī Hurayra as stating that the Prophet (SAAS) said, "Tomorrow, if God wills it, and if God gives us victory, our camp will be at al-Khayf where they swore an oath of loyalty to disbelief."

Imām Ahmad stated that Yūnus related to him, quoting Ibrahim - meaning Ibn Sa'd - from al-Zuhri, from Abū Șalama, from Abū Hurayra, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Our camp tomorrow, if God wills it, will be at Khayf of Banū Kināna, where they swore an oath of loyalty to disbelief.’"

Al-Bukhari related it from a ḥadīth of șubāl Ibn Sā'd in similar words.

Ibn Șaṣā stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Abī Najīb and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to him, that Șafwān b. Șumayyā, İkrīma b. Abī Jahl and Suhayy l. ʿAmr had gathered some men at al-Khandama to do battle. Șimas b. Qays b. Khalid, brother of Banū Bakr, had been sharpening a sword prior to the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS). His wife asked him why and he replied that it was for use against Muhammad and his men. She commented, "I swear by God, I don't think it will be of any use against them, Muḥammad and his men!" He replied, "Well, I swear by God, I hope to give you one of them as a servant!" He then spoke the verses,

“If they advance today, I’ll have no excuse. This set of weapons is complete With sharp blades and easy to manipulate.”

He then took part in the fighting at al-Khandama, along with Șafwān, İkrīma and Suhayy l. There they were engaged by the Muslims accompanying Khalid. Șirz b. Jābir, Banū Muḥārib b. Fīhr and Șubaysh b. Khalīd b. Rabī’a b. Șaram, ally of Banū Munqidh, both of Khalid’s troops, were killed. They had become separated from Khalid and taken a different route; they were killed together, Șirz prior to Șubaysh.

Both sources quoted by Ibn Șaṣā went on to say that Șalama b. al-Maylā’ al-Juhanni, also of Khalid’s cavalry, was killed there, while some 12 or 13 of the polytheists were killed. When they had lost the battle, Șimās left in defeat and went home. He told his wife, “Lock the door on me.” She asked, “And what about all that you said?” He replied with the following verses:

“If you had witnessed the battle at al-Khandama when Șafwān and İkrīma fled,
With Abū Yazīd erect like a widowed mother receiving condolences,
And the Muslims greeted them with their swords, Cutting and striking arms and skulls with nothing but their battle cries being heard, While we emitted sobs and groans, then you would not speak the slightest word of blame.”
Ibn Hishām stated that these verses are alternatively attributed to al-Raḍāsh al-Hudhali.

Ibn Hishām also said that the battle cry of the muhājarīn at the conquest, at Ḥunayn and at al-Ṭā'if was “O tribe of ‘Abd al-Raḥmān!” That of al-Khazraj was “O Banū ‘Abd Allāh” and that of al-Aws, “O Banū ‘Ubayd Allāh”.

Al-Ṭabarānī stated that it was related to him by ‘Alī b. Sa‘d al-Rāzī, quoting Abū Ḥassān al-Ziyādi, quoting Shu‘ayb b. Ṣafwān, from ʿAmr b. al-Sa‘ib, from Ṭawūs, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “God made this land sacrosanct the day He created the heavens and the earth. He forged it the day He forged the sun and the moon. That which stems from heaven is haram, sacrosanct. It was not made halaṣ, desanctified, for anyone before me (to do battle). It was only made halaṣ for me for a brief period of the day, and it then reverted to its former state.”

(The account continues) “Someone told the Messenger of God (SAAS) that Khālid b. al-Walīd was killing people. He then told a man to go to Khālid and order him to stop the killing.

“(But) When the man reached him, he told him, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) says, ‘Kill those you are able to!’’ He killed 70 people. This fact was reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who sent Khālid a message that asked, ‘Did I not forbid you killing?’ Khālid replied, ‘So-and-so came to me and ordered me to kill those I was able to.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) again sent him a message asking, ‘Did I not give you an order?’ Khālid responded, ‘You wanted one thing, but God wanted another! God’s order superseded yours; I could not do anything other than what I did.’ At this the Prophet (SAAS) remained silent and gave him no response.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) had instructed his commanders to refrain from doing battle against any except those who fought them. He did, however, order that a group whom he named should be put to death, even if they were found hiding beneath the hangings of the Ka‘ba. Among these persons was ‘Abd Allāh b. Sa‘d b. Abī Sarh, who had accepted Islam, written down the Revelations and then apostatized. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca, having sentenced him to death, this ‘Abd Allāh fled to Uthmān who was his foster-brother. When the latter brought him to ask that he be spared, the Messenger of God (SAAS) made no reply for a long time, but then said, ‘Yes.’

“When ‘Abd Allāh departed with Uthmān, the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented to those around him, ‘Is there no wise man among you who could have got up and killed him when you saw I was remaining silent?’ They replied, ‘But Messenger of God, could you not have given us some signal?’ He replied, ‘Prophets do not kill by making signals.’”

In a different account, the wording is, “It is not proper for a prophet to betray by eye signals.”
Ibn Hishām stated that thereafter he was a good Muslim and that ʿUmar appointed him as a governor, and that ʿUthmān did the same thereafter.

I note that he died while prostrated in performing the morning prayer, or after having finished it in his house.

Ibn Ishaq stated (that the Prophet (SAAS)) also condemned to death ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥaṭṭaš, a man of Banū Taym b. Ǧāḥilīb.

I note that it is also said that this man was named ʿAbd al-ʿUzzā, “worshipper of al-ʿUzzā”, b. Ḥaṭṭaš. It is likely that that had been his former name and that after he accepted Islam he was called ʿAbd Allāh, “worshipper of God”.

(Ibn Ishaq continued) “After this man had accepted Islam, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent him out to collect charity contributions, in the company of one of the ʿanār. With him also he took a freed-man he had. Later he became angry with the freed-man, killed him and apostatized and became a polytheist again. He had two female singers, Fartāna and a friend, who would sing songs mocking the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims. This was why the Messenger of God (SAAS) condemned him and the two singers to death. He was killed while he clutched the hangings of the ʿabā. ʿAbū Barza al-ʿAṣlāmī and ʿAṣād b. Ḥurayth al-Makkāzīmī participated in executing him. One of his women singers was killed, while the other was granted clemency.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Also (he condemned) al-Ḥuwayrīth b. Nuqaydīh b. Wāḥb b. ʿAbd Quṣāy. He had been one of those who had insulted the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Mecca. When al-ʿAbbās had mounted up Fāṭima and ʿUmm Kulthūm to conduct them to Medina to join the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the start of the Hijrā, this al-Ḥuwayrīth had goaded a camel on which they were mounted, and they had fallen to the ground. When he had been condemned to death, ʿĀlī b. ʿAbū Ṭalīb executed him.

“Also condemned was Miqyās b. Ṣubāba because he had murdered the man who had by accident killed his brother, and he did this after he had accepted the blood-wit. He later apostatized and became a polytheist. It was a man of his own tribe, named Numaylā b. ʿAbd Allāh, who executed him.

“Then there was Sārā (who was also executed), a freed-woman of Banū ʿAbd al-Muṭṭālib and of ʿIkrima b. ʿAbū Jahl, because she used to insult the Messenger of God (SAAS) while he was in Mecca.”

I observe that it is narrated above that it was she who had carried the message from Ḥāṭib b. ʿAbū Balṭaʿa and seems to have been forgiven or to have escaped. Thereafter he condemned her to death. But God knows best.

She fled until she was granted immunity by the Messenger of God (SAAS). She lived on into the era of ʿUmar, and died when trodden underfoot by a man on a horse. Al-Suhaylī related that Fartāna also accepted Islam.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “ʿIkrima b. ʿAbū Jahl fled to Yemen. His wife, ʿUmm Ḥakīm, daughter of al-Ḥaṭīth b. Ḥishām, accepted Islam and sought immunity for him from the Messenger of God (SAAS), who granted that. She set off and located 'Ikrima, brought him back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he accepted Islam.

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Khadr was taken while he was clinging to the hangings of the kaʿba. Saʿd b. Ḥuwayrith and ‘Ammār b. Yaṣir raced to reach him and Saʿd, the younger of the two men, beat ‘Ammār to him and killed him. Men overtook Miqyas in the market and killed him. ‘Ikrima went to sea. A storm blew up and other people on the boat told one another, “Worship God sincerely, for your gods will do you no good here!” And so ‘Ikrima said, “Well, I swear by God, if the only thing that succeeds at sea is sincere faith, the fact is that nothing but that succeeds on land too! O God, I make a pact with you that if you save me from my present plight, I will go to Muhammad, place my hand in his and receive generous forgiveness.” So he did go to him and accepted Islam.

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Saʿd b. Abū Sarḥ went into hiding in the home of ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) called on people to come forth and pledge allegiance, ʿUthmān brought ʿAbd Allāh before him and said, “Messenger of God, accept the allegiance of ʿAbd Allāh!” He raised his gaze towards him three times, all this expressing his refusal. Then, after the third time he did accept his allegiance. The Messenger of God (SAAS) later went to his Companions and asked, “Was there not one wise man among you who could have gone up to this fellow and killed him when you saw me refraining from accepting his allegiance?” They replied, “How could we know what you wanted? Could you not have given us some eye signal?” He replied, “It is not fitting for a prophet to use secret eye signals!””

Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasāʾī related this from a ḥadīth of Aḥmad b. al-Mufaḍḍal in similar terms.

“Abd al-‘Uzza b. Khaṭṭal was killed while he clung to the hangings of the ka’ba. Someone warned ‘Abd Allāh b. Sa’d b. Abū Sarḥ that he would be killed on sight. He was the foster-brother of Uthmān b. ‘Affān, who brought him to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to intercede on his behalf. When an ansārī saw him, he girded his sword and went towards him, but found him in the circle around the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He hesitated, reluctant to advance at him. Then the Prophet (ṢAAS) spread forth his hand and accepted ‘Abd Allāh’s allegiance. Later he asked the ansārī, ‘I was waiting for you to fulfil your pledge!’ He replied, ‘Messenger of God, I wanted to do it for you; could you not have given me some sign?’ He replied, ‘It is not fitting for a prophet to wink.’”

Al-Bayhaqī went on to relate the story of Miqyas b. Ṣubāba—how he had killed a Muslim after he himself had accepted Islam and then had later apostatized.

He went on, “Umm Šāra was a freed-woman of Quraysh who had gone to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and complained to him of her poverty. He had then given to her. But thereafter a man sent her off with a message for the Meccans.”

He went on to tell the story of Ḥāshib b. Abū Balṭa’a.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq narrated from ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ‘Amr b. Ḥazm, that Hishām, the brother of Miqyas b. Ṣubāba, was killed at the expedition against Bāntū al-Muṣṭaliq by a Muslim who thought him to be a polytheist. Miqyas then came and made a pretence of accepting Islam to seek the blood-money for his brother. When he received it he attacked and murdered the man who had killed his brother and returned to Mecca as a polytheist. After the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) condemned him to death, he was killed between al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa.

Ibn Ishāq and al-Bayhaqī quoted as follows the verses he composed when he murdered the man who killed his brother:

“It assuaged me that he was felled in the valley, his clothing stained by the blood of his jugular.

My mind was troubled before I killed him; my worries kept me from enjoying my bed.

Through him I avenged Fihr and charged his blood-wit to the chiefs of Bāntū al-Najjār, the lords of Fārī castle.

By killing him I eased my tension and got my revenge; and I was first to return to the idols.”

It is said that the two female singers whom he condemned to death were employed by this Miqyas b. Ṣubāba; moreover, it was his cousin who executed him between al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa.

Some say that it was al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām, may God be pleased with him, who executed Ibn Khaṭṭal.
Ibn Isḥāq stated, Saʿīd b. Abū Hind related to me, from Abū Murra, the freed-man of 'Uqayl b. Abū Ṭalib, that Umm Hānī, the daughter of Abū Ṭalib, said, “When the Messenger of God (SAA) made a halt in the heights of Mecca, two of my brothers-in-law of Bānū Makhzūm fled to me.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The two men were al-Ḥārith b. Hishām and Zuhayr b. Abū Umayya b. al-Mughira.”

Ibn Isḥāq went on to quote her as saying that while she was in the home of Ḥubayra b. Abū Wālib al-Makhzūmī, “My brother ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib came in and said, ‘I swear by God, I’ll kill them both!’ So I locked the door of my house on both men and went to the Messenger of God (SAA) who was in the heights of Mecca. I found him engaged in washing himself from a basin that had in it some traces of dough; his daughter Fāṭima was shielding him with his clothing. When he had finished washing, he wrapped his garment around himself and performed eight rakʿāt of the al-duḥā Prayer. He then came over to me and said, ‘Welcome indeed to you, Umm Ḥānī! And what brings you now?’ I told him about the two men and ‘Ali and he responded, ‘We give protection to those you protect and immunity to those to whom you extend it. We will not execute them.’”

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Abd al-Walīd related to him, quoting Shu’bā, from ‘Amr b. Murra, from the son of Abū Laylā, who said, “No one informed us of having seen the Prophet (SAA) perform the al-duḥā prayer except Umm Hānī.” She related that on the day of the conquest of Mecca, he washed himself in her house and then performed eight prayer prostrations. She said, “And I never saw him offer a lighter prayer than that, though he did perform the rukū’, the bowings, and the sujūd, the prostrations, completely.”

In the sāhih collection of Muslim there is a hadith of al-Layth, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Saʿd b. Abū Hind, which states that Abū Murra, the freed-man of ‘Aqīl, reported that Umm Hānī, daughter of Abū Ṭalib, related to him that at the conquest of Mecca two men of Bānū Makhzūm fled to her and that she gave them refuge. She said, “‘Ali came in to me and told me, ‘I’m going to kill them both!’ Having heard this, I went to the Messenger of God (SAA), who was in the heights of Mecca. When he saw me he welcomed me and asked why I had come. I replied, ‘Messenger of God, I’ve been giving refuge to two of my brothers-in-law, but ‘Ali wants to kill them.’ The Messenger of God (SAA) responded, ‘We give protection to whomever you have protected, Umm Hānī.’ He then set about washing himself, while Fāṭima screened him and when he had finished he wrapped himself in his garment and prayed eight superogatory rakʿāt of the duḥā Prayer.”

In one account she is reported to have come in while he was washing and Fāṭima was screening him with his clothing. The account goes on, “He asked, ‘Who is the woman?’ ‘It is Umm Hānī,’ she replied. ‘Welcome indeed to Umm Hānī!’ he said. She told him, ‘Messenger of God, my brother ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib is going to kill two men to whom I have given protection.’ He responded, ‘We 110. A superogatory prayer performed shortly after sunrise.
grant protection to whomever you protect, Umm Hānī.‘ He then performed eight prostrations.”

That was in the ḏuḥā, the early morning, and so many scholars have thought that this was the (actual) al- ḏuḥā prayer. Others refer to this as the ṣalāt al- ṣafā, the “prayer at the conquest”. And the assertion is made that he would affirm the taslim,\(^\text{111}\) after each two rākāt.

This argues against the view of al-Suhaylī and others who maintain that the ṣalāt al-fāṭih should consist of eight (prostrations) and one taslim. Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqās performed eight prostrations, with one taslim after each two, on the day of the conquest of al-Madīnah, in the palace of Chosroe. And all praise be to God.

Ibn Isḥāq stated that Muhammad b. Ja‘far b. al-Zubayr related to him, from Ūbayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Thawr, from Ṣafīyya, daughter of Shayba, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived at Mecca and had reassured the people, he went to the kā’bah and circumambulated it seven times on his mount, saluting the rūkūn, the corner with the Black Stone, with a staff he carried in his hand.

When he had finished his circumambulations, he called for ʿUthmān b. ʿAlī and took from him the key to the kā’bah. When it was opened for him, he went inside, where he found a dove made of wood. He broke it in his hand and threw it away. He then stood at the door to the kā’bah, the people having assembled for him in the mosque.

Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated, “He then performed two rākāt and went to zamzam and looked down into it. He called for water, drank it and performed the ablutions, people hastening to collect the leftovers of the water he had used. The polytheists watched him with great interest, saying, ‘We never saw or heard of any king being treated this way!’ He pushed back the al-maqām\(^\text{112}\) to where it is located today, whereas it was previously close to the kā’bah.”

Muḥammad b. Isḥāq went on, “A scholar related to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stood at the door of the kā’bah and said, ‘There is no god but God alone! He has no associate. He has kept His promise, has helped His servant and has defeated the opposing parties alone. Every advantage of ancestry or money that might be claimed is herewith placed beneath these feet of mine, except for the guardianship of the kā’bah and the provision of water to the pilgrims. Compensation for those who are killed by mistake or incomplete intent by whip or cudgel shall be compensated following a binding oath of 100 camels, 40 of which shall be pregnant. O Quraysh, God has removed from you the false pride of the jāhiliyya period and the veneration of ancestry. All men stem from Adam, and Adam stemmed from dust.’ He then recited the following verse

111. This is the final act in the ritual ṣalāḥ; thereafter the worshipper may resume his normal activities.

112. The maqām ʾIrāhīm, “Abraham’s station”, a pillar upon which Abraham is said to have stood during the construction of the kā’bah. It remains to this day a special site of prayer.
(from the Qurʾān), 'O people, We created you from male and from female' (ṣūrat al-Hijrāt; XLIX, v.13). He then said, 'O Quraysh, what do you think I am going to do with you?' They replied, 'Good! (You are) a noble brother, and the son of a noble brother.' He then said, 'You may go; you are free.'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sat down in the mosque and ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalīb went up to him, holding the key of the kaʿba in his hand. He said, 'O Messenger of God, join together for us the right of guardianship of the kaʿba with that of provision of the water for the pilgrims, may God bless you!' He responded, 'Where is ʿUthmān b. Ṭalḥa?' He was summoned for him and then he told ʿUthmān, 'Here is your key, ʿUthmān; this is a day of piety and good faith.'"

Imām Ahmad stated, "Sufyān related to us, from Ibn Jadān, from al-Qāsim b. Rabīʿa, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, while standing on the steps of the kaʿba on the day of the conquest of Mecca, "Praise be to God who fulfilled His promise and helped His servant and has defeated the opposing parties alone. (Compensation) for those killed by quasi-intent by whip or cudgel shall be compensated by 100 camels.""

"On another occasion he said, "by a binding oath promising payment of 40 pregnant camels. All privilege of ancestry and pride that existed in the jāhiliyya (are finished)." Another time, he said, "Both these factors are beneath these feet of mine; however, the right to provide water for the pilgrims and to have guardianship of the kaʿba will continue for those in charge of them, as before.""

Ibn Hishām stated that a scholar related to him that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered the kaʿba the day of the conquest, he saw inside it representations of angels and others. He saw Abraham pictured holding divining arrows in his hand. He said, "May God kill them! They have depicted our elder using divining arrows; what would Abraham have to do with divining arrows? Abraham was neither a Jew nor a Christian. But he was a hāfit, and a Muslim; he was no polytheist." He then gave orders and all those images were obliterated.

Imām Ahmad stated that Sulaymān related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Rahmān, from Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jabir, who said, "There were pictures inside the kaʿba and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to wipe them away. And so ʿUmar moistened a piece of cloth and used it to erase them. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went inside nothing of them remained."

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿAṣādaqā b. al-Faḍl related to him, quoting Ibn ʿUyayna, from Ibn Abū Najīḥ, from Mujahid, from Abū Maʿāmar, from ʿAbd Allāh – he being Ibn Masʿūd – who said, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca on the day of the conquest, around the kaʿba there were 360 idols. He set about striking them with a stick he carried, saying, ‘The truth has come and error has gone. The truth has come and error is powerless.’”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Ibn ‘Uyya.na.

Al-Bayhaqi related, from Ibn Ishāq, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Abī Bakr, from ‘Ali b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abbās, from his father, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca on the day of its conquest, in the ka’ba there were 300 idols. He took a staff and set about striking the idols with it until he had hit them all.”

He then related, through Suwayd b. Sa’id from al-Qāsim b. ‘Abd Allāh, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Dinar, from Ibn ‘Umar, (who said) that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca he discovered there 360 idols. He gestured towards each one with a stick and said, ‘The truth has come and error has gone; error is bound to disappear’ (ṣūrat Banū Isrā’īl; XVII, v.81). And every idol towards which he pointed fell over, without him touching them with his stick.”

He (al-Bayhaqi) then commented, “Even though this is a daqif, weak, tradition, it is substantiated by the one preceding it.”

Hanbal b. Isbq stated tht he was informed by Abū al-Rabī‘, from Ya‘qūb al-Qammi, quoting Ja‘far b. Abī al-Mughira, from Ibn Abzā, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) conquered Mecca, an old, grey-haired black woman appeared, clawing at her face and complaining loudly. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘That is Na‘ila;’ she is despairing that she will ever again be worshipped in your country.’”

Ihn Hishām stated, “A narrator of traditions in whom I have trust narrated, on a line of authorities from Ibn Shihab, from ‘Ubayd Allāh b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Utba, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca on the day of the conquest on his mount and circumambulated the ka’ba on it. Around the ka’ba there were idols made with lead reinforcing. He began pointing at the idols with a stick he held, saying, ‘The truth has come, and error is gone. Error is bound to disappear.’ Every idol at whose face he gestured fell over on its back, while every one at whose back he pointed fell over on its face. Eventually every single one had fallen over. Tamīm b. Asad al-Khuza‘ī therefore spoke the verse,

“There is a lesson and learning in the idols for those expecting reward or punishment.””

In the sahih collection of Muslim, (there is a hadith) from Shaybān b. Farrūkh, from Sulaymān b. al-Mughira, from Thābit, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Rabah, from Abū Hurayra, who said in his account of the conquest of Mecca, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forward and when he reached the (Black) Stone he saluted it and circumambulated the ka’ha. Arriving at an idol at the side of the ka’ba to which they had made worship, the Messenger of God (SAAS) grasped a bow he was carrying by its bent frame and began poking it in the eye, saying 113. The pre-Islamic goddess whose icon is said to have been positioned on Mt. Ṣafā.

The truth has come and error has gone. The truth has come and error is bound to disappear. When he had finished his circumambulation, he went out and climbed Mt. Šaṭa and, looking down at the ka'ba, raised up his hands, gave praise to God and spoke various prayers.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Iṣṭāq b. Maṃṣūr related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Ṣamad, who quoted his father as quoting Ayyūb, from Ṭkrīma, from Ibn ʿAbbas, who said that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) reached Mecca, he refused to enter the ka'ba while it contained idols. He therefore ordered them to be removed. One picture showed Abraham and Ismāʿīl holding divining arrows, and he said, 'May God kill them! They knew very well that they never used them to cast lots!'

"He then went inside the ka'ba, and said, Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great! in various parts of it, then came out without saying prayers there."

Al-Bukhārī gave this ḥadīth, while Muslim did not.

Imām ʿĀḥmad stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd al-Ṣamad, quoting Hammām, quoting ʿAta, from Ibn ʿAbbas, (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went to the ka'ba in which there were six columns. He stood at each column and prayed, but he did not perform the ṣalāh prayers.

Muslim related this from Shaybān b. Farūkh, from Hammām b. Yahyā al-ʿUdhlī, from ʿAta.

Imām ʿĀḥmad stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd al-Rassāq, quoting Māʿmar, who said that ʿUthmān al-Khaẓraji had related to him that he heard Miqṣam relate that Ibn ʿAbbas had said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went into the ka'ba and spoke prayers at its side and then went out and performed two rak'as of the ṣalāh prayers."

Muslim alone gives this.

Imām ʿĀḥmad stated, "Iṣmāʿīl related to us, quoting Layth, from Mūjahīd, from Ibn ʿUmar, (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed two rak'as of the ṣalāh prayers in the ka'ba.

Al-Bukhārī stated that al-Layth said, quoting Yūnus, quoting Nāfiʿ, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca on the day of its conquest from its heights and that riding with him on his mount was Usāma b. Zayd. From al-Ḥajaba he was accompanied by ʿUthmān b. Ṭalḥa. He dismounted at the mosque and ordered that the key to the ka'ba be brought to him. He then went in with Usāma b. Zayd, Bīlāl and ʿUthmān b. Ṭalḥa and stayed there for a long time. Eventually he came out again and the people hurried there. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar was the first to go inside and he found Bilāl standing behind the door. He asked him, ‘Where was it that the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed?’ Bilāl pointed to the spot. ‘Abd Allāh commented, ‘I forgot to ask him how many prayer prostrations he had made.’”

Immām Ahmad related from Hushaym, quoting various persons, including Ibn ‘Awn, from Nāfi’, from Ibn Umar, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went in accompanied by al-Fadl b. ‘Abbās, Usāma b. Zayd, Uthmān b. Ṭalha and Bilāl. He gave orders to Bilāl who shut the door upon them. He stayed inside for a period of time, and then he came outside.”

Ibn Umar stated, “The first of them I met was Bilāl and I asked him, ‘Where was it that the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed?’ ‘It was over here’, he replied, ‘between the two columns.’”

I note that it is established in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī and elsewhere that the Prophet (SAAS) prayed inside the ka'ba with its door behind his back, positioning himself with two columns on his right, one on his left and three to his rear. At that time the ka'ba had six columns. There was a distance of some three arms-lengths between himself and the western wall.

Ibn Hishām stated, “And a certain scholar related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered the ka'ba at the conquest of Mecca accompanied by Bilāl, whom he ordered to make the call to prayer. ‘Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, ‘Aṭṭāb b. Usayd and al-Ḥarīth b. Hishām were seated in the courtyard of the ka'ba. ‘Aṭṭāb said, ‘God honoured (my father) Usayd by not having him hear this; had he done so, it would have enraged him.’ Al-Ḥarīth b. Hishām commented, ‘I swear by God, if I had known he was right, I would have followed him!’ ‘Abū Sufyān added, ‘I'll say nothing. If I were to speak, these stones would report on me!’

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) came outside and said, ‘I know what you said,’ and he then related their comments to them. Al-Ḥarīth and ‘Aṭṭāb declared, ‘We testify that you are the Messenger of God! There was no one with us who overheard this for us to say he repeated it to you.’”

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as having related from his father, who said, “A member of the family of Jubbār b. Mūt‘im related to me that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca, he gave orders to Bilāl, who climbed on to the roof of the ka'ba and there made the call to prayer. One of the sons of Sa‘d b. al-‘Aṣ said, ‘God honoured Sa‘d by taking him away before he heard this black man on the roof of the ka'ba.’”

‘Abd al-Razzāq stated, from Ma‘mar, from Ayyūb that Ibn Abū Mulayka said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders to Bilāl who made the call to prayer on the day of the conquest of Mecca on top of the ka'ba and that one of the Quraysh men said to al-Ḥarīth b. Hishām, ‘Do you see where that black man has climbed?’ He (al-Ḥarīth) replied, ‘Leave him alone; if God dislikes him, He will change him.’”

Yūnus b. Bukayr and others quoted Hishām b. Urwā as quoting his father as saying that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders to Bilāl on the day of the conquest of Mecca, and that he made the call to prayer from atop the ka'ba, to anger the polytheists.

Muḥammad b. Sa'd stated, from al-Waqidi, from Muḥammad b. Ḥarb, from Ismā'il b. Abū Khālid, from Abū ʿĪsāq, as saying that after the conquest of Mecca, Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb was sitting saying to himself, “What if I had gathered a force against Muḥammad!” While he was asking himself this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) slapped him between the shoulders and said, “Then God would have put you to shame!” Abū Sufyān then raised his head and, when he saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) standing above him, said, “I was never sure before that you were indeed a prophet!”

Al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfiṣ related to us, iḥāzatan, with permission (for me to quote him), quoting Abū Ḥamīd ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ḥasan al-Muqri, quoting Abū Ḥamīd b. Yūsuf al-Sulāmi, quoting Muḥammad b. Yūsuf al-Fīrāyībī, quoting Yūnus b. Abū ʿĪsāq from Abū al-Safār, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “When Abū Sufyān saw that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) walked that the people would tread in his footsteps, he said to himself, ‘What if I had fought this man again!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went up, struck him on the chest and said, ‘Then God would have put you to shame!’

“He (Abū Sufyān) said, ‘I turn to God and seek His forgiveness for what I have spoken!’”

Al-Bayhaqī then related, through Ibn Khuzayma and others, from Abū Ḥamīd b. al-Ṣaḥrāqī, from Abū Muḥammad b. Yahyā al-Dhuhlī, quoting Mūsā b. Aʿyan al-Juzārī, who quoted his father, who quoted ʿĪsāq b. Rashīd as quoting Saʿd b. al-Muṣayyab as saying, “That night of the conquest of Mecca the people who entered kept on calling out Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great! rejoicing and circumambulating the ka'ba until the next morning. Abū Sufyān asked Hind, ‘Do you think this is from God?’ She replied, ‘Yes; this is from God.’

“Next morning Abū Sufyān went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and the latter told him, ‘You said to Hind, “Do you think that this is from God?” “Yes”, she replied, “this is from God.”

“At this Abū Sufyān exclaimed, ‘I testify that you are the servant and Messenger of God! By Him who is invoked in oaths, no one but Hind alone heard my saying this.’”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “ʿĪsāq related to us, quoting Abū ʿĀṣim, from Ibn Jurayj who said that Ḥasan b. Muslim informed him, from Mujāhid, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘God made Mecca a sanctuary the day He created the heavens and the earth. It is a sanctuary by God’s having made it so and will remain such until Judgement Day. (Conflict in it) was not made permissible for anyone before myself, nor for anyone after me; and this only for a short time. In it game may not be hunted, its trees may not be cut down, nor may its vegetation be uprooted. And items found in it belong to the finder only after announcement of the find.’” the idhkhar\textsuperscript{114} plant, Messenger of God, its use is essential in burials\textsuperscript{115} and inside homes.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) was silent a moment, then agreed, 'Except for the al-idhkhar; harvesting it is allowed.'"

A lie or similar hadith comes from Ibn Jurayj, quoting 'Abd al-Karim - he being the son of Malik al-Jazari - from 'Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbās, which gives Abū Hurayra as the narrator of the words of the Prophet (SAAS).

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this hadith with the line of transmission quoted above. This account is mursal, incomplete in its chain, as is that of the second line.

This and similar accounts are cited by those who maintain that Mecca was conquered by force of arms, along with their reference to engagements that occurred at al-Khandama, reported above. At that battle some 20 Muslims and polytheists were killed; that the evidence from it is clear is the position of most scholars.

It is well known that al-Shafi'i held that Mecca was taken peacefully, since it was not distributed as booty and because the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated the night of its conquest, "Whoever enters the home of Abī Sufyān will be secure; whoever enters the sanctuary will be secure; whoever locks his own door will be safe."

The proper place for discussion of this issue, if God Almighty so wishes it, is with reference to the work Kitāb al-Ahkām.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Sa'īd b. Shurahblil, quoting al-Layth, from al-Maqburi, from Abū Shurayh al-Khuza‘i, who said that he asked 'Amr b. Sa‘īd, who was about to dispatch groups of fighters into Mecca, "O amir, 'Commander', please permit me to report a statement made by the Messenger of God (SAAS) the day following the conquest of Mecca. My ears heard, my heart knew and my eyes saw him as he spoke it. He praised and thanked God, then said, 'It was God, not men who made Mecca a sanctuary. It is not lawful for anyone who believes in God and the last day to shed blood nor to cut down trees within it. And should anyone seek permission to fight therein because the Messenger of God (SAAS) fought there, then tell him, "God gave permission to His messenger but gave none to you." And He only allowed this to me for a short period. Its sanctity has reverted today to what it was before. Let those here present inform of this those absent.'"

Abū Shurayh was then asked, "What did 'Amr reply to you?" Abū Shurayh responded, "He said, 'I know this better than you do. The sanctuary does not provide refuge to anyone who has sinned, nor to a murderer in flight, nor to anyone seeking to escape payment of the jizya\textsuperscript{116}, the poll-tax.'"

\textsuperscript{114} The schoenantum plant, an odoriferous shrub.
\textsuperscript{115} Other texts of al-Bukhari give the word al-qaym, "blacksmith"; rather than al-dafn, "burial", as here. The plant's use as an essential fuel seems implied.
\textsuperscript{116} An alternative reading of al-Bukhari's text substitutes al-kharbe, "having caused damages".
Al-Bukhārī also related this, as did Muslim, from Qutayba, from al-Layth b. Sa‘d in similar words.

Ibn Ishaq related that during the jāhilyya period a man called Ibn al-Athwa‘ killed a man of Khuzā‘a known as “Ihmarrā Ba‘ṣan”, “he who turned red in rage”. On the day of the conquest of Mecca Banū Khuzā‘a killed Ibn al-Athwa‘ while he was in Mecca; the man who killed him was Khirāsh b. Umayya. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, “People of Khuzā‘a, kill no more; there has been too much killing, even if to some purpose. I will pay compensation for the man killed.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥarmala al-Aslāmi related to me, from Sa‘d b. al-Musayyab, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) learned what Khirāsh b. Umayya had done, he said, ‘Khirāsh kills to excess!’’

Ibn Ishaq also stated that Sa‘d b. Aḥb Sa‘d b. Maqburī related to him, from Abū Shurayḥ al-Khuzā‘a, who said, “When ‘Amr b. al-Zubayr advanced on Mecca to battle his brother ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, I went to him and said, ‘We were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when Mecca was conquered. The day following the conquest Khuzā‘a attacked and killed a man of Hudhayl who was a polytheist. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then rose to address us and said, ‘God made Mecca a sanctuary when He created the heavens and the earth. It will remain one of God’s sanctuaries until the day of Resurrection. It will not be lawful for anyone who believes in God and the last day to shed blood therein, nor to cut down a tree there. This was not made lawful for anyone who came before me, nor will it be lawful for anyone who comes after me. It was only made lawful for me for this short period because of (God’s) anger against its inhabitants. Now its sanctity has reverted to as it was previously. Let those of you present so inform those absent. Respond to anyone who tells you that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) fought in it by saying, ‘God made this lawful for His messenger, but He has not done so for you.’ O Khuzā‘a, cease killing; there has been too much, even if to some purpose. You have killed someone and for him I will pay compensation. If someone should be killed after my stay here, then his family has two options: to demand the blood of his killer, or to seek blood-money for him.’” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then paid compensation for the man Khuzā‘a had killed.’

“‘Amr then said to Abū Shurayḥ, ‘Go away, sheikh! We know better than you about its sanctity. It does not protect anyone who sheds blood, retracts his allegiance or resists paying the jizya tax.’

“Abū Shurayḥ then said, ‘Well, I was present there and you were absent. And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered those of us present to so inform those absent; and I have so informed you. Now do as you will.’”

Ibn Hishām said that he was told that the first person for whom the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) paid compensation at the conquest of Mecca was Junaydīb b. al-Akwa‘. Banū Ka‘b had killed him. The compensation he paid for him was 100 camels.
Imam Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Yahyā, from ʿUṣayn, from ʿAmr b. Ṣuʿayb, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, “When Mecca was conquered by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he said, ‘Cease using weapons; except for Khuzāʿa against Banū Bakr.’ He gave them permission (to fight on) until the al-ʿaṣr, late afternoon, prayer. He then announced, ‘Cease using your weapons!’ A man of Khuzāʿa encountered and killed another from Banū Kalb next day at al-Muzdalifa. When news of this reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he arose and said, (the narrator added that he saw him and that he was resting his back on the kaʿba), ‘The people God dislikes most are those who kill others in the sanctuary, those who kill those not fighting them, and those who kill for the blood-money of the jahlīyya period.”

He went on to relate the hadīth to its end.

This hadīth is completely unique.

The al-sunan scholars relate this hadīth in part.

His giving permission here to Khuzāʿa to take revenge on Banū Bakr up to the al-ʿaṣr prayer of the day of the conquest is something I have seen only in this hadīth. If true, it seems that this is in special consideration for what they suffered at their hands on the night of their attack, known as al-maṭir. But God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad related, from Yahyā b. ʿAmid and Sufyān b. ʿUyayn and Yazīd b. Ṭubayd, all of whom quoted Zakariyyā b. Abū Zaʿīda, from ʿAmr al-Shaʿbi, from al-Ḥārith b. Mālik b. al-Barsā al-Khuzāʿi (who said), “I heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say on the day of the conquest of Mecca, ‘This (city) will never be conquered after today until the day of Resurrection.’”

Al-Tirmidhī related it from Bandār, from Yahyā b. ʿAmid al-Qattān. He said, “It is hasan, saḥīh, ‘good and authentic.’”

I comment that if this statement is a proscription, then it is devoid of ambiguity. If it be a negation, then, as al-Bayhaqī said, “Its meaning is ‘by those whose people are unbelievers’.”

In the saḥīh collection of Muslim, it is stated, from a hadīth of Zakariyyā b. Abū Zaʿīda, from ʿAmir al-Shaʿbī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Muṭṭī, from his father Muṭṭī b. al-Aswad al-ʿAdawi, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated on the day of the conquest of Mecca, ‘After this day and on up to Resurrection Day, no man of Quraysh will ever be killed in captivity.’”

The objection to the first statement, above, could equally well be made against this too.”

Ibn Hishām stated that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered Mecca following its conquest and went up to al-Safā to pray, the anṣār watched him and asked one another, “Do you think that since God has conquered for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) his own land and city that he will remain there?”

117. The author is attempting to explain the purport of the hadīth in light of the fact that several inter-communal conflicts between Muslim forces did indeed occur in apparent contradiction of the prophecy.
When he had finished his prayer he asked them what they had been saying and they replied that it was nothing. He kept on at them until they told him. He then said, ‘God forbid! I shall live where you live, die where you die!’

This comment given by Ibn Hishām is substantiated by Imām Ahmad b. Hanbal in his hadith compendium. He stated that the following was related to him by Bāhz and Hāshim, both quoting Sulaymān b. al-Mughira, from Thābit. Hāshim said, ‘Thābit b. Būnātī related to me, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Rabah, who said, ‘Delegations came in to see Mu‘āwiya and I was among them, as was Abū Hurayra. This was in Ramdān. We prepared food for one another. Abū Hurayra would invite us very often. So I asked myself whether I should prepare some food and invite them to my tent. I ordered food to be prepared and met Abū Hurayra that evening. I said to him, “Abū Hurayra, the invitation tonight is at my place.” “So you’re beating me to it then?” “Yes,” I replied, “I’ve invited some people who are there.”

‘Abū Hurayra said, ‘Well, you ansār, should I recount a hadith of yours?’ He went on to relate the conquest of Mecca. He said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAAS) arrived, he entered Mecca. He dispatched al-Zubayr in command of one of the flanks and Khalīd in charge of the other. He sent Abū Ubayda over the bridge and they took the centre of the valley. The Messenger of God (SAAAS) was in his squadron. Quraysh had gathered their forces. They (the army commanders?) said, ‘We’ll send those ahead; and if they make progress, we’ll be with them. If they are attacked, we’ll give him whatever he asks.’

‘Abū Hurayra went on, ‘He (the Prophet (SAAAS)) then looked over and when he saw me, he said, ‘Abū Hurayra!’ I responded, ‘At your service, Messenger of God!’ ‘Call up the ansār for me; and I don’t want any except ansār to come to me.’ So I called out to them and they came and formed a circle around the Messenger of God (SAAAS). He then asked them, ‘Do you see the Quraysh forces and their supporters grouped together?’ He then spoke using his hands, saying, ‘Cut right through them to conduct me to al-Safā.’

‘Abū Hurayra went on, ‘So off we went, each one of us refraining from killing any of them and they not interfering with us. Abū Sufyān commented, ‘The green (banner) of Quraysh has been disgraced! There is no Quraysh after today!’

‘The Messenger of God (SAAAS) then announced, ‘Whoever locks his door will be secure; whoever enters Abū Sufyān’s house will be secure.’ And so people did lock their doors.

‘The Messenger of God (SAAAS), then advanced to the (Black) Stone, saluted it and circumambulated the ka‘ba. In his hand he carried a bow. He grasped it by its bent frame and arriving, on his way round, at an idol beside the ka‘ba they used to worship, he struck it in the eyes, saying, ‘The truth has come and error is gone. Error is completely gone!’

‘He then climbed al-Ṣafā from where he could look down upon the ka‘ba, and raised his hands, invoking God and praying to Him.
"Meanwhile, the ansār were down below and were telling one another, ‘The man is seized by a desire to be in his village and he has a feeling of compassion for his tribe!’"

"Abū Hurayra went on, ‘Then revelation came to him. It was never hidden from us when this came, and no one would raise his gaze to the Messenger of God (SAAS) until it was at an end.’"

Hashim stated, “When the revelation was over, he raised his head and said, ‘O ansār, did you just say, ‘The man is seized by a desire to be in his village and by compassion for his tribe?’ They replied, ‘Yes, Messenger of God, we did say that.’ ‘What then should I be called? Absolutely not! I am God’s servant and His messenger. I migrated to God and to you. It is with you I shall live and with you I shall die.’"

"Those present then went up to him, weeping and saying, ‘We only said what we did because of our passion for God and His messenger.’ He then said, ‘God and His messenger believe you and forgive you.’"

Muslim and al-Nasāʾi relate this from a hadith of Sulaymān b. al-Mughira. Al-Nasāʾi added the name of Salām b. Miskin. Muslim also related it from a hadith of Hammad b. Salama, all three sources quoting Thabit, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Rabāḥ the ansārī, who lived in al-Baṣra, from Abū Hurayra in similar words.

Ibn Hishām stated that a scholar told him that Fadāla b. Ṭumayr b. al-Muṭawwah – al-Laythi, that is – wanted to kill the Prophet (SAAS) as he was circumambulating the kaʿba at the time of the conquest of Mecca. When the man approached him, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, ‘‘Is that Fadāla?’ ‘Yes, Fadāla, Messenger of God,’ he replied. He next asked, ‘And what was it you were just telling yourself?’ He replied, ‘Nothing; I was repeating the name of God.’ The Prophet (SAAS) laughed and said, ‘Seek God’s forgiveness!’ and he placed his hand on Fadāla’s chest and his heart became calm.

“Fadāla used to say, ‘I swear by God, by the time he took his hand away from my chest, none of God’s creation was more beloved by me than him.’

“Fadāla stated, ‘I went back to my family and went by to see a woman with whom I would talk. She asked, ‘Are you coming in to talk?’ ‘But Fadāla declined and proceeded to speak the verses, ‘She said, “come on in and talk!” He replied, “No; God and Islam forbid you that. Had you but seen Muḥammad and his advance at the Conquest, the day when the idols were smashed, You would have seen God’s religion fully visible while the face of idolatry was covered in darkness.”’"

Ibn Ishāq stated that Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr related to him, from Urwa, from Ḥaʿisha, who said, “Ṣafwān b. Umayya left to go to Jidda to take a boat from there to Yemen. Ṭumayr b. Wahb told the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'Prophet of God, Șafwân b. Umayya, his people's chief, has fled from you intending to cast himself into the sea. Do you give him immunity, may God bless you?' He replied, 'He is given immunity.'

"Umayr then asked him, 'Messenger of God, please give me some token by which he will know your immunity for him.' So he gave him the turban he had been wearing when he had entered Mecca.

"Umayr left with it and caught up with Șafwân as he was about to go to sea. He told him, 'Șafwân, may my father and mother be your ransom; if you plan to kill yourself, this is a guarantee of immunity from the Messenger of God (SAAS) that I have brought you.'

"'Clear off! Don't talk to me!' Șafwân told him. Umayr insisted, 'But I swear, he is the most trustworthy, compassionate and best of all men and your cousin. His fame, honour and possessions are your own.' Șafwân replied, 'Yet I fear for myself.' Umayr argued, 'But he is too compassionate and noble for that.'

"Umayr did bring him back and when he stood before the Messenger of God (SAAS) Șafwân said, 'This man claims that you grant me immunity?' 'He spoke the truth,' he replied. 'Let me have two months to make my choice,' Șafwân asked. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'You may have four months to decide.'"

Ibn Ishaq went on to relate from al-Zuhri that Fâkhita, daughter of al-Walid, the wife of Șafwân, and Umm Hakîm, daughter of al-Ḥarîth b. Hishâm, the wife of Ǐkrima b. Abû Jahl, had followed Ǐkriia to Yemen and asked him to come back, and he did so and accepted Islam. When the two men (Șafwân and Ǐkrima) accepted Islam, the Messenger of God (SAAS) affirmed the validity of their first marriages.

Ibn Ishaq quoted Sa'id b. 'Abd al-Râhmân b. Hassân b. Thâbit as having said, "Hassân delivered against Ibn al-Ziba'ara while the latter was in Najrán the following single verse, adding to it no other,

'May you never be deprived of a man hatred for whom has made you settle in Najrán where your life is solitary and mean!"

"When this reached Ibn al-Ziba'ara, he came out to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and accepted Islam. When he did so, he spoke the verses,

'O Messenger of al-Malîk, the Sovereign Lord, my tongue is now mending what I tore when I was unproductive,

When I followed Satan in the ways of error; and those who turn along his course are deceived.

My flesh and bones believe in my Lord; and my heart is witness that you are the one who warns.

I shall drive away from you there the clan of Lu'ayy;
all of them are deceived.'"

Ibn Ishaq also quoted Ibn al-Ziba'ara as reciting, when he accepted Islam, "Worries and cares held back sleep from me and the night pitched above me was disturbed and impenetrable. When I had heard that Āḥmad had criticized me, I passed that night as though in fever.

O best man that ever a sure-footed, fast-paced camel bore upon its body,
I apologize to you for what I did; I have been wandering in error.
During a time when Sahm and Makhzūm ordered me to pursue false paths.
I gave aid to evil policies, led on by the orders of those in error, accursed men.
Today my heart believes in the Prophet Muḥammad and whoever mistakes this is deprived (of truth).
Enmity is over, its causes gone; the ties and understanding between us call out.
Forgive my mistakes – may my parents be your ransom – for you are forgiving and are yourself forgiven.
Upon you there is the sign of the knowledge of the Sovereign Lord, a strong light and a seal impressed.
After friendship, He honoured you with His proof, and proof from God is powerful indeed.
I have testified that your religion is true, and that you will be mighty in the hereafter.
God testifies that Āḥmad is the one chosen, noble and pre-eminent among the righteous,
A prince, his high house being from Hāshim, the branch of a tree firm at its apex and in its roots."

Ibn Hishām stated, "Some scholars of poetry dispute attribution of these verses to this poet."
I note that ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zīḥārā al-Sahmī was one of the chief enemies of Islam, one of those poets who used their powers in satirizing the Muslims. God then allowed him to repent fully and to return to Islam, and to aid and defend it.

Division.

Ibn Ishāq stated that the following lines of Ḥassān b. Thābit were among those delivered on the day of the conquest of Mecca:

"Traces of her campgrounds, now empty, at Dhāt al-ʿAṣābi and al-Jiwā and on to ʿAdhār have vanished, Homes of Bānū al-Ḥāshāb now deserted and obliterated by wind and rain

118. Sites in Syria Ḥassān is said to have visited.
Always was the company pleasant there and in its pastures were fine camels and sheep.

No more of that! But who can deal with a spectre that keeps me awake when evening is past?

Sha'tha: when she appears before one, the heart knows no consolation.

She is like a fine wine from Bayt al-Ra's™, one to be mixed with honey and water;

Such drinks are fine to recall, the best of wines for which to make sacrifice.

It we blame if we behave badly, getting into fights or quarrels

When we drink it, it makes us feel like kings or lions so that nothing can deter us from conflict.

May we be deprived of our horses if you do not see them raising the dust, their objective Kādā.

They battle their reins, turning aside the thirsty spears above their shoulders.

Our horses continue charging ahead, the women flapping their veils at them.

Either you turn away from us and we perform the pilgrimage, and then the conquest will occur and the cover (over the kacba) be removed,

Or you should bear up against a battle in which God will give victory to whomever he wishes.

Gabriel, the Messenger of God, is on our side, and the Holy Spirit is without peer.

God said, 'I have sent a servant who speaks the truth – if visitation can do good.

I swear by him; so stand, and acknowledge his truth.'

You replied, 'No; we'll not arise. We don't wish to.'

And so God said, 'I have sent my troops; they are the ansār and their intent is to fight.'

Every day we receive from Maʿadd insults, conflict or mockery.

We will confuse with our rhymes those who mock us; and we will strike when blood mixes with blood!

Give Abū Sufyān from me an important message – for now is plain what had been hidden –

Consider our swords having left you a slave, and household slaves have bondwomen rule them!

You satirized Muḥammad, and I answered for him; with God will be your requital.

Is whoever of you satirizes the Messenger of God, the equal of those who praise and aid him?

119. A place in Jordan.
You satirized someone blessed, a pious hanif, a companion of God, a man characterized by loyalty.

My father, his father and my honour, all protect against you the honour of Muḥammad.

My tongue is a faultless sword and my verse a water source no buckets could turn cloudy."

Ibn Hishām commented that Hassān spoke these verses before the conquest.

I note that what he said is well-directed and pointed towards what was to come after these verses; the Abū Sufyān referred to in the verse is Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.

Ibn Hishām commented that he had heard that al-Zuhrī had stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw the women slapping the horses with their veils, he smiled at Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him."

Ibn Ishāq stated that Anas b. Zunaym al-Dīlī spoke the following verses in apology to the Messenger of God (SAAS) for what ʿAmr b. Salīm al-Khuzāʿī had said about the Muslims; that was when he came asking assistance against them, as related above.

"Is it you at whose command Maʿadd was led aright? No; God guides them and said to you, ‘Testify!’

No camel ever carried on its saddle a man more pious and trustworthy than Muḥammad, Anyone swifter to do good or more generous, a man who goes forth like a burnished Indian-steel sword.

Anyone more ready to present a fine, unused Yemeni robe, or to give away the winning horse.

You should know, O Messenger of God, that you will attain me, and that a threat from you is as already accomplished.

You should know, O Messenger of God, that you have power over every settlement, whether in the highlands or the lowlands.

You should know that the mounted men, the riders of Ḥuwaymir, are liars who break every vow.

They informed the Messenger of God that I satirized him; if that be true, then my hand has never carried my whip!

All I said was, ‘Woe upon the mothers of the young men struck down by ill-luck, not in fortunate, happy times.’

They were killed by those not their equal in blood-line; and my weeping and confusion were extreme.

And you were accused of spreading evil about ʿAbd b. ʿAbd Allāh and Mahwād’s daughter.

Dhuwayb, Kulṭīm and Salmā all followed one another (to death) and even if I do not weep, I do grieve,
And Salmā! There is no tribe like Salmā and his brothers. Are kings alike to slaves?
I have committed no sin nor shed blood; be sure, you who know the truth, and take thought!”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Bujayr b. Zuhayr b. Abn Salmī spoke the following verses on the conquest of Mecca:

“That morning Muzayna and Banū Khufāf drove the people of al-Haballaq from every ravine. We struck them with our sharp swords at Mecca the day of the conquest of the good Prophet. We came at them with 700 of Sulaym and a full 1,000 of Banū ‘Uthmān. We crushed their backs, striking and thrusting and pelted them with fine arrows. Which you could hear making a crackling sound like arrowshafts breaking at their point fastenings. We charged, our steeds wheeling among them, the shafts of our lances straight ahead. We came back taking plunder as we wished, while they retreated regretting their conflict. We gave the Messenger of God our pledge and goodwill. They heard our speech and set about retreating from us on that morning of terror.”

Ibn Hishām stated that ʿAbbs b. Mirdās al-Sulami spoke the following verses at the conquest of Mecca:

“With us that day when Muḥammad conquered Mecca were 1,000 men wearing insignia; the valleys streamed with them. They helped the Messenger and witnessed his signs; their emblems the day of the encounter were to the fore. In a constricted place where their feet set firm; it was as though (their enemies’) heads were mere colocynths. Before this their hooves had raced over Najd, until jet-black Hijāz stretched out before them. It was God who conquered it for him and the judgement of swords and vigorous toil subjugated it to us. A man used to leadership, his head held high, aspiring to the heights of dignity, a most generous man.”

Ibn Hishām gave the explanation for the acceptance of Islam by ʿAbbs b. Mirdās. His father used to worship a stone idol called Dimār which he entrusted to...
'Abbās when his death was near. One day, while 'Abbās was worshipping it, he heard a voice from inside it say,

"Tell all the tribes of Sulaym that Dimār has perished, while the people of the mosque live on.

He of Quraysh who has inherited prophethood and right-guidance after Mary's son is a true guide.

Dimār has perished, though he was long worshipped, from before the scripture up to the Prophet Muḥammad."

At that 'Abbās set Dimār afire, joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) and accepted Islam. This story is given above in full in the section of the Cries of the Spirits along with various similar tales. And to God belong all praise and credit.

THE DISPATCH BY THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) OF KHALID B. AL-WALID AGAINST BANŪ JADHIMA, AFTER THE CONQUEST OF MECCA.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated that it was related to him by Ḥakīm b. Ḥakīm b. 'Abbād b. Ḥanīf, from Abī Ja'far Muḥammad b. ʿAlī, who said, "When Mecca was conquered, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth Khālid b. al-Walīd as a missionary and not as a warrior. With him were Arab tribes, along with Sulaym b. Manṣūr and Mudlij b. Murra. When Banū Khudhayma b. ʿAmir b. ʿAbd Manāt b. Kināna saw them approach, they went for their weapons, but Khālid told them, 'Put down your arms; people have accepted Islam.'"

Ibn Ismāʿīl continued that a companion of his, a scholar from Banū Jadhim, told him, "When Khālid asked us to put down our arms one of us, a man named Jahdam, said, 'Take care, Banū Jadhimā - it's Khālid! I swear by God, all there will be after laying down your arms will be captivity; and after that there will be execution! By God, I'll never lay down my arms!'

"He was seized by some of his people, who asked, 'Jahdam, do you want to spill our blood? People have (all) accepted Islam now and warfare is over. People are safe now.'

"They kept on at him until they had taken away his weapons. They disarmed him because of what Khālid had said."

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on to report that Ḥakīm b. Ḥakīm quoted Abū Ja'far as saying further, "When they had put down their weapons, Khālid ordered that they be bound and he then put a number of them to the sword. When news of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) he raised his hands to heaven and said, 'O God, I declare to You my innocence of what Khālid b. al-Walīd has done.'"

Ibn Hishām stated that a scholar told him that one man from that tribe escaped and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and when the latter had been told what had happened, He asked, “Did anyone argue with him?” The man replied that a man of pale complexion and medium stature had argued with him, but Khalid rebuked him and shut him up. Another man, tall and excitable, had also argued with him and they disputed fiercely. ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said, “The first man, Messenger of God, was my son ‘Abd Allāh; the other was Sālim, the freed-man of Abū Ḥudhayfah.”

Ibn Ishaq went on to say that Ḥākim b. Ḥākim further quoted Abū Ja‘far as saying, “Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) called for ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalīb and told him, ‘‘Ali, go out to those people and make enquiries. Put an end to the practices of the jāhiliyya.’

“All went out to them carrying money the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent with him. He paid them compensation for the deaths and for their material losses, even paying them for a dog’s howl! Having met all these obligations, he still had some money left. He asked them whether there was anyone else to be paid for lost blood or damages and they said not. He then gave them the remaining money on behalf of the Messenger of God (SAAS), in case any other demands that neither he nor they were aware of should be made later.

“Having done this, he returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and reported to him. ‘You acted correctly and very well,’ he told him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose and, facing the qibla and stretching his arms out wide so that his armpits were visible, he said, ‘O God, I declare to You that I am innocent of what Khalid b. al-Walīd did.’ He spoke these words three times.”

Ibn Ishaq stated that some who wished to excuse Khalid report him as having said, “I did not fight them until ‘Ahd Allāh b. Ḥudhayfah al-Sahmi told me to do so. He said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered you to combat them because of their having refrained from accepting Islam.’”

Ibn Hishām quoted Abū ʿAmr al-Madīnī as saying that when Khalid reached them, they had said, “raba‘na! saba‘na! We have changed religion!” These traditions are defective in their lines of transmission.

Imām ʿAlī b. al-Razzāq related to him, quoting Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, from Sālim b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) dispatched Khalid b. al-Walīd to Banū Jadhima – I think he said this – and he invited them to enter Islam. But they did not respond properly by saying aslāmnā, ‘we accept Islam’, but instead began saying ‘saba‘nā! saba‘nā!’ Khalid then took some prisoners and killed others. He gave to each of our men a prisoner and next morning Khalid ordered that each man of us should kill his prisoner.”

Ibn ʿUmar went on, “I said, ‘I swear by God, I’ll not kill my prisoner! Nor will any of my men kill theirs either!’”

The account continues that they then went to the Prophet (SAAS) and told him what Khalid had done. He responded by raising his hands and saying, “O God, I declare to You that I am innocent of what Khalid has done!” He said this twice.
Al-Bukhari and al-Nasz'i related this from a hadith of 'Abd al-Razzaq in similar terms.

Ibn Ishq stated, "Jahdama said to them, when he saw what Khalid was doing, 'O Banu Jadhima, the die is cast and lost; I warned you of what had happened to you.'"

Ibn Ishq went on, "I have heard that there were angry words between Khald and 'Abd al-Rahman b. 'Awf about this. 'Abd al-Rahman told him, 'You have behaved in Islam as though in the jahiliyya!' 'But I only took revenge for your father,' Khalid replied. 'Abd al-Rahman responded, 'You lie! I have already killed my father's murderer. It's your uncle, al-Fakih b. al-Mughira, whom you have avenged!' Ill feeling arose between them over this.

"When news of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, 'Take it easy, Khalid! And leave my Companions alone! I swear, that if you had a mountain like Uhd of gold and then spent it in God's cause, you'd not attain a morning and evening's worth of what my Companions have done!'")

Ibn Ishq then went on to relate the story of al-Fakih b. al-Mughira b. 'Abd Allah b. 'Umar b. Makhzum, the uncle of Khalid b. al-Walid. He had left on a business trip to Yemen in the company of 'Awf b. 'Abd 'Awf b. 'Abd al-Haithm b. Zahra, this man's son 'Abd al-Rahman, along with 'Affan b. Abn al-'Ash b. Umuya b. Abd Shams and his son Uthman. When they returned they brought with them some possessions of a man of Banu Jadhima who had died in Yemen. They brought these effects to his heirs. One of their men, a man named Khalid b. Hisham, claimed them and met them on Banu Jadhima territory, asking for the dead man's possessions before they reached the family of the latter. When they refused to hand them over he attacked them and in the fighting 'Awf and Fakih were killed and their goods were seized. 'Abd al-Rahman killed the man, Khalid b. Hisham, who had slain his father, while 'Affan and his son Uthman fled to Mecca. Quraysh were about to attack Banu Jadhima when the latter sent an apology to them insisting that the attack had not been their fault. They returned the two dead men and their property and so warfare was averted.

This, then, is why Khalid told 'Abd al-Rahman that he had avenged his father by killing Banu Jadhima and why 'Abd al-Rahman responded by saying that he had killed his father's murderer. And so he went on to charge that Khalid was merely avenging his uncle al-Fakih b. al-Mughira when they killed him and took his possessions.

What was really thought by both men was that he, 'Abd al-Rahman, had not intended any of this and that the charge had only arisen due to their conflict. Khalid had only sought to render Islam and its side victorious, even though he was in error in thinking that they had been demeaning Islam by saying, saba'na! saba'na! He did not realize that they had accepted Islam, and so he killed a large number of them and took the rest captive. Most of the captives were killed as well. The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not take his command away but left him in charge. He did, however, declare his own innocence of what Khālid had done and paid compensation for the loss of life and property.

In this there is substantiation of a statement made by scholars that the mistake of the Imām rests with his treasury, not with his own funds! But God knows best.

This is why the Caliph Abū Bakr did not dismiss him when he killed Mālik b. Nuwayra during the rida wars, first executing him, then choosing for himself Mālik’s wife Umm Tamim. ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb then advised, “Dismiss him; there’s a fault in his sword!” Abū Bakr replied, “I’ll not sheathe a sword that God drew against the polytheists.”

Ibn Ishāq stated that Yaʿqūb b. ʿUthba b. al-Mughīra b. al-Akhnas related to him, from al-Zuhri, from Ibn Abī Ḥadrad al-Aslami, who said, “That day I was with the cavalry of Khālid b. al-Walid and a young man of Banū Jadhima, of about my own age, whose hands had been tied up to his neck with a rope, spoke to me. The women were all gathered together a little way off. He asked me, ‘Take me by the rope and lead me over to where the women are so that I can say something, and then bring me back and you can do with me whatever you will.’

“I replied that what he had asked was easily granted and took his rope and led him over to stand near them. He then said, Ḥubaysh, accept that life is at an end.’ He then spoke the following verses,

‘Don’t you agree that when I sought and found you at Ḥilya or came to you at al-Khawāniq
Was it not right to reward a lover who had travelled hard through long nights and hot days?
There was no blame in my saying, when our peoples were together, “Grant me love, before some tragedy occurs.”
“Grant me love before distance intervenes and the chief leads my lover away.”
I never betrayed our secret pact and, after meeting you, was never attracted by another.
And even when distracted from love by tribal matters, my passion persisted.’

“She replied, ‘May you live on for ten, or nine odd numbered years and then eight more in succession?’

“I then led him back and he was beheaded.”

Ibn Ishāq went on to relate, quoting Abū Fīrās b. Abū Sanbala al-Aslami who quoted some of their sheikhs, from others who were present there, to the effect that the girl, Ḥubaysh, went over to him when he was beheaded and bent down over, kissing him until she herself died right there with him!

The ḥāǧī al-Bayhaqi related, through al-Ḥumaydī, from Suṭyān b. ʿUyayna, from ʿAbd al-Malik b. Nawfal b. Musāḥiq, who said that he heard a man of Muzayna named Ibn ʿĪsām quote his father as having said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) would say when he sent out a military expedition, ‘If you see a mosque or hear a call to prayer, do not kill anyone.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) did send us out on one such mission and so ordered us. We headed towards Tihāma and caught up with a man leading some howdahs, camel-borne litters. We told him, ‘Accept Islam!’ He replied, ‘What is Islam?’ We explained, but he would not recognize it. He then asked what we would do if he declined. We told him we would kill him. He then asked if we would wait while he went over to the howdahs. We agreed to take him over there. When he reached there, he called out, ‘Islam! Accept Islam, Ḥubaysh! before life comes to an end.’ She replied, ‘Islam! “be safe”, for ten and nine odd-numbered years and then eight more in succession.’

“The man then spoke the verses (given above) as far as ‘and the chief leads my lover away’ and came back to us, saying, ‘Do as you wish.’ So we led him off and beheaded him. The woman then hurried down from her howdah, threw herself down upon him and died.”

Al-Bayhaqi proceeded to relate, through Abū Abd al-Rahmān al-Nasā’i, who quoted Muḥammad b. ‘Alī b. Ḥarb al-Marwazi, quoting ‘Alī b. ʿAbd al-Ḥusayn b. Wāqid, from his father, from Yazīd al-Nāḥwī, from Ḥikrīma, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth an expedition that captured booty, along with a man. He told the raiders that he did not belong there and was in love with a woman he had been pursuing. He asked to see her one more time, and that then they could do with him whatever they wished. A tall woman of dark complexion was there and he said to her, “Accept, Ḥubaysh, before life comes to an end.” He then spoke two verses. She responded, “Yes, I would sacrifice myself for you!”

The narration continued “When they led him away and beheaded him, she came and threw herself upon him, sighed deeply once or twice and died.

“When they arrived back and reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he exclaimed, ‘Was there not one man of mercy among you?’”

THE DISPATCH OF KHĀLID B. AL-WALĪD TO DESTROY AL-ʿUZZĀ.

Ibn Jarir stated that its destruction occurred five days before the end of Ramaḍān that year.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then dispatched Khalīd b. al-Walīd to al-ʿUzza. There was a building at a palm-grove that Quraysh, Kināna and Muṭrar revered. Its custodians and guardians were of Banū Shaybān, of Banū Sulaym, allies of Banū Ḥashim. When the Sulami who was its guardian heard that Khalīd was coming, he hung his sword upon the Goddess and hurried away up the mountain where she stood, saying, ‘O Azz, make an all-out attack on Khalīd; throw aside your veil and roll up your sleeves!”

O 'Azz, if you don't kill that man, Khalid, then you will meet swift punishment or convert to Islam!

"When Khalid reached there he destroyed it, then returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Al-Waqidi and others related that when he arrived there, it was five days prior to the end of Ramadzn. Having smashed it, he returned and reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked him, "And what was it you saw?" "I saw nothing," he replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then sent him back and when he arrived there he saw a black female emerge from the temple, her hair dishevelled and wailing. He then put her to the sword and spoke the verse, 'O 'Uzza, and such is for disbelief, and not glorifying God; I see that God has indeed disgraced you.'

He then went on to lay waste to that temple in which she had been. He also confiscated the valuables inside it, may God be pleased with him and give him pleasure. He then returned and informed the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said, 'That was al-'Uzza; she'll not be worshipped again.'

Al-Bayhaqi stated that the jurist Muhammad b. Abü Bakr informed him, quoting Muhammad b. Abü Ja'far, quoting Ahmad b. 'Ali, quoting Abū Kurayb, from Ibn Fuḍayl, from al-Walī b. Jamā', from Abū al-Ṭufayl, who said, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had conquered Mecca, he sent Khalid b. al-Walīd out to al-Nakhla, where al-'Uzza was. It consisted of a shrine positioned above three acacia trees. He cut down the trees and destroyed the shrine and returned and reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS), but he told him, "Go back; you have done nothing."

Khalid did so and when the temple guardians saw him they hurried off up into the mountain, saying, "O 'Uzza, cut him down! O 'Uzza, disgrace him! If you don't, you'll have to die!"

When Khalid reached there he found a naked female with dishevelled hair piling dirt over her head and face. He put her to the sword and killed her, then returned and reported to the Prophet (SAAS), who commented, "Yes, that was al-'Uzza."

Chapter: On the period spent by the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Mecca.

There is no dispute over his having remained for the rest of Ramadzn, shortening the prayers and breaking the fast. This is used by some scholars to substantiate their view that travellers who do not resolve upon remaining may shorten the prayers and fast for 18 days, according to one view. According to the other, it is determined by the place where he is.

Al-Bukhari stated that Abū Nu'aym related to him, quoting Sufyān, quoting Qabīsa, quoting Sufyān, from Yahyā b. Abū Ishāq, from Anas b. Malik, who said, “We stayed 10 days with the Messenger of God (SAAS), shortening the prayers.”

The other scholars related this from numerous lines, from Yahyā b. Abū Ishāq al-Ḫaḍrami al-Baṣrī, from Anas, in similar words.

Al-Bukhārī went on to state that it was related to him by ʿAbdān, quoting ʿAbd Allāh, quoting ʿĀṣim, from Ḫikrīma, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained there for 19 days, performing prayers consisting of two rakʿās.”

Al-Bukhārī related it also from another line. Al-Bukhārī and Abū Ḥusayn gave longer versions of both. Abū Daʿūd, al-Tirmidhī, and Ibn Māja (related it) from a hadith of Ḫāṣim b. Sulaymān al-Ḫawal, from Ḫikrīma, from Ibn ʿAbbās.

In the text of Abū Daʿūd the period of the stay was 17 days.

ʿAbdān related to us, quoting Ahmad b. Shihāb, from ʿĀṣim, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “We stayed with the Messenger of God (SAAS), while travelling for 19 days, shortening the prayers.”

Ibn ʿAbbās stated, “We therefore shorten the prayer if we stop over for less than 19 days. If our stay is longer, however, we complete the prayer normally.”

Abū Daʿūd stated that ʾIbrāhīm b. Mūsā related to him, quoting Ibn Ṭāhīya, quoting ʿĀli b. Zayd, from Abū Naḍra, from Imrān b. Ḫusayn as follows, “I went on military expeditions with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and was present with him at the conquest. He remained (there) for 18 nights performing prayers consisting of only two rakʿās, saying, ‘You residents, pray four rakʿās; we are travellers.’”

Al-Tirmidhī related it thus from a hadith of ʿĀli b. Zayd b. ʿAdān and he said, “This is a hadith that is hasan, ‘good.’”

Abū Daʿūd then related from a hadith of Muḥammad b. Ḫishāq, from al-Zuhrī, from Ṭubayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained there 15 nights performing shortened prayers. He then said, ‘More than one authority quoted this from Ibn Ishāq without reference to Ibn ʿAbbās.’”

Chapter: On the regulations issued by the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Mecca.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Maslama related to him, from Mālik, from Ibn Shihāb, from ʿUrwa, from Ḫiṣa, from the Prophet (SAAS) (the following hadith). And al-Layth stated that ʿYūnūs related to him, from Ibn Shihāb, quoting ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr who quoted Ḫiṣa as saying, “ʿUtba b. Abū Waqqās promised his brother Saʿd that he would gain custody of the son of Zamʿa’s slave girl. ʿUtba had said that the boy was his own son. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived in Mecca during its conquest, Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās took the boy to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and ‘Abd b. Zam‘a went with him.

"Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās stated, 'This is the son of my brother; he has sworn to me that he is his son.' ‘Abd b. Zam‘a said, 'Messenger of God, this is my brother; he is Zam‘a’s son and was born on his bed.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) looked at the son of Zam‘a’s slave girl and found him to be very like ‘Utba b. Abū Waqqās. He then said, ‘He is your brother, ‘Abd b. Zam‘a, because he was born on his (your father’s) bed.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said (to his wife), 'And you shall put on your veil before him, Sawda!' This was because of the resemblance he saw in him to ‘Utba b. Abū Waqqās.'"

Ibn Shihāb went on to quote ‘A’isha as saying, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘A child relates to a bed; for a fornicator there is a stone.'” Ibn Shihāb stated, “Abū Hurayra used to affirm this hadith in public.”

Al-Bukhārī also related this, as did Muslim, Abū Dā‘ūd and al-Tirmidhī, from Qutayba, from al-Layth. Ibn Mājah (also) gave it from his hadith. Al-Bukhārī is alone in relating this from a hadith of Mālik, from al-Zuhri.

Al-Bukhārī went on to state that Muhammad b. Muqātit related to him, quoting ‘Abd Allah, quoting Yūnus, from Ibn Shihāb, who said, “Urwa b. al-Zubayr informed me that while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was active on the conquest of Mecca, a woman committed theft and her family asked Usāma b. Zayd to intercede (and seek clemency) for her. When Usāma brought the matter up with him, the face of the Messenger of God (SAAS) changed colour and he demanded, ‘Are you talking to me about a punishment legally prescribed by God?’ Usāma replied, ‘Please seek God’s forgiveness for me, Messenger of God!’

"That evening the Messenger of God (SAAS) arose to make an address. He gave praise to God and went on to say, ‘Now then, peoples before you were ruined because if one of them of noble birth were to steal, he would be excused, whereas if a person without power were to do so the penalties of the law would be applied against him. By Him in whose hand rests the soul of Muhammad, if Fatīma, the daughter of Muhammad were to steal, I would cut off her hand!’

“He then ordered that the hand of the woman be amputated. Thereafter she was truly repentant and married.”

‘A’isha said, “After that she would sometimes come and visit and I would pass on requests from her to the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Al-Bukhārī also related this in another section (of his work) and Muslim did so from a hadith of Ibn Wahb, from Yūnus, from al-Zuhri, from ‘Urwa, from ‘A’isha.

121. Sawda was the daughter of Zam‘a. Since it was obvious from the boy’s appearance that he was not Zam‘a’s son, Sawda was not his relative and therefore should not appear before him unveiled.

122. That is, a child is to be identified with the parents with whom he is. Stoning to death is the penalty in Islam for fornication.
In the sahih collection of Muslim there is a hadith of Sabra b. Ma'bad al-Juhani which says, “At the time of the conquest of Mecca, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told us to engage in al-mura, temporary marriage, when he entered (the town) but by the time he left it he forbade it (the practice).”

In one account the Prophet (SAAS) is quoted as saying, “It is certainly harām, forbidden; it is harām from this day and on to the day of resurrection.”

In an account in the hadith collection of Ahmad (b. Hanbal), the musnad, as well as in the sunan, it is stated that this (the prohibition of muḥār marriages) came at the hijrat al-wada‘, the “farewell pilgrimage”. But God knows best.

In the sahih collection of Muslim, it is stated, on a line of transmission from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from Yūnus b. Muḥammad, from ʿAbd al-Wahīd b. Ziyād, from Abū al-Umays, from Iyyās b. Salama b. Salama b. al-Akwa‘, from his father, who said, “In the year of awātīs, the Messenger of God (SAAS) condoned temporary marriage with women of three nights duration, but he then forbade it.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “The ‘year of awātīs’ means the year of the conquest.” This and the hadith of Sabra are identical.

I note that those who establish its prohibition in the expedition against Khaybar say that it was twice made permissible and twice prohibited. Al-Shafi‘ī and others give texts to this effect.

The practice is also said to have been both declared permissible and prohibited on more than two occasions. But God knows best. It is also said to have been prohibited only once, on this occasion under discussion, at the conquest of Mecca.

It is also said to have been declared permissible only in case of al-darara, “necessity”; on the basis of this, if necessity exists, it, al-mura, is made permissible. This view is attributed to Imām Ahmad.

It is also said that the practice was not absolutely forbidden, but should be considered ṣalā al-ibāha, “permissible”. This is well-known as the position of Ibn ʿAbbās and his companions, as well as that of a group of the Companions (of the Messenger of God (SAAS)). Discussion of this occurs in the work al-Ahkām.

Division.

Imām Ahmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting Ibn Jurayj, quoting ʿAbd Allah b. ʿUthmān b. Khuthaym, (who said) that Muḥammad b. al-ʿAwad b. Khalaf related to him that his father, al-ʿAwad, saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) accepting pledges of allegiance on the day of the conquest. He said, ‘He was seated with Mt. al-Qarn facing him and was accepting the people for their Islam and their shahāda.’ I asked, ‘What is meant by shahāda?’ He replied, ‘Muḥammad b. al-ʿAwad b. Khalaf related that he received their pledge of allegiance (on their expression of) faith in God and their testimony that “there is no god but God, and that Muḥammad is His servant and His messenger.”’”

Ahmad was alone in giving this.
Al-Bayhaqi stated, “People high and low came to him, men and women both, and he accepted their (affirmation of) Islam and their (recitation of the) shahada.

Ibn Jarir stated, “People then assembled in Mecca to pledge allegiance in Islam to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He was seated before them, so I have been told, on Mt. al-Ṣafā, with ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb below where he sat. He accepted (their statements) of total obedience to the best of their ability to God and to His messenger.

“When he had finished receiving the pledges of the men, he accepted those of the women. Among them was Hind, daughter of ʿUtba, fully veiled and apologetic in her speech for what she had done to Hamza. She feared that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would punish her for that. When the women came up to the Messenger of God (SAAS), for him to accept their allegiance, he told them ‘Pledge to me that you will not associate anything else with God.’ Hind commented, ‘Well, I swear, you’re making demands of us different from those applied to the men!’

“He went on, ‘And do not steal!’ She responded, ‘I swear by God, I did occasionally steal a little money from Abū Sufyān; I really didn’t know whether that was permissible for us or not.’ Abū Sufyān, who was a witness to what she was saying, said, ‘You are absolved for whatever you took in the past.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, ‘You must be Hind, daughter of ʿUtba?’ ‘Yes, I am,’ she replied. ‘Please forgive what is now past, may God forgive you.’

“And you women must swear not to commit adultery,’ the Messenger of God (SAAS) went on.

‘Does a free woman commit adultery?’ Hind asked.

‘And do not kill your children,’ he continued. She responded, ‘Should we raise them from birth, then kill them when grown? You and they know best about this!’ At this ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb laughed uncontrollably.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘And you shall not make up slanderous and disgraceful stories.’ ‘Well’, Hind replied, ‘inventing slander is certainly ugly; a little exaggeration is better!’

‘And you must not disobey me,’ he went on. Hind responded, ‘To do good!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said to ʿUmar, ‘Accept their pledge. And may God forgive them. For God is forgiving, merciful.’”

123. That is, a woman who is not a slave—i.e. “does a woman of good birth (or high standing)”.

124. According to al-Ṭabarī’s account, Hind responded to this question by saying, “I brought them up when they were little and you killed them on the day of Badr when they were grown up, so you are the one to know about them!” (Quoted in Guillaume, op. cit. p.553.)

125. This exchange appears in different form in al-Ṭabarī’s account. According to it, the exchange was as follows, “You shall not disobey me in carrying out orders to do good.” She said, “We should not have sat all this time if we wanted to disobey you in such orders!” Quoted in Guillaume, op. cit. p.553.
Qārma then accepted their pledges, for the Messenger of God (SAAS) never shook hands with women. Indeed, the only women he ever touched were those God had made lawful for him, or who were mahram for him.

It is established in both sahih collections, from ‘A‘isha, may God be pleased with her, that she said, “No, I swear, the hand of the Messenger of God (SAAS) never touched the hand of any woman.” In one account the wording is, “And he only ever accepted allegiance verbally from them.” And he would say, “Whatever I say to one woman, is just what I would say to 100 women.”

In both sahih collections it is reported from ‘A‘isha that Hind, daughter of Utba, the wife of Abū Sufyān, came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, “O Messenger of God, Abū Sufyān is a stingy man. He does not give me enough to cover expenses for myself and for my children. Would it be wrong for me to take some of his money without his knowledge?” He replied, “You may fairly take from his funds enough for yourself and your children.”

Al-Bayhaqi related through Yahyā b. Bukayar, from al-Layth, from Yūnus, from Ibn Shihāb, from Urwa, from ‘A‘isha, that Hind, daughter of Utba, said, “Messenger of God, there used to be nothing hidden on the face of the earth that I wanted more than that your supporters be humiliated. But now there’s nothing hidden in the back of the earth that I want more than that your supporters be successful.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, “And what else, by Him who holds Muḥammad’s soul in His hand?” She said, “Messenger of God, Abū Sufyān is a stingy man. Would it be wrong for me to provide food from what he owns?” “No, but do so bil-ma‘rif; ‘fairly’.”

Al-Bukhārī related this from Yahyā b. Bukayar in similar terms. Material relating to the acceptance of Islam by Abū Sufyān is given above.

Abū Dā’ud stated that Uthmān b. Abū Shayba related to him, quoting Jarir, from Mānṣūr, from Mujahid, from Tāwūs, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “On the day of the conquest of Mecca, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘(Now) there is no hijra, but there is jihād, “striving for God’s cause”, and niyya, “intentions”. If you are fought, then fight back.’”

Al-Bukhārī related it from ‘Uthmān b. Abū Shayba, and Muslim did so from Yāḥyā b. Yahyā, from Jarir.

Imām Aḥmad stated that it was related to him by ‘Affān, quoting Wahb, quoting Ibn Tāwūs, from his father, from Ṣafwān b. Umayya, who said that he was told, “that only those who migrated will enter paradise”. So I (the father of Tāwūs?) said, “I’ll not go home until I ask the Messenger of God (SAAS) what it was he was asked. So I went to him, told him of this and he responded, ‘There is no hijra after the conquest of Mecca. However, there is jihād and niyya; and if you are fought, then fight back.’”

Aḥmad is alone in giving this.

126. That is, in a degree of consanguinity to him that precluded marriage.
Al-Bukhari stated, “Muhammad b. Abū Bakr related to us, quoting al-Fudayl b. Sulaymān, quoting ʿĀṣim, from Abū ʿUthmān al-Nahdi, from Mujāshiʾ b. Masʿūd, who said, ‘I went with Abū Maʿṣūm to the Prophet (SAAS) so that he could make a pledge to him to make the ḥijra. He replied, “The ḥijra is over,127 (reserved) for those who did it. I accept his pledge of allegiance to Islam and for the jihād.”’

“I met Abū Maʿṣūm and asked him (about this) and he replied, ‘Mujāshiʾ spoke the truth.’”

Khalid stated, from Abū ʿUthmān, from Mujāshiʾ, that he brought his brother Mujālid with him.

Al-Bukhari stated that ʿAmr b. Khalid related to him, quoting Zuhayr, quoting ʿĀṣim, from Abū ʿUthmān, who said, “Mujāshiʾ related to me as follows, ‘After the conquest of Mecca, I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) with my brother and said, “Messenger of God, I’ve brought you my brother for you to accept his pledge for the ḥijra.” He replied, “Those (credited with) performing the ḥijra, with all its rewards, have gone.” “For what will you accept his pledge, then?” I asked. “I will accept his pledge of allegiance to Islam, to faith and to the jihād.”’

“I later met with Abū Maʿṣūm, who was the elder of them, and asked him (about it). He replied, “Mujāshiʾ spoke the truth.””

Al-Bukhari also stated that Muhammad b. Bashshār related to him, quoting Ghuḍar, quoting Shuʿba, from Abū Bishr, from Mujāhid, who said, “I said to Ibn ʿUmar, ‘I want to migrate to Syria.’ He replied, ‘There is no ḥijra; however, do go and present yourself. You’ll either find something or just return.’”

Abū al-Nadr stated that Shuʿba related to him, quoting Abū Bishr who said that he heard Mujāhid say, “I asked Ibn ʿUmar and he said, ‘There’s no ḥijra now’ – or ‘after the Messenger of God (SAAS).’” The rest of the hadith is as above.

Ishaq b. Yazid related to us, quoting Yahyā b. Ḥamza, quoting Abū ʿAmr al-Awzāʿī, from ʿAbd b. Abū Lubāba, from Mujāhid b. Jubayr, that ʿAbd Allah b. ʿUmar said, “There is no ḥijra after the conquest.”

Al-Bukhari stated that Ishaq b. Yazid related to him, quoting Yahyā b. Ḥamza, quoting al-Awzāʿī, from ʿAbd b. Abū Rabah, who said, “I visited ʿAʾishā with ʿUbayd b. ʿUmayr who asked her about the ḥijra. She replied, ‘There is no ḥijra now. The believers used to flee, each one singly with his religion, to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, and to His messenger, fearing his faith might be subverted. Now God has rendered Islam victorious and the believer worships God wherever he wishes. However, there is jihād and niyya.’”

These accounts and anecdotes show that the ḥijra, whether already completed or in general, came to an end after the conquest of Mecca. This was because people

127. This implies that following the conquest of Mecca migration to join Islam was no longer valid. Previously participation in the ḥijra had been an action for which there would be reward.
had entered into God's religion in large numbers and Islam had become victorious and firmly based; and so there was no hijra any more.

This is so unless there might be some circumstances arising that necessitate hijra, due to the close presence of warfare and a lack of power to make the faith prevail over them; this would then necessitate hijra into the domain of Islam. This is a matter about which there is no dispute among scholars.

However, such a hijra would not be similar to that of prior to the conquest. Moreover, both jihād and infaq, "sacrifice", for God's cause are appropriate and desirable right up to Judgement Day, though not like that jihād and infaq that pertained to the conquest, that is the conquest of Mecca.

God, Almighty is He, stated, "Those of you who made sacrifices and fought prior to the conquest are not equivalent; those are higher in rank than those who made sacrifices and fought thereafter. But for both God has promised reward" (sūrat al-Hādīd; LVII, v. 10).

Imām ʿAḥmad stated that it was related to him by Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar, quoting Shuʿba, from ʿAmr b. Murra, from Abū al-Bakhtārī al-Ṭāʾī, from Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Khudart, who said, "When the verse, 'when God's victory and the conquest came' (sūrat al-Nay; CX, v. 1) was revealed, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) recited it to its end and then he said, 'The people are good and I and my Companions are good.' He then said, 'There is no hijra after the conquest, but there is jihād and niyya.'

"Marwān said to him (Abū ʿAṣīd), 'You have lied! With him there were Raflī b. Khadij and Zayd b. Thābit, seated with him on the bed.' Abū ʿAṣīd responded, 'If these two wanted, they would tell you it was so. But this one is afraid that you will withdraw his prestige with his people, while this other one is afraid you will withdraw the stipend he receives!'

"At this Marwān raised his whip to strike him and when the two men saw this, they said, 'He spoke the truth!'"

ʿAḥmad is alone in relating this.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Mūsā b. Ismāʿīl, quoting Abū ʿAwānā, from Abū Bishr, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbaṣ, who said, "Umar would take me in with the sheikhs who had been at Badr. One of them seemed annoyed and said, 'Why do you let him come in with us, when we have sons like him?' Umar replied, 'But you know who he is.' One day Umar invited them and I went in with them; I did not realize that he had only included me to show them something. Umar asked, 'What do you have to say about the statement of God, Almighty and Glorious, 'When God's victory and the conquest come'? One of the sheikhs replied, 'We are ordered to praise God and to seek His forgiveness if we are aided and given victory.' Others of them were silent, saying nothing. Umar asked, 'Is that what you say, Ibn ʿAbbaṣ?' 'No,' I replied. 'Well, what do you say?' he asked. I replied, 'This refers to the approach of death for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), of which God was informing him. (The phrase)
‘When God’s victory and the conquest come’ was a sign of your (the Prophet’s) death. And so, ‘give praise to your Lord and ask his forgiveness. He is ever willing to forgive’. At that ʿUmar said (to the sheikhs) ‘I do not know anything about it other than what he knows.’

Al-Bukhārī was alone in recounting this. This is related similarly on more than one line of transmission from Ibn ʿAbbās, all to the effect that he interpreted this verse as a reference to the approaching death of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Mujāhid, Abū al-ʿĀliyya al-Ḍabḥāk and others, including Ibn ʿAbbās and ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, may God be pleased with them both, also subscribed to this interpretation.

There is also a hadith given by ʿImām ʿAḥmad who quoted it through Muḥammad b. ʿUqayl, ʿĀṣār, and Saʿd b. Jubayr back to Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “When the verse, ‘When God’s victory and the conquest come’ the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘I have been given notice of my death’” — that is, that he would be taken away (by God) that year.”

ʿImām ʿAḥmad is alone in including in his chain of transmission ʿAtṭāb b. ʿAbd Muslim al-Khurasanī. This hadith has weakness noted by several imāms. In the text there is a phrase which is completely inappropriate. Namely, the statement that “he would be taken away that year”. This is foolish, because the conquest was in the year 8 AH, in Ramadan, as related above. This is something beyond dispute.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) died in Rahīm d-Awwal of 11 AH, again something beyond dispute.

Similar is the hadith related by al-Ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Qāsim al-Ṭabarānī, may God have mercy upon him, (who stated as follows), “Ibrāhīm b. ʿAḥmad b. ʿUmar al-Wakīl related to us, quoting his father, quoting Jaʿfar b. ʿAwn, from Abū al-Umays, from Abū Bakr b. Abū al-Jahm, from ʿAbd Allah b. `ayd Allah b. Urba, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, ‘The last sūra of the entire Qur’ān that was revealed in its entirety was, “When God’s victory and the conquest came.”’”

This is also unacceptable. Its chain of authorities is also problematic. It is likely that what is meant is that it is the last sūra of the Qur’ān that was revealed in its entirety. But God knows best.

We have sufficiently discussed interpretation of this noble sūra; and to God belong all praise and credit.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Sulaymān b. Ḥarb related to him, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Ayyāb, from Abū Qalāba, from ʿAmr b. Salama (who said) that Abū Qalāba asked him, “Won’t you meet him and ask him?” So I did meet him and did ask him. He replied, “We were at a water-source by which people passed and we would ask them, ‘What is wrong with the people? What is that man doing?’ They would reply, ‘He claims that God has sent him and revealed to him such-and-such.’ I would learn those words by heart and would feel as though they were implanted inside me. These Arabs were delaying their acceptance of Islam until the conquest. They would say, ‘Leave him for his own people to... take care of him! If he does overcome them, then he will be a prophet speaking the truth.'

“When the combat at the conquest occurred, each tribe hurried to accept Islam. My father accepted Islam before my tribe did. When he arrived back, he said, ‘I swear by God that I have come to you from the Prophet, in truth!’ He, (the Prophet (SAAS)) said, ‘Perform such-and-such a prayer at such-and-such a time. And when the time for prayer comes, then one of you should call the adhān, the summons to prayer. And then which ever one of you knows the Qurʾān best should lead the prayer.’ So they enquired but found no one who knew more Qurʾān than I did, because of what I had been learning from the passing caravans.

“And so they appointed me to lead them in prayer; I was six or seven years old at the time. I used to be dressed in a burda, a short, squared garment, and when I prostrated it would ride up (and expose me). A woman of the tribe asked, ‘Couldn’t you cover over for us the anus of your reciter?’ So they bought cloth and made a shirt for me. And nothing had ever made me so happy as that shirt did!”

Al-Bukhari is alone in recounting this; Muslim did not.

THE EXPEDITION AGAINST HAWĀZIN; THE BATTLE OF HŪNAYN.

God Almighty stated, “God aided you on many battlefields and at the battle of Hunayn, when your large numbers made you confident, but they were of no use to you and the earth was constrained all about you, spacious though it was! Then you turned back, retreating. Thereafter God sent down his sense of calm upon His messenger and upon the believers and He sent down forces which you did not see and He punished those who disbelieved; that is the reward of unbelievers. Then, after that, God will turn towards whomever He wishes; and God is Forgiving, Merciful” (sūrat al-Bārāʾ; IX, v.25–7).

Muhammad b. Ishaq b. Yasar related in his book that the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) against Hawazin came after the conquest, on the 5th of Shawwāl, 8 AH. He also claimed that the conquest took place ten days before the end of Ramaḍān, fifteen days before his departure against Hawazin.

This is related similarly from Ibn Masʿūd. Urwa b. al-Zubayr stated this, and ʿAbd b. ʿAbd al-Malik preferred it, as did Ibn Jarir in his history.

Al-Waqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth against Hawazin on the 6th day of Shawwāl and he reached Ḥunayn on the 10th of that month. Abū Bakr, ‘the Trusting’, stated, ‘We’ll not be defeated today because of size.” Then they were defeated; the first defeated were Bānt Sūlaym, then the Meccans, then the remainder of the force.”

128. The word used is sakmu; for discussion of this word, see Lane, op. cit. under sakana.
129. The implication is that the substantial numbers of the Muslims engaging would ensure victory.
Ibn Ishaq stated that when Hawazin heard about how God had conquered Mecca for the Messenger of God (SAAS), their leader, Malik b. Awf al-Nasri, gathered them together. All of Thaqif assembled with Hawazin and they were joined by Nasr and all Jusham, along with Sa'd b. Bakr and a few men of Banu Hilal. Of Qays Aylan, only these were present. Of Hawazin, (the clans of) Ka'b and Kilab did not attend and no noteworthy person of them was there. Among Banu Jusham there was Durayd b. al-Simma, an elderly sheikh who was capable of speaking advice and giving his knowledge of warfare; he was a man of very great experience. Thaqif had two leaders; in the Ahlzl there was Qarib b. al-Aswad b. Mansur b. Muattib. In Banu Malik there were Dhul-Khimar Subay b. al-Harith and his brother Ammar b. al-Harith. The overall command was under Malik b. Awf al-Nasri.

Ibn Ishaq’s account continued, “When he had made the decision to attack the Messenger of God (SAAS), he had the people bring their possessions along with their women and their children with them. When they halted at Auwas, his force gathered around him; among them was Durayd b. al-Simma in a kind of howdah in which he was borne along. When they halted, Durayd asked, ‘In which valley are you?’ ‘In Auwas,’ they replied. He commented, ‘A fine place for cavalry! It’s not hilly with rocks, nor is it soft ground. Why is it I hear the grunting of camels and the braying of donkeys, the crying of babies and the bleating of sheep?’ They replied that Malik had had the force bring their possessions, women and children with them. ‘And where is Malik?’ asked Durayd. ‘He is here,’ they told him and summoned him.

“Durayd then said to him, ‘Malik, you have become your people’s leader and this is a day that will greatly influence the future. Why is it I hear the grunting of camels, the braying of donkeys, the crying of babies and the bleating of sheep?’ He replied, ‘I had the people bring their children and possessions with them.’ ‘Why was this?’ Durayd asked. Malik replied, ‘I wanted every man to have his family and possessions behind him so that he would fight for them.’

“On hearing this, Durayd made a sound of disapproval and commented, ‘You cowardly sheep grazer! Would anything ever turn around someone in retreat? If the battle is to go well, it will be only men with swords and lances who do you good. If the battle goes badly, you’ll be disgraced with regards to your family and possessions anyway.’

“Durayd then asked, ‘What have Ka'b and Kilab done?’ ‘No one from them is present,’ he replied. ‘So then skill and courage are absent! If it were to be a day of fine, noble deeds, Ka'b and Kilab would not miss it. I wish you had done the same as them! Who is attending with you?’ They told him that Amr b. Amir and Awf b. Amir were present. He responded, ‘Well, those two branches of Amir will do neither good nor harm.’ He then said, ‘Malik, you’ve done nothing (good) by sending ahead the main force of Hawazin to face up to the cavalry.’

“Durayd then told Malik b. Awf, ‘Send them up high to some inaccessible area of their people’s territory, then meet the turncoat apostates on horse. If the battle goes in your favour, then your people behind you can join you. If it goes against you, then you will have saved your families and possessions.’

‘Malik replied, ‘By God, I’ll not do that! You’ve grown old and so has your mind!’ He went on, ‘Hawāzin, either you obey me, or I’ll press myself down on this sword until it comes out through my back!’ He hated Durayd to have any say or credit. They said they would obey him.

‘Durayd then said, ‘This is a battle in which I did not participate, nor did I miss it.’ He then spoke the following verses,

‘How I wish I were a youth once more! I would speed forth into the battle
I would lead on long-maned horses as though they were young donkeys.’

‘Malik then told everyone, ‘When you see them, then break your swords from their sheaths and charge at them as one man!”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Umayya b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Uthmān related to me that he was told that Malik b. ‘Awf sent out some of his men as scouts. When they came back their joints had become dislocated. ‘What happened to you?’ he asked them. They replied, ‘We saw some white men mounted on piebald horses. And all of a sudden, we were afflicted as you see us now.’ And, by God, even that did not deter him from his plan.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard about them, he sent out ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Ḥadrad al-Aslami with orders to infiltrate them and report back. He did so, and when he had learned of their plan to wage war against the Messenger of God (SAAS) and heard (of the role of) Malik and Hawāzin and their intentions, he came back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and so informed him.

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had decided to go forth against Hawāzin, he was told that Ṣafwān b. Umayya had a stock of coats of armour and weapons. He therefore sent to Ṣafwān – still at that time a polytheist – and asked him to loan his equipment for the Muslims to use against their enemies next day.

‘Ṣafwān asked, ‘Are you going to take them (from me) by force, Muḥammad?’ He replied, ‘No. They will be a loan and guaranteed for return to you.’ ‘I’ve no objection to that,’ he responded. He then gave him 100 coats of mail and sufficient weapons. Some maintain that the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him also to transport the equipment and that he agreed.”

This is the account as given, without a full line of transmission, by Ibn Ishāq.

Yūnus b. Bukayr narrated this from Ibn Ishāq, from ‘Aṣim b. ‘Umar b. Qatāda, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh, from his father. And also from ‘Amr b. Shu‘ayb, al-Zuhri, ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. ‘Amr b. Ḥazm and others, the account of Ḥunayn is given similarly to above. The story of the armour is also as above. In that account, when Ibn Abū Ḥadrad returned and reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS) about Hawāzin, ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb questioned his veracity. Ibn Abū Ḥadrad responded, ‘If you call my honesty into question, ‘Umar, you’d probably call truth itself into question!’ ‘Umar asked, ‘Do you hear what he is saying, Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘You were going astray, but God gave you guidance.’”

Imām Alī al-Madd stated that it was related to him by Yazid b. Hārūn, quoting Shurayk, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Rāfiʿ, from Umayya b. Ṣafwān b. Umayya, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) borrowed armour from (Ibn) Umayya at the battle of Ḥunayn. (Ibn) Umayya responded, ‘Are you taking them by force, Muḥammad?’ He replied, ‘No, it’s a loan, return guaranteed.’

He went on to relate that some of the armour was lost and the Messenger of God (SAAS) offered to make good on his guarantee of their return and that (Ibn) Umayya responded, “Today it’s Islam I want, Messenger of God.”

Abū Dā‘ūd and al-Nasāʾī related it from a ḥadīth of Yazid b. Hārūn.

Al-Nasāʾī included it from an account of Isrāʾīl, from ‘Abd al-ʿAzīz b. Rāfiʿ, from Ibn Abū Mulayka, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Ṣafwān b. Umayya, to the effect that the Messenger of God (SAAS) borrowed coats of mail from Ṣafwān.

He also related it from a ḥadīth of Hushaym, from Hajjaj from ʿAṭṭāʾ, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) borrowed coats of mail from Ṣafwān.

He also related it from a ḥadīth of Hushaym, from Hajjāj, from ʿAṭṭāʾ, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) borrowed coats of armour and horses from Ṣafwān. He related the remainder of the ḥadīth as above.

Abū Dā‘ūd stated that it was related to him by Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, quoting Jarir, from ‘Abd al-ʿAzīz b. Rāfiʿ, from people of the family of ‘Abd Allāh b. Ṣafwān, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, “Ṣafwān, do you have any weapons?” Ṣafwān responded, “As a willing loan or by force?” “As a loan,” he replied. Ṣafwān then loaned him between 30 and 40 coats of mail and the Messenger of God (SAAS) attacked Ḥunayn. When the polytheists were defeated, Ṣafwān’s armour was collected and some was found to be missing. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked Ṣafwān, “We have lost some of your armour. Shall we pay you compensation?” “No, Messenger of God,” he replied. “There is now in my heart what was not present that day.”

This is also mursal, incomplete in its line of transmission.

Ibn Ishaq continued, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went forth accompanied by 2,000 Meccans and 10,000 of his men who had come out with him and through whom God had conquered Mecca. They totalled 12,000 men.”

I note that according to the statements of Urwa, al-Zuhri and Mūsā b. Uqba, the total number of the 2 armies with which he faced Hawāzin was 14,000, since he had brought 12,000 to Mecca, in their view, and 2,000 of the al-ṭulaqāt had been joined to these.

130. The word means “those set free”. The term is applied to the Meccans who remained polytheists until the conquest of Mecca.

I note that ʿAṭṭāb was at that time approximately 20 years of age.

Ibn Ishaq related further how the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had proceeded on to meet Hawāzin, and he then quoted the qasīda, the ode, of al-ʿAbbās b. Mirdās al-Sulami on that activity. Some of its verses were,

"Take to all Hawāzin, their high and low, a message from me, giving them clear advice:

'I think that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) will attack you in the morning with his army.

Among them will be your brother Sulaym who will not let you leave, along with the Muslims, God’s servants, of Ghassān.

On his right flank there will be Bānū Asād, and the well-tried tribes of Bās and Dhūbyān.

The earth will almost shake with fear at Him, and in his vanguard will be Aws and Qutbān.’"

Ibn Ishaq pointed out that Aws and Qutbān were clans of Muzayna.

He went on, "Al-Zuhri related to me, from Sīnān b. Abū Sīnān al-Dīlī, from Abū Wāqīd al-Laythi, that al-Ḥārith b. Mālik said, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Hunayn, having only recently emerged from the jihālīyya.

‘We travelled on with him to Hunayn. The Quraysh unbelievers and other Arabs revered a great green tree called Dhat Anwāt; they would go to it each year and hang on it their weapons, make sacrifices near it and spend the day there.

‘As we travelled on with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), we saw a great green lote tree and we called out from all sides of the path, ‘O Messenger of God, establish for us a Dhat Anwāt such as they have.’ He responded, ‘Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great!’ By Him who holds my soul in His hand, you speak as did the people of Moses to him, ‘Make for us a god like the god they have!’ You are an ignorant, foolish people! These are sunān, ancient practices! You would re-establish the ancient practices of your forebears!’"
b. al-Ḥanḍāliyya related to him, that when they went forth with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to perform the prayer at al-ṣuhr, noontime, a horseman arrived, who said, "Messenger of God, I went on ahead of you, went up Mt. such-and-such and Mt. such-and-such and then I came across Hawāzīn in their entirety, complete with their sedān-born women, their livestock camels and their sheep, all gathered at Ḥunayn.

"At this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) smiled and said, 'Tomorrow all that will be booty for the Muslims, if God will it!' He then asked, 'Who will stand guard for us tonight?' Anas b. Abī Manḥad replied, 'I will, Messenger of God!' "Then mount up," he told him.

"He went and mounted a mare, then returned to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who asked him, 'Go on up into this defile till you reach its top; we don’t want to be exposed to danger from ahead tonight.'

"Next morning, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went out to the place for prayer and performed two rakʿas of prayer. He then asked, 'Have you perceived anything from your mounted guard?' When they said they had not, he made a call for prayer and performed it, glancing up towards the defile until it was over. He then announced, 'Good news! Your horseman has come!' As he said this he was looking through the tree into the defile and the mounted man then appeared and stopped in front of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He reported that he had gone right up to the top of the defile, as ordered by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), that he had looked out over both defiles when morning came and had not seen anyone. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked him, 'Did you dismount at all during the night?' He replied, 'No; except to pray or to relieve myself.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, 'You have done your duty; don’t worry about not doing it hereafter!'"

Chapter: On the conduct of the battle; how at first there was flight and then it ended in favour of the pious.

Yūnūs b. Bukayr and others quoted Muḥammad b. Ishāq b. Yaṣār as saying, "Āṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda related to me, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Jábir b. ʿAbd Allāh, from his father, who said, 'Malik b. 'Awf went forth with others to Ḥunayn, where he arrived before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They prepared and positioned themselves for battle in the narrows and twists of the valley.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his force arrived in the valley in the half-light of dawn. As the men descended the enemy cavalry appeared before them and bore down on them. Our men broke ranks and fled, no one caring about the others."
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) moved away to the right, calling out, "Where are you going, men? Come to me; I am the Messenger of God! I am Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allāh!"

"But it did no good. The camels were all over one another. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw the state of the men..."

With him a group of men of his family: ʿĀli b. Ṭalīb, Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥāriṯ, ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and his brother Raḥīma b. al-Ḥāriṯ b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and al- Faḍl b. al-ʿAbbās. And, it is said, al-Faḍl b. Abū Sufyān, Aymān b. Umm Aymān, Usāma b. Zayd. Some include with them Qutham b. al-ʿAbbās, along with a group of muḥājirīn, including Abū Bakr and ʿUmar.

"Al-ʿAbbās was gripping the mouth-ring of his white donkey that he was riding, having struck it to open its mouth."

He (Ibn Ishāq) continued, "There was one man of Hawāzin mounted on a red camel who carried a black banner on the end of a long spear; he was ahead of and leading Hawāzin who were behind him. When he overtook someone, he would thrust his spear at him; if he missed the man, then he would raise his spear as a sign to those behind him and they would follow the man.

"While he was engaged in this, ʿĀli b. Ṭalīb fell upon him, accompanied by an ansārī. ʿĀli approached him from behind and struck the hocks of the camel and it fell on its rump. The ansārī then leapt on the man and gave him a blow that severed his foot, along with half his leg, so that he fell from his saddle.

"The men went on fighting hard and when those who had fled in defeat returned, they found bound prisoners assembled near the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Isām Aḥmad narrated this from Yaʿqīb b. Ibrāhīm al-Zuhrī, from his father, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq.

Ibn Ishāq continued, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) turned to Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥāriṯ b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, who was one of those who had stood fast that day and had well and truly accepted Islam and was holding the back of the saddle of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked, 'Who is this?' Abū Sufyān replied, 'I'm your mother's son, Messenger of God.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "When the enemy had been defeated, some of the Arab toughs began to reveal their ill-will. Abū Sufyān Ṣakhir b. Ḥarb (whose acceptance of Islam was still fresh and who was still that day carrying divining arrows) said,

131. The Arabic printed text is defective at this point. The account, as given in Guillaume's translation, continues as follows: "The men ran away, except that a number of Muhājīrīn and Ansār and men of his family remained with the apostle. Of the Muhājīrīn who stood firm were Abū Bakr and Ḫārīṯ; of his family..." From this point the Arabic printed text seems intact, as above.

132. At this point the Arabic text seems defective and ill-ordered. In Ibn Ishāq's account as translated by Guillaume, this quotation is part of a separate passage quoting the words of the father of Kathīr b. al-ʿAbbās. See Guillaume, op. cit. p.509.
Their defeat won't end before the sea!' Kalada (or Jābara) b. al-Ḥanbal, who was there with his brother — on his mother's side — Ṣafwān b. Umayya (he still being a polytheist, during the respite granted him by the Messenger of God (SAAS)) cried out, 'Magic is definitely useless now!' Ṣafwān responded, 'Be silent, may God close your mouth! I swear, I'd sooner have a man of Quraysh be my leader than any of Hawāzin!'"

Imām ʿAbd Allāh b. Quraysh stated that it was related to him by ʿAffān b. Muslim, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭalḥa, from Anas b. Mālik, that, "Hawāzin brought their women, children, camels and livestock with them to the battle of Hunayn and lined them up so that they would outnumber (the supporters of) the Messenger of God (SAAS). And when the forces met, the Muslims did retreat, as God Almighty stated. And the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'O ansār, I am God's servant and His messenger.' And God defeated the polytheists; and he was neither struck by a sword, nor pierced by a lance."

The account went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated that day, 'Whoever kills an unbeliever shall own the booty from him.' Ṭalḥa killed that day 20 men and took booty from them.

"ʿAbū Qatāda stated, 'O Messenger of God, I struck a man on his shoulder vein; he was wearing armour, but I was forced away from him. Would you see who took it? At that a man arose and said, 'I'm the one who took it. You should compensate him for it and award it to me.' Whenever a request was made to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he either agreed to it or remained silent. This time he remained silent and ʿUmar spoke up, 'I swear, God would not compensate one of God's lions and give it to you!' The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'ʿUmar has spoken the truth.'"

He (Imām ʿAbd Allāh b. Quraysh) said, "ʿAbū Ṭalḥa met Umm Sulaym who had a dagger with her. ʿAbū Ṭalḥa asked, 'What is that?' She replied, 'If one of the polytheists comes near me, I'll stick him in the stomach!' ʿAbū Ṭalḥa commented, 'Did you hear what Umm Sulaym said?' The Messenger of God (SAAS) laughed and Umm Sulaym asked, 'Messenger of God, execute those ḥulaq̣, Meccan converts, at our rear who deserted you!' He replied, 'God has already done well and enough, Umm Sulaym.'"

Muslim also narrated from him the story of Umm Sulaym's dagger, and Abū Dārūt related it along with a statement from him (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) that, "Whoever kills someone (an enemy) will have the man's booty." Both these authorities quoted from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd Allāh b. Quraysh.

The comment given above as ʿUmar's is controversial; it is widely believed to have been made by Abū Bakr, "the Trusting".

Imām ʿAbd Allāh b. Quraysh stated that ʿAbd al-Šamad b. ʿAbd al-Wārith related to him, quoting his father, quoting Nāfiʿ Abū Ghalib, (who said) that he was present when Anas b. Mālik was asked, by al-ʿĀlā b. Ziyād al-ʿAdawi, "Abū Ḥamza, what age was the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he received his mission?" He replied that he was 40 years of age. 'And what happened then?' he was asked. He replied, ‘Thereafter he was 10 years in Mecca and 10 in Medina. When he had completed 60 years of age, God took him to Himself.’ He was asked, ‘At that time, what was he like, relative to the age of others?’ ‘He was the most youthful of men, handsome and well-built,’ he replied.

‘Al-‘Alî then asked, ‘Abû Ḥamza, did you ever participate in a military expedition with the Messenger of God (SAAS)?’ He replied, ‘Yes, I was on the expedition to al-Ḥunayn with him. The polytheists came forth and attacked us early in the morning and soon we saw our cavalry round at our rear. Among the polytheists there was one man who was really devastating us. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw this, he dismounted and then God defeated them and they retreated. When he saw that victory was won, he had them brought to him as captives, one by one, and they would pledge allegiance in Islam to him. One of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS) said, ‘I have sworn that if that man who had been devastating us were brought, I would behead him.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained silent, and the man referred to was brought up. When the man saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, ‘Messenger of God, I turn in repentance to God!’ He refrained from accepting the man’s pledge of allegiance so that his Companion could fulfil his vow. The latter kept looking over at the Messenger of God (SAAS), of whom he was in awe, waiting for him to tell him to kill the man. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw that he was not going to do anything, he accepted the prisoner’s pledge of allegiance. His Companion then asked, ‘What about my oath, Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘I’ve only refrained from accepting his oath till now so that you could fulfil your oath.’ The Companion asked, ‘Messenger of God, could you not have gestured to me?’ He replied, ‘It is not fitting for a prophet to gesture.’’”

Ahmad is alone in giving this.

Ahmad (also) stated that it was related to him by Yazid, quoting Ḥamīd al-Ṭawrī, from Anas b. Malik, who said, ‘One of the prayers spoken by the Prophet (SAAS) at the battle of Ḥunayn was, ‘O God, if You wish it, You will not be worshipped on earth after today!’”

The chain of authorities for this hadith is tripartite and meets the criteria of the two sheikhs. However, none of the compilers of the (canonical) collections included it with this line.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Muḥammad b. Bashshār, quoting Ghundar, quoting Shu’ba, from Abū Ishāq, who heard al-Banî b. Azīb being questioned by a man of Qays as to whether he and others had deserted the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Ḥunayn. He replied, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) had not fled. The Hawāzin were good archers. They fled when we attacked, but when we charged at the booty, they shot arrows at us. I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) on his white mule, its reins being held by Abū Sufyān, and the former was saying, ‘I am undoubtedly the Prophet!’”

133. That is, al-Bukhārī and Muslim.
Al-Bukhari also related this from Abū al-Walid, from Shu'ba, the Messenger of God's words having been,

"I am the Prophet, undoubtedly; I am the son of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib."

Al-Bukhari also stated that Isrā'īl and Zuhayr quoted this from Abū Ishāq, from al-Bara', with the addition of the words, "And then he dismounted from his mule."

Muslim and al-Nasā'i related it from Bandar. Muslim added Abū Mūsā to the chain. Both traced it back to Ghundar.

Muslim also related it from a hadith of Zakariyya' b. Abī Zā'ida, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Bara', who said that he then dismounted, calling for help and saying,

"I am the Prophet, undoubtedly; I am the son of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib. O God, send down Your help!"

Al-Bara' went on, "When the fighting became most intense, we would seek protection with the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ); those who were brave would imitate him."

Al-Bayhaqi related from various lines that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) said that day, "I am al-'Awtīk's' son."

Al-Ṭabarānī stated that it was related to him by 'Abbās b. al-Ḍaql al-ʿAsfātī, quoting 'Amr b. Ḥafṣ al-ʿWāṣṭī, quoting Hushaym, quoting Yahyā b. Saʿid, from 'Amr b. Saʿid b. al-ṣāṣ, from Shabbāba, from Ibn ʿĀṣim al-Sulami (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) said at the battle of al-Ḥunayn, "I am al-'Awtīk's son."

Al-Bukhari stated that 'Abd Allāh b. Yūsuf related to him, quoting Malik, from Yahyā b. Saʿid, from 'Amr b. Kāthir b. Aflah, from Abū Muhammad, freed-man of Abū Qatāda, from Abū Qatāda, who said, "We accompanied the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) into battle at Ḥunayn. When we clashed, the Muslims retreated. I saw one of the polytheists overpowering one of the Muslims, so I struck him with my sword from behind on his shoulder vein, cutting through his armour. But he charged at me and pinned me down so hard I felt near death. However, he died and so released me. I caught up with ʿUmar and asked, 'What's wrong with everyone?' 'It is God's decree,' he replied."

"Later they (the Muslims) returned (to the battle) and the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) sat and stated, 'Whoever killed one of the enemy and has a witness to it can claim the dead man's possessions.' So I arose and asked, 'Who will be my witness?' I then sat down. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) repeated what he had said, and again I arose, asking for someone to be my witness; and then I sat down. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) repeated his statement, and again I arose. He now asked, 'What is wrong, Abū Qatāda?' I related what I had done and a man then got up and said, 'He speaks the truth. I have the dead man's possessions, so compensate Abū Qatāda for me.' Abū Bakr then said, 'Absolutely not, by God! You cannot expect a lion of God to fight for God and His messenger, then for him to give you the booty he won!' The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'He (Abū Bakr) spoke the truth; give it back to him!' The man did so and I used it to purchase a piece of land from Banū Salama; it was the first money I earned after accepting Islam.'

The rest of the scholarly community, except al-Nasā'i, related this from a hadith of Yahyā b. Sa'īd.

Al-Bukhārī also stated that al-Layth b. Sa'īd related, quoting Yahyā b. Sa'īd, from 'Amr b. Kathir b. Aflah, from Abū Muḥammad, the freed-man of Abū Qatāda, who quoted Abū Qatāda as saying, “At the battle of Ḥunayn, I noticed one of the Muslims fighting a polytheist, while another of the polytheists was sneaking up behind the Muslims to kill him. So I charged at the second polytheist, who raised his hand to hit me, but I struck it and cut it off. However, he seized me and pulled me to himself so hard I feared (I would die). Then he went down, loosening his grip, and I pushed him away and killed him. After that the Muslims retired, as did I myself. Then I saw ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb amid the army and asked him, 'What's wrong with everyone?' He replied, 'It is God's decree.'

"After that the men returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS) (after defeating the enemy) and he announced, 'Whoever can provide proof of his having killed an enemy shall receive his (the dead man's) possessions.' So I stood up to look for some proof of my having killed an enemy, but since I could not see anyone who could testify for me, I sat down again. Then it seemed to me I should tell to the Messenger of God (SAAS) what had happened (and did so). One of the men sitting there said, 'I have the weapons belonging to the man slain to whom he is referring; give him compensation for me.' Abū Bakr said, 'Indeed not; he will not give anything to some little hyena of Quraysh what belongs to one of God's lions who fought for God and His messenger.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose and awarded it to me and I used it to buy a piece of land. It was the first property I earned."

Al-Bukhārī related this in various other places, as did Muslim. Both drew it from Qutayba, from al-Layth b. Sa'īd.

It is given above from an account of Nāfi' Abū Ghalīb, from Anas, that the man who spoke up on the occasion was ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. Perhaps he said it following Abū Bakr, or in substantiation or agreement of his words. Or there may have been some confusion over who spoke thus. God knows best.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated that al-Ḥākim informed him, quoting al-ʿAṣāmīn, quoting Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said that it was related to him by ʿAṣim b. ʿUmar, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥabīb, from his father Ḥabīb b. ʿAbd Allāh, who quoted the Messenger of God (SAAS), when he saw how people were behaving at the battle of Hunayn, as saying, "Abbas! Call out: 'O ansār! O people of the tree!'" (When he did so) they responded, "Labbayka! Labbayka! At Your service! At Your service!" The men then tried to turn their mounts, and when they failed to do so, they threw off their armour from around their necks, took their swords and shields and headed in the direction of his voice. Eventually some 100 of them were gathered about him and they made a stand and fought on. The first call he made was to the ansār, then another was made to (Banū) Khazraj. They were steadfast in the battle. The Messenger of God (SAAS) looked out at his mounted men and the fierce battle waging and commented, "The fires of war are really hot now!"

Al-Bayhaqi went on, "By the time all the force had returned around him, the prisoners were already bound, and there with them the Messenger of God (SAAS). God destroyed many of them and caused many to flee. He awarded to His messenger their possessions and children."

Ibn Lahi'a stated, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa, and Mūsā b. ʿUqba narrated in his military chronicle, from al-Zuhri, that after God had conquered Mecca for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he had rested, he went out against Hawāzin, accompanied by the people of Mecca, some mounted, others on foot. Even the women left too, walking; they did so not for religious reasons but to watch and to bring back the booty. And they would not have minded if the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men had lost.

They also stated that he was accompanied by Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb and Ṣafwān b. ʿUmayya. The wife of the latter was a Muslim, while he was still a polytheist. But they (the couple) had not been separated. They also stated that he was accompanied by Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb and Ṣafwān b. ʿUmayya. The wife of the latter was a Muslim, while he was still a polytheist. But they (the couple) had not been separated. Ibn Lahi'a stated, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa, and Mūsā b. ʿUqba narrated in his military chronicle, from al-Zuhri, that after God had conquered Mecca for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he had rested, he went out against Hawāzin, accompanied by the people of Mecca, some mounted, others on foot. Even the women left too, walking; they did so not for religious reasons but to watch and to bring back the booty. And they would not have minded if the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men had lost.
"People say that one of the Quraysh men passed by  Sa'fwan b. Umayya and said, 'I bring good news of the defeat of Muḥammad and his men. I swear, they will never recover.'  Sa'fwan asked, 'Are you telling me it's good news for the bedouin to win? I swear, I much prefer a man of Quraysh than a bedouin as my master.'  Sa'fwan was angry for this reason.

Urwa went on, 'Sa'fwan sent a slave of his ahead, telling him, 'Listen for who is making the war cry.' When he came back, he said, 'I heard them saying, "O Banū 'Abd al-Rahmān! O Banū 'Abd Allāh! O Banū 'Ubayd Allāh!"' He (Sa'fwan) said, 'Muḥammad has won! Those were their war cries.' The sources stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was in the thick of the battle, he stood up in his stirrups while he rode the mule and raised his hands praying to God, saying, 'O God, I appeal to You to fulfil Your promise to me. O God, it must not be that they defeat us!' He called for his men and urged them on, 'O men who were at the Ḥudaybiyya truce! O God! O God! Things are turning against Your prophet.' It is said that he incited them by saying, 'O ansār of God and of His messenger! O Banū al-Khazraj! O people of sūrat al-Baqara! And he assigned some of his Companions to call this out.'

They went on, 'He also picked up a handful of pebbles and cast them into the faces and on to the heads of the polytheists, saying, 'May their faces be deformed!' His men then hurriedly gathered around him. They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Now the fires of war are heating up!' God then defeated His enemies wherever He had cast His pebbles at them. The Muslims pursued them, killing them. And God gave them their women and offspring as booty. Mālik b. 'Awf fled and entered the fort of al-Tā'if, along with some of his people's leaders.

"Many of the people of Mecca accepted Islam when they saw God's victory for His messenger (SAAS) and the way He had honoured His religion."

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

Ibn Wahb stated that it was told to him by Yūnūs, from al-Zuhri, who said that Kathir b. al-Ĥabīb b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib quoted al-Ĥabīb as stating, "I was present with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the battle of Ḥunayn; I and Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥarith kept close to him throughout. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was riding a white mule presented to him by Farwa b. Nuṣṭātha al-Jadhāmī. When the forces met, the Muslims turned back in flight. The Messenger of God (SAAS) suddenly urged his mule on towards the polytheists. I held tight to its bridle, trying to slow it down, while Abū Sufyān gripped the saddle of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) cried out, 'Hey, 'Abbās, call for the men of the acacia tree! I swear, it was as though, on hearing my voice, I had gained their attention as does a cow her young! They responded, 'Ya lābbaykāhl! Ya lābbaykāhl! At Your service! At Your service!' They and the polytheists then engaged in battle, while the ansār criers shouted, 'O ansār!' Then the cry was repeated directly to Banū al-Ĥārith b. al-Khazraj.
“The Messenger of God (SAAS), on his mule, stared over at them, as though stretching forward to battle them himself, and said, ‘This is when the fires of war will heat up!’ Then he picked up gravel which he threw into the faces of the unbelievers and said, ‘May you be defeated, by Muhammad’s Lord!’ I had been watching, and as far as I could see the fighting was progressing as before. But no sooner had he thrown the gravel than the enemy’s enthusiasm dulled and they retreated.”

Muslim narrated this about Abū al-Ṭāhir, from Ibn Wahb in similar terms. He also narrated it from Muhammad b. Rāfi’, from ‘Abd al-Razzāq, from Ma’mar, from al-Zuhri in similar terms.

Muslim also related, from a hadith of ‘Ikrima b. Ammār, from Iyyās b. Salama b. al-Akwa’, from his father, who said, “We fought the battle of Ḥunayn with the Messenger of God (SAAS). When we confronted the enemy, I advanced up a mountain path where I found a polytheist, at whom I shot an arrow. He hid from me and I did not know what became of him. I then saw the enemy coming up another mountain path. They clashed with the men of the Messenger of God (SAAS), who turned back. I retreated too. I had two striped garments, in one of which I was dressed, the other draped over me. I untied my waist-wrapper and joined both striped garments together. Then I retreated, passing by the Prophet (SAAS), who was mounted on his grey mule. He commented, ‘Ibn al-Akwa’ has seen something frightening.’

“As the enemy was overwhelming the Messenger of God (SAAS), he dismounted from his mule, picked up a handful of dirt from the ground and threw it into their faces, saying, ‘May their faces be deformed!’ And every single one of them had his eyes fill with that dirt from that handful and they turned and fled. God defeated them and thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) divided up their possessions among the Muslims.”

Abū Dā‘ūd al-Ṭayalisi stated in his Musnad hadīth collection that it was related to him by Ḥammād b. Salama, from Ya‘lā b. ‘Āṭā‘, from ‘Abd Allah b. Yasar, from Abū ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Ṭihri, who said, “We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Ḥunayn. We set out on an extremely hot day. We halted in the shade of some acacia trees, and when the sun had set, I put on my cuirass and mounted my horse. I then went over to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was in his tent. I addressed him, ‘Peace be upon you, Messenger of God and may His mercy and blessings be yours. Is it time to go yet, Messenger of God?’ ‘Yes, it is,’ he replied. He then called out the name of Bilāl, who emerged quickly from beneath an acacia, his shadow like that of a bird. He said, ‘At your service and pleasure, may I be ransom for you!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, ‘Saddle up my horse.’ He was brought two palm fronds that were without holes or indentations.

“He mounted his horse and we spent the day riding. The two cavalries came face to face and we did battle with them. Then the Muslims turned and retreated, as God Almighty stated. The Messenger of God (SAAS) began saying,
‘O worshippers of God, I am the servant and Messenger of God!’ He then jumped from his horse and someone close to him later told me that he took a handful of dirt and tossed it into the faces of the enemy, saying, ‘May their faces be deformed!’”

Ya'la b. 'Aqí stated, “Their sons quoted their fathers as saying, ‘All of them, without exception, had their eyes and mouths filled with dirt. And we heard a clanging sound from the sky like iron striking an iron pot and God, Almighty and Glorious is He, defeated them.’”

Abu Dā'ūd al-Sijistāni related it in his Sunan collection, quoting Mūsā b. Ḥamīd b. Sa‘lāma in similar words.

Imām Aḥmad stated that it was related to him by ‘Affān, quoting ‘Abd al-Wahīb b. Ziyād, quoting al-Ḥārith b. Ḥusayn, quoting al-Qāsim b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Mas‘ūd, from his father, who quoted ‘Abd Allāh b. Mas‘ūd as stating, “I was present with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the battle of Ḥunayn. The men retreated from him, and 80 of the anṣār and the muhājirin remained there with him. We drew back some 80 feet, but did not turn our backs to the enemy. These men were the ones upon whom God sent down al-sakīna.134 The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was meanwhile still going forward on his mule, which veered to one side so that he slipped off his saddle. I called out to him, ‘Up you get! May God raise you up!’ He replied, ‘Get me a handful of dirt!’ With this he struck them in their faces and filled their mouths. Then he asked, ‘Where are the muhājirin and the anṣār?’ ‘They are close by,’ I replied. ‘Call for them,’ he asked. I did this and they came, their swords in their right hands shining like stars, and the polytheists then turned their backs in retreat.”

Aḥmad is alone in giving this.

Al-Bayhaqī stated that he was informed by Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Ḥafīz, quoting Abū al-Wahīb b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Ṭā’īfī, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥamīd b. Tamīm al-Ṭanṭarı, quoting Abū Qalāba, quoting Abū ‘Āṣim, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Ṭā’īfī, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Iyāḍ b. al-Ḥārith al-Anṣārī, from his father (who said) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) attacked Banū Ĥawāzin with a force of 12,000 men and that at Ḥunayn a like number of the people of al-Ṭā’īf were killed as those who died at Badr. ‘Iyāḍ stated, “And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) picked up a handful of pebbles which he threw into our faces, and we were defeated.”

Al-Bukhārī narrated this in his history, but he did not include ‘Iyāḍ’s genealogy.

Musaddad stated that Ja‘far b. Sulaymān related to him, quoting ‘Awf b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān, the freed-man of Umm Burthin, from someone who was present at Ḥunayn as an unbeliever, who said, “When we and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) met they had not prepared ewes’ milk37 for us! So we advanced slashing away with our swords before the Messenger of God (SAAS) until we overwhelmed them. Eventually there between us and them were some really magnificent men. And then they cried out, ‘May your faces be deformed! Go back!’ And we were defeated because of those words.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

Ya’qūb b. Sufyān stated that it was related to him by Abū Sufyān, quoting Sa’īd ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Ḳibrahīm, quoting al-Walīd b. Muslim, quoting Muhammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Shaʿbī, from al-Ḥarīth b. Badr al-ʿNaṣrī, from a man of his tribe who had been present on that day at the battle of Ḥunayn, along with ʿAmr b. Sufyān al-Thaqafī, both of whom said, “When the Muslims were being defeated at Ḥunayn, there only remained with the Messenger of God (SAAS) Ābbās and Abū Sufyān b. al-Ḥarīth. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then picked up a handful of pebbles and threw it into their faces. We fled, imagining every rock or tree to be some knight chasing us.”

Al-Thaqafī added, “I raced away on my horse until I entered al-Ṭaʿīf.”

Yūnùs b. Bukayr narrated in his military chronicle, from Yūsuf b. Suhayb b. ʿAbd Allāh, that only one man stood fast with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Ḥunayn, and his name was Zyād.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated, through al-Kudaymi, quoting Musā b. Masʿūd, quoting Saʿīd b. al-Saʿīb b. Yasār al-Ṭaʿīfī, from al-Saʿīb b. Yasār, who quoted Yazīd b. ʿAmīr al-Suwaytī as saying, at the discovery that Muslims came across at the battle of Ḥunayn, “The polytheists pursued them and the Messenger of God (SAAS) picked up handful of dirt from the ground and then advanced towards the polytheists and threw it into their faces, saying, ‘Go back! May your faces be deformed!’ And every man another would meet complained about dirt in his eyes.”

He then narrated through two other lines from Abū Hudhayfā, who stated that it was related to him by Saʿīd b. al-Saʿīb b. Yasār al-Ṭaʿīfī, quoting Abū al-Saʿīb b. Yasār, who said that he heard Yazīd b. ʿAmīr al-Suwaytī (who had been present at Ḥunayn with the Messenger of God (SAAS), though on the side of the polytheists, having accepted Islam only later) say as we asked him about the terror that God had cast into the hearts of the polytheists at the battle of Ḥunayn, “He would take pebbles and throw them into an iron pot that would clatter; and we would experience the same in our insides.”

Al-Bayhaqi stated that he was informed by Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfīz and Muhammad b. Musā b. al-Faḍl, both of whom said, “Abū al-ʿAbdās Muhammad b. Yaqūb related to us, quoting al-ʿAbdās b. Muḥammad b. Bukayr al-Ḥadrāmī, quoting Abū Ayyūb b. Jabīr, from ʿṢadqa b. Saʿīd, from Muḥammad b. Suhayba, from his father, who said, ‘I went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS) to the battle of Ḥunayn, though it was not Islam nor any knowledge of it that made me do so; I just refused to have Hawāzīn defeat Quraysh! As I stood with him, I said, “Messenger of God, I can see piebald horses!” He replied, “No one but a polytheist would see them!” Then he struck me in the chest and said, “O God, guide Shayba aright!” He then hit it again and said, “O God, guide Shayba aright!” and then he did and said the same a third time. And I swear by God, no sooner had he raised his hand from me the third time than there was none of God’s creation whom I loved more than I did him!”

He went on to relate the encounter between the armies, how the Muslims had been retreating, how al-‘Abbās had called out and the Messenger of God (SAAS) had asked God for His help, and so on until God had defeated the polytheists.

“I went to approach him from his right, but there was al-‘Abbās standing dressed in white metal armour, looking like silver with its tarnish wiped away. I said, ‘He’s his uncle – he’ll not desert him.’ Then I went at him from the left and came upon Abī Sufyān b. Abī al-‘Aṣwālī. I told myself, ‘That’s his cousin he’ll not desert him.’ Then I came at him from behind. All I had left to do was attack him fiercely with my sword when a great flame like lightning arose between myself and him. I was afraid it would burn me, so I put my hand over my eyes and retreated. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then turned and said, ‘Shayba, come closer to me. O God, take Satan away from him!’ I then lifted my gaze to him and found him to be dearer to me than my own sight or hearing. He then said, ‘Shayba, fight the unbelievers!’”

Ibn Ishaq quoted Shayba b. ‘Uthmān b. Abī Ṭalḥa, a brother of Banū ‘Abd al-Dār, as saying, “I said, ‘Today I will get my revenge’” (his father had been killed at Uhud). ‘Today I shall kill Muḥammad!’ I went around the Messenger of God (SAAS) to kill him, but something overwhelmed me so that I could not do that; I knew that it was forbidden for me.”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq also quoted his father, Ishaq b. Yasar, from another man, who quoted Juwayr b. Mūṣir as saying, “I was with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the battle of Ḥunayn and while the battle was going on, I saw something like a black coverlet falling from the sky that descended between us and the enemy. We saw it to be ants that had spread all over and were filling the valley. Immediately the enemy were defeated. We had no doubt that it was the angels.”

He went on to quote Khudayj b. al-‘Arjār al-Naṣrī as reciting the following verses – about Ḥunayn, that is,
“When we approached Ḥunayn and its water, we saw something black, unpleasant in colour, streaked white. With a grey squadron which, were it cast up at the heights of Mt.‘Urwa it would have become level! If my people’s chiefs had obeyed me, we would not have encountered the manifest apparition. Then we would not have met the troops of Muḥammad’s people, 80,000 strong, along with Khindif.”

Ibn Isḥaq also quoted the following verses spoken by Mālik b. ‘Awf al-Nasrī, chief of Hawāzin, while he was in the turmoil of battle that day:

“Advance, Muḥājirīn! This is a day of battle to which one like me rides on one like you, again and again. Even if the front line is lost and the rear too and they come on up, Squadrons (so numerous as to) exhaust one’s sight. I used to thrust so hard as to make the wounds gush with blood! When others were blamed for holding back and hiding, I would thrust so hard the blood would gurgle forth. In a full stream from inside, sometimes overflowing, sometimes gushing fast, The lance’s tip still inside, broken at the shaft-head. O Zayd! O Ibn Hamham, to where do you flee? Your teeth are gone and you are old. The white-skinned women wearing long veils know well That I’ll not charge blindly, when the secluded women are brought from behind the curtains.”

Al-Bayhaqi related through Yūnus b. Bukayr, who quoted from Ibn Isḥaq, other verses delivered by Mālik when his companions had fled in defeat. These verses were spoken after he had accepted Islam; they are also attributed to others:

“Remember their progress, and all those there, while above Mālik the banners fluttered. Mālik is a leader above whom there is none; at Ḥunayn he wore a glistening crown. Until they met their enemy, when bravery led them on, wearing helmets and chain-mail and bearing leather shields. They struck hard at the men until they saw no one around the Prophet, until dusk encompassed him. Until Gabriel came down to help them and we were defeated and made captive. Had it not been Gabriel fighting us, our fine swords would have protected us

138. The name of his horse.
Wmar d-Fsriiq when they were being defeated, escaped from a thrust that caught his saddle."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When the polytheists were defeated, and God gave His messenger power over them, a Muslim woman said,

'God’s cavalry has overcome that of al-Lāt; it is God who more deserves to prevail.'"

Ibn Hishām stated that an authority on the transmission of poetry quoted it to him as,

"God’s cavalry has overcome that of al-Lāt; His cavalry more deserves to prevail."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "When Hawāzin were defeated, widespread execution of Thaqīf of Bānū Malik took place. Seventy of their men were killed beneath their banner, which was under the charge of Dhū al-Khīmār. When he was killed, ‘Uthmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Rabīʿa b. al-Ḥārith b. Ḥālib took it and fought on with it until killed. ʿAmīr b. Wahb b. al-Aswad told me that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) learned of his death, he said, 'God damn him! He hated Quraysh!'

Ibn Ishāq went on to quote Yaʿqūb b. Uṭba as having said that along with this man ‘Uthmān, a Christian slave of his was also killed. One of the anqār came to remove the youth’s possessions and found him to be uncircumcised. So he called out at the top of his voice, "Hey, Arabs, Thaqīf are uncircumcised!"

"Al-Mughira b. Shu‘ba al-Thaqafi said that upon hearing this, 'I took him by the hand, fearing that this calumny would spread among the Arabs and told him, “Don’t say that, may my father and mother be your ransom! He was just a Christian slave of ours.” I then uncovered the dead for him, asking, “Can’t you see that they are indeed circumcised?”’"

Ibn Ishāq continued, “The banner of (Bānū) al-Aḥlāf was with Qārīb b. al-Aswad. When the enemy were defeated, he leaned it against a tree and he, his relatives and his people all fled. Only two of the al-Aḥlāf were killed – one man of Bānū Ghaylara named Wahb and a man of Kubba named al-Jullāh. When he heard of the death of al-Jullāh, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘The leading young man of Thaqīf, except for him descended from Ibn Hunayda, has been killed today.’ By this latter man he was referring to al-Ḥārith b. Uways.

Ibn Ishāq stated further, “Al-ʿAbbās b. Mīrdās spoke the following verses, referring to Qārīb b. al-Aswad and his having fled from his brothers, and to Dhū al-Khīmār’s having constrained his people and himself to death:

‘Who is it will inform Ghaylān for me and, I imagine, someone knowing will go to him,

And Urwa too; I have only to lead you to a response and a statement that suggests the contrary to what you both say:
That Muhammad is a servant and a messenger for a Lord who does not lead astray nor does He do wrong. We find him to be a prophet like Moses, and whatever man thinks himself better than him is deluded.

Terrible was the state of Banū Qasī in Wajj, when the matters were decreed. They ruined their situation; and for every people there is a leader, and fortunes may well change.

We attacked them like forest lions; the forces of God move in plain view.

We attacked the force of Banū Qasī enraged, almost flying at them.

I swear that had they stayed, we would have brought troops against them and they would not have escaped.

We were (like) lions of Liyā‘ until we revealed them and al-Nuṣūrī were made to surrender. And (there was) a day before that of Ḥunayn that has now gone by when blood streamed. You'll hear of no day like today; a people of long memory has not heard of such.

We killed Banū Ḥuṭayf on the dust, over their banners, while the cavalry shifted away.

Dhū al-Khīmār was no leader for a people who had intelligence who could be punished or disavowed.

He took them on the roads to death, matters being clear for those who could see them.

Some on the point of death escaped and survived, while many of them were killed.

A feeble man would not help such a situation, nor would someone lacking modesty or over-cautious.

He destroyed them and perished; they gave him leadership over their affairs and the chiefs left.

Banū ʿAwf have horses that trot along and are given hay and barley to eat.

Were it not for Qārīb and his father’s sons, the pastures and forts would be divided up.

But they occupied the leadership by luck to which they were directed.

They obeyed Qārīb, and good fortune and aspirations lead to glory.

If they are led to Islam, they will be found to be leaders of men for so long as day and night persist.

If they do not accept Islam, then they call for war against God and shall have no helper.

139. A place near al-Tifference.
140. The family of Malik b. ʿAwf.
Just as war erased Banū Sa’d and fate brought evil to the clan of Banū Ghaziyya. As though Bana Mu’āwiya b. Bakr came to Islam like sheep, bleating. We said, ‘Accept Islam! We are your brothers; our hearts are innocent of old hatred.’ It was as though when the people came to us, they were, after the peace, devoid of hate.”

Chapter.

When Hawāzin had been defeated, their leader Mālik b. ʿAwf al-Naṣrī halted at a pass with a group of his men and told them to stay there until their weaker comrades and those at their rear caught up with them.

Ibn Ishaq stated that he had been informed that some horsemen came up while Mālik and his companions were at the pass. He asked his men, “What do you see?” “We can see men who place their lances between the ears of their horses that have long flanks.” Mālik commented, “Those are Banū Salim; you should not fear them.” When they arrived there they followed a route in the middle of the valley. Then other riders appeared, following the first group. Mālik asked his men, “What do you see?” They replied, “We see men who rest their lances carelessly across their horses.” “Those”, Mālik said, “are al-Aws and al-Khazraj. You should not fear them.” When these men arrived at the base of the pass, they took the same route as Banū Salim. Then another horseman appeared, and Mālik asked his men, “What do you see?” They told him, “We see a rider on a long-flanked horse holding his lance on his shoulder and with his head covered in a red kerchief.” “That is al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwāmī,” Mālik observed, “I swear by al-Lāt, he will attack you, so fight back hard.” When al-Zubayr reached the base of the pass, he saw them, made for them and kept thrusting at them until he had dislodged them from it.”

Chapter.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders regarding the booty, and the camels, sheep, goats and prisoners were gathered together. He had them all taken to al-Jīrānā where they were kept.

Ibn Ishaq stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed Mas‘ūd b. ʿAmr al-Ghifārī in charge of the booty.

Chapter.

Ibn Ishāq stated that he was informed by a colleague that on that day the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by a woman whom Khālid b. al-Walīd had killed; a crowd had gathered around her. He told one of his companions, "Go to 'Khālid and tell him that God's messenger forbids you from killing children, women or hired labourers."

Ibn 'Ishāq related it thus without a complete line of transmission. Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Abū 'Amīr 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Amr, quoting al-Mughīra b. 'Abd al-Rahmān, from Abū al-Zinād, who said that al-Muraqqā b. Šayfī related to him, from his grandfather Rabī b. Rabī, brother of Banū Ḥanẓala al-Kāthib, who stated that on one occasion the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned from a military expedition he had waged in which 'Khālid b. al-Walīd was in the vanguard. Rabī and the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by a dead woman who had been struck down by the vanguard. They had halted and were looking down admiringly at her when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), riding his mount, caught up with them. They drew away from her and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) halted over her and said, "This woman should not have been killed!" He then told one of his men, "Go to 'Khālid and tell him, 'No women nor hired labourers must be killed!'"

Abū Dā'ūd, Al-Nasā'ī and Ibn Māja related it similarly, from a hadith of Muraqqā b. Šayfī.

THE EXPEDITION TO AWṬĀS.

The reason for this was that when Ḥawāzin were defeated a number of them, including their leader Malik b. 'Awf al-Naqṣī, took refuge in al-Ṭā'īf, where they fortified themselves. One group of their men went and made camp at a place called Awṭās. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent an expedition of his men under the command of Abū 'Amīr al-Aṣḥārī and they fought and defeated the enemy. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then himself went and besieged al-Ṭā'īf, as will be recounted.

Ibn 'Ishāq stated, "When the polytheists were defeated at the battle of Ḥunayn, they went to al-Ṭā'īf, in the company of Malik b. 'Awf. Some of them encamped at Awṭās, while others, consisting only of men of Banū Ghīra of Thaqīf, went towards Nakhlā. The cavalry of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) followed those who took the path through the pass."

He went on, "Rabīʿa b. Rafīʿ b. Ahān al-Sulāmī - known by his mother's name as 'son of al-Daghīna' - captured Durayd b. al-Ṣimma. He did so by taking the reins of his camel, thinking that a woman and not he, was in the howdah upon it. When he made the camel kneel, he discovered an old man inside, Durayd b. al-Ṣimma, whom the young man, Rabīʿa, did not recognize. Durayd asked him, 'What do you want of me?' He replied, 'I am going to kill you.' 'Who are you?' Durayd asked. 'I am Rabīʿa b. Rafīʿ al-Sulāmī.' Rabīʿa then struck Durayd with his sword, but the blow was ineffective. Durayd commented, 'Well, your mother did not give you a good weapon! Here, take my sword from the back of my saddle in the howdah, then use it to strike me; hit above the backbone and below the skull. Now that’s how I would strike men! And when you go to your mother, tell her that you killed Durayd b. al-Ṣimma. I swear that many were the times I defended your women!

“Banū Sulaym claim that Rabī’ said, ‘When I struck him and he fell down, he was exposed and the skin high up between his thighs was like parchment from his having so often ridden bareback.’

“When Rabī’ returned to his mother and told her of having killed him, she said, ‘I swear, he set free three of your mothers!’”

Ibn Isḥāq then quoted verses his daughter ‘Amra spoke eulogizing him. These included,

“They said, ‘We killed Durayd!’ I said, ‘They spoke the truth!’ And my tears kept streaming down my robe.

Were it not for Him who had defeated all the tribes, Sulaym and Kaš would have known what to do.

Then a great army would have attacked them constantly, their armour emitting various odours of rust, wherever they went.”

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent after those of the enemy who had headed for Awrt%s a force under Abū ʿAmir al-Ashʿari. He caught up with some of those who had fled and they engaged in battle. An arrow was shot at and killed Abū ʿAmir and Aba Miṣaṣ al-ʿAshʿari took the banner, he being the cousin of Abū ʿAmir, battled them and God, Almighty and Glorious, gave him victory over them. They claim that it was Salama b. Durayd who shot Abū ʿAmir al-ʿAshʿari with an arrow, striking him in the knee and killing him.

“Salama spoke the following verses,

‘If you ask about me, I’ll say I’m Salam, son of Samādir, “the weak-sighted”, I’ll tell whoever asks I strike with my sword the heads of Muslims.’”

Ibn Isḥāq stated further, “An authority on poetry and its transmission whom I trust told me that Abū ʿAmir al-ʿAshʿari confronted the polytheist brothers. One of them attacked him and Abū ʿAmir fought back, calling him to accept Islam, saying, ‘O God, bear witness against him!’ Then Abū ʿAmir killed him.

“A second polytheist attacked him and Abū ʿAmir fought back, inviting him into Islam, saying, ‘O God, bear witness against him.’ Abū ʿAmir then killed him. At that they all charged at him while he spoke as before. Eventually he had killed nine of them and only the tenth remained. He attacked Abū ʿAmir, who fought back, calling upon him to accept Islam, saying, ‘O God, bear witness against him.’ Then the man called out, ‘O God, do not bear witness against me!’ At that Abū ʿAmir stopped fighting him and the man withdrew. He thereafter accepted Islam and was a good Muslim. When he saw him, the Prophet (SAAS) would comment, ‘That’s the fugitive from Abū ʿAmir.’”
"Two brothers - al-‘Alā and Awfā, sons of al-Hārith of Banū Jusham b. Mu‘awiyya - then shot at Abū ‘Amir. One of them hit him in the heart, the other in the knee, and they killed him. Abū Mūsā then turned the enemy back and attacked and killed these two men. A man of Banū Jusham b. Mu‘awiyya eulogized them in the following verses, ‘What a calamity was the killing of al-‘Alā and Awfā together, who received no support. They left him lying on a battle field, his clothing as though stained with saffron. The like of them both was never seen before; no two were ever more free of fault, or more sure of aim.’"

Al-Bukhārī stated that Muhammad b. al-‘Alā related to him, quoting Abū Usāma, from Burayd b. ‘Abd Allāh, from Abū Burda, from Abī Māsā, who said, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had finished at Ḥunayn, he sent Abī ‘Amir in command of an army to Awfās. There he encountered Durayd b. al-Ṣimma who was killed, while his companions were defeated."

Abū Mūsā went on, "He sent me forth with Abī ‘Amir, who was shot in the knee, the arrow, shot by a man of Banū Jusham, lodging in it. When I reached him, I asked, ‘Who shot you, uncle?’ He pointed over at the man, saying, ‘There, that’s the man who shot and killed me!’ I made for him, but he withdrew when he saw me coming. I followed on, calling out, ‘Aren’t you ashamed not to stand and fight?’ he stopped retreating and we exchanged a few sword strokes then I killed him. I went and told Abī ‘Amir, ‘God has killed your enemy!’ He asked me, ‘Take out this arrow.’ I did so and water seeped from the wound. He then requested, ‘Nephew, deliver my greeting to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and ask him to pray for my forgiveness.’"

"Abī ‘Amir then appointed me in command of our men and after a short while he died. I returned in to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) inside his house. He was lying on a rope bed of date-palms and stalks with a coverlet over him; the ropes and strands of the bed had made marks on his back and sides. I told him our news and about Abī ‘Amir and how he had told me, ‘Ask him to seek forgiveness for me.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called for water to be brought, performed the ablution, then raised his arms praying, ‘O God, forgive ʿUbayd, Abū ʿAmir!’ I saw the whiteness of his underarms. He then said, ‘O God, place him on the Judgement Day of Resurrection above many of Your creation’ - or ‘of many people’. I said, ‘Will you also ask forgiveness for me?’ He then said, ‘O God, forgive ‘Abd Allāh b. Qays his sins and on Resurrection Day grant him a favourable entry (into paradise).’"

Abū Burda noted, "One of the prayers was for Abī ‘Amir, the other for Abī Mūsā, may God be pleased with them both."

Muslim related this from Abū Kurayb, Muḥammad b. al-ʿAlā and ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Barād, from Abū Usāma in similar words.
Imām Āḥmad stated, “‘Abd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting Sufyān - he being al-Thawrī - from ʿUthmān al-Batti, from Abū al-Khalīl, from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudari, who said, ‘At Āwtās we took some women prisoner who had husbands and we were reluctant to have intercourse with them while this was so. We therefore asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and this verse was revealed, “and all married women, except those whom your right hands possess” (ṣūrat al-Nisāʾ; IV, v.24). And so we considered their bodies permissible to us.’”

Al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasaʿī related it thus from a ḥadīth of ʿUthmān al-Batti. Muslim gave it in his saḥīh collection from a ḥadīth of Shuʿba, from Qatāda, from Abū al-Khalīl, from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudari. Imām Āḥmad, Muslim, Abū Dāʾūd and al-Nasaʿī gave it from a ḥadīth of Saʿīd b. Abū ʿUrūba. Muslim, Shuʿba and al-Tirmidhī gave it additionally from a ḥadīth of Hammām, from Yaḥyā, all three giving an account from Qatāda, from Abū al-Khalīl, from Abū ʿAlqama al-Ḥāshimi, from Abū Saʿīd to the effect that the men of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Āwtās made captives of women who had husbands who were polytheists. This fact made some of the men refrain from intercourse with them. And so this verse “and all married women, except those whom your right hands possess” was revealed.

This is the version given by Abū Hānbal; and he added to this chain of authorities Abū ʿAlqama al-Ḥāshimi who is considered reliable. This is the accepted interpretation, though God knows best.

A number of the early authorities view this verse as evidence that the sale of a female slave means her divorce. This is related of Ibn Masʿūd, Ubayy b. Kaʿb, Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, Ibn ʿAbbās, Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. The majority oppose these, citing an anecdote about Burayra to the effect of her having been sold and then given a choice of ending or maintaining her marriage. If sale of her meant her divorce, then she would not have been given a choice.

We have discussed this issue in detail and sufficiently in our Taṣfīr (Exegesis). And we will refer to it again, if God so wills it, in our (projected work) al-Ahkām al-Kabīr.

A number of the early authorities cite this ḥadīth relating to those made captive at Āwtās to substantiate the permissibility (of intercourse) with female slaves who were polytheists. The majority, however, oppose them, saying, “This is a special case; perhaps these women accepted Islam or were Christians or Jews.” The proper place for further discussion of this issue will be in al-Ahkām al-Kabīr, if God Almighty wills it.

Chapter: On those who were martyred at the battle of Hunayn and on the Expedition to Āwtās.

(These men were) Ayman b. Umm Ayman, freed-man of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), he being Ayman b. Ubayy; Zayd b. Zamʿa b. al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib b. Asad, whose horse, named al-Janāḥ, bolted and so he was killed; Suḥrāq b. Māliḵ b. al-Ḥārīth b. ʿAdt al-Anṣārī, of Banū al-ʿAjlān; Abū ʿAmīr al-Ashʿarī, the commander of the expedition to Awṣās. These total four men; may God be pleased with them.

Chapter: On the Poetry spoken at the Expedition against Hawāzin.

Among these verses are those of Bujayr b. Zuhayr b. Abū Salmā,

"Had it not been for God and His servant, you would have retreated when terror overcame every coward
At the winding valley that day our enemies faced us, the swift horses stumbled on to their chins.
Some men went running, their garments held up in their hands, others were knocked to the side by hooves and flanks.
God honoured us and gave victory to our faith, dignifying us through worship of the Most Merciful.
And God destroyed them, dispersing and humiliating them for worshipping Satan."

Ibn Hishām stated that some transmitters of the poetry include the verses,

"When Your Prophet's uncle and his ally arose, calling, O squadron of the faith!
Where are they who responded to their Lord, at the battle of al-'Arīd and at the 'willing allegiance'"141

(Ibn Ishāq stated) 'Abbās b. Mirdās al-Sulāmī spoke the following,

'By the swift horses on assembly day and by the Book that the Messenger recited,
I was pleased at Thaqīf's painful fate yesterday beside the defile
They are the enemy's leaders from Najd, and killing them is sweeter than drinking.
We defeated their group, that group of Banū Qasī, and fierce was the fighting for Banū Rāḥib.
The tents of Banū Hilāl were left at Awṣās begrimed with dust.
If (our forces) had clashed with Banū Qilāb, their women would have risen with dust upon them.
We raced our horses among them between Buss and al-Awrāl,143 breathing hard in pursuit of the booty
Amidst a clamorous army that included the squadron of the Messenger of God that charged into the battle.'

'Abbās b. Mirdās also spoke the following,

---

141. See above, Vol. 11 p.341, footnote 74.
142. That is, in mourning.
143. Buss is a mountain near Dhat 'Araq. Al-Awrāl are three black mountains in the desert.
‘O seal of the prophets, you are sent with the truth;
all guidance on the right path being yours.

God built upon you love in His creation, and Muḥammad he named you.

Then those who were true to the pact you gave them became an army, over whom you appointed al-Dahhāk
A man with a sharp sword who, when surrounded by the enemy, saw only you.

He would even battle those near in blood, seeking to please the All-Compassionate and yourself too.

I tell you I witnessed his repeated attacks in the tumult of war, braining the polytheists, Sometimes strangling them with his hands, sometimes slashing their heads with his sharp sword,
Using it to smash the warriors' heads; if you saw what I did, it pleased you well,

While Banū Sulaym charged before him, striking and thrusting constantly at the enemy.

They walked beneath his banner as though lions of a thicket determined to battle there.
Not wanting closeness from their relatives, seeking only that they obey their Lord and to please you.
These were our actions for which we were renowned, our ally being your Lord.’

“ʿAbbās b. Mīrđās also spoke the following,

‘Mījdal is empty of its people now, as is Mutālī; and the plains of Arik are bare, as are its cisterns.
Homes of ours, O Juml, when our lives were fine and easy, and time's changes would unite our family wish A lover whom great distance has diverted; can life now past ever return?
If she seeks after the unbelievers, she is not to be blamed; for I am the assistant and follower of the Prophet.
The best of envoys I have known, Khuzayma, brought us, and al-Mīrrār is of them, and Wāsī too.

And so we came, along with 1,000 men of Sulaym, upon whom were splendid coats of mail made by Dārūd.
We pledged allegiance to him at al-Akhshabayn, though it was the hand of God to whom we really pledged there.
We went into Mecca with the mahdi, the one well-led, by force, our swords in the rising dust, glistening, openly,
The bodies of our horses were covered with sweat, groaning, their blood within them boiling,
At the battle of Hunayn when Hawazin came at us, and our tight ribs restricted our breathing
We kept firm with al-Daḥāk, undeterred by the blows and strikes of our enemies
Before the Messenger of God, while a banner flew above us, shining like lightning above clouds.
That evening Daḥāk b. Sufyān struck with the sword of the Messenger of God, and death was near at hand.
We defended our brother from our brother, and if we had seen an option, we would have followed our relatives.
But the religion of God is that of Muhammad; we are pleased with it. It has guidance and laws.
Through it he set us aright after our mistaken course; and no matter decided by God can be prevented.'

"Abbas b. Mīrūās also spoke the following,

'The remaining connection with Umm Mu'ammal has been ended, for she changed her intention, against her word.
She had sworn by God not to sever the link; she did not speak true in that, and was not true to her word.
She is from Banū Khufāf who spent the summer in the al-ʿAqiq valley, living in the desert at Wajrā and al-ʿUrfā.
Even if Umm Mu'ammal follows the unbelievers, she has stocked my heart with passion despite her distance.
Someone will tell her that we refused; the only ally we seek is our Lord,
And that we are with the guide, the Prophet, Muḥammad and that 1,000 are with us, matched by no other tribe,
With trustworthy heroes of Sulaym, men who obey and do not disobey by even a syllable.
Khufāf, Dhakwān and ʿAwf, whose path you would imagine strewn with (disuniting) difficulties,
(But) our glossy armour and helmets were as though worn by frowning lions slashing in their lairs.
Through us God's religion gained strength; we added a like number to the group already with him
At Mecca when we came; it was as if our banner was an eagle that, having soared, was ready to swoop down.
Upon mounts staring fixedly ahead, their forcing against their bits you would think inspired by a genie's hum,
That morning we trod the polytheists underfoot, finding no deviation or change from the orders of the Messenger of God, 144. Banū Sulaym and Hawazin were both clans of Qays.

At a battle amidst which the men heard from us no urgings except to fight and to crush heads. Sent flying from their supports by our swords which sliced right through the warriors’ necks. Many’s the man we left struck down, and many the widow weeping bitterly over her husband. It is God’s pleasure we seek, not that of man; and to God belongs all that is apparent and hidden.’

“Abū b. Mirdās, may God be pleased with him, also spoke the following verses, ‘Why are your eyes sleepless, as though bothered by irritants, husks beneath their lids?

Eyes made sleepless from their pain, welling and streaming their tears,
Which look like pearls scattered when the man stringing them breaks their thread.
How far away is the home of her for whose love you hope, between you and whom al-Ṣammān and al-Ḥafar stand!
Abandon your youth now gone, long past for your hair is grey and thin.
And recall the distress of Sulaym in their lands; yet Sulaym have reason to have pride.
They are a people who aided the Most Merciful and followed the religion of the Messenger while people were in conflict.
They no longer plant palm shoots in their land, nor do cattle low in their wintering grounds
Where only fast steeds, like eagles, are kept at hand amidst lands filled with herds of camels.
Khūfūf and ‘Awf were brought to their flanks, and the clan of Dhākwān did not turn away in annoyance.
They struck openly at the polytheist armies in Mecca’s valley and their souls were whisked away Until we left, their bodies like palm trees uprooted on the plain’s surface.
At the battle of Hunayn our witness was to the glory of the religion and it is recorded with God.
When we rode death, dingy-hued its inner flanks, while the horses emitted a dusky glow
Beneath the banner, with al-Dāḥkak leading us, like a lurking lion walking within his forest,
In dire straits due to the burdens of warfare that almost caused sun and moon to fade.
We remained steadfast at Awtās; our lances dedicated to God, we helped those we wished, and won victory.
And finally people returned to their homes who, were it not for the Sovereign and ourselves, would not have emerged.

You will not see any tribe, small in number or large, without our having had some influence upon them.'

"Abbas also spoke the following,

'O man who is borne upon a young, strong-boned, swift-footed camel
If you should go to the Prophet, then say to him as it is your duty to do, if the group assembled are at ease,
'O finest man to ride a mount or ever to walk upon the earth, if souls be counted,
We were true to our pact with you when the cavalry were overpowered and wounded by the warriors
When there streamed a force from all parts of the Buhtha clan that shook the mountain trails
Until we attacked the people of Mecca, in a squadron, their armour shining, being led by proud men.
From every powerful clan of Sulaym, wearing close-knitted chain-mail upon them Moistening their lances when they charged into the fray, so that you would imagine them as frowning lions.
Overwhelming the squadron, their insignia showing, bearing in their hands slashing swords and quick-thrusting spears.
At Hunayn there were a thousand in our force by which the Messenger was supported, as by fierce lions,
They were a vanguard ahead of the believers; and that day the sun upon them seemed more intense.
We went forward, God guarding us in his care; and God never loses those He guards.
We were blockaded at al-Mansqih. But God took pleasure in that; and that makes our blockade worthwhile.
The morning of Awtas we made a fierce attack and the enemy drew back, calling out to us, "Hold off!"
Hawazin appealed to the brotherhood between us; but the breast Hawazin used to offer is very dry!
Finally we left their force like wild asses that lions have torn apart, one after the other.'

"He also, may God be pleased with him, spoke the following,

'Who is it will tell the peoples that Muhammad is God's messenger, right-guided wherever he moves?
He called out to God, seeking His help alone and He was true and kind to him.
We travelled forth, keeping our appointment with Muhammad at Qudayd so that he could have us fulfil a matter that God had decreed.
They scouted us at dawn and as dawn broke they perceived us to be young warriors with lances set, upon horses, and our armour firmly attached, and our numerous infantry rushing forward like a torrent.

The best of the tribe—if ask you must—are Sulaym and they include some who claim to be Sulaym

And a force of ansār who would not desert him, obedient to him and they do not disobey him in what he says.

Since you have appointed and promoted Khalid commander of the army, he has indeed advanced

With an army, guided by God, of which you are leader. With it you rightfully strike those who are evil.

I have sworn a genuine oath to Muhammad and have fulfilled it with a thousand horses, fully bridled.

The Prophet of the believers called, 'Advance!' And it pleased us to be the vanguard.

We spent the night at Mustadir pool. We had no fear—only enthusiasm and determination.

We obeyed you until all the enemy accepted Islam, attacking their force in the morning, those people at Yalamlamā.

(A force so large) even a piebald red stallion could go astray amidst it, and an old man be insecure unless well marked.

We surprised them like a covey of grouse startled at dawn, each of which you see to be uncaring for its brother,

That morning; until finally we left them that evening at Hunayn, its streams flowing with blood.

If you wished, you could everywhere see fine race horses, their riders stretched out besides broken lances.

Hawāzin have regained from us their herds; and for us to be disappointed and deprived of these has pleased them.'

Thus did Imām Muhammad b. Ishāq give the poems of 'Abbās b. Mirdās al-Sulami, may God be pleased with him. We have omitted some of the odes he included for fear of being long-winded and boring. Ibn Ishāq also gives the poetry of others; but enough on the subject has been given above. Though God knows best.

THE EXPEDITION AGAINST AL-TĀʾIF.

Urwa and Mūsā b. Uqba quoted al-Zuhri as stating that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) fought at Hunayn and besieged al-Tāʾif in Shawwāl of 8 AH.
Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, “The routed Thaqif army reached al-Ṭaʾif, shut themselves behind the gate of the city and fortified themselves in preparation for conflict.

“Neither Urwa b. Masʿūd nor Ghaylān b. Salama were present at Ḥunayn or the siege of al-Ṭaʾif. They were at Jurash learning how to construct testudos for use at a distance and close by the walls.

“Having finished at Ḥunayn, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went on to al-Ṭaʾif. On that subject Kaʿb b. Mālik spoke the following verses,

“In the lowlands and at Khaybar we ended all doubt, then rested our swords
For them to choose (next). Had they spoken, their blades would have said, “Attack Daws or Thaqif!”
May I have no mother if you do not see them at your courtyards, with us in our thousands.
We will tear down the pavilions in the Wajj valley, and your homes will be devoid of you.
The most swift of our cavalry will attack you, leaving behind them a dense mass
When they descend on your areas, you’ll hear from them enough to make your camels kneel in alarm.
In their hands will be sharp, slim swords, visiting death upon those opposing them, Flashing like lightning, fashioned by Indian blacksmiths, not beaten out flat.
You might have thought the blood of heroes in them that battle morning was mixed with saffron.
As for their most diligent, had they no adviser in their peoples who knew of us
To tell them that we had gathered the most choice and well-bred of horses
And had brought against them a force to line up around the walls of their fort?
Their leader was the Prophet, resolute, pure of heart, steadfast and abstemious, Mature, wise, knowledgeable, astute, never rash or frivolous.
We obey our Prophet and a Lord who is the Most Merciful and has been most kind to us.
If you offer us peace we will accept and will make you our allies, and If you refuse, we will fight you steadfastly, and conflict with us will not be gentle or easy.
We will fight on as long as we survive or you turn in repentance to Islam, submissively.
We will battle on, careless whom we confront, nor whether we destroy the old or the new.
How numerous were the tribes allied against us, some the central tribes, some their allies.
They attacked us thinking themselves unequalled, but we severed nose and ears
With our Indian swords, supple and gleaming, violently forcing them forward
To the business of God and Islam until the religion is established in justice and devotion And al-Lāt, al-ʿUzza and Wudd are forgotten and we remove their necklaces and earrings.
Now they have become acquiescent and secure; and those who do not refrain (from idolatry) become disgraced.’”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Kināna b. ʿAbd Yāhil b. ʿAmr b. ʿUmayr al-Thaqafi answered him in the following verse.”

(I note that he had later come over to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), along with the Thaqif delegation; he accepted Islam along with them. This was so stated by Mūsā b. ʿUqba, Abū Ishāq, Abū ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-Barr, Ibn al-Athir and others. Al-Madsʿini, however, claimed that he did not accept Islam, but went into Byzantine territory, where he accepted Christianity and died.)

“To those seeking us to fight us: we’re at a well-known place we will not leave.
We know our forefathers were here, where are its terraces and its vineyards.
ʿAmr b. ʿAmir previously put us to the test, and their men of reason and wisdom advised them.
They knew – if truth they tell – that we set straight cheeks turned aside in disdain.
We reform them; those who are wild we tame and those who do wrong acknowledge the evident truth.
We dress in light, supple chain-mail, from a longed-for legacy, sky-coloured its sheen, decorated with stars.
We force them off us with our sharp swords which, when once drawn in conflict we do not again sheathe.’”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Shaddād b. ʿArid al-Jushami spoke the following verses concerning the passage of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to al-Ṭāʾif,

‘Do not assist al-Lāt whom God destroys; how can aid be given to one who cannot be assisted?
She who was burned, flaming in black smoke, while at her stone monument not even the worthless do battle.
Once the Messenger descends on your lands and has left, none of its people will remain there.’”
Ibn Ishaq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then travelled - from Hunayn to al-Ta'if - by way of Nakhla al-Yamaniiya, Qarn, al-Mulayh and Buhrat al-Rughâ of Liyya; he had a mosque constructed there and performed the prayers.

"Amr b. Shu'ayb related to me that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) stopped that day at Buhrat al-Rughâ he allowed retaliation in kind for blood spilled, that being the first occasion in Islam that such permission was given. A man of Banû Layth had killed someone of Hudhayl and he executed him for it. While at Liyya he ordered the destruction of the fort of Malik b. 'Awf.

"He then proceeded along a path known as al-Dayyiqa, 'the narrow, difficult path'. As he was setting out along it he asked what it was called and it was so named to him. He commented, 'No; it's al-Yusru, "the easy road".'

"Emerging from it he passed Nakhîb and made a halt beneath a lote tree known as al-Siidzra, near property owned by a man of Thaqif. The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent word to him to either come out or have his wall destroyed. He refused to emerge and so the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that his wall be demolished."

Ibn Ishaq then quoted Ismâ'il b. Umayya as quoting Bujayr b. Abû Bujayr to have said, "I heard 'Abd Allah b. Amr say that he heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say when he went forth with him to al-Ta'if and passed by a grave, 'This is the tomb of Abû Righîl, he being the father of Thaqif. He was of Thamiid and one of those defending their sanctuary there. When he went out (with Abraha) he was afflicted by that same vengeance that came down upon his people at that place, and he was buried there. The proof of this is that along with him a golden bough was buried. If you exhume him, you will find it.'

"The men promptly did so and retrieved the bough, along with his remains."

Abû Dâûd narrated this from Yahyâ b. Mu'sîn, from Wahb b. Jarîr b. Hâzîm, from his father, from Mu'hannam b. Ishaq.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated it from a hadith of Yazid b. Zuray', from Rawh b. al-Qasîm, from Ismâ'il b. Umayya.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then travelled on and established his camp near al-Ta'if. Some of his men were killed by arrows because the camp had been set close to al-Ta'if. They therefore withdrew to the place where today stands his mosque, built by Thaqif after their acceptance of Islam. It was Amr b. Umayya b. Wahh who built it. It had in it a column from which, so they say, a cracking sound could be heard every morning when sunlight struck it.

"He besieged them there for some 20 days." Ibn Hishâm gives this figure as 17.

145. This related to the advance made in the area by Abraha (see Vol. I above, p.22) who was persuaded in al-Ta'if to leave their temple undisturbed and to continue on to attack the sanctuary at Mecca.
Urwa and Mūsā b. ʿUqba quote al-Zuhri as having stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went on to al-Ṭāʾif, leaving the captives (from Hunayn) at al-Jīrāna, where they filled the tents of Mecca. The Messenger of God (SAAS) encamped at al-Akama, near the fortress of al-Ṭāʾif, for some ten or more days, engaging them in battle while they fought back from behind their fortifications. The only man to emerge was ʿAbū Bakra b. Masrūḥ, Ziyād’s brother from his mother’s side. The Messenger of God (SAAS) set him free. Many casualties were suffered there and they (the Muslims) cut down some of their grape vines to enrage them thereby. At this Thaqīf asked, ‘Don’t ruin our properties; they will either remain ours or become yours.’”

Urwa stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered each Muslim to cut down five date-palms or five vines. He sent out a crier to announce, “Anyone who comes forth to us will be free.” A number of people did join him, including ʿAbū Bakra b. Masrūḥ, a brother of Ziyād b. ʿAbū Sufyān on his mother’s side. He then set them free and assigned each one to a Muslim who was to provide food and a mount.

Imām ʿAhmad stated that Yazīd related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Qādir b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAmr, from ʿAmr b. ʿAbd al-ʿAs, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would set free any slave who came to him with priority over any of their freed-men who accepted Islam. (He stated also) that at the battle of al-Ṭāʾif he set two men free.

(Imām) Ahmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Quddās b. Bakr b. Khumayr related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAs, from ʿAmr b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAmr, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged the people of al-Ṭāʾif and two slaves came out whom he set free. One of them was ʿAbū Bakra. It was his practice to set free any slaves who came over to him.’”

He also stated, “Naṣr b. Rāb related to us, from ʿAbd al-ʿAs, from ʿAbd al-Qādir b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAmr, from ʿAbd al-ʿAs, who said, ‘At al-Ṭāʾif, the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, “Whatever slaves join us shall be freed.”’

‘Some of the slaves did come out, including ʿAbū Bakra. The Messenger of God (SAAS) set them all free.’”

This hadith is given only by ʿAhmad; it hinges upon al-Hajjāj b. Artāt, a weak source. However, Imām ʿAhmad did accept it. It was his view that it was a general, universal principle that every slave who left the enemy to join Islam was freed.

Others maintained that this was conditional and not an absolute rule.

If the hadith is authentic, then its general legislative authority is very plain – as in the case of his statement (referred to above), ‘Whoever kills an enemy shall own that man’s possessions.’

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq as stating, “ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mukarram al-Thaqāfī related to me, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged the people of al-Ṭāʾif, one of their slaves came out to join him, he being ʿAbū Bakra, who belonged to al-Ḥarīth b. Kalda. Along with him came “al-Munba‘ith”; his real name was al-Muḍṭaṣi‘, “he who lies down”, but the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) renamed him “al-Munba‘ith”, “he who rises again”. Also there were Yūnas and Wardān among a group of slaves who accepted Islam. When the delegation arrived from the people of al-Ṭā‘if to accept Islam, they asked, “Messenger of God, restore to us our slaves who joined you.” He replied, “No; those have been set free by God.” But he did give the man the clientage to his former slave.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Muḥammad b. Bashshār related to him, quoting Ghundar, quoting Shu‘ba, from 'Āṣim, who said that he heard Abū ʻUthmān say, “I heard Sa‘d, the first to shoot an arrow in God’s cause, and Abū Bakra, who climbed over the walls of al-Ṭā‘if to join the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), both say, ‘We heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) state, “Anyone who claims to be the son of someone other than his real father, while knowing the facts, will be denied paradise.”’”

Muslim related this from a hadith of 'Āṣim.

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “Hishām said, ‘Ma‘mar informed us, from 'Āṣim, from Abū al-Āliya – or Abū ʻUthmān al-Nahdí – as follows, ‘I heard Sa‘d and Abū Bakra narrate the following hadith from the Prophet (ṢAAS), namely, that 'Āṣim reported having said to him, ‘Two men have testified to you who are to be trusted.’ ‘Yes, that is so,’ he replied. One of these was the first to shoot an arrow in God’s cause. The other was the third of 23 persons who joined the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from al-Ṭā‘if.””

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, “Two of his wives were accompanying the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). One of these was Umm Salama. He set up two pavilions for them and would pray between them. He besieged the enemy and fought them fiercely, engaging in exchanges of arrow fire.”

Ibn Hishām stated that he also shot at them using catapults.

A trustworthy source related to me that the Prophet (ṢAAS) was the first in Islam to fire a catapult, using them against the people of al-Ṭā‘if.

Ibn Ishāq stated that a number of the Muslims went beneath a testudo and moved it slowly forward to burn the walls of al-Ṭā‘if and heated nails were cast down upon them. When they emerged from beneath the testudo, Thaqīf shot arrows down at them, killing some men. At that point the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered that the Thaqīf vines be cut down and the Muslims set about this task.

Abū Suṭyān b. Ḥarb and al-Mughīra b. Shu‘ba then advanced and called for safe passage to talk with them. This was granted and they invited some women of Quraysh and Banū Kinānā to come out to them; they feared that they might be treated as captives if the fortress were conquered. The women refused and Abū al-Aswad b. Mas‘ūd asked the two men, “Can’t I make a better suggestion for you than that you put forward? You well know the whereabouts of the estate of Abū al-Aswad. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has been encamped at a valley called al-'Aqiq, between the lands of Banû al-Aswad and al-Ṭâif. There is no property in al-Ṭâif more distant from irrigation water nor more difficult to supply or more inaccessible to cultivate than it. If Muhammad cuts it down it will never produce again to him; so suggest that he either take it for himself or leave it alone for the sake of God and our kinship ties."

They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) did leave it alone for them. Al-Waqidi quoted his elders similarly. It was his view that it was Salmân al-Fārisi who suggested using the catapult and that he himself operated it. It is said that he brought it forward, along with the two testudos. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqi, through Ibn Lahi'ā, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa, reported that 'Uyayna b. Ḥusn sought permission from the Messenger of God (SAAS) to go to the people of al-Ṭa'if to invite them to Islam. He was given this permission. When he went to them, he advised them, in a lengthy address, to stay in their fortification, telling them, "You should not be scared by the strikes of someone who cuts down trees!"

The account continues, "When he returned, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him what he had told them and he replied, 'I invited them into Islam, warned them of hell and told them of paradise.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'You lie! You said such-and-such to them!' 'Uyayna admitted, 'You speak the truth, O Messenger of God! I turn to God and to you seeking forgiveness for that.'" Al-Bayhaqi related, from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asamm, from Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Hisbām al-Dustuwarī, from Qatāda, from Salīm b. Abū al-Ja'd, from Miṣdān b. Abū Ṭalḥa, from Ibn Abū Najīḥ al-Sulami, he being 'Amr b. Ṭābita, may God be pleased with him, who said, "We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the siege of the fortress at al-Ṭa'if. I heard him say, 'Whoever of you can make an arrow reach (them) will reach an extra level in paradise.' And that day I made 16 arrows reach."

"I also heard him say, 'Whoever casts an arrow in God's cause is in effect set free. For whomever turns grey in God's cause there shall be a light on Resurrection Day. Any man who frees a Muslim shall have God render every one of his bones a shield for every other, bone by bone. And any woman who frees a Muslim woman shall have God render every one of her bones a shield for every other bone she has.'"

Abū Dā'ūd and al-Tirmidhī narrated this, and al-Nāṣīrī declared it sahih, from a hadith of Qatāda.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by al-Ḥumaydī, quoting Sufyān, quoting Hisbām, from his father, from Zaynab, daughter of Umm Salama, who said that Umm Salama stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) came in to see me when I had a mukhammāth, 'an effeminate man', with me. The former heard that the Messenger of God (SAAS) did leave it alone for them. Al-Waqidi quoted his elders similarly. It was his view that it was Salmân al-Fārisi who suggested using the catapult and that he himself operated it. It is said that he brought it forward, along with the two testudos. But God knows best.

The account continues, "When he returned, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him what he had told them and he replied, 'I invited them into Islam, warned them of hell and told them of paradise.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'You lie! You said such-and-such to them!' 'Uyayna admitted, 'You speak the truth, O Messenger of God! I turn to God and to you seeking forgiveness for that.'" the latter say to ‘Abd Allah b. Umayya, ‘If God conquers al-Ta’if for you tomorrow, be sure to take Ghaylān’s daughter; she exposes four folds of flesh when approaching and eight when she turns her back.’ And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Don’t have such persons in your company!””

According to Ibn ‘Uayna and Ibn Jurayj the name of the effeminate was Hit. Al-Bukhari also related it, as did Muslim, with lines of transmission from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father. In one version there are the words, “whom they considered devoid of normal male sex drive”. And in one there is the phrase, “And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘I would not have this man know what is here. Don’t have such people in your company.’”

This implies that if he were someone who understood that, then he would be included (for consideration) with those referred to in God Almighty’s words, “or the children who are not conscious of the private parts of women” (surah al-Nūr; XXIV, 31).

By the word al-mukhannath in the usage of the early authorities is meant those devoid of (sexual) interest in women; the word does not refer to homosexuals. For had he been like that, his execution would certainly have been necessary, as the hadith tradition indicates, and as Abū Bakr, ‘the Trusting’, may God be pleased with him, himself decreed execution.

The meaning of the phrase given above, “she exposes four folds of flesh when approaching and eight when she turns her back” is a reference to the folds of flesh on her stomach; these would appear as four folds as she approached and each of these would become two as she moved away. This woman was named Badiyya, daughter of Ghaylān b. Salama, and she was a lady of Thaqif.

Al-Bukhari quoted Ibn Jurayj as giving the name of this mukhannath as Hit. This is widely accepted as fact. However, Yūnus quoted Ibn Ishāq as stating, “With the Messenger of God (SAAS) there was a freed-man of his aunt Bint ‘Amr b. ‘Ayid, a mukhannath named Mati’. He would go into the presence of the wives of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in his home; he was not considered as having the normal desire for women that men have. Then he (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) overheard him saying to Khalīd b. al-Walid, ‘Khālid, if the Messenger of God (SAAS) should conquer al-Ta’if, then be sure that Badiyya, daughter of Ghaylān, does not slip away from you. She exposes four folds of flesh when she approaches you and eight when she turns her back.’ When he heard this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘I would not have thought this man would notice such as that.’ He then told his women, ‘Let him not have access to you.’ He was then banned from the house of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Al-Bukhari stated that it was related to him by ‘Abī b. ‘Abd Allah, quoting Sufyān, from ‘Amr, from Abū al-‘Abbās, the blind poet, from ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Amr, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged al-Ta’if, but did not overcome them, he said, ‘We’ll be leaving tomorrow, if God wills it.”
This disappointed them and they asked, ‘Are we to leave without victory?’ He replied, ‘Then recommence the fighting.’ Next day they did so but suffered casualties. He then said, ‘We’ll be leaving tomorrow, if God wills it.’ This pleased them and the Messenger of God (SAAS) laughed.” Sufyān, the sub-narrator, once used the wording, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) smiled.”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Sufyān b. ‘Uuyayn; he gave the line of transmission as being from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, different from that given by al-Bukhārī. And (this line is given) in another similar version and in one from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ. But God knows best.

Al-Waqīdī stated, “Kuthayyir b. Zayd b. al-Walid b. Rabah quotes Abū Hurayra as saying, ‘Fifteen days of the siege of al-Ṭāif having elapsed, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sought the advice of Nawfal b. Mu‘āwiya al-Dili, asking, “Nawfal, what is your view of maintaining it?”’ He replied, “Messenger of God, if you wait out a fox in its hole, you’ll take it; and if you leave it (where it is) it will do you no harm.’” Muhammad b. Ishāq stated, “I have been informed that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was engaged in the siege of Taqif, he asked Abū Bakr, ‘Abū Bakr, I had a vision that I was presented with a bowl filled with cream. A cock pecked at it and spilt its contents.’ Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with him, replied, ‘I don’t think you will achieve with them today what you wish.’ ‘I don’t think so either,’ the Messenger of God (SAAS) said.

“Khawla al-Sulamiyya, daughter of Ḥakīm, then said, ‘Messenger of God, please give to me, if God gives you victory, the jewellery of Badiyya, daughter of Gayl b. Salama, or that of al-Fuwā’i, daughter of Uqayl’; these were known as the Thaqīf women with the most jewels. It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘What, Khawla, if I am not awarded control over Thaqif?’

“Khawla then left and reported to ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb what he had said and the latter went in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked, ‘Messenger of God, Khawla has reported to me a conversation she claims to have had with you.’ ‘I might have said it,’ he replied. ‘Umar asked, ‘Then have you not been awarded control over them?’ ‘No,’ he answered. ‘Umar asked, ‘Then should I not announce our departure?’ ‘Yes, do,’ he told him.

“‘Umar then announced their departure. As the army moved off, Sa‘īd b. ‘Ubayd b. ‘Asid b. Abū ‘Amr b. ‘Allāj commented, ‘Well, their tribe is standing fast.’ ‘Uuyayn b. Ḥūṣn responded, ‘Yes, I swear by God, nobly and valiantly.’ One of the Muslims then addressed the latter, ‘Uuyayn, God Damn you, would you praise the polytheists for withstanding the Messenger of God (SAAS), when you came here to assist him?’ ‘Uuyayn replied, ‘I did not come with you to fight Thaqīf; I wanted the Messenger of God (SAAS) to conquer al-Ṭāif so that I could acquire a Thaqīf woman with whom to have intercourse so she would bear me a son. We hold Thaqīf in high regard.’”

Ibn Lahī’a narrated, from Abū al-Aswad, from ‘Urwa, the story of Khawla, daughter of Ḥakīm, and what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said and how he had told Umar to announce the departure. He went on, "And the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered the men that they not disband their force. Next morning the Messenger of God (SAAS) set forth with his men and as he mounted to leave, he said, 'O God, guide them and spare us the trouble of them!'"

Al-Tirmidhi narrated, from a hadith of 'Abd Allāh b. Uthmān b. Khuthaym, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, that they (the Muslim forces) said, "O Messenger of God, the Taqīf arrows greatly harmed us; pray to God against them." He responded, "O God, give guidance to Thaqif."

He (al-Tirmidhi) then commented, "This hadith is hasan gharib."

Yūnus quoted Ibn Ishaq as saying that it was related to him by 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr and 'Abd Allāh b. al-Mukarram, quoting well informed scholars as saying, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) besieged the people of al-Ta'if for some 30 days and then left, not having defeated them. After he had returned to Medina, a delegation of them came to him, in Ramaḍān, and accepted Islam."

Reference to this will come in detail with regard to Ramaḍān of 9 AH, if God so wills it.

The following is the list of names of those Muslims who were, according to Ibn Ishaq, martyred at al-Ta'if.

From Quraysh: Sa'īd b. Sa'īd b. al-Āṣ b. Umayya; 'Urfuṭa b. Janāb, ally of Banū 'Umayyya b. al-Asad b. al-Ghawth; 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr al-Siddiq, who was struck by an arrow there and who died of his wound in Medina, after the death of the Messenger of God (SAAS); 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Umayyya b. al-Mughira al-Makhzūmī, struck by an arrow that day; 'Abd Allāh b. ʿĀmir b. Rabīʿa, an ally of Banū 'Adī; al-Saʿīb b. al-Hārith b. Qays b. ʿAdī al-Sahmī, along with his brother 'Abd Allāh; Julayḥa b. 'Abd Allāh, of Banū Saʿīd b. Layth.

Those martyred that day totalled twelve—seven men of Quraysh and four of the ansār. Also killed was one man of Banū Layth. May God be pleased with them all.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) left on his way back from al-Ta'if, Bujayr b. Zuhayr b. Abū Salmā spoke the following verses concerning the battles at Ḥunayn and al-Ta'if:

'It was a replay of the battles of the Ḥunayn valley,
Awṭās and al-Abraaq;
Hawāzin foolishly assembled their forces but broke up like birds scattered.
They did not retain a single position against us, except for their walls and the base of their ditch.
We paraded before them to bring them out, but they fortified against us behind a closed gate.

Our men without armour withdrew to a great force, a squadron whose armour shone with death.

Close-ranked, and green-hued; if sent charging against a fortress, it would be as though never constructed.

They walk like hounds on tree-shed thorns, like horses led separately then brought together again,

Each wearing armour that once firmly set looks like a pool shimmering under a breeze,

Over coats of armour, the hems of which brushed our shoes, finely woven by Dā'ūd and Muḥarrīq’s family.”

Abū Dā'ūd stated that it was related to him by ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb Abū Ḥafṣ, quoting al-Firṣāḥi, quoting Abān, quoting ʿAmr – he being Ibn ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Ḥāẓim – quoting ʿUṭmān b. Abū Ḥāẓim, from his father, from his grandfather Ṣāḥḥ – he being Abū al-ʿAyya al-ʿAmmārīsī – who said that when he, Ṣāḥḥ, heard that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was attacking Thaqīf, he set off with his cavalry to assist him. When he arrived at al-Ṭīfīf, however, he found him already gone. He then made a vow that he would not leave the fortress before they emerged to accept the authority of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). And he did not leave them until they had done so. Ṣāḥḥ then wrote to him as follows, “Messenger of God, Thaqīf have now accepted your authority. I am accompanying them to you, along with my cavalry.”

(The account continues) “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered that there be a general assembly for prayer and he spoke ten prayers for Banū al-ʿAḥmas, saying, ‘O God, bless al-ʿAḥmas for both their cavalry and their foot soldiers.’

“When they arrived al-Mughira b. Shuʾba spoke, ‘O Messenger of God, Ṣāḥḥ took my aunt and she adopted that which Muslims embrace.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then called for Ṣāḥḥ and said, ‘Ṣāḥḥ, when people accept Islam, their blood and possessions are spared; return al-Mughira’s aunt to him.’ And he did return her.

“He then asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for that water supply belonging to Bānū Salīm; they had fled from Islam and abandoned that water. He asked, ‘Messenger of God, settle me and my people there.’ ‘Yes,’ he agreed and he agreed to settle him and Aslam – the tribesmen of Aslam, that is – there. They then went to Ṣāḥḥ and asked him to give the water supply to themselves, but he refused. And so they went again to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Messenger of God, we have accepted Islam and went to Ṣāḥḥ to have him give us our water supply, but he refused. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Ṣāḥḥ, when people accept Islam their blood and possessions are spared. Deliver their water supply over to them.’ He replied, ‘Yes, O Prophet of God.’

“I then saw the face of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) turn red with embarrassment at his (Ṣāḥḥ’s) having taken the women and also the water!”
Abū Dā'ūd is alone in giving this hadith. And there is some difference of opinion about its chain of authorities.

I observe that it was the Divine Wisdom that determined that the conquest should be postponed that year so that they (Thaqif) would not be annihilated. It has been related above how, following the death of his uncle, Abū Ṭalib, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had gone earlier to al-Ta'if. He had invited them to come to God Almighty and to provide him sanctuary, so he could go on conveying the message of His Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, but they had rejected him and called him a liar.

He had then departed for home in a state of depression from which he had only emerged at Qarn al-Thaqif. There he saw a rain cloud in which was Gabriel. The angel of the mountains had then called out to him, saying, “Muḥammad, your Lord greets you. He has heard how your people have spoken to you and have rejected you. Would you like me to level the Akhshahayn mountains upon them?” The Messenger of God (SAAS) had replied, “No; give them respite so that God might bring forth from their loins those who will worship Him alone, associating no other with Him.”

His statement, “No; give them respite ...” was consistent with his not conquering their fortress so that they not be annihilated, and that the conquest should be delayed to allow them to come forth as Muslims thereafter, in Ramadan of the following year. This will be related hereafter, if God Almighty so will it.

Chapter.

The return of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from al-Ta'if and the division of the spoils taken from Hawāzin at Ḥunayn; this division occurred following his entry from al-Jīrāna to perform the 'umra pilgrimage.

Ibn Ishaq stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS), following his departure from al-Ta'if, went through Dānā and made camp at al-Jīrāna, accompanied by his men and by many Hawāzin captives. One of his men had asked him, as he was leaving Thaqif, “O Messenger of God, speak a prayer against them,” but he had prayed, “O God, guide Thaqif and bring them.”

(Ibn Ishaq continued) “At al-Jīrāna a delegation of Hawāzin came to him. At that time he held captive 6,000 women and children and innumerable camels and sheep.”

He went on, “Amr b. Shu‘ayb related to me (and there is a hadith of Yūnus b. Bukayr also from ‘Amr) quoting his father, from his grandfather, who said, ‘We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Ḥunayn and after he had taken captives and possessions from Hawāzin, a delegation came to him at al-Jīrāna from them; they had now accepted Islam. They addressed him as follows, “O Messenger of God, we are one people, one tribe. You well know what disaster has befallen us. Be kind to us and may God be kind to you.””
Their spokesman, Zuhayr b. Ṣurad Abū Ṣurad, then arose and said, "Messenger of God, those in the enclosures for the captives are nothing but your own maternal aunts and nursemaids who cared for you. If we had suckled Ibn Abū Shamir or al-Nu'mān b. al-Mundhir and then had suffered from them what we have from you, we would have at least hoped for some special consideration and compassion from them. And you are the Messenger of God, the most trustworthy of men."

He then recited the following verses,

"Be kind to us, Messenger of God, in your nobility, for you are the man from whom we hope and expect this. Be kind to womenfolk ruined by fate, their community destroyed and ruined. Fate has imposed upon us circumstances of great sorrow, the hearts of our people overwhelmed with misery and pain. If there does not reach them comforts that you deliver, O most wise of men when tested, Be kind to women from whom you suckled, your mouth filled with pearl-like drops of their pure milk. Be kind to women from whom you suckled, for then your actions will adorn you and not be wasted. Do not render us like those whose joy is gone for ever; let us survive, for we are a noble people. We will surely express thanks for favours for, if given us, we will remember them forever hereafter."

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked, "What matters most to you – your women and children or your possessions?" "What?" they replied. "Would you have us choose between our honour and our goods? Of course, our women and children matter most to us." The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went on, "As for what was mine or belonged to Banū Abī Sālih, that is yours. After I have prayed with the people, say, 'We ask the Messenger of God to intercede with the Muslims; and we ask them to intercede with him for us for our women and children.' When you ask this, I will grant your wish and make a request on your behalf."

"When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed the noon prayer, they arose and they spoke as he had asked. He then said, "As for what was mine or belonged to Banū Abī Muțṭalib, that is now yours. The muhājirūn responded, "Whatever (rights) we had now go to the Messenger of God." The anṣār said the same.

"However, al-Aqra' b. Ḥabīs said, "For myself and Banū Tamīm, no!" Uwayna stated, "For myself and Banū Fazāra, no!" Al-ʿAbbās b. Mīrđās al-Sulāmī said, "For myself and Banū Sulaym, no!" But Banū Sulaym disagreed, saying, "What was ours is now that of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)." ʿAbbās b. Mīrđās then asked Banū Sulaym, "Would you disgrace me?"
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then stated, "Whoever withholds his right shall have six camels due from the first booty that we obtain. Now return their women and children to these people."

"He then mounted and the people followed after him, saying, "O Messenger of God, divide up for us our share of the booty!" They forced him over close to a tree which pulled off his cloak. He asked them, "Please return my cloak to me. For I swear by Him who has my soul in His hand, if the camels I had for you numbered as many as all the trees of Tihāma, I would divide them up among you. Moreover, you have never found me miserly, cowardly or untruthful!"

"He then went over to a camel and took from its hump a piece of its fur which he held up in two fingers, saying, "People, I swear by God, I have nothing from your booty - not even this hair - except for one-fifth of it. And that too is given back to you. 'A needle for a needle'. For theft of booty means sin, and hell-fire and disgrace on Resurrection Day for those who take it."

"One of the ansār then came carrying a strand of hair rope and said, "Messenger of God, I took this to sew up a saddle-cloth for a camel of mine with ulcers." The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "I award to you my rights in it. Since word of this might spread, I don't need it." And he threw it from his hand."

This text requires that the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned their captives to them before the division of the spoils, a view held by Muhammad ibn Ishaq ibn Yasa, but one opposed by Mas'ud ibn Wqba and others.

In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī there is a hadith from al-Layth, from Qayyil, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, from al-Miswar b. Makhrama and Marwān b. al-Ḥakam. It states that when the delegation of Hawāzin came to him, having accepted Islam, and asked to have their property and women returned, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told them, "There are with me those you see. The talk that is most favoured by me is what is most true. Choose one of two options - either the captives or their possessions. I have been waiting for you."

(The narration continued) "He had delayed the distribution for ten days following his return from al-Ṭā'if. When it was clear to them that he would return to them only one of the two categories, they replied, 'We choose those of us who are captives.'

"He then arose among the Muslims and, having given appropriate praise to God, said, 'These brothers of yours have come in repentance and I have decided to return those of them taken captive. Whoever of you wishes to do that as a favour should do so. Those of you who would prefer to receive this (full) share, we will give it with the first booty God awards us.'

"The Muslims responded, 'We are pleased to return them as a favour, O Messenger of God.' He then told them, 'We do not know which of you have agreed and which have not. So go back and let your leaders inform us.' They did return and their leaders talked with them and came to him and informed him that they (all) had agreed and had given their assent (to the release of the prisoners)."

147. Perhaps: that is, "Be absolutely scrupulous over issues of value".
This is what we have been informed about those Hawāzīn taken captive.

Al-Bukhārī did not refer to the objection raised by al-ʿAqīr, Wyayna and their families; he remained silent on the issue. A positive (statement) generally takes priority over a denial. And more so if there be silence.

Al-Bukhm related from a hadith of al-Zuhri as follows, “ʿUmar b. Muḥammad b. Jūbayr b. Muḥīm informed me, from his father, that Jūbayr b. Muḥīm informed him that while he was with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), accompanying the men returning from Ḥunayn, the bedouin so crowded around him questioning him that they forced him against a tree which pulled off his cloak. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stopped and asked, ‘Hand me back my cloak. If I had as many camels as these thorny trees, I would distribute them among you. You know me not to be miserly, untruthful or cowardly.’”

Ibn Isāq stated that he was informed by Abū Wajrā, Yazid b. Ḫubayd al-Ṣāʿī, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave to ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib a slave girl named Rayṭa, daughter of Hilāl b. Ḥayān b. ʿUmayya, and to ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān he gave a slave-girl called Zaynab, daughter of Ḥayān b. ʿAmr b. Ḥayān. He also gave a slave girl to ʿUmar, but he gave her to his son, ʿAbd Allāh.

Ibn Isḥāq went on to state that Nafīʿ quoted ʿUmar’s son ʿAbd Allāh as having said, “I sent her off to my aunts of Banū Jumāḥ to prepare her properly for me while I circumambulated the kaʿba and arranged to come and take her on my return from the mosque. When I had finished at the mosque, I went there and found everyone in turmoil. I asked what was going on and they replied that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had returned their wives and children (to Hawāzīn). I then said, ‘Your woman friend is with Banū Jumāḥ; go and get her.’ And they did so.”

Ibn Isḥāq continued, “Wyayna b. Ḫisn took an elderly Hawāzīn woman, saying as he did so, ‘I can see an old lady who I think is of high standing in her tribe; ransom for her may be substantial.’ When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned the captives at a rate of six camels per person, ʿUmayna refused to give her back. Zuhayr b. ʿUṣayr then told him, ‘Let her go; I swear, her mouth is not cool, her breasts are not rounded, she has no child in her womb, she has no upset husband, and her milk is not abundant. It’s not as if you’ve taken a woman who is fair-skinned and a virgin, or even someone who is plump and mature!’ And so Wyayna gave her back in exchange for six camels.”

Al-Waqīḍī stated that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) divided up the spoils at al-Jīrānā, each warrior received four camels and forty sheep.

Salama quoted Muḥammad b. Isḥāq, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr to the effect that a man who took part in the Battle of Ḥunayn said, “I was riding along on my camel at the side of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and I was wearing heavy boots. My camel bumped against that of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and the toe of my boot struck and hurt his leg. He then tapped my foot with his whip, saying, ‘You hurt me! Go further away from me!’ So I moved off. Next day the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wanted to see me and I assumed this was because I had struck his leg the day before. So I went to him, feeling apprehensive, but he said, 'You struck my leg yesterday and hurt me and I tapped your foot with my whip. I have called for you to give you compensation for that.' He then awarded me 80 ewes for the blow he had struck me.'"

The import of all of this is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave back the captives only after the division of the spoils, as this text and others show.

The clear text of the hadith of 'Amr b. Shu'ayb, who was quoted by Muhammad b. Ishaq, from his father and from his grandfather, is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned the captives to Hawazin before the division of spoils. This is why, when he mounted, that the bedouin crowded around him asking that the division of the spoils take place, forcing him over to a tree which tugged off his cloak, so that he said, "Please return my cloak to me. For I swear, by Him who has my soul in His hand, if I had as many camels as these thorny trees, I would distribute them among you. You know me not to be miserly, untruthful or cowardly."

This is also related in similar words by al-Bukhari, from Joubayr b. Mut'imin.

Since the men feared that Hawazin would have their possessions returned to them as their women and children had been, they asked him to divide it up at al-Jirayna, as God Almighty and Glorious is He, had ordered him. He gave preference and priority to some persons and some of the tribal leaders in this distribution and some of the ansar complained to him until he addressed them and explained the wisdom of his actions, in order to placate them.

Some foolish and ignorant persons, including some from the khawarij, such as Dhul-Khuwaysira, may God rebuke him, and the like, made certain criticisms, as will be related and explained in detail in a hadith relating thereto. And help is to be sought from God.

Imam Ahmad stated, "'Arim related to us, quoting Mu'tamir b. Sulaymân, quoting his father, quoting al-Sumayt al-Sadusi, to the effect that Anas b. Malik said, 'Having conquered Mecca, we sent an expedition to Hijranya. The polytheists advanced in the most impressive lines I had ever seen. First came the lines of cavalry, then the fighters, then the women and children, then the sheep and goats, then the camels. We were a large force, some 6,000 strong, and Khalid b. al-Walid was in command of our vanguard of cavalry. Our cavalry began to take shelter behind us but they left themselves open. It was not long before the bedouin forces along with others we know fled. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called out, 'O muhajirun! O ansar! Where are you now?'"

148. The so-named "Kharjites" (khawarij) were the first group to dissent on doctrinal reasons from orthodox Islam. They were active in the last two years of the Caliphate of 'Ali b. Abi Talib and engaged in sporadic uprisings throughout the Arab-Islamic empire thereafter. The Ibadiyya of North Africa and the lower Arabian (Persian) Gulf consider themselves heirs to the early khawarij. See also pp. hereafter.

149. For reference to the bedouin Dhul-Khuwaysira see hereafter.
Anas explained that this was according to an account of his aunt. He then went on, "We said, Labbayka! At your service, Messenger of God!" The Messenger of God (SAAS) then advanced and by the time we came to them God had already defeated them.

"We seized their property and went on to al-Ṭa‘if which we besieged for 40 nights before returning to Mecca. There we stayed, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was awarding some men 100 (camels) while to another he would give 200. "The ānṣār were saying among themselves, 'He gives to those who fought him in the battles, but not to those who did not!'"

"This talk was reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he ordered the muḥājirūn and the ānṣār leaders to come in to see him. Then he said, 'Let none but an āqāri' (or he used the word the āqār, plural) 'come in to me.' So we entered his pavilion, which we filled. The Prophet (SAAS) then addressed us, saying, 'Āqār!' or something to that effect — 'What is this that has reached me?' 'What is it that you have heard, Messenger of God?' He asked, '(You tell me) what talk it is I have heard!' 'Well, what have you heard, Messenger of God?' they asked.

"He then asked, 'Are you not content that others receive material goods while you go off with the Messenger of God, whom you have enter your homes?' They replied, 'We are content, Messenger of God.' And they were satisfied."

This is related thus by Muslim, from a hadith of Muṭamir b. Sulaymān.

There are strange aspects to this. (For example) His statement that they were 6,000 at the battle with Hawzīn, whereas they were 12,000 strong. Also his statement that they besieged al-Ṭa‘if for 40 days, whereas they did so for a month, or even less than 20 days. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd Allāh b. Muhammad, quoting Ḥishām, quoting Māʿmar, from al-Zuhri, who said that Anas b. Mālik stated to him, "Some of the ānṣār began talking when God gave to His messenger the spoils from Hawzīn and he began awarding some men 100 camels. They were saying, 'May God forgive the Messenger of God! He is giving to Quraysh but not us, even though our swords drip with their blood!'

Anas b. Mālik went on, "What they were saying was reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he sent for the ānṣār whom he gathered in a leather pavilion, allowing entry to no one else at the time. When they were assembled, the Prophet (SAAS) arose and said, 'What is this talk that has reached me?' The ānṣār elders replied, 'Our leaders, Messenger of God, have said nothing. Some of our young men, however, have been saying, "God forgive the Messenger of God! He is giving to Quraysh but not to us, even though our swords drip with their blood."'"

The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, 'I am giving to these men who were so recently polytheists in order to establish good will with them. Are you not content they go off with material things, while you take the Prophet to your homes? I swear by God, what you take home is far better than what they do.’ They responded, ‘We are content, Messenger of God.’ He then told them, ‘You will find others much advantaged. But be patient until you meet God and His messenger; for I will be there at the al-hawd,1st the pool’.”

Anas concluded, “But they were not patient.”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving it from this line.

Al-Bukhārī went on to relate, as did Muslim, from a hadith of Ibn ‘Awf, quoting Hishām b. Zayd, from his grandfather Anas b. Mālik, who said, “At the battle of Hunayn, Hawāzīn attacked. With the Prophet (SAAS) there were 10,000 warriors, along with some Meccans who had joined them. They (the Muslims) drew back, and so he called out, ‘Anšār!’ And they responded, ‘Labbayka, ya rasīl Allāh, wa sa'day! Labbayka! Nahnu bayna yadayak!’152 ‘At your service, Messenger of God, and at your assistance! We are here before you!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then dismounted and said, ‘I am the servant and Messenger of God!’ After that the polytheists were defeated and he gave both to those who had joined at Mecca and to those who were muhājīrūn; he gave nothing to the anšār. They began talking and he summoned them to his pavilion. He asked them, ‘Are you not content to have them take away sheep and camels, while you go back with the Messenger of God?’ He went on, ‘If the rest were to enter some valley, while the anšār climbed up a mountain defile, I would take the path of the anšār!’

In another narration from al-Bukhārī on this subject, he (Anas b. Mālik) stated, “At the battle of Hunayn, Hawāzīn, Ghatafān and others advanced, along with their livestock and families. With the Messenger of God (SAAS) there were 10,000 warriors and some men who had joined him at Mecca. They (the Muslims) withdrew, so that he was left alone. He made two calls to them, each call separate from the other. Turning to his right, he called, ‘Anšār!’ They responded, ‘At your service, Messenger of God! Be content, we are with you!’ At the time he was riding his white mule. He dismounted and said, ‘I am the servant and Messenger of God!’

“The polytheists were defeated and he won much booty that day and he divided it between the muhājīrūn and the Meccans who had joined the Muslims (after the conquest). However, he gave the anšār nothing. The anšār said, ‘If difficulties arise, we are summoned, but the spoils are given to others!’

“When news of this reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) he assembled them in a pavilion and asked them, ‘Anšār, what is this report that has reached me?’ They were silent and he asked, ‘Anšār, are you not content that others have worldly goods while you go away with the Messenger of God, having him for yourselves in your own homes?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. Then he said, ‘If the men were to make their way through a valley and the ānṣār were to take a route through a mountain defile, I would follow them.’ Hishām asked, ‘Abū Hamza’ (i.e. Anas b. Mālik), ‘did you actually witness that?’ He replied, ‘Where would I have been, away from him?’”

Al-Bukhārī then related it — as also did Muslim — from a hadith of Shu‘bā, from Qatāda, from Anas, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) assembled the ānṣār and said, ‘Quraysh were still recently in the jahiliyya and have greatly suffered. I wanted to aid them and to establish goodwill with them. Are you not content for others to return with worldly goods, while you go to your homes with the Messenger of God?’ ‘Yes,’ they agreed. He then said, ‘If the men were to make their way into a valley while the ānṣār followed a route into a mountain defile, I would follow the valley — or the defile — of the ānṣār.’”

They also gave it from a hadith of Shu‘bā, from Abū al-Tayyāḥ Yazīd b. Hamīd, from Anas in similar form. In that version they (the ānṣār) had exclaimed, “By God, that’s very strange! While our swords still drip with their blood, the spoils are divided up among them.” He then addressed them in the words similar to those given above.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Affān related to us, quoting Hammād, quoting Thabit, from Anas b. Mālik, to the effect that the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave from the spoils at Hunayn to Abī Sufyān, ‘Uyayna, al-Aqrā’, Suhayl b. ‘Amr and others. The ānṣār then said, ‘Our swords drip with their blood, yet they go off with the spoils!’ News of this reached the Prophet (SAAS) and he assembled the ānṣār in a pavilion of his until it was filled. He asked, ‘Is there anyone here who is not of you?’ They replied, ‘No one except our cousin.’ He commented, ‘A cousin is of one’s own people.’ He then asked, ‘Have you said such—and—such?’ ‘Yes,’ they agreed. He observed, ‘You are the shahr, “the under-garments”, while the people are the al-dīhr, “the outer-wear.”’ Are you content to have the others receive the sheep and camels while you take the Messenger of God to your homes?’ ‘Yes,’ they agreed. He went on, ‘The ānṣār are my karsh, “my very insides”, and ‘aybatī, “my closest family”. If the men were to take a path through a valley and the ānṣār were to take a mountain defile, I would follow along the defile. Had it not been for the hijra, I would have been one of the ānṣār.’ Hammād said, ‘He gave out 100 camels (to the foregoing persons). He then named each one of those.””

Ahmād is alone in giving this with this line of transmission. And the hadith meets the criteria set by Muslim.

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Ibn Abī ‘Adi, from Humayd, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “O ānṣār, did I not come to you when you were lost and did not God then give you guidance through me?

154. Al-shahr refers to the clothing directly touching the body, while al-dīhr is the clothing that covers the undergarments and does not contact the body. The comment is to emphasize the degree of closeness to the Prophet.

155. The translation of these two terms is conjectural.
Did I not come to you when you were scattered, and did not God unite you through me? Did I not come to you when you were enemies (to one another) and did not God then place goodwill in your hearts?” “Yes, Messenger of God,” they agreed. He asked, “Do you not say, ‘You came to us in fear and we made you secure, in flight and we gave you sanctuary, in failure and we gave you aid?’” They replied, “Indeed yes; God has credit for His favour to us and to His messenger.”

The chain of authorities for this hadith is tripartite and it meets the criteria established by the sahihayn, the two canonical collections.

This hadith from Anas b. Malik is tantamount to mutawāwarī.156

Al-Bukhārī stated that Musa b. Ismā‘īl related to him, quoting Wahīb, quoting ‘Ammar b. Ya‘āqūb, from ‘Abbād b. Tamīm, from Ṭābāt b. Zayd b. ‘Āṣim, who said, “When God gave booty to His messenger (SAAS) at the battle of Ḥunayn, he made distributions to those recently reconciled (to Islam) but gave nothing to the ansār. They seem to have been upset at not having received as had the others, and so he addressed them as follows, ‘Anṣār, did I not find you astray and did not then God guide you to me? Were you not divided, and did God not unite you through me? Were you not poor, and did God not unite you through me? Were you not poor, and did God not enrich you through me?’ As he asked each of these, they replied, ‘God and His messenger give many favours.’

“He went on, ‘If you had wished, you could have said, ‘You came to us so-on-and-so-forth.’ Are you not content to have others go off with the sheep and camels, while you take the Messenger of God away to your homes? Had it not been for the hijra I would have been one of the ṣaqr. If the people were to take a path into a valley and a mountain defile, I would follow into the valley and defile taken by the ṣaqr. The ṣaqr are shīr, while the people are dīthar.157’ After me you will notice others given preference; be patient until you meet me at al-ḥawd, the pool before paradise.’”

Muslim related it from a hadith of ‘Amr b. Ya‘āqūb al-Māzini.

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Muḥammad b. Ishāq as saying, “It was related to me by ‘Āṣim b. ‘Umar b. Qatāda, from Maḥmūd b. Ḭabbādī that Abū Sa‘īd al-Khudārī said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had won the spoils at the battle of Ḥunayn and had divided these up as he did to those Meccans of goodwill and to others of the Arabs, but had given none of it whatsoever to the ansār, the latter men were resentful. They said, “So the Messenger of God (SAAS) has met with his own!” Sa‘īd b. ‘Ubāda went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, “O Messenger of God, this tribe of ansār feel resentment towards you.” “Why?” he asked. Sa‘īd explained, “Because you have been distributing booty to your own people and others but giving them, the ansār, nothing.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “And where do you stand in that, Sa‘īd?” “Well”, he replied, 156. That is, the information it contains is affirmed by so many trustworthy persons as to exclude doubt over its veracity.

“I’m just one man of my own people.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, “Assemble your people for me in this enclosure and when they are gathered, let me know.” Sa’d then left, called out to them and they assembled in that enclosure. One of the muhajirin also came; he was allowed entry and went in. Others who came were sent away. Eventually all the ansār, without exception, were gathered for him. Sa’d then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, “Messenger of God, this tribe of ansār are now assembled where you told me to gather them.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went and stood among them to address them. He gave fitting praise and thanks to God and went on to say, “Ansār, did I not come to you when you were astray, and did not God then guide you? (Were you not) poor and did God not enrich you? Were you not enemies and did not God create good will between you?” “Yes,” they agreed. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “Can you not give me response, O ansār?” They replied, “What should we say, Messenger of God? How should we answer you? Our favours are due to God and to His messenger.” He replied, “I swear by God, had you wished you could have said, ‘You spoke the truth, again and again.’ And ‘You came to us an outcast and we sheltered you. You came in distress and we comforted you. You were fearful and we made you secure, failing and we gave you aid.’” They responded, “Our favours are due to God and to His messenger.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, “Do you find within you, O ansār, a lust for those worldly things whereby I reconciled a people who had accepted Islam, while I entrusted you with that of Islam which God had allotted to you? Are you resentful, for the others to take sheep and camels to their homes, while you return with the Messenger of God to yours? I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand, that if the people were to follow one mountain defile while the ansār followed another, I would make my way through the defile of the ansār. Had it not been for the hijra, I would have been a man of the ansār. O God, have mercy on the ansār, their children and their children’s children!”

“They wept at this until their beards were wet and said, “We are content with God as our Lord and His messenger as distributor.”

Imām Ahmad related it thus from a ḥadīth of Ibn Ishāq. None of the compilers of the canonical collections gave it with this line of transmission. It is (to be considered) sahih, “authentic”.

Imām Ahmad related it also from Yahyā b. Bukayr, from al-Faḍl b. Marzūq, from ʿĀṭiya b. Saʿd al-ʿAwfī, from Abū Saʿd al-Khudari, who quoted one of the ansār as having said, to his friends, “I swear, I told you, didn’t I, that once things settled down, he would give preference to others over you?” They replied to him rudely and that reached the Messenger of God (SAAS). He then came to them and said some things the narrator said he did not recall. They replied, “Yes, Messenger of God.” He told them, “You used not to ride horses” and every time he said something to them, they replied, “Yes, Messenger of God.”
He then related the rest of the hadith as above. Āḥmad was also alone in giving this.

Imām Āḥmad was also alone in relating it from a hadith of al-ʿAqmash, from Abū Sāliḥ, from Abū Saʿīd, in similar words. He related it as well from Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from Ibn Lahīfa, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, in an abbreviated form.

Sufyān b. ʿUyayna stated, from ʿUmar b. Saʿīd b. Masrūq, from his father, from ʿĪbāya b. Rāfiʿ b. Khadij, from his grandfather Rāfiʿ b. Khadij, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave to each of those whose goodwill he sought 100 camels from the spoils at Ḥunayn. He gave 100 to each of Abī Sufyān b. Ḥarb, Ṣafwān b. ʿUmayya, ʿUyayna b. Ḥiṣn, al-ʿAqrāʾ b. Ḥābīs, ʿAlqama b. ʿAlatha, and Mālik b. ʿAwf. To al-ʿAbbās b. Mīrđās he gave less than 100, less than to the others, and so he recited the verses,

"Would you divide my share and that of (my horse) al-ʿUbayd between ʿUyayna and al-ʿAqrāʾ?

(Their fathers) Ḥiṣn and Ḥābīs were not above (my father) Mīrđās in the assembly.

I was not (considered) beneath either of them; and whomever you demean today will never be raised.

I was fully active in the warfare, yet I was given nothing, nor was I defended."

The account concludes, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then awarded him more camels to bring his share up to 100."

Muslim related this from a hadith of Ibn ʿUyayna in similar terms, and this is (also) the version given by al-Bayhaqi.

There is another version given by Mūsā b. ʿUqba, Urwa b. al-Zubayr and Ibn Ishāq. That quoted al-ʿAbbās as reciting,

"Those were the spoils I gained by charging on my colt into the plain

And by keeping the tribe alert so that they not doze; and when they slept, I did not.

But my share and that of (my horse) al-ʿUbayd went to ʿUyayna and al-ʿAqrāʾ.

I was fully active in the warfare, yet I was given nothing, nor was I defended, Given only some weak camels, to the number of their four legs!

(Their fathers) Ḥiṣn and Ḥābīs were not above (my father) Mīrđās in the assembly

And I was not (considered) beneath either of them; and whomever you put down today will never be raised."
Wrwa and Masa b. Wqba quoted al-Zubri as saying, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard these verses, he asked al-‘Abbās, ‘Are you the one who said, ‘But my share and that of al-Wbayd went to al-Aqra‘ and ‘Uyaynā?’’”

“Abū Bakr observed, ‘That’s not what he said, Messenger of God. I swear by God, you were never a poet; that would not be fitting for you.’”158 “Well, what were his words?” asked the Messenger of God (SAAS). Abū Bakr then recited the line (reversing the order of the names) and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Well, they’re the same; it doesn’t matter which you put first!’

“He then said, ‘Cut out his tongue for me!’ Some people feared that he meant for him (al-‘Abbās b. Mirdās) to be mutilated, but the Prophet (SAAS) only wanted payment made to him. And he added, ‘And also a share for ‘Ubayd, his horse!’”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Muḥḥammad b. al-‘Abbās related to him, quoting Usāma, from Burayd b. ‘Abd Allah, from Abī Burda, from Abū Mūsā, who said, “I was with the Prophet (SAAS) while he was encamped at al-Jīrāna, between Mecca and al-Medina, Bilāl being there with him. A bedouin came up to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and demanded, ‘Well, aren’t you going to fulfil your promise to me?’ ‘Abshir! Rejoice!’ The bedouin insisted, ‘You’ve told me that abshir too often already!’”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went over to Abū Mūsā and Bilāl, looking angry and said, “The bushrā, the rejoicing, has been given back; you two have it!” He then asked for a bowl of water in which he washed his hands and face. He then took a mouthful and spat it back in it, saying, “Now, you two drink it and pour the rest over your faces and necks and you two ‘rejoice’.” They took the bowl and did as he asked. Umm Salama called out from behind the curtain, “Keep some for your mother!” And they did leave some for her.

Al-Bukhārī also stated that Yahyah b. Bukayr related to him, quoting Mālik, from Isḥaqq b. ‘Abd Allah, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, “I was walking with the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was wearing a mantle from Najmān that had a rough hem. A bedouin came up to him and pulled on the mantle so roughly that I saw that its hem had made a mark on his shoulder. The bedouin said, ‘Order a payment to me from God’s property you have!’ He turned to him, laughed and then ordered that a payment be made to him.”

Ibn Ishāq recorded the names of those to each of whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) distributed 100 camels that day. These were: Abū Sufyān Sakkhr b. Ḥarb; his son Muṣāwiya; Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām; al-Ḥārith b. Kalda, a brother of Banū ‘Abd al-Dār; ‘Alqama b. ‘Alā‘a; al-‘Alā‘ b. Ḥāritha al-Thaqāfī, ally of Banū Zuhra; al-Ḥārith b. Ḥishām; Jumayr b. Muṣṭim; Mālik b. ‘Awf al-Naṣrī; Suhayl b.

158. C.f. sūra Yāsin; XXXVI, v.69; “And We have not taught him poetry; that would not be fitting for him.”
Ibn Ishāq stated that it was related to him by Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Hārith al-Taymi, that one of his companions asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), “Messenger of God, since you gave 100 camels to each of ‘Uyayna and al-Aqra’, why did you not do so to Ju’ayl b. Suraqa al-Damri?” He replied, “By Him who holds the soul of Muhammad in his hand, Ju’ayl is better than the very best of all those on earth who are like ‘Uyayna and al-Aqra! But I wanted to establish goodwill with them for them to accept Islam; I placed the trust of Ju’ayl b. Suraqa in his Islam.”

Ibn Ishāq went on to mention those to whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) distributed less than 100 camels. It would be too lengthy to relate these.

In the authentic hadith of Sāfwan b. Umayya, he is quoted as saying, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) kept on making distributions to me from the spoils of Hunayn; he was previously the most hated person to me, but he gave until he became, for me, the most loved thing that God had created.”

An Account of the arrival of Mālik b. ‘Awf al-Naṣrī to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Ibn Ishāq stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke with a delegation from Hawāzin and asked them what had happened to Mālik b. ‘Awf. They replied that he was in al-Ṭa’if with Bānū Thaqīf. He told them, “Inform him that if he comes to me as a Muslim, I will return to him his people and their belongings and will award him 100 camels.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “When Mālik heard this, he slipped away from Thaqīf and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-Jīrānā – or in Mecca – accepted Islam and became a good Muslim. He then restored to Mālik both his people and their belongings. When he also gave him 100 camels, Mālik b. ‘Awf, may God be pleased with him, spoke the following verses, ‘Never have I seen nor heard of the like of Muhammad among all mankind.

He gives in good faith and generously when requested and if you wish he will foretell what is to come.
When the squadron goes into action with its lances and strikes hard with its Indian-steel swords
He is like a lion crouching over its cubs within its den.’”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed him in command over those of his people who had accepted Islam, those tribes being Thumāl, Salima and Fahm. He (Mālik) had those do battle against Thaqīf; whenever they brought their flocks out, he would attack, thus causing them great difficulty.”
Al-Bukhārī stated that Musā b. Ismā‘īl related to him quoting Jarir b. Ḥāzim, quoting al-Ḥasan, who stated that ‘Amr b. Ṭhaʿlab related to him as follows, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made distribution to some and did not to others. It seems that some complained to him and he responded, ‘I give to those people I fear will be impatient and resentful; and to those who are self-sufficient and whose goodness is inspired in them by God, I give not. Of them is ‘Amr b. Ṭagḥlib.’

‘Amr went on, ‘I would rather have such words about me said by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) than have the most choice animals of the herd!’”

Abū ʿAṣim added to this, quoting Jarir as saying, “I heard al-Ḥasan quote ‘Amr b. Ṭagḥlib as saying that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then brought property—or captives—and distributed it in this way.”

In an account from al-Bukhārī he is quoted as saying, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) brought some property—or something—and gave to some men but not to others. It reached him that those who had been left out were complaining and so he made an address to them. He gave praise and thanks to God, then said, ‘And further ...’ He then related it as above.

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this.

Ibn Hishām quoted Ḥassān b. Thābit as having recited these verses about the anṣār having been delayed in receiving distributions from the spoils:

“Sadness grew and water from the eyes fell copiously, teardrops streaming,
In pain for Shammas who is young and slender, blameless and healthy.
But forget Shammas, for her passion has faded; and bad it is to meet a love now past.
Go to the Messenger and say, ‘O most trustworthy of all men for Believers, if all men be counted, Why were Sulaym called, though they are to leave, in preference to those who gave refuge and aid?
God named them anṣār for their nasr, “aid”, to the true faith, while warfare dragged on.
They sped to God’s cause, exposing themselves to dangers, never betraying nor complaining.
When people banded against us over you, and our sole defence was our swords and spear points
We battled them and spared none, ignoring nothing that the sūras revealed.
Those loving war do not dislike meeting us; when its fire flares, we kindle it even more!
As when we repelled at Badr, before they achieved their goal, those hypocrites, victory alighting upon us.
We were your troops at the battle on the slopes of Uhud when Muṣṭar insolently assembled their clans.”
An Account of the dissatisfaction of some who were ignorant, divisive and hypocritical towards the Messenger of God (SAAS) concerning the just distributions he made by agreement.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Qabīṣa related to him, quoting Sufyān, from al-A‘mash, from Abū Wāṣīl, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “When the Prophet (SAAS) divided up the spoils of Hunayn, one of the ansār said, ‘By doing this, he was not seeking to serve God!’ I then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and informed him of this. His face darkened and he exclaimed, ‘May God have mercy on Moses! He was made to suffer even more than this but remained patient!’” Muslim related this from a hadith of al-A‘mash.

Al-Bukhārī also stated that Qutayba b. Sa‘īd related to him, quoting Jarir, from Mansūr, from Abū Wāṣīl, who quoted ʿAbd Allāh as saying, “At Ḥunayn the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave preferable treatment to some persons. He gave 100 camels to each of al-Aqraī b. Ḥābīs and Uuyayna and also made distributions to others. One man said, ‘By this division, service to God was not intended!’ I said, ‘Well, I’m going to report this to the Messenger of God.’

“He (the Messenger of God (SAAS)) exclaimed, ‘May God have mercy on Moses; he was made to suffer even more than this but remained patient!’”

He also related it thus from a hadith of Mansūr, from al-Mu‘tamīr.

In one account given by al-Bukhārī, the wording is, “By God, this is a distribution that is devoid of justice; service to God was not intended.” So I said, “I will inform the Messenger of God (SAAS) of this!” When I went to him and told him, he exclaimed, “And who will ever be just, if it not be God and His messenger! May God have mercy on Moses; he was made to suffer even more than this but remained patient!”

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated that it was related to him by Abū Ubayda b. Muhammad b. ʿAmmār b. Yaṣīr, from Miqṣam Abū al-Qāsim, the freed-man of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith b. Nawfal, who said, “I and Talīd b. Kilāb al-Laythī came to ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ while he was circumambulating the kubba, his sandals hanging from his hand. We asked him, ‘Were you present with the Messenger of God (SAAS) when the man from Banī Tamīm spoke to him at the battle of Ḥunayn?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. ‘A man of Banī Tamīm named Dhū al-Khuwaysīrā came and stood nearby while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was distributing the spoils. Dhū al-Khuwaysīrā told him, ‘Muḥammad, I have been watching what you have been doing today.’ ‘Yes’, asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘and what have you thought?’ ‘I do not think you have been acting justly.’ The Prophet (SAAS) was very angry and said, ‘Confound you! If justice is not to be found with me, then with whom is it!’”
“Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb then asked, ‘Should we not kill him?’ He replied, ‘No; leave him alone. He shall lead a faction who will go deeply into the faith and emerge as an arrow does from its target. When its head is examined, nothing will be seen upon it. Also, its shaft and its notch will have nothing upon them. It will have outstripped the insides and the blood.’”

Al-Layth b. Sa‘d quoted from Yaḥyā b. Sa‘d, from Abū al-Zubayr, who quoted Jābīr b. ‘Abd Allāh as saying, “A man came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at al-Jīrāna while he was making distributions from the spoils of Ḥunayn. There was silver in Bilāl’s cloak which he was taking and handing to people. The man said, ‘Muḥammad, be just!’ He responded, ‘Confound you, who will be just if not me? Otherwise I would have disappointed and failed.’ Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb asked, ‘Will you permit me, Messenger of God, to kill this hypocrite?’ He replied, ‘God forbid that people say of me that I kill my men! (When) this fellow and his friends recite the Qur’ān, it doesn’t emerge out of their throats; they have it pass straight on through, like an arrow exiting its target!”’

Muslim related this from Muḥammad b. Rumḥ, from al-Layth.

Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Abū ‘Amir, quoting Qurra, from ‘Amr b. Du‘ār, from Jābīr, who said, “While the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was distributing the spoils of Ḥumayn, a man went up to him and said, ‘Do be just!’ He responded, ‘I will be made to suffer if I am not just!’”

Al-Bukhrā‘i related this from Muslim b. Ibrāhīm, from Qurra b. Khālid al-Sadūs.

In both sāḥīḥ collections, it is related from a ḥadīth of al-Zuhrī, from Abū Salāma, from Abū Sa‘d, who said, “While we were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), as he was making distributions of the spoils, Dhūt al-Khuwayṣir, a man of Bantī Tamīm, came over to him and said, ‘Messenger of God, be just!’ He responded, ‘Confound you, who would be just if I were not? Then I would have disappointed and failed. If I were not just, who would be?’ Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb asked, ‘Messenger of God, will you give me permission to behead him?’ ‘Leave him alone,’ he replied. ‘He has friends. One of you would feel contempt for his prayer and their prayer, his fasting and their fasting. They recite the Qur’ān, but their incantations do not come forth. They slip on through Islam as an arrow slips on through a target. If you examine its head, you’ll see nothing on it; then its head binding, you’ll see nothing; then its shaft, and you’ll see nothing; then its feathers, you’ll see nothing. It will have outstripped the insides and the blood. Their sign is that they will have among them a black man, one of whose upper arms reminds you of a woman’s breasts, or like a piece of fat meat vibrating; they will appear at a time when people are disunited.’”

159. This hadīth suggests foreknowledge on the part of the Prophet (ṢAAS) concerning the schism in Islam resulting from the activities of the khawārij of later years. The text of this hadīth twice employs the word kharaja, to go out or secede, from which the name of the movement is derived.
"Abū Saʿīd stated, 'I testify that I heard this from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and I also testify that 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib fought them while I was present. He gave orders and that man was searched out and brought. I saw him to be as the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had described him."

Muslim also related this from a ḥadīth of al-Qāsim b. al-Ḥaḍl from Abū Nadrā, from Abū Saʿīd in similar words.

An Account of the arrival of the foster-sister of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was at al-Ḥirāna; her name was al-Shaymā'.

Ibn Ishaq stated that a man of Banū Saʿīd related to him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said at the battle with Hawāzin, "If you capture Nījād - a man of Banū Saʿīd b. Bakr - don't let him escape you." (He had done something serious.) "When the Muslims took him, they led him and his family away. With him they took al-Shaymā', daughter of al-Ḥārith b. 'Abd al-Uzzā, the foster-sister of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

"They treated her roughly as they took her away and she said to the Muslims, 'You should know, I swear by God, that I am the foster-sister of your leader.' They did not believe her until they brought her to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

"Yazid b. Wbāyd al-Ṣaʿdī - he being Abū Wajzā - said, 'When she was brought to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) she said, 'Messenger of God, I am your foster-sister.' "How can you prove that?" he asked. She replied, 'There is the mark of the bite you gave me on my back when I carried you on my hip.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) recognized the mark and spread out his cloak for her, sat her down on it and treated her well. He told her, 'If you wish, you may live with me in honour and affection. If you wish for me to provide for you and to let you return to your people, I will do so.' She replied, 'Yes, do provide for me and return me to my people.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave her presents and returned her to her people. Banū Saʿīd claim that he gave her a slave called Makhūl and a slave-girl, that she married them to one another and that descendants of that union still survive.'"

Al-Bayhaqi related from a ḥadīth of al-Ḥakam b. 'Abd al-Malik, from Qatāda, who said, "On the day of the conquest of Hawāzin, a slave-girl came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, 'Messenger of God, I am your sister! I am Shaymā', daughter of al-Ḥārith.' He asked her, 'If you are telling the truth, then you have a mark I made that would not wear away.' She then exposed her upper arm and said, 'Yes, Messenger of God. When you were small, you gave me this bite.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then spread out his cloak for her and said, 'Ask and it will be given; intercede for someone and you will be interceded for.'"

Al-Bayhaqi also stated that he was informed by Abū Naṣr b. Qatāda, quoting 'Amr b. Ismā'īl b. 'Abd al-Sulāmī, quoting Muslim, quoting Abū Ḥāsim, quoting Ja'far b. Yahyā b. Thawbān, who said, “My uncle Umara b. Thawbān informed me that Abū al-Tufayl told him, ‘I was a slave who used to care for the camel hides, and I witnessed the Messenger of God (SAAS) distributing the camels at al-Jīrāna.

“A woman came up to him and he spread out his cloak for her. I asked who she was and they told me she was his foster-mother.’”

This is a strange hadith; perhaps he meant his foster-sister, who was nursed together with him by her mother, Ḥalima al-Sa'idiyya. If this tradition, as given above, is correct, Ḥalima would have been very old; the time elapsed between her having suckled the Messenger of God (SAAS) (and their being at) al-Jīrāna was over 60 years. The youngest she could have been when she suckled him was 30 years of age. Moreover, God knows best how long she lived after that.

A hadith mursal exists which relates that both his foster-parents came up to him. But God knows best how true this is.

Abū Dā’ūd stated in al-Marāṣil that ʿAbd mabd b. Saʿd b. al-Hamdānī related to him, quoting Ibn Wahb, quoting ʿAmr b. al-Ḥārith, (who said that) ʿUmar b. al-Saʿīb related to him that he was informed that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was one day seated when his foster-father came up to him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) spread out part of his cloak for him and he sat upon it. Then his mother came and he laid out another part of his cloak, on his other side, for her to sit upon. His foster-brother next arrived and the Messenger of God (SAAS) arose and sat him down before him.

It is explained above that all Hawāzin are connected to him due to his having been suckled by Banū Saʿd b. Bakr, who are a clan of Hawāzin. Their spokesman, Zuhayr b. ʿSurad, stated, “O Messenger of God, those in the enclosures for the captives are nothing but your own maternal aunts and nursemamaids, so be kind to us, may God be kind to you.” He then recited, in part,

“Be kind to womenfolk from whom you sucked, your mouth filled with pearl-like drops of their pure milk.

Be kind to women from whom you sucked, for them your actions will adorn you and not be wasted”

This, then, was the reason why Bakra’s father was set free; by so doing, he restored to them all their previous and present rights and privileges, as individuals and as a group.

Al-Waqāḍī related from Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad b. Shuraḥbil, from his father, who said, “Al-Nādir b. al-Ḥārith b. Kalada was one of the most handsome of men. He used to say, ‘Praise be to God who was kind enough to award us Islam and Muḥammad (SAAS). And we will not die with the same (belief system) of our fathers, and that in which our brothers and cousins were killed.’”

He then went on to relate his enmity for the Prophet (SAAS) and the fact that he went out with his people of Quraysh to Ḥunayn still believing in their old faith. He said, “If there were to be a defeat for Muḥammad, we were prepared to attack him. But we were not able to accomplish that. When he was at al-Jīrāna, I was still unchanged. Then I heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, ‘Is that Nadīr?’ ‘Labbayk! ‘At your service,’ I replied. He asked, ‘Would you now like something better than what God prevented you from achieving at Ḥunayn?’ I went quickly over to him and he said, ‘It is now time for you to recognize how wrong you were.’ I said, ‘I realize that had there been any other (god) than God, he would have helped. I testify that there is no god but God alone and without associate!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘O God, make him ever more firm!’ Al-Nadīr then said, ‘By Him who sent him with the truth, it was as though my heart was as firm as a rock in the faith and in enlightenment into the truth.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Praise be to God Who gave him guidance!’”

THE ‘UMRA OF AL-JĪRĀNA IN DHŪ AL-QA‘DA.

Imām Ahmad stated that Bahz and ‘Abd al-Ṣamad al-Ma‘nī both quoted Ḥammām b. Yaḥyā as having quoted Qatada as saying, “I asked Anas b. Mzlik the following, ‘How many pilgrimages did the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) make?’ ‘One full hijja and four lesser ‘umra pilgrimages. There was one (umra at the time of al-Hudaybiyya truce, another in Dhū al-Qa‘da from Medina, another in Dhū al-Qa‘da from al-Jīrāna, where he distributed the spoils of Hunayn, and then the ‘umra he performed when he also performed the full hijja pilgrimage.’”

Al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Da‘ūd and al-Tirmidhi all related this with various lines of transmission, from Ḥammām b. Yaḥyā. Al-Tirmidhi characterized it as hasan ṣaḥīḥ, “good and authentic”.

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Abū al-Nadr, quoting Dā‘ūd – meaning al-ʿAttār – from ‘Amr, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed the ‘umra four times: that of al-Hudaybiyya, the ‘umrat al-qadr, the third from al-Jīrāna, and the fourth at the time of his full hijja.”

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Yaḥyā b. Zakariyya b. Abū Za‘fida, quoting Ḥajjāj b. Artāt, from ʿAmr b. Shuʿayb, from his father, from his grandfather, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. al-ʿΑs, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed three ‘umra. All were in Dhū al-Qa‘da. He would (continue to) make the call Labbayka! until he saluted the (Black) Stone.”

This tradition is gharīb, “unilateral”, from this source.

These are the three ‘umra that occurred during Dhū al-Qa‘da; these are apart from the one that coincided with his full hijja, which took place in Dhu al-Hijja. If this source suggests the commencement of his Ḥijrām, state of ritual consecration, through them in Dhū al-Qa‘da, it could be because he did not include that of al-Ḥudaybiyya, since he was blocked from it and did not actually accomplish it. But God knows best.

I observe that Nāfi’ and his master Ibn ‘Umar denied that the Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) fully accomplished the ūmra from al-Jīfānā. This is according to the account given by al-Bukhārī. He stated that it was related to him by Abū al-Nu‘mān, quoting Hammād b. Zayd, from Ayyūb, from Nāfi’, from Ibn ‘Umar, who quoted ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb as having asked, “Messenger of God, (what should I do about) the vow I made before the coming of Islam to spend a day in ṣīkāf, prayer in seclusion?” He ordered him to fulfil the vow.

(The narrator went on) “‘Umar received two slave-girls from the captives taken at Ḥunayn and he accommodated them in a house in Mecca. Then the Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) released the Ḥunayn captives and they began to run in the streets. ‘Umar asked (his son), ‘Abd Allāh, what’s this you see happening?’ He replied, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) has released the captives.’ ‘Umar then said, ‘Go and send the two slave-girls away.’”

Nāfi’ went on, “The Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) did not make the ūmra from al-Jīfānā. Had he done so, this fact would not have been unknown to ‘Abd Allāh (b. ‘Umar).”

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth of Ayyūb al-Sukhtiyānī, from Nāfi’, from (‘Abd Allāh) Ibn ‘Umar.

Muslim also related it from Aḥmad b. ‘Abda al-Dabbī, from Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Ayyūb, from Nāfi’, who said, “Reference was made in the presence of (‘Abd Allāh) Ibn ‘Umar to the ūmra made by the Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) from al-Jīfānā. Ibn ‘Umar commented, ‘He did not make an ūmra from there.’”

This is very ghariḥ, strange, to be reported of Ibn ‘Umar by his freed-man Nāfi’, both of them thereby denying his having made an ūmra from there. The transmitters of aḥādīth other than them do maintain that he did so, as is shown by reports given from them in the mass of authoritative collections of aḥādīth of all kinds, including the military chronicles.

This is also established in both saḥīḥ collections in a ḥadīth of ʿAṭā b. Abū Rabah from Urwa, from ʿAḥīsha, who contradicted Ibn ‘Umar’s statement that “The Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) performed the ūmra in Ṣa’d.” She stated, “May God forgive ‘Abd al-Rahmān’s father! (‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Umar, that is.) The Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) never performed the ūmra other than in his presence, and he never did so in Ṣa’d.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Ibn Numayr related to him, quoting al-A’mash, from Mūjāhid, who said, “Urwa b. al-Zubayr asked Ibn ‘Umar in what month the Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) performed the ūmra. He replied, ‘In Ṣa’d.’ ʿAḥīsha was listening to us. Ibn al-Zubayr referred to what Ibn ‘Umar had said and asked her to comment. She replied, ‘May God have mercy on Abū Abū al-Rahmān! The Messenger of God (ṢAʿAS) never made an ūmra that Ibn ‘Umar did not witness, and he never made any ūmra that was not in Dhū al-Qaʿda.”
Al-Bukhari and Muslim quoted this from a hadith of Jarir, from Mansur, from Mujahid, in similar terms. Abd ar-Rahman and al-Nasafi also related this from a hadith of Zuhayr, from Abu Ishak, from Mujahid, to the effect that Ibn 'Umar was asked how many times the Messenger of God (SAAS) had made the umra. He replied that he had done so twice. Aisha then commented, "Ibn Umar knows well that the Messenger of God (SAAS) made the umra three times, apart from the one he combined with the hijjat al-wadat, the 'farewell pilgrimage'."

Imam Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Yahya b. Adam, quoting Mufaddal, from Mansur, from Mujahid, who said, "I went inside the mosque with Urwa b. al-Zubayr and there we saw Ibn Umar leaning against Aisha's compartment while people there were performing the al-duha prayer. Urwa asked him, 'Abu 'Abd al-Rahman, what is this prayer?' 'It is a bid'a,' he replied. Urwa asked, 'Abu 'Abd al-Rahman, how many times did the Messenger of God (SAAS) perform the umra?' He replied, 'Four times; one of them was during Rajab.' We then heard Aisha picking her teeth inside her compartment. Urwa asked her, 'Is it then as Abu 'Abd al-Rahman says, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) performed the umra four times, one of which was in Rajab?' She replied, 'May God have mercy on Abu 'Abd al-Rahman! The Prophet (SAAS) never performed the umra without him being present, and he never did so in Rajab.'"

Al-Tirmidhi related it thus from Ahmad b. Muni', from al-Hasan b. Musa, from Shaybani, from Mansur. He categorized it as hasan sahih gharib, 'good, authentic, (yet) unilateral'.

Imam Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Rawh, quoting Ibn Jurayj, who stated that he was informed by Muzahim b. Abu Muzahim, from 'Abd al-'Aziz b. 'Abd Allah, from Mukharrish al-Kabi, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) left al-Jirana one evening to make the umra, entered Mecca and did so, then travelled that same night back to al-Jirana, being back there by morning, as if he had spent the night there. After sunset that day, he left from al-Jirana along the Sarif valley, joining the route to Medina there in Sarif. Mukharrish concluded, "That is why his umra remained unknown to many people."

Imam Ahmad related this similarly from Yahya b. Sa'id, from Ibn Jurayj; this hadith is one of those that only the latter gave.

The significance of this is that (the fact of) the umra from al-Jirana is well established from authentic sources that cannot be refuted or denied. Those who deny this can have no argument to compare with those who affirm it. But God knows best.

160. While later this word became associated with heretical dissent and unacceptable change from established precedent, its use here, and Ibn 'Umar's presence along with Aisha at the prayer, seem to provide an example of a more favourable connotation implying a praiseworthy new practice.
They are, moreover, essentially unanimous that it took place in Dhū al-Qa‘da after the attack upon al-Ta‘if and the division of the spoils of Ḥumayn.

The treatment of this by the ḥāfiz Abū al-Qasim al-Ṭabarānī in his great compendium is as follows, “Al-Ḥasan b. ʿIṣḥāq al-Tusturi related to us, quoting ʿUthmān b. ʿAbū Shayba, quoting Muhammad b. al-Ḥasan al-Asadi, quoting ʿIbrāhīm b. ʿAṭā‘, quoted by ʿUmar b. ʿAṭā‘, from Ḥan al-Zuhayr, from ʿUmayr, the freed-man of ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbdās, from Ibn ʿAbdās, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned from al-Ta‘if, he made camp at al-Jīrānā where he distributed the spoils. He then made the ʿumra pilgrimage from there, two days before the end of Shawwāl.’”

This is very ghārib, strange; its chain of authorities is controversial. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Ya‘qūb b. ʿIbrāhīm, quoting Ismāʿil, quoting Ibn Jurayj, who said that ʿAṭā‘ informed him that Ṣafwān b. Ya‘lā b. ʿUmayya told him that Ya‘lā used to say, “I wish I could see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he is receiving divine revelation. While the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was at al-Jīrānā being sheltered from the sun by a cloth, along with some of his Companions came a bedouin wearing a cloak and heavily perfumed. He approached him and asked, (‘Messenger of God, what is your view of a man who adopts the state of ḫaṭām for the ʿumra and puts on a cloak, after having applied perfume to himself?’) ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb then signalled to Ya‘lā to approach. When Ya‘lā did so and placed his head inside (beneath the sunshade) he saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to be very red in the face. He was immersed in this (divine revelation) for some time and then he was relieved of it. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked, ‘Where is that person who earlier asked me about the ʿumra?’ The bedouin was searched out and brought and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘Regarding the perfume you have on, wash it off three times. Also remove your cloak. Behave on the ʿumra just as you would on the ḥajj.’”

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth of Ibn Jurayj. They (also) gave it from another route, from ʿAṭā‘, both attributing it to Ṣafwān b. Ya‘lā b. ʿUmayya.

Imām Ahmad stated that Abū Usāma related to him quoting Ḥishām, from his father, from ʿAṭīṣa, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came in at the time of the conquest from Kūdā, from the heights of Mecca. And he also came in for the ʿumra from Kūdā.”

Abū Dāwūd stated that Musā Abū Salama related to him, from Ḥammād, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUthmān b. Khūthaym, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions performed the ʿumra from al-Jīrānā. They jogged around the kaʿba three times, then walked around for four times. They tucked one end of their cloaks beneath their armpits, then tossed them over their left shoulders.

161. This sentence, necessary for the sequence of the narrative, is given in al-Bukhārī’s text but omitted from the edited printed version of Ibn Kathīr’s work.

162. That is, while receiving divine revelation.
Abū Dā'ūd is alone in giving this. Ibn Majah also related it, from a hadith of Ibn Khuthaym, from Abū al-Ṭufayl, from Ibn ʿAbbās, but in abbreviated form.

Imām Ṭāhir Ṭāhir stated that it was related to him by Yahyā b. Saʿīd, from Ibn Jurayj, who said that al-Ḥasan b. Muslim related to him, from Ṭawus, that Ibn ʿAbbās informed him that Muʿāwiya told him, “I missed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) with an arrow head.” Or else the words he spoke were, “I saw him missed by an iron arrowhead (shot at him) at al-Marwa.”

Both authors of the sahīḥ collections gave it from a hadith of Ibn Jurayj. Muslim also related it, from a hadith of Sufyān b. ʿUyayna, from Hishām b. ʿUrayj, from Ṭawus, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from Muʿāwiya.

Abū Dā'ūd and al-Nasaʾī also related it from a hadith of ʿAbd al-Razzaq, from Maʿmar, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from his father.

ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Imām Ṭāhir stated that it was related to him by ʿAmr b. Muḥammad al-Naqīd, quoting Abū Ḥamīd al-Zubayrī, quoting Sufyān, from Jaʿfar b. Muḥammad, from his father, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from Muʿāwiya, who said, “I missed (the arrow I fired at the) head of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at al-Marwa.”

What is implied above is that it is inferred that this was at the ʿumra from al-Jīrānā.

This is because on the ʿumra at al-Ḥudaybiyya, he did not enter Mecca but was prevented from so doing, as has been explained heretofore. Regarding the ʿumrat al-yadā, Abū Sufyān had not yet accepted Islam and none of the Meccans remained there when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered it, having preferred to leave for that three-day period of his stay. As for the ʿumra that was performed in conjunction with his yadāʾ, it is unanimously accepted that he did not free himself thereof. And so it is obvious that the mistake committed by Muʿāwiya, son of Abū Sufyān, may God be pleased with them both, when he shot close to the head of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at al-Marwa, could only have occurred during the ʿumra from al-Jīrānā, as we have stated. But God, Almighty is He, knows best.

Muḥammad b. Ishaq, may God have mercy upon him, stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left al-Jīrānā to perform the ʿumra and gave orders that the battle spoils be kept at Majanna, near Marr al-Zahrān.”

I observe that it is clear that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had retained some of the spoils to employ it to gain goodwill with those bedouin he might meet between Mecca and Medina.

Ibn Ishaq went on, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had completed this ʿumra he headed back to Medina, leaving ʿAttāb b. Asid as his deputy over Mecca. He also left with him Muʿadh b. Jabal to instruct the people in the faith and to teach them the Qurʾān.”

ʿUrwā and Mūsā b. ʿUqba relate that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had left Muʿadh and ʿAttāb as his deputies in Mecca before he had gone out to battle Hawāzin, and then reappointed them when he returned to Medina.
Ibn Hishām stated that he was informed that Zayd b. Aslam stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) appointed ‘Attāb b. Asid in charge of Mecca, he awarded him payment of one dirham per day. ‘Attāb arose and gave the following address, ‘May God make hungry indeed the liver of one who still hungers on a dirham! The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has awarded me one dirham every day; I have need of no one!’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The ‘umra of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took place in Dhū al-Qa‘da and he arrived in Medina at the end of that month or early in Dhū al-‘Hijja.”

Ibn Hishām stated that he arrived there six days before the end of Dhū al-Qa‘da, according to Abū ‘Amr al-Madini.

“That year the people performed the hajj in the same manner as the Arabs had previously. That year, 8 AH, ‘Attāb b. Asid performed the hajj along with the Muslims.

“The people of al-Ṭa‘if continued their polytheism and their abstention (from Islam) in their own city for the period between Dhī al-Qa‘da and Ramadān of 9 AH.”

THE ACCEPTANCE OF ISLAM BY KA‘B B. ZUHAYR B. ABŪ SULMA.

His father, a poet and son of a poet, was an author of one of the Seven Mu‘allaqāt verses. His qaṣida, his ode, known by its opening words, Bānat Su‘ād ..., “Su‘ād has moved away”, was heard by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned (to Medina) after his departure from al-Ṭa‘if, Bujayr b. Zuhayr b. Abū Sulmā wrote to his full brother Ka‘b b. Zuhayr to inform him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had executed at Mecca some of the men who had satirized and harmed him with their poetry. He also told him how the remaining Quraysh poets – Ibn al-Zibāyra and Hubayra b. Abū Wahb – had fled in disarray. He advised him, ‘If you value your life, then hurry to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), for he does not execute anyone who comes to him in repentance. If you do not do this, then flee far away.’ Ka‘b had previously spoken the lines, ‘Transmit to Bujayr a message from me: “Confound you for what you said!

Can you explain to us, since you have not yet, for what other reason did he lead you
To a religion which I find none of his ancestors followed, nor you find yours to have done.
If you do not accept it, I’ll not be sorry nor merely say, if you stumble, ‘Good luck!’

“Al-Ma’mūn” has given you to drink by it a full cup; and after the first, ‘al-Ma’mūn’ has also given you a second drink.”

Ibn Hishām stated that a scholar in the poetry also quoted to him the following verses,

“Who will deliver a message from me to Bujayr: ‘Do you agree with what I told you at the mountain slope? You have drunk a full cup with “al-Ma’mūn”, and after the first draught he also gave you a second. You abandoned good guidance by following him; to what is it, damned that you are, that he has led you? Into a religion you’ll find no man nor woman ever served, nor any brother of yours. If you do not do as I say, I’ll not be sad; though I’m not one merely to say, “Good luck!” if you stumble.’”

He dispatched this to Bujayr who was reluctant to keep it from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and finally recited it to him. When he heard the words, saqā biḥā al-Ma’mūn, “al-Ma’mūn has given you to drink” he commented, “He speaks the truth here, terrible liar though he is. I am the ‘A-Ma’mm’, the ‘trustworthy one’.” When he heard the words, “Into a religion you’ll find no man nor woman ever served” he commented, “That’s right; you’ll not find his father or mother in it.” (Ibn Ishaq narrated) Bujayr then wrote back to Ka‘b the following verses,

‘Who will inform Ka‘b, “Would you blame me for serving something foolish when it is very serious? It is to God, alone, not to al-‘Uzza or to al-Lāt you should flee, while flight and safety are still possible, At a time when none shall slip away and escape except those who are Muslim, pure of heart. For the religion of Zuhayr is nothing, and that of Abū Sulmā is forbidden to me.’”

(Ibn Ishaq went on) “When this message reached Ka‘b, he was very apprehensive and those about him who were his enemies spread false rumours about him, saying, ‘He’s as good as dead!’

“When he could see no alternative, he recited his ode praising the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). In it he referred to his fear and to the slander being spread by his enemies. He then left and went to Medina and stayed with a man he knew of Juhayna, so I have been told. That man took him next morning to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as he was performing the morning prayer and prayed with him. The man of Juhayna then pointed out to him the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), saying, ‘That is he. Go over to him and ask him for your safety.’

164. “The trustworthy”, the Prophet (ṢAAS), that is.
"I have been told that Ka'b did approach the Messenger of God (SAAS), sat down beside him and placed his own hand in his. The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not know who he was. Ka'b then said, 'Messenger of God, Ka'b b. Zuhayr has come to ask you to guarantee his safety as a Muslim who is repentant. Would you accept this from him if he were to approach you with this request?' 'Yes, I would,' the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him. 'Then,' said Ka'b, 'I am Ka'b b. Zuhayr!'

Ibn Ishq continued, "'Aśim b. Umar b. Qatāda related to me that one of the anṣār then jumped on him, saying, 'Messenger of God, let me execute the enemy of God!' He replied, 'Leave him alone! He has come expressing regret and repentance.'

"Ka'b b. Zuhayr was enraged at the anṣār for how one of them had treated him; this was because none of the muhājirūn spoke anything but good about him. In the ode that he delivered when he came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said,

'Su'ād has gone away and my heart is sad, enslaved to her, unransomable, and chain-bound;
And Su'ād, the day of departure, when they left, was like a gazelle, her eyes down-cast and black-rimmed
Slender as she approaches, full of rear when she turns her back; she could not be faulted for being short or tall.

When she smiles, she reveals gleaming teeth, sweet as though bathed repeatedly in fine wine,
Wine mixed with ice-cold water from a pure pool on a valley bend cooled by a north wind,
All dirt kept from it by the breeze, its sides brimming over with white torrents stemming from a morning rain-cloud.
What a friend she would be if only she kept her promise, or would accept advice!
But she is a friend whose blood is a mix of lust and desire with deceit and changeability.
She never stays in one state but resembles a genie, ever-changing its guise.
She only keeps promises made to the degree that a sieve can hold water!
Be not deceived by her kindness and promises; one's hopes and expectations can lead astray.
The false promises of al-'Urqub are her model and her vows are mere foolishness.
How I hope and long for her intimate love; yet I think women are never prepared for this.
Su'ād is in some land so far off that only fine, swift, full-bloodied camels could reach,
Where only a big, strong she-camel, swift and sure-footed, though tired, could attain her,
A camel whose ear-bone would stream with sweat, heading into unknown featureless wastes.
She scans into the distance with the eyes of a lone white bull in broiling rocky terrain
Stout her neck, full-fleshed her ankles, superior to all others of the stallion's foals.
Strong her brother, her father from high-bred stock, her uncles all swift and strong-necked.
When insects walk upon her, she shakes them off her smooth chest and sides.
(Like a) wild ass with heavy flesh on her flanks, her knee-joints set well away from her ribs
Her nostrils prominent; breeding is evident in her ears, her cheeks smooth.
Her muzzle, jutting out past her eyes and neck and jawbones, prominent like axe heads.
(HER tail) hanging down like a leafless palm frond with hairy tufts over her udder, its teats unsucked.
Though merely playing, she flies on light, spear-like feet that brush lightly on the ground.
On a hot day when the chameleon leaves a part of him exposed to bake it in the sun,
A day when the guide tells his group to siesta, as the ash-coloured locusts move over the pebbles,
Like the hand-clapping of a grey-haired woman rising in mourning, while other childless women respond.
One wails, her muscles limp, senseless at the news of her first-born's death when the mourners report it.
She tears at her breasts, her dress torn in shreds from her shoulders.
Fools surround my mount, saying, "You're as good as dead, Ibn Abū Sulma!"
While every trusted friend responded, "I can't help you - just too busy!"
"Then out of my way, confound you", I told them, "for whatever the Most Merciful decrees is done!"
And everyone born to woman, even if safe for long, is one day borne upon his funeral bier.
I was told that the Messenger of God threatened me, yet one hopes for forgiveness from the Messenger of God.
Go easy - may He guide you Who gave you that gift of the Qur'an in which there are exhortations and explanations.
Do not punish me for slanderers' reports, for I have not sinned, despite all the rumours.

Standing where I am, I see and hear what would, if he stood and so heard, make an elephant tremble, unless there came to him from the Messenger, with God's permission, some pardon.

(I will travel) until I place my right hand, never to withdraw it, in that of him who takes revenge, he whose word is final.

I am more afraid to speak with him — though people call me of fine lineage and responsible —

Than with a lion in the jungle in the lowlands of "Aththār, deep within its thickets,

That each morning feeds two cubs, their meat human flesh thrown down and ripped apart.

When he falls on his prey, he cannot conceive of leaving it any other way but prostrate.

From him the wild asses flee in terror, and no men may walk in his valley.

But in his vale there is man of trust, already eaten, his weapons stained, in rags.

The Messenger is a light-giving illumination, an unsheathed sword of God, of fine Indian steel

Amidst a band of Quraysh whose spokesman said in Mecca's valley, when they accepted Islam — “Go away!”

They left, but not from cowardice in battle, nor without shields or weapons.

They walk like proud camels, striking out in defence when the short, black men take flight,

Proud chiefs, dressed for battle in chain-mail made by Dānūd,

Shining and full, its rings joined together like those of the qaṣṣ plant.

They do not exult if their lances strike home, nor are they despairing if themselves struck.

Enemy thrusts only ever strike their throats, and they are not afraid of the pools of death.”

Ibn Hishām stated that in quoting the poem as above Muhammad b. ʾIṣḥāq gave no chain of transmission.

both sons of Zuhayr, travelled out as far as Abraq al-ʿAzzāf. There Bujayr told Kaʿb, “Stay here until I go to this man” — meaning the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) — “and hear what he says.” Kaʿb did remain there, while Bujayr went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who offered Islam to him and he accepted it. When news of this reached Kaʿb, he spoke the following, “Send from me a message to Bujayr: ‘To what — confound the rest — is it he is leading you? To a faith you’ll find no one — mother, father or brother of yours — ever belonged.

Abū Bakr poured out a full cup of it for you, while al-Maʿmūn refilled it again and again.’”

“When these verses reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he made permissible the execution of Kaʿb, he said, ‘Whoever encounters Kaʿb should kill him!’

“Bujayr wrote to his brother telling him this and that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had authorized his execution. He told him to escape while he could. Thereafter he again wrote him saying, “You should know that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) accepts when anyone comes and makes an affirmation of his faith in Islam and considers the past over and done with. If this note of mine reaches you, do come and accept Islam.””

The quoted source went on, “And so Kaʿb did accept Islam and composed his ode praising the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He came and made his camel kneel at the door of the mosque of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and entered it. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was there with his Companions, like a food-table, with ring after ring of people seated around it, looking first towards one group and talking with them, next to another and talking with them.”

Kaʿb stated, “So I made my mount kneel at the mosque door. I recognized the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from his description and went and sat down near him. I then affirmed my acceptance of Islam, saying, ‘I bear witness that there is no god but God and that you are Muhammad, the Messenger of God. Safety, Messenger of God!’ ‘And who are you?’ he asked. ‘Kaʿb b. Zuhayr,’ I replied. ‘That fellow who recited ...?’ asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He then turned and asked, ‘What was it he recited, Abū Bakr?’ Abū Bakr then recited,

‘Al-Maʿmūn has given you to drink by it a full cup; after the first, al-Maʿmūn has also given you a second drink.’

“Kaʿb said, ‘Messenger of God, I did not recite like that.’ ‘How did you speak, then?’ he asked. Kaʿb said that what he had said was,

‘Al-Maʿmūn has given you to drink by it a full cup; after the first al-Maʿmūn has also given you a second drink.’

165. In this version the name given al-Maʿmūr means “the one given orders”; al-Maʿmūn means “the one who is trusted”.
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, 'Yes indeed, Ma'mūn, "trustworthy"'.

"Ka'b then recited to him the entire ode, to its end."

This was the poem that begins,

"Su'ād has gone away and my heart is sad, enslaved to her, unransomable and chain-bound ..."

We have referred above to those phrases which differ in the versions of Ibn Ishāq and al-Bayhaqi, may God, Almighty and Glorious is He, have mercy upon them both.

Abū 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Barr stated in his book al-Istibāb that when Ka'b had completed the verses,

"The Messenger is a light giving illumination, an unsheathed sword of God, of fine Indian steel ...

I was told that the Messenger of God threatened me; yet one hopes for pardon from the Messenger of God."

Abū 'Umar went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) gestured to those with him to listen well."

Mūsā b. Uqba preceded Abū 'Umar in stating this, in the former's military chronicles. To God belong all praise, all credit.

I observe that it is given in some accounts that the Messenger of God (SAAS) presented Ka'b with his cloak when he recited the ode. Al-Šarṣāri wrote a verse on this in some of his maddā'āb, "poems of praise". The Ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Ḥasan b. al-Āthir gave a similar account in his work al-Ghāba. He stated, "It is this cloak that is in the possession of the Caliphs."

I note that this matter is very broadly known. However, I do not see in any of these well-known written accounts any chain of authorities that I find satisfactory. But God knows best.

It is related that when Ka'b recited the line, "Su'ād has gone away ..." the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, "And who is Su'ād?" "My wife, Messenger of God," responded Ka'b. "Nay, she did not!" he then said.

However, that is not true. It seems to imply that he imagined that his wife had gone away because of his acceptance of Islam. But it is obvious that what he was referring to was an emotional distancing, not a juridical one.

But God, Almighty is He, knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Ašim b. Umar b. Qatāda said, 'When Ka'b, in his poem, spoke the words, "when the short black men take flight" he could only have been referring to the ansār because of how one of us had treated him, whereas he had singled out the Quraysh muḥājirīn for his praise. Since the ansār were therefore angry at him, he recited the following verses after he had accepted Islam. In them he praised the ansār and referred to the suffering they had undergone with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and to their success:"
"Let those who love a noble life remain in the cavalry of the fine ānṣār.

They inherited noble qualities from father to son; the finest of men are they, sons of the finest,

Men who hurl from their arms strong spears, long like Indian swords.

And they stare ahead, their eyes red as embers but their sight untired.

Men who expend their souls for their Prophet by death in battles of hand and horse,

They cleanse themselves with piety by the blood of the unbelievers they spill.

They act like fierce, strong-necked lions used to hunting in secluded valleys.

If you go to them so they may protect you, you'll feel as safe as if in the haunts of young mountain goats.

At the battle of Badr they struck 'Ali such a blow as to bring down all of Nizār.

If the tribes had my knowledge of them, those whom I oppose would believe me.

(They are) a people who, at times when the stars have given no rain, will still feed well their guests."

Ibn Hishām stated, "It is said that when Ka'b recited to him his poem, 'Su'ad has gone away' the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Even though you have not spoken well of the ānṣār, don't they still deserve that?' And so Ka'b spoke these verses which are included in a qaṣida of his."

He went on, "I learned on the authority of 'Ali b. Zayd b. Jad'ān that Ka'b b. Zuhayr recited the verses of 'Su'ād has gone away' to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the mosque."

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī related it, with its chain of authorities given above, back to Ibrahim b. al-Mundhir al-Ḥizāmī (who said), "Ma'an b. Ẓār related to me, quoting Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Aftas, from Ibn Jad'an, who gave it." This chain of transmission is mursal, incomplete.

Sheikh Abū 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Barr, God have mercy upon him, stated in his book al-İstıfa' fi Ma'rifat al-Āshab after having given some biographical details about Ka'b b. Zuhayr, "Ka'b b. Zuhayr was a prolific poet considered pre-eminent in his class, along with his brother Bujayr. Ka'b was the better poet of the two, while their father Zuhayr was superior to both. Among the fine poetry of Ka'b b. Zuhayr are the lines, 'Were I surprised by anything, it would be how a young man goes forward though his fate is hidden from him.

He will strive to achieve what he cannot attain; the soul is one, while worry is all-encompassing.
As long as a man lives, hope extends before him; the sight goes out as far as the full extent of space.”

Thereafter Ibn 'Abd al-Barr gave other verses too numerous to mention. He did not record the date of his death. Similarly, Abū al-Ḥasan b. al-Athīr, in his book al-Ghāba fi Ma‘rifat al-Ṣahāba did not give this information. However, it is related that his father died one year before the mission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). But God knows best.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “Among the finest verses of Ka‘b b. Zuhayr are those he spoke in praise of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), ‘The brown she-camel carries him on, wrapped in his cloak, like the full moon shining bright on a dark night.

Inside his wrappings or folds of his cloak there is such religion and such nobility that God well knows.”

Chapter: Concerning those well-known events and deaths that occurred in 8 AH.

In Jumādā that year the battle of al-Mu‘tā took place. In Ramaḍān there was the expedition resulting in the conquest of Mecca. Thereafter, in Shawwāl, there was the conflict with Hawāzin at Ḥunayn which was followed by the siege of al-Ta‘if. In Dhu al-‘Iṣrā‘ the ‘umra was performed from al-Ji‘rma and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then returned to Medina for the remainder of that year.

Al-Waqīdī stated that his return to Medina from that journey came six days prior to the end of Dhu al-Ḥijja.

Al-Waqīdī went on, “That year the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ to Ja‘far and ‘Amr, sons of al-Julundū, of Banū Azd; the jīzā tax was taken from the maghūs, ‘the Magians’, of the country of these two men and from the bedouins in the areas around there.

“That year the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) married Fātimah, daughter of al-Dāḥik b. Suyyān al-Kilābī, in Dhu al-Qa‘da. She, however, spoke a plea of refuge in God from him,166 and so he forsook her. It is also said that he gave her the choice and that she chose the worldly life and so he left her.

“In Dhu al-Ḥijja that year, Ibrrāhim, the son of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and Māriyā, the Copt, was born. The envy of his other wives, the ummahāt al-mu‘minīn, was aroused when she bore him a male child. The midwife was Salmā, the freed-woman of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). She came out and informed Abū Rāfī, who went and delivered the good tidings to the Messenger

166. She invoked the istidāla when he first walked into his apartment where she was. Sources suggest that she had been tricked into saying this by the other wives of the Prophet (ṢAAS), who were envious of her beauty.

That year there occurred the deaths in military engagements of those martyrs to whom we made reference above.

We earlier referred to the destruction by Khalid b. al-Walid of the temple where al-Uzza was worshipped at Nakha, between Mecca and al-Tā’if. That was five days prior to the end of Ramadān that year.

Al-Waqidi stated, “That year the destruction was carried out of Suwār, (the idol) at Rahāt that Hudhayl had worshipped. ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ, may God be pleased with him, destroyed it, but he found nothing in its treasury. (The idol) Manāt was also destroyed at al-Mushallal; it had formerly been venerated by Aws and Khazraj, the anṣār tribes. Sa’b b. Zayd al-Ashhali, may God be pleased with him, destroyed it.”

We referred to this event in a useful and full section of our exegesis of surat al-Najm, with reference to the words of the Almighty, “and have you considered al-Lat, al-Uzza and Manāt, the third, the last?” (surat al-Najm; LIII, v.19–20).

Al-Bukhāri made reference, after the material relating to the conquest of Mecca, to Banū Khath‘am’s destruction of the temple where they used to worship, and which they called the “Yemeni”, the “southern” or “Yemen”, Ra‘ba, in imitation of the ka‘ba at Mecca. The latter they knew as the “Shami”, the “northern” or “Syrian”, ka‘ba.

Al-Bukhāri stated: “Yusuf b. Miisa related to us, quoting Abī Usnma, from Ismā‘il b. Abū Khalid, from Qays, from Jarir, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked me, “Will you not relieve me of Dhū al-Khalasa?” “Yes indeed!” I replied. So I set off with a force of 150 cavalry from (Banī) Ahmas, who were good horsemen. I used not to feel secure on horses and I told this to the Prophet (SAAS). He hit me on the chest with his hand so that I could see its imprint and said, “O God, set him firmly, and make him a guide who is rightly led.” And I never fell off a horse thereafter.’”

Dhū al-Khalasa was a temple in Yemen belonging to Banū Khath‘am and Banū Bajayla which contained idols they worshipped.

Al-Bukhāri’s account continued, “Jarir went there and destroyed it. When he arrived he found a man who foretold using divining arrows. He was told, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) is here! If he gets hold of you he will behead you!’

“While one day he was using his divining arrows, Jarir came and stood over the man and said, ‘You had better break them up and testify that there is no god but God! Otherwise, I’ll strike your neck!’ The fortune teller broke them and so testified.

“Then Jarir sent one of the Banū Ahmas men, called Abū Arjāt to the Prophet (SAAS) to inform him of the good news. When the man reached him, he said, ‘Messenger of God, by him who sent you with the truth, by the time I left it
(the temple) it was like nothing but a scabby camel!' Thereat the Messenger of God (SAAS) blessed the horses and men of Banu Ahmas five times."

Muslim related this with various lines, from Isma'il b. Abi Khalid, from Qays b. Abi Hazim, from Jarir b. Abd Allah al-Bajalti, in similar words.
GLOSSARY

ABBREVIATIONS AND NAME-RELATED TERMS

Abū means father. According to Arabic grammatical rules, this word changes to Abi when governed by a preceding word. While, therefore, Abū Ṭalib would mean Ṭalib’s father, when the word Ibn, son, is prefixed to the name, the form changes to Abi, and so Ibn Abi Ṭalib, would mean ‘the son of Ṭalib’s father’. To avoid confusion in this text, however, the term is left here universally as Abū.

The letters ‘al-’ before a noun represent in Arabic the definite article, ‘the’.

The letter b. when part of a name represents a shortened form of the word ‘Ibn’, ‘son’. Thus, the name ‘Ya‘qūb b. ‘Utba’ means ‘Ya‘qūb, son of ‘Utba’. In a composite name, as are often given in this text, such as ‘Ya‘qūb b. ʿUtba b. al-Mughira b. al-Akhnas’ the names of Ya‘qūb’s father, grandfather, and great grand-father are given.

The letters bt. a shortened form of the Arabic bint, indicates ‘girl’ or ‘daughter’. Thus the name ʿA‘isha bt. Aba Bakr refers to ʿA‘isha, daughter of Abū Bakr.

The letters SAAS are inserted after mention of the Prophet Muḥammad. These letters stand for the Arabic words sallā Allāhu ʿalayhi wa sallam; this invocation, recited by Muslims after every reference to the Prophet, whether by name or inference, is normally translated as ‘May God’s peace and blessings be upon him’.

GLOSSARY ITEMS

Words defined in footnotes associated with the text are not generally included in this glossary.

afkhādīḥ: plural of fākhādīḥ (q.v.).

ahādīṭ: plural of ḥadīṭh (q.v.).

agnatic: related through descent on the father’s side.

ʿalim (pl. ʿulamāʾ): scholars or theologians of Islam.

ansār: the plural of nāṣir, helper, or victor. Most commonly met, in this text, in the plural form, it refers to the early Medinan allies of the Prophet who officially fraternized with the muhājirīn, those Muslims who had initially gone into exile from Mecca to Medina in their support for Islam.

‘arab al-ṣāriba: the original Arabs, who are assumed to have spoken the language of Yaʿrub b. Qaḥтан.

‘arab al-mustaʿriba: ‘the arabized Arabs’, initially referring to those who spoke the Arabic of Ishmael, the dialects of the Hijāz, that is. The term is also applied to those not descended from the Arabs of Arabia, but who have been assimilated into Arab culture and who speak Arabic as their native tongue.

‘Arafat (also ‘Arafa): a plain some 13 miles east of Mecca. Essential parts of the hajj pilgrimage ceremonies occur there, centered on a small granite hill, also known by the same name.

‘ashira (pl. ‘ashāʾīr): an agnatic group. The word is commonly translated as tribe. An ‘ashira is composed of several afkhadh (q.v.), while several ‘ašāʾīr form a single qabila (q.v.).

badana: an animal, commonly a camel, to be offered for sacrifice by a pilgrim at the hajj (q.v.).

baraka: blessing, in particular that divine force that enables prosperity and happiness. Persons of great piety or holiness are believed suffused with baraka, which radiates from them to those around them.

Bakka: an ancient alternative or original name for Mecca. In legend, the name comes from the Arabic verb bakā, he wept, applied to Adam’s sadness at descending to the barren environment of Arabia after his expulsion from paradise.

bāsn (pl. buṭān): an agnatic group smaller than a qabila (q.v.) but larger than a fakhād (q.v.).

daf: the word used to denote the act of departure from ‘Arafat during the pilgrimage rites.

fakhād (pl. afkhādūh): a group of several families claiming descent from the same ancestor.

al-fajr: the dawn; also the superrogatory prayer, recommended but not required, performed immediately after dawn. It consists of two rakʿāt (q.v.) to be recited audibly.
fasila (pl. fasā'ila): an agnostic group consisting of the nearest members of one's 'ashira (q.v.).

ghazwa (pl. ghazawat): armed engagements in which the Prophet Muhammad participated personally. Those he initiated but without his own direct participation are known as sarāyā (pl. of sariyya).

hadith (pl. aḥādīth): a saying, reported action or anecdote relating the words or deeds of the Prophet Muhammad. An isnād (q.v.) precedes the hadith and lists the persons by whom the reported material was transmitted.

hadith marfuʿ: a hadith related by one of the Companions of the Prophet (see saḥib) and quoted directly from the latter.

hafiz (pl. hufaz): a person who has memorized the entire Qurān. Also one of the sacred attributes – the Guardian, the Protector – by which God is known.

haj: the pilgrimage to the holy places of Mecca set annually to take place in the first half of the month of Dhū al-Hijja.

banī: 1) a devout pre-Islamic monotheist. 2) a person sincerely searching for the ancient religion practised by Abraham, with whom the word is particularly associated.

hantūya: the religion of Abraham and the banī.

haram (or ḥarām): a term denoting what is sacred, forbidden or inviolable.

hijāba: the office of the custodian of the ka'ba; he is known as the ḥājib.

hiṣra (or hegira): the emigration of the Prophet Muhammad and his supporters from Mecca into exile in Medina. The date of this event was later adopted as the commencement of the Muslim era, calculated as 622 AD.

ijāza: 1) rendering something legal or permissible. 2) the act of transmitting a hadith and attributing the same to an authority without actually having heard that person recite it.

isfāda: the movement or departure of pilgrims from 'Arafat following their performance of the wuqāf, 'the standing'.

ihrām: 1) the rendering sacred or inviolate. 2) the name given to the clothing donned by Muslims entering the ihrām state prior to their participation in the pilgrimage.
isnād: the prefatory material to a hadith (q.v.) that lists the sequence of scholars or witnesses who transmitted the account from the time of the Prophet Muhammad up to the time when it was written down.

izār: the cloth that covers the pilgrim from waist to knees when he commits himself to the sacred state of ihram.

jahiliyya: denoting childlike foolishness or ignorance, the word is commonly applied to the period prior to the advent of Islam.

jamra (pl. jamrāt): ancient stone pillars symbolizing Satan at Minā. These are pelted with pebbles during the pilgrimage rites, the stones being known as jamrāt.

ka'ba: the ancient cube-like structure within the great mosque in Mecca positioned some feet from the sacred spring zamzam (q.v.). It is towards this site that Muslims direct their prayers (see qibla).

al-Khalil: 1) a town, also known as Hebron, some 32 miles south of Jerusalem and the site of the Tomb of the Patriarchs, sacred both to Jews and to Muslims. 2) a name or attribute implying close friend or confidant; the word is particularly associated with Abraham.

liwā: 1) a flag, banner or signpost. 2) the issuance of this to those making the pilgrimage to the ka'ba.

maqām Ibrahim: the ‘station’ of Abraham. A sanctuary positioned a few feet from the ka'ba where Abraham and his co-religionaries would stand for prayer during the summer months.

maghrib: the west or direction in which the sun sets. Also, the fourth canonical Islamic prayer performed at dusk. It consists of three rakāt; at the first two of these the prayers are spoken audibly, the third in silence.

masjid: the place where the Muslim prostrates in prayer, usually a mosque.

Minā: a location some four miles east of Mecca on the road to 'Arafāt.

hadith mursal: a hadith which is considered by scholars to have a fault or inconsistency in the chain of its transmission.

al-Muzdalifa: a location some half way between Minā and 'Arafāt. It is there that pilgrims returning from 'Arafāt spend the night.
nadwa: the act of presiding over assemblies of pilgrims at the ka'ba.

parasang: a Persian term for a unit of length, also known as a farsakh. One parasang equals approximately one league, some three miles, that is.

qabila (pl. qabîlî): a large agnatic group whose members trace descent from a single ancestor. Often translated as tribe. A qabila is larger than an 'ashira (q.v.) but smaller than a sha'b (q.v.).

qādi: a judge appointed by a Muslim community to administer and adjudicate issues of Islamic law.

gībla: the direction to which a Muslim faces when praying. Initially towards Jerusalem but later changed by the Prophet Muḥammad so that Muslims would face Mecca and the ka'ba there.

rak'a (pl. rak'ât): a unit of prayer consisting of a variety of gestures and postures. These rak'ât total 17 each day, divided between the five canonical prayer periods.

al-rahîm: The All-Compassionate; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

al-rahmân: the All-Merciful; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

Ramaḍân: the ninth month of the Muslim lunar calendar. The month of fasting, it was during Ramaḍân that divine revelation first came to the Prophet Muḥammad, and it is therefore particularly venerated.

ridâ: a length of unsewn cloth that is draped over the left shoulder and around the torso of the pilgrim. This garb is donned by the pilgrim when he enters the ihram state.

risāda: the provision of pilgrims with wheat and raisins by certain members of Quraysh of Mecca.

al-sa'î: the ritual rapid walk or jog performed during the pilgrimage between al-Ṣafâ and al-Marwa.

saba': the community and kingdom ruling South-West Arabia for centuries prior to the mission of the Prophet Muḥammad.

sâhib (pl. ashâb, sahâba): companion; that community of men who knew and supported the Prophet Muḥammad during his mission.
sahih: a ḥadīth (q.v.) the chain of transmission of which is considered by Muslim scholars to be reliable beyond any reasonable doubt; also, a collection comprised only of such ahādīth.

samān: the receipt of a ḥadīth (q.v.) from a scholar by listening to him or her recite it and then repeating it back. This method of transmitting and receiving a ḥadīth was considered the most trustworthy of all.

shāb (pl. shuʿāb): a tribal group larger than a qabila (q.v.); a nation, race or people.

shahāda: the profession of faith in Islam by reciting in Arabic the words: ‘There is no God but God and Muḥammad is His Messenger’.

shaykh (pl. shuyūkh): an elderly man; a tribal or spiritual leader; a distinguished and devout scholar.

shī'a: the doctrine and its adherent, a shī'a, that considers ʿAli, son of Abū Ṭalib and husband of the Prophet Muḥammad’s daughter Fāṭima, was the legitimate spiritual and political heir to the Caliphate of Islam.

sunna: the body of recorded words, actions, gestures and practices of the Prophet Muḥammad. This material constitutes the second foundation of Islam and its legal system, the holy Qurʾān being the first and prime source. In the plural form, sunan, reference is made to the compilation, by various authorities of the reported words and actions of the Prophet.

tafsir: exegesis and commentary, particularly applied to the Qurʾān.

tasmiyya: the enunciation by a Muslim of the formula: ‘In the name of God, the All-Merciful, the All-Compassionate’ prior to any act or activity in which he or she might engage.

tawāf: ritual circumambulation of a religious site, normally the kaʾba.

tubbaʿ (pl. tabābīʿa): the title applied to the kings of pre-Islamic Yemen.

wuduʿ: the ritual ablution necessarily practiced by Muslims prior to their performance of prayer.

zamzam: the sacred well positioned close to the kaʾba (q.v.) within the ḥaram al-sharif, the sacred enclosure encompassing the great mosque in Mecca. Muslims believe the well to have been miraculously opened through the agency of Gabriel to provide water for Abraham’s wife Hagar and their son Ishmael.

The Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization, a non-government, non-profit making cultural organization, strives to lead Muslims and non-Muslims alike to a better understanding of the Muslim contribution to civilization and to a better knowledge of Islam.

Located in Doha, State of Qatar, the Center has the warm support of its patron, the Emir of Qatar, H.H. Sheikh Hamad Bin Khalifa Al-Thani. Presenting accurate translations of some of the best known works of the most eminent Muslim savants, spanning the 800 years of the classical period of Islamic civilization (c. 620 AD to c. 1500 AD), since its establishment in 1983 the Center has produced nine volumes covering five major works in different fields of knowledge.

For further information on the work of the Center, all correspondence should be directed to

FOREWORD

The interrelationship and interaction of human cultures and civilisations has made the contributions of each the common heritage of men in all ages and all places. Early Muslim scholars were able to communicate with their Western counterparts through contacts made during the Crusades; at Muslim universities and centres of learning in Muslim Spain (al-Andalus, or Andalusia) and Sicily to which many European students went for education; and at the universities and centres of learning in Europe itself (such as Salerno, Padua, Montpellier, Paris, and Oxford), where Islamic works were taught in Latin translations. Among the Muslim scholars well-known in the centres of learning throughout the world were al-Rāzī (Rhazes), Ibn Sīnā (Avicenna), Ibn Rushd (Averroes), al Khwārizmī and Ibn Khaldūn. Muslim scholars such as these and others produced original works in many fields. Many of them possessed encyclopaedic knowledge and distinguished themselves in many disparate fields of knowledge.

In view of this, the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization was established in order to acquaint non-Muslims with the contributions Islam has given to human civilisation as a whole. The Great Books of Islamic Civilization Project attempts to cover the first 800 years of Islam, or what may be called Islam’s Classical Period. This project aims at making available in English a wide selection of works representative of Islamic civilisation in all its diversity. It is made up of translations of original Arabic works that were produced in the formative centuries of Islam, and is meant to serve the needs of a potentially large readership. Not only the specialist and scholar, but the non-specialist with an interest in Islam and its cultural heritage will be able to benefit from the series. Together, the works should serve as a rich source for the study of the early periods of Islamic thought.

In selecting the books for the series, the Center took into account all major areas of Islamic intellectual pursuit that could be represented. Thus the series includes works not only on better-known subjects such as law, theology, jurisprudence, history and politics, but also on subjects such as literature, medicine, astronomy, optics and geography. The specific criteria, used to select individual books, were these: that a book should give a faithful and comprehensive account of its field; and that it should be an authoritative source. The reader thus has at his disposal virtually a whole library of informative and enlightening works.

Each book in the series has been translated by a qualified scholar and reviewed by another expert. While the style of one translation will naturally differ from another, the translators have endeavoured, to the extent it was possible, to make the works accessible to the common reader. As a rule, the use of footnotes has been kept to a minimum, though a more extensive use of them was necessitated in some cases.

This series is presented in the hope that it will contribute to a greater understanding in the West of the cultural and intellectual heritage of Islam and will therefore provide an important means towards greater understanding of today's world.

May God Help Us!

Muhammad bin Hamad Al-Thani

Chairman of the Board of Trustees
ABOUT THIS SERIES

This series of Arabic works, made available in English translation, represents an outstanding selection of important Islamic studies in a variety of fields of knowledge. The works selected for inclusion in this series meet specific criteria. They are recognized by Muslim scholars as being early and important in their fields, as works whose importance is broadly recognized by international scholars, and as having had a genuinely significant impact on the development of human culture.

Readers will therefore see that this series includes a variety of works in the purely Islamic sciences, such as Qur'an, hadith, theology, prophetic traditions (sunna), and jurisprudence (fiqh). Also represented will be books by Muslim scientists on medicine, astronomy, geography, physics, chemistry, horticulture, and other fields.

The work of translating these texts has been entrusted to a group of professors in the Islamic and Western worlds who are recognized authorities in their fields. It has been deemed appropriate, in order to ensure accuracy and fluency, that two persons, one with Arabic as his mother tongue and another with English as his mother tongue, should participate together in the translation and revision of each text.

This series is distinguished from other similar intercultural projects by its distinctive objectives and methodology. These works will fill a genuine gap in the library of human thought. They will prove extremely useful to all those with an interest in Islamic culture, its interaction with Western thought, and its impact on culture throughout the world. They will, it is hoped, fulfill an important role in enhancing world understanding at a time when there is such evident and urgent need for the development of peaceful coexistence.

This series is published by the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization, which serves as a research centre under the patronage of H.H. Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, Amir of Qatar. It is directed by a Board of Trustees chaired by H.E. Sheikh Muhammad bin Hamad al-Thani, the former Minister of Education of Qatar. The Board is comprised of a group of prominent scholars. These include H.E. Dr Abul-Wafa al-Taftazani*, Deputy Rector of Cairo University, and Dr Yusuf al-Qaradhawi, Director of the Sira and Sunna Research Center. At its inception the Center was directed by the late Dr Muhammad Ibrahim Kazim, former Rector of Qatar University, who established its initial objectives.

The Center was until recently directed by Dr Kamal Nagi, the Foreign Cultural Relations Advisor of the Ministry of Education of Qatar. He was assisted by a Board comprising a number of academicians of Qatar University, in addition to a consultative committee chaired by Dr Ezzeddin Ibrahim, former Rector of the University of the United Arab Emirates. A further committee acting on behalf of the Center has been the prominent university professors who act under the chairmanship of Dr Raji Rammuny, Professor of Arabic at the University of Michigan. This committee is charged with making known, in Europe and in America, the books selected for translation, and in selecting and enlisting properly qualified university professors, orientalists and students of Islamic studies to undertake the work of translation and revision, as well as overseeing the publication process.

* Died 1994, may Allah have mercy on him.

INTRODUCTION

The work at hand in its original Arabic is, in a sense, the product of two minds: the author himself, Abu al-Fida' ʿImad al-Din Ismaʿil b. Umar b. Kathir, and, to a lesser extent, its editor, Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Wāḥid. In his introduction to the Arabic, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid points out that this work is in fact the culmination of a search for a biography of the Prophet Muḥammad to which Ibn Kathir makes reference in his celebrated exegesis of the Qur’an. There is, however, no extant copy of any such independent biographical study traceable to Ibn Kathir. That such a study did exist is questionable, notwithstanding Ibn Kathir’s own allusion thereto. Given the unavailability of this particular work, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid offers the theory that the biography in question is none other than that which appears in Ibn Kathir’s chief work, his opus on history, the al-Bidaya wa al-Nihāya. He argues that the sira section of the latter work is so comprehensive in its analysis of the life and times of the Prophet Muḥammad as to almost obviate the need for any independent study of the same topic. The biography at hand, therefore, is the same as found in the al-Bidaya. Nevertheless, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid must be commended for the not inconsiderable task of editing and publishing this particular section as an independent unit, and appropriately titling it al-Sira al-Nabawiyya li Ibn Kathir.

Ibn Kathir, whose ancestors are said to have been from Iraq, was himself born around the year 1313 CE/700 AH in the Boesra district of eastern Damascus. He died 74 years later, shortly after suffering a total loss of vision. He counts as his tutors such illustrious personages as the eminent historian Shams al-Din al-Dhahabi, the Miḥlī jurist Abū Musa al-Qarafi, and the celebrated Damascene polemicist and jurist Ibn Taṭimyya al-Ḥarrānī. Ibn Kathir’s was an era of the great political and social upheavals that posed many challenges to the Muslim world at large, and in particular, to its scholars. What with the scourge of the Tartars threatening the very existence of Islam as a socio-political entity from the outside and the sectarian and ethnic strife created by the Mamluk revolution doing much the same from within, Ibn Kathir and his colleagues, no doubt, had huge challenges with which to contend. In addition, the unrelenting pestilence and drought that had plagued the Levant and areas east thereof, made their burden all the more unwieldy. He died in 1387 CE/775 AH and lies buried in Damascus next to his master, Ibn Taymiyyah. He was mourned by his wife Zaynab, the daughter of his teacher, al-Mizzi, who, according to some reports, was an accomplished scholar in her own right. She bore him four sons, one of whom succeeded his father to the post of principal of the teaching academy al-Madrasa al-Ṣāliḥiyya.

Ibn Kathir, true to the pre-eminent tendencies of the academic milieu within which he functioned, brings to his study of the Prophet of Islam the method of the muḥaddith, the scholar of hadith traditions, more assiduously than he does that of the traditional historian. In doing so, however, he has, I believe, substantially succeeded in combining two of the three sources available for the pursuit of the historical Muhammad: the hadith literature and the sira; the Qurʾān, being the third such source, features less prominently, if not altogether rarely, in his study. Given the very extensive usage of hadith material in this particular work, a word about the classical nature of such material and its contemporaneous validity would be appropriate at this point.

Early historical studies of Muslim society and culture, as A. A. Duri points out, “followed broadly two lines that were distinct from each other – that of hadīth, and that of the tribes (i.e. the ayyām anecdotes as narrated by the akhbāris and the ruwāt), which is in a sense a continuation of pre-Islamic activities.” “These two lines”, he explains, “reflect the two major currents in early Islamic society – the Islamic and the tribal lines which influenced all aspects of life.” According to Muslim tradition, the learning and transmission of the sayings and actions of Muhammad, his tacit approvals and disapprovals of the actions of others, and his general behaviour had religious significance second only to that of the Qurʾān. To that end Muslim scholars began the collection of such data as was related to the Prophet and his era even while he was still alive. At first, the system of oral retention was popular, but by the middle of the first century of the Muslim era, written compilations of hadith traditions began to appear. By the end of the third quarter of that century, “a pattern was fixed for the learning and teaching of the hadith which flourished in the second and third centuries.” A system of sorts for verifying the authenticity of such prophetic traditions was allegedly extant from the earliest of times – albeit in a rather rudimentary manner. That system, however, was neither systematized nor rigorously applied until the advent of the civil wars (fitna), whereupon sources were no longer regarded, prima facie, as trustworthy, but were instead increasingly scrutinized to establish authenticity. Thus evolved the elaborate isnad system where every hadith was scrutinized from two perspectives: the text (matn) containing the information transmitted as such, and the chain of transmitters (sanad) giving the names of all those responsible for transmitting such information from the Prophet himself.

As indicated earlier, Ibn Kathir's method in this particular work is more that of the hadith scholars than it is of the historian; al-Bukhari, Muslim and more so, al-Bayhaqi, Ahmad b. Hanbal, and Abu Nu'aym thus feature more prominently as sources for his biography than do historians such as Ibn Ishaaq, Ibn Hisham or al-Tabari. But, as Abd al-Wahid rightly points out, Ibn Kathir, on occasion, is not averse to using some rather obscure historical works, some even that are no longer extant: the rare historical tractate of Musa b. Uqba, and the al-Rawd al-Anf of al-Suhayli are examples thereof.

True to tradition, if not quite on the same scale as, for instance, Ibn Hisham, are Ibn Kathir's copious citations of poetry, almost all of which seem to have been taken from Muhammad b. Ishaaq's biography of the Prophet. The poems deal with a variety of themes and styles: there is, for instance, the unmistakable sarcasm of Ka'ab b. Zuhayr as reflected in his lampooning of the Prophet, followed by his subsequent retraction and apology as in the much celebrated poem, Banat Su'ad; there is also the occasional celebration of pre-Islamic Arabian chivalry, as in the haunting ode of Abu al-Bakhtari b. Hisham, when he speaks so movingly of his virtual self-immolation for the love of a friend. Then, of course, there are the evocative panegyrics of Hassan b. Thabit in defence of Islam, its Prophet, and his Companions.

Ibn Kathir, oddly enough for someone who has plumbed the depths of hadith methodology, frequently paraphrases, not just the many references to scholars such as Ibn Ishaaq, but also, at times, the very hadith material he so often quotes. He thus takes almost the same liberties with such material as he does with works on history, and the reader, particularly of the Arabic text, sometimes searches in vain for all but the gist of the traditions that he ascribes to, say, the sahih of Bukhari or that of Muslim. Abd al-Wahid offers two possible reasons for this anomaly; the one I believe to be somewhat more plausible than the other. It may well be, he suggests, that Ibn Kathir was simply quoting from memory, seeing no need for any further textual verification, or it may also be that he is, in fact, using sources unavailable to us today. This latter hypothesis is, I believe, somewhat unconvincing for it requires, amongst other things, that Ibn Kathir possessed not one, but an entire set of hadith works unique to his library alone!
The text itself suffers from a singular lack of the literary cadence that makes the historical works of al-Tabari, for instance, more of a pleasure to read. This seems to result from Ibn Kathir's efforts to present an authentic description of the life and times of the Prophet of Islam, and to submit such data as is found in the popular biographical works to the scrutiny of hadith literature. The flow of his text is, without question, a casualty of this exercise. But, as has been pointed out by a scholar of the Bible, “If we read biblical narrative (or in this case the sira material) as a story, we abandon its historical truth. If we read it as literature, we will often find literary art in it, but this art takes us further from truth.”

Not that the method of Ibn Kathir is altogether without its redeeming features: it certainly provides useful information to scholars, particularly those of the traditional schools, who would prefer to have the classical sources for sira studies close at hand.

The contents of works such as Ibn Kathir's sira are today regarded by many scholars of Islam as largely proto-historical, focusing, that is, on an era whose source documentation falls short of contemporary historiographical standards. It is, some say, the stuff of myth and legend, entwined in places with real historical data. For modern historians of Islam and the Middle East such as Maxime Rodinson, Patricia Crone et al., sira material contains, in the first instance, virtually “nothing of which we can say for certain that it incontestably dates back to the time of the Prophet”. And so, “when doing research about the life and work of the Prophet Muḥammad”, Rudi Paret warns, “we on principle distrust the traditional statement and explanation of facts given by later generations, in so far as they cannot be verified by internal evidence or in some other way.”

In addition, the work at hand may be seen by some to be no more than the product of one who had a variety of interests in the topic: one who was, at one and the same time, a historian, a scribe of “sacred biography”, and also a devotee; the results of an endeavour such as Ibn Kathir’s, therefore, risk being perceived as less than the product of dispassionate scholarship.

This critical approach to Islamic historiography emerged gradually in the 18th and 19th centuries. It was, understandably, only a matter of time before Albert Schweitzer’s “quest of the historical Christ” would be appropriated by scholars of Islamic history in their search of the demythologized Muḥammad; after all, this kind of appropriation of the analytical tools indigenous to studies of Christianity for the unravelling of the Islamic historical experience has become almost a convention in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies. Yet the entire process is, I believe, fraught with questionable hypotheses, broad generalizations and a certain disregard for the spatio-temporal factors that shape ostensibly similar events. The application of New Testament heuristic tools such as Form and Redaction criticism to the corpus of information pertaining to the sīra seems to betray a casual disregard for the Sitz im Leben of that very corpus. The life and work of Jesus is clearly different from that of Muḥammad; the former’s mission — if it can be described as such — is, for example, singularly devoid of the political and socio-economic objectives that informed that of the latter. It is, therefore, hardly surprising, as F. E. Peters in his recent article “The Quest of the Historical Muhammad” points out, that “even though a great deal of effort has been invested in research into the life and times of Muḥammad, the results do not seem at all comparable to those achieved in research on Jesus, and the reasons are not at all clear.”

Ever since Gustav Weil presented his Mohammad der Prophet, sein Leben und seine Lehre in 1843, scholars have endeavoured to unravel the historical Muḥammad using a variety of tools and strategems. Initially the material offered by Muslim historians such as Ibn Ishāq, Ibn Hishām and more, importantly, al-Tabarī was used almost unquestioningly by Christian scholars who, as Holt characterizes them, belonged mainly to “holy orders”. Their primary purpose, it would seem, was to provide a spirited defence of Christian theology and dogma against the claims of Islam and its adherents. The polemics that ensued were, in the main, reflective of the attitude that there was “not any rational inducement in all (that Muslims) believe or practice; insomuch that common sense must be discarded in order to embrace their system.” As for Muḥammad, he was for many in that era “so coarse and barbarous an imposter, that there is not a man, who does not or cannot perceive plainly his cheating and corruption.” Humphrey Prideaux, the 17th-century lecturer in Hebrew at Oxford, captured rather succinctly the disposition of scholars vis-à-vis the study of Muḥammad, in the rather long-winded title of his work, The true nature of imposture fully display’d in the life of Mahomet. With a discourse annex’d for the vindication of Christianity from this charge. Offered to the consideration of the Deists of the present age. Later Simon Ockley, the somewhat less acerbic and brusque vicar of Swavesey in Cambridgeshire, authored The History of the Saracens, a “much more solid contribution to historical knowledge” as Holt puts it, but one that nonetheless did “not fail to follow common form by stigmatizing Mu‘ammad in his first line, as ‘the great Imposter’ and then describing the Arab conquests as ‘that grievous calamity’.” The liberalism that swept across Europe in the 18th century helped create a relatively less hostile attitude among European scholars towards Islam and its leader. We thus find during that era scholars such as Henri de Boulainvillier emerging. Boulainvillier, his theological affinities notwithstanding, assumed a decidedly more conciliatory tone in his biography of Mu‘ammad, La vie de Mahomet. For him, Christianity is undoubtedly superior to Islam but he is, none the less, quite charitable in his evaluation of his subject, and says: “With respect to the essential doctrines of religion, all that (Mu‘ammad) has laid down is true; but he has not laid down all that is true; and that is the whole difference between our religion and his.”

The quest itself began in earnest in the writings of the Belgian Jesuit, Henri Lammens. Whereas Theodor Noeldeke, prior to him, had largely failed in his attempts to unravel “the historical person of Muhammad”, Lammens plodded on, and succeeded to some extent, in demonstrating “the possibility of the critical analysis of the sira”. Lammens’ efforts, however, were directed, not at a biographical study of Mu‘ammad per se, but rather on the search for the secret of his personal appeal and the rapid expansion of his message. “Muhammad to him, was a historical problem as well as a symbol of Islam’s obstinacy and insensitiveness to the missionary influence.”

Lammens also happened to be among the first to argue, with some conviction, that the hadith traditions as well as the sira material on the Prophet are, on the whole, fictitious. This inaugurated a new perspective on Islamic history: the emphasis shifted from a critique of the actors in that history to the questioning of the source material itself.

In the 19th century, the Hungarian scholar Ignaz Goldziher concluded that much of the hadith material was but a “pious fraud . . . invoked by every group (in early Islam) for every idea it evolved; . . . through solid chains (isnād) of tradition, all such matters acquired an unbroken tie to the ‘Companions’ who had heard those pronouncements and statutes from the Prophet or had seen him act

in pertinent ways."18 Later Professor J. Schacht further explored the foregoing hypotheses by subjecting the isnad of a few legal traditions to an exhaustive scrutiny. He concluded that "hardly any of these traditions, as far as matters of religious law are concerned, can be considered authentic; they were put into circulation . . . from the first half of the second century onwards."19 From this others were quick to extrapolate that even the biographical material is fraudulent. Crone thus states: "that the bulk of the sira . . . consists of second century hadiths has not been disputed by any historian, and this point may be taken as conceded."20

Not all Western scholars, however were as eager to jettison the classical material. W. M. Watt, writing in his Muhammad at Mecca, is clearly more reluctant than Crone, for example, to reject out of hand all such material, simply on the strength of Schacht's conclusion. He thus maintains that "In the legal sphere there may have been some sheer invention of traditions, it would seem. But in the historical sphere, in so far as the two may be separated, and apart from some exceptional cases, the nearest to such invention in the best early historians appears to be a 'tendential shaping' of the material . . ."21

It must be remembered, however, that traditional Muslim scholars display little awareness of the foregoing conundrum. The classical methodology of hadith criticism as practised by early Muslim scholars, with its close scrutiny of the isnad and the mutān of prophetic traditions, has, in the main, not been discredited, or even questioned, by Muslim scholars. If anything, that methodology has today been given a new lease of life by scholars such as Nāṣir al-Dīn al-ʿAlbānī, who, for example, regard the re-evaluation of the early sources as integral to what they call the Islamic renaissance (al-Nahāj al-Islāmiyya). Such a renaissance, ʿAlbānī argues, will fall far short of its goals, without a thoroughgoing purge of what remains of the spurious material that had crept into hadith and sira works during the turbulent epoch of early Islamic history.22 He thus set himself the task of appraising scholars and the Muslim laity alike to those traditions that were deemed spurious by the regimen of classical hadith studies. His findings, which were first published under the title "al-ʿAḥādīth al-Dāʾifah wa al-Mawdūʿah" in a weekly column in the magazine al-Tamaddun al-Islāmi, now comprise a multi-volume work, appropriately titled Silsilaḥ al-ʿAḥādīth al-Dāʾifah wa al-Mawdūʿah.23

Clearly not all contemporary scholars are as eager as Schacht et al. to ring the death knell on hadith literature as a tool for unravelling early Islamic history. Azami for one, in his studies on early hadith literature has attempted to show that hadith literature is indeed the richest source for the investigation of that era, for it provides, among other things, material for the understanding of the legal, cultural and religious ideas of those early centuries. He maintains that the theories of Margoliouth, Goldziher and more recently, Schacht can no longer be incontestably accepted given the recent discoveries of manuscripts or research. According to him:

"In the period referred to, works on the biography of the Prophet and on other historical topics were in a very advanced stage. We find that work on the biography of the Prophet was begun by the Companions. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-‘Āṣ recorded many historical events. It is possible still to trace his work in the ṣaḥāḥīth narrated by 'Āmir b. Shu‘ayb (d. 118 AH) as he utilized his great grandfather 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr’s books. Ḫurrah (d. 93 AH) in his biography of the Prophet names his authority and most probably he had obtained the information in writing. There are works mentioned here and there on a single topic of the Sīrah, e.g. Memorandum on the Servants of the Prophet, a book on the ambassadors of the Prophet to different rulers and chieftains with their negotiations. There are references to the collections of the Prophet’s letters in a very early period.”

But it is, in fact, these very sources that Azami cites that have, through the use of contemporary literary and hermeneutical tools, been relegated to no more than “the rubble of early Muslim history”. For Patricia Crone therefore, the “inertia” of material such as appears heretofore “comes across very strongly in modern scholarship on the first two centuries of Islam.” The bulk of it”, she argues, “has an alarming tendency to degenerate into mere rearrangements of the same old canon – Muslim chronicles in modern languages and graced with modern titles.”

Others, such as Juynboll, have strived to arrive at the inevitable solution intermédiaire, “a conceivable position that could be taken between the two points of view represented respectively by Muslim and Western scholarship.” For him therefore, the hadith traditions “taken as a whole” do provide a fairly reliable rendition of early Islamic history, and “a judiciously and cautiously formulated overall view of what all those early reports... collectively point to, may in all likelihood be taken to be not very far from the truth of ‘what really happened’.”

28. Ibid., 7.
Finally, the true value of this particular work probably resides outside the context of the foregoing academic debate, for as Gadamer explains in Truth and Method, "The meaning of a literary work is never exhausted by the intentions of its author; as the work passes from one cultural or historical context to another, new meanings may be culled from it which were perhaps never anticipated by its author or contemporary audience."

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

As has often been observed, translation is impossible, since the associations and emotive content of words in one language and culture differ from those of all others. Attempts at translation, therefore, inevitably represent strivings for compromise. While accuracy and precision are prime objectives, the ultimately necessary requirements for clarity and comprehension in the host language may require simplification or even omission from the original text. The dilemmas inherent in these conflicting objectives are at times irreconcilable, and this is particularly true when one is dealing, as here, with languages and cultures so far removed as ancient Arabic and modern English. This translation, composed in everyday, contemporary English, gives no impression of the ubiquitous rarities, oddities and archaisms of vocabulary and syntax that make the original extremely challenging to comprehend. It is hoped, of course, that the innumerable compromises that this translation represents will be accepted as good-faith attempts to convey the spirit and purpose of the original in a form that readers of English will not find impossibly daunting.

In some instances Ibn Kathir repeats anecdotal al\ad\ith with differing chains of authority that are almost identical in content; often, as will be seen, the accounts differ in only very few of their words and these are typically vocabulary rarities. While such variations between accounts may seem of scant interest to the Western reader, they have nevertheless been left complete and intact in this translation. Including them in full, as in the original work, gives a strong impression of the care with which these anecdotes have been handed down and the impression of their likely authenticity is therefore enhanced. This seems especially the case where the discrepancies involve vocabulary rarities that are synonymous. It seems that it would be just such words that would have been subjected to dispute, change or loss from memory.

Ibn Kathir's objective was to appear authoritative and discriminating in his choices of inclusion and discussion of specific al\ad\ith; to him the listing of all the names of his authorities and his comments on their reputations was an essential component of this lectures. The give-and-take of oral lecturing -- of which this work is essentially a record -- would have enabled immediate verbal clarification. Our English text, in contrast, has to stand by itself, and to present an inherent and visible logic and clarity; it must also give some impression of the reliability of the Arabic text that is indicated by its complexity, and by the care with which the names of quoted sources are given and at times evaluated.

A perpetual challenge in presenting this text has therefore been to leave the essential narratives clear and succinct while including yet simplifying the lines of authority on which their authenticity is based. The names of authorities quoted have been included in full, since their identities were of prime importance for the initial ‘readership’ of this work as well as to students and researchers today.
However, the exact nature and relative value of the means of transmission from authority to authority and the suggestions implied of Ibn Kathir’s preference for certain sources over others, have not been conveyed with exactitude, since common English vocabulary is unable to convey some of the subtleties of the Arabic technical terms employed for this purpose. The essential completeness of the original text in this translation does, however, enable serious students of early Islamic materials to bring their own differentiation to bear by their knowledge of the reputations of the persons quoted.

Certain words common in this text – such as Abū and surat – change in their form in Arabic to accord with basic grammatical rules. Here, however, to avoid confusion for those readers who do not know Arabic, they have been left in the form in which they are most commonly met. Initial hamza, moreover, has been omitted. Since early Arabic manuscripts, like the Arabic printed version of this text, are devoid of quotation marks, the identity of the narrator is sometimes unclear. Similarly, it is occasionally difficult to discern whether comments at the end of an account are those of the transmitting authority or of Ibn Kathir himself. Footnotes referring to these and similar textual difficulties have been kept to a minimum, while brief parenthetical explanatory comments have sometimes been inserted to aid the general reader.

Discriminating and knowledgeable readers and reviewers will no doubt find discrepancies and perhaps inaccuracies in this lengthy and demanding text, especially in the extensive poems quoted. For these the translator – and his reviewers, text editors and typesetters – apologize. But since this work offers intimate details not elsewhere available in English about Arabian history and the inspiration and leadership of Islam in its earliest formative period, it would seem unsatisfactory to leave it in a language and form accessible only to a small coterie of scholars. The evident religious historical and philosophical interest of this text suggests that all those associated with its production may properly take refuge and find consolation from criticism in the knowledge that ‘to err is human’. To attempt the impossible, moreover, while perhaps foolhardy, is surely more laudable than to make no attempt at all.

An Account of the Expedition to Tabuk in Rajab of 9 AH.

God Almighty stated, "O you who believe, the polytheists are nothing but unclean; and so they shall not come near the Sacred Mosque after this year. If you should fear poverty, (then remember that) God will enrich you from His bounty, if He so wishes. God is Omniscient, Wise. Battle against those who do not believe in God or in the Last Day, who do not prohibit what God and His Messenger prohibited and who do not follow the religion of the truth. (Battle against) those to whom the (Holy) Book was brought until they pay the jizya tax 'an yadin, 'being in a state of submission'" (sūrat al-Tawba, (or al-Barā'a); IX, v.28–29).

It is related from Ibn 'Abbās, Mujāhid, Ḥkritā, Sa'īd b. Jubayr, Qatāda, al-Ḍahhāk and others that when God Almighty decreed that the polytheists should be prevented from approaching the Sacred Mosque, whether in the pilgrimage or at other times, that Quraysh said they would be deprived of the commercial activity that took place during the pilgrimage, and that they would therefore suffer financial loss. And so God compensated them for that by ordering them to battle the people of the scriptures so that they either accepted Islam or paid the jizya tax 'an yadin, "being in a state of submission".

I comment that the Messenger of God (SAAS) therefore decided to battle the Byzantines. This was because they were the people nearest to him and those most appropriate to invite to the truth because of their proximity to Islam and to those who believed in it. God Almighty had stated, "O you who believe, fight those unbelievers who are near you. Let them see severity in you; and know that God is with those who are pious" (sūrat al-Tawba (or al-Barā'a); IX, v.123).

When the Messenger of God (SAAS) determined to send an expedition against the Byzantines – this being the time of the battle of Tabuk – it was at a period of extreme heat and discomfort. He explained the expedition to people and invited the bedouin tribes around him to go forth with him and a large force of, as we shall see, some 30,000 men did join him. Others, however, held back, and God criticized those who were hypocritical and neglectful. He expressed His extreme displeasure and censure to them and brought them great disgrace, giving revelation of verses for recitation about them. It was in sūrat al-Tawba.

1. 'an yadin, lit. "from a hand", has been variously interpreted as "in acknowledgement of Your power", or "obediently", or "with ready money".
IX (or al-Bara’a) that He made clear reference to them; we explained this at length in our Tafsir (Exegesis). He ordered the Muslims to go forth no matter how, saying, “Proceed forth, whether light or heavy, and put your possessions and your persons vigorously to work in God’s cause. That is best for you, if you but know it. Had it been an objective close by and a short journey, they would have followed you. But the long journey was too far for them. (Yet) they will swear by God, ‘Had we been able, we would have departed with you!’ They destroy themselves; God knows that they are liars!” (sūrat al-Tawba: IX, v.41, 2) and other verses follow these.

The Almighty went on to state, “It was not for the believers to proceed forth all together. Why then should not a group from every party among them go forth to seek expertise in the faith and to warn their people when they return to them, so that they may be on their guard?” (sūrat al-Tawba: IX, v.122).

It is said by some that this verse abrogates the former; others say not. God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Medina between the months of Dhū al-Ḥijja and Rajab – of year 9 AH that is – and then ordered the men to prepare for an expedition against the Byzantines.

“Al-Zuhri, Yazid b. Ruman, ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, ‘Asim b. ‘Umar b. Qatāda and others of our scholars relate as follows of what was told them concerning the expedition to Tabūk; some give information not presented by others.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered his men to make an expedition against the Byzantines. This was at a time when there was considerable suffering from poverty, extreme heat and drought. The fruit was now ripe and people wanted to enjoy it in the shade; they hated the idea of leaving right away at that season.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) rarely went forth on an expedition without disguising its purpose. The expedition to Tabūk, however, he explained fully because of the great distance, the severity of the season and the large size of the enemy force he intended to battle; he gave this explanation so that his men could make proper preparations. He ordered them to ready their equipment, telling them he was going to attack the Byzantines.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS), while readying his own equipment, asked Jadd b. Qays, a man of Banū Salama, ‘Jadd, would you like now to attack the banū asfār, the “yellow skins”? He replied, ‘Messenger of God, do excuse me and not tempt me; I swear by God, my people well know there’s not a man more attracted to women than myself. I fear that if I saw the banū asfār women, I’d not be able to restrain myself!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) turned away from him, saying, ‘I excuse you then’.

2. An epithet referring to the light skin coloration of the Byzantines.
"It was about Jadd that God revealed the verse, ‘Among them are those who will say, ‘Do not tempt me!’. But they have already fallen to temptation. Hell encompasses those who disbelieve’ (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.29).

"The hypocrites told one another, ‘Don’t go forth in the heat’. They did this to avoid the warfare and doubting the truth and discrediting the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). And so God revealed about them, ‘They say, “Don’t go forth in the heat!” Say: “The heat of the fires of hell is more severe!” If only they understood! Let them laugh a little and weep a lot for the punishment they have earned’" (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.81).

Ibn Hishām stated, “A reliable source quoted someone as quoting Muḥammad b. Ṭalḥa b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Ishāq b. Ibrāhīm b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥarītha, from his father, who quoted his father as saying, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was informed that some hypocrites were meeting in the home of Suwaylim the Jew – his dwelling being at Jāsūm – and that they were dissuading people from accompanying the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on his expedition to Taḥbūk. The latter then dispatched Ṭalḥa b. Ḫubayd Allāh and some men with orders to burn down Suwaylim’s house about them. Ṭalḥa did this. Al-Ḍahhāk b. Khālīfa jumped down from the roof of the house, breaking his leg. His companions leaped down too, but escaped. Al-Ḍahhāk spoke the following verses about this:

"By God’s house, Muḥammad’s fire almost burned al-Oa)tkand Ibn Ubayriq!
Having climbed atop Suwaylim’s house, I crawled away on a broken leg and an elbow.
Greetings to you! I’ll not do the same again. I am afraid; he whom fire encompasses is burned.’”

Ibn Islāq continued, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made energetic preparations for his trip, ordering the men to get ready quickly. He urged the wealthy to provide funds and mounts for God’s cause. Some of them did so and thus stored away (later reward) for themselves. ʿUṯmān b. ʿAffān made a greater outlay than anyone had done.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Someone I trust related to me that ʿUṯmān paid out 1,000 dinārs for the army going on the al-ʿusra expedition to Taḥbūk. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘O God be pleased with ʿUṯmān, for I am pleased with him.’”

Imām ʿAbd al-Muḥsin stated that Ḥārūn b. Maʿrūf related to him, quoting Dāmra b. Shawkhāb, from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Qāsim, from Kaththā, the freed-men of ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Samrā, who said, “ʿUṯmān b. ʿAffān took 1,000 dinārs to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in his clothing when the latter was preparing the army for the al-ʿusra expedition. He poured out the money into the lap of the Prophet (ṢAAS), who began turning the coins over in his hand, saying, ‘Affān’s son can do no wrong, after what he has done today!’" Al-Tirmidhi related this from Muhammad b. Isma'il, from al-I'asan b. Waqi', from Dama. He categorized it as hasan gharib, “good but unilateral”.

'Abd Allah b. Ahmad stated, in his father’s hadith collection, “Abū Mūsā al-Anazi related to me, quoting Abū al-Šamad b. Abū al-Warith, quoting Sākin b. al-Mughīrā, quoting al-Walīd b. Abū Hishām, from Farqad Abū Ţalha, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Khabbāb al-Sulāmi, who said, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) made an address urging support for the army for the al-‘usra expedition and ‘Uthmān b. ʻAffān said, “I take responsibility for providing 100 baggage camels with their saddle blankets and pack-saddles.” He (the Prophet (SAAS)) then came down one step on the minbar, the pulpit, and again urged support. At this ‘Uthmān said, “I take responsibility for another 100 baggage camels complete with their blankets and pack-saddles.”’”

'Abd al-Rahmān b. Khabbāb al-Sulāmi went on, “I then saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) use his hand to speak with, moving it thus.” And Abū Mūsā al-Anazi stated that ‘Abd al-Šamad put out his hand and moved it as though in delight (and saying), “For what he has done, ‘Uthmān has no more responsibility hereafter.”

Al-Tirmidhi related this from Muhammad b. Bashshār, from Abū Da‘ūd al-Tayalisī, from Sākan b. al-Mughīrā Abu Mūsā Muhammad, the freed-man of ‘Uthmān’s family. Al-Tirmidhi categorized the hadith as gharib min hadāh al-wujh, “unique from this line”.

Al-Bayhaqi related it through ʻAmīd b. Marzūq, from Sākan b. al-Mughīra. He said it happened three times and that ‘Uthmān took responsibility for providing 300 baggage camels with their blankets and saddles.

‘Abd al-Rahmān stated, “I witnessed the Messenger of God (SAAS) say while he was upon the minbar, ‘‘Uthmān did no wrong after this’. Or he may have said, . . . ‘after today’.”

Abū Da‘ūd al-Tayalisī stated, “Abū ʻAwānā related to us, from Ḥusayn b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān, from Šamī b. Jāwān, from al-Aḥnaf b. Qays, who said, ‘I heard ‘Uthmān b. ʻAffān say to Sa‘īd b. Abū Waqqās, ʻAši, al-Zubayr and Ťalḥa, ‘I adjure you by God to say whether you know that the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Whoever equipped the army for the al-‘usra expedition has been forgiven by God’, and that I equipped them so that they did not lack so much as a halter or a headband?’ They responded, “Yes, indeed, by God!”’”

Al-Nasai related this from a hadith of Ḥusayn.

THOSE WHO WEPT AND ALSO THOSE WHO MADE EXCUSES TO REMAIN BEHIND.

God Almighty stated, “And when a chapter (of the Qur’ān) is revealed saying, ‘Believe in God and strive along with His Messenger’, those among them of ample means seek your permission (to remain) saying, ‘Leave us behind with those who remain.’ They are pleased to be with those who stay back; their hearts have been sealed over, and they do not comprehend. However, the Messenger and those who believe with him dedicate fully their property and themselves. These persons shall have the benefits, and it is they who shall succeed. God has prepared for them gardens beneath which rivers flow; they shall rest therein for eternity. That is the great success. Then the excuse-makers from among the bedouin came seeking permission (to stay behind) and those who denied the veracity of God and His Messenger also stayed. Those of them who disbelieved shall suffer painful punishment. There shall be no blame for the weak and the sick or those without the means to expend, provided that they are sincere with God and His Messenger; there is no cause to blame those who do good. And God is Forgiving and Beneficent. Nor is there blame upon those who, coming to you for mounts, have you tell them, 'I have nothing on which to transport you', with the result that they turn away, their eyes welling tears of regret that they do not have the means to expend. Cause for blame rests with those who seek your permission to stay back even though they are wealthy, preferring to be with those who remain behind. God has placed a seal over their hearts, and they do not know" (suratal-Tawba; IX,v. 86–93).

We have provided sufficient interpretation of this in our Tafsir (Exegesis); and to God is due all praise and credit.

What is referred to here is those who wept when they came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to provide them transportation to accompany him on this expedition of his but found him without mounts for them. They then retired weeping, sad at their inability to participate in, or contribute to, the fighting for God's cause.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "These totalled seven persons, consisting of anṣār and others. Of Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf there were: Sālim b. Ṭāmayr; ʿUlba b. Zayd, brother of Banū Ḥarītha; Abu Layla ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Kaʿb, brother of Banū Māzin b. al-Najjār; ʿAmr b. al-Ḥumām b. al-Jumāḥ, brother of Banū Salama; ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mughaṣṣal al-Muzanī. Some maintain that this last-mentioned was ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr al-Muzanī. (They also include) Haramī b. ʿAbd Allāh, brother of Banū Waqīf and Irbāq b. Sāriya al-Fazzārī. Ibn Ishāq went on, "I have been told that Ibn Yāmīn b. Ṭāmayr b. Kaʿb al-Nadrī met Abū Layla and ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh who were both weeping. Ibn Yāmīn asked them, 'What is making you weep?' They replied, 'We have been to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to provide us mounts but he had none to carry us. And we lack the means to proceed out with him.' So he (Ibn Yāmīn) gave them a water-transport camel he owned and they saddled it. He also provided them with some dates and so they proceeded forth with the Prophet (SAAS)."

Yūnus b. Bukayr added the following from Ibn Ishāq, "Ulba b. Zayd went outside at night, spending that part of it in prayer that God wished. He then wept and said, 'O God, You have ordered to battle and inspired enthusiasm for it, but then not provided me with the means for it, not given to Your Messenger a mount to transport me. I wish to donate to all Muslims (the compensation I received for) whatever wrongs may have befallen me, whether in money, in bodily harm or in honour.'

"Next morning he arose with the rest and the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Where is he who spent the night making donation?' No one got up. He next said, 'Let the man who made the donation get up now.' He ('Ulba) then went over to him and told him and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Rejoice!
By Him in whose hand is my soul, you have been inscribed among those having made a zakāt donation that is found acceptable (by God)!'

At this point the ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī gave the hadith of Abū Mūsā al-Ash'ārī, stating,
"Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-ḥāfīz related to us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b.
Yaʿqūb, quoting Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd al-Māzhīnī, quoting Abū Usāma, from Buraydī, from Abū Burdā, from Abū Mūsā, who said, 'My companions sent me to the Messenger of God (SAAS), to ask him for mounts for them to accompany him with the army for the al-ʿusra expedition to Taḥbūk. I said, "Prophet of God, my companions have sent me to you to provide them mounts." He replied, "By God, I won't mount you on anything." I had happened to go to him, without realizing it, when he was in an angry mood.

"'So I left, sad that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had rejected me and fearful that he bore me some ill-will. When I returned to my friends, I told them what he had said. Very soon after that, I heard Bilāl calling out, "Where is ʿAbd Allāh b. Qays?" When I responded, he said, "Make answer to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who is calling for you." When I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he said, "Take these two camels tied together, and these two and these two." He was referring to six baggage camels he had just bought from Saʿd. Then he said, "Take these to your companions and say, 'God' (or 'the Messenger of God') 'will mount you upon these'."

"'So (I went to them and) I said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) mounts you upon these. But, I swear by God, I'll not allow you this until some of you accompany me to someone who heard what the Messenger of God (SAAS) said when I asked him on your behalf and how he at first refused, then later gave gave them to me. I don't want you to think I reported to you something he did not say." They replied, "By God, we consider you entirely credible; but we'll do whatever you wish.'"

"Abū Mūsā then left with a group of them and they went to those who had heard what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said — how he had at first refused and then had given to them. They confirmed to them exactly what Abū Mūsā had said."

Both al-Bukhārī and Muslim gave this from Abū Kurayb, from Abū Usāma.
In one account of theirs they both quote Abū Mūsā as saying, "I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) along with a group of Ash'āris to provide us mounts and he replied, 'I swear by God, I'll not give you mounts; I have none on which to transport you.'"

He went on, "Some camels taken as booty were then brought to him, and he ordered that we be given six young ones. We took them, but then we said, 'We causedithe Messenger of God (SAAS) to break his oath, and God will not bless us.' So we went back to him and told him this. He replied, 'It is not I who gave you mounts; it is God who did so.' He then said, 'I swear by God, if God wills it, I will never swear an oath then find that its opposite is better without then nullifying that first oath.'"

Ibn Ishāq went on, "There were a number of Muslims whom absence delayed and so they lagged behind the Messenger of God (SAAS), but not because of any doubt or indecision on their part.

"Among these were Ka'b b. Malik b. Abū Ka'b, a brother of Banū Salama; Marāra b. Rabī', brother of Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf; Hilāl b. Umayya, brother of Banū Waqif, and Abū Khaythama, brother of Banū Sālim b. 'Awf. These were men of high honour against whose adherence to Islam no one could make any charge."

I note that the story of the first three of these men will be related at length shortly hereafter, if God Almighty wills it. It is these men about whom God gave the following revelation: "As for the three who were left behind so that the earth became constricted for them, though it was spacious. And their spirits also felt constrained, and they thought there to be no refuge from God, except in Him" (sūrat al-Tawbah; IX, v.118).

Abū Khaythama changed his mind and determined to catch up with the Messenger of God (SAAS), as will be shown.

DIVISION

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as stating, "Having made his arrangements, the Messenger of God (SAAS) decided to set off. When, on a Thursday, he departed, he made camp at Thaniyyat al-Waḍā'; with him there were more than 30,000 men. That enemy of God Ṣabd Allah b. Ubayy pitched his camp lower down, his being, so they say, no smaller in number. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) set forth again, Ṣabd Allāh b. Ubayy remained behind, along with a group of the hypocrites and doubt-mongers."

Ibn Hishām stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) placed Muḥammad
b. Maslama, the anṣāri, in command of Medina. Al-Darāwirdi related that it was Sībā'ī b. 'Urfa ṭa whom he left in command at the time of the expedition to Tabūk."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) left Ṣalāḥ b. Abū Ṭalāb behind to care for his family, ordering him to stay with them. The hypocrites spread lies about Ṣalāḥ, maintaining that the Messenger of God (SAAS) found his presence onerous and wished to alleviate this.
"When they said this, 'Ali took up his weapons and proceeded forth, catching up with the Messenger of God (SAAS) while the latter was making a halt at al-Jurf. 'Ali told him what people were saying and he responded, 'They lie; I left you there to care for those I have left behind. Go back and act on my behalf with my family as well as your own. Are you not content, 'Ali, to have the same status with me as Aaron had with Moses? There will, however, be no prophet after myself.'

"'Ali did return and the Messenger of God (SAAS) departed on his journey."

Ibn Isḥaq went on, "Muḥammad b. Ṭaḥṭa b. Yazid b. Rukāna related to me, from Ibrahim b. Sa'd b. Abū Waqqāṣ, from his father Sa'd, (who said) that he heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) make this comment to 'Ali."

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim both related this through Shu'ba, from Sa'd b. Ibrahim, from Ibrahim b. Sa'd b. Abū Waqqāṣ, from his father. Abū Da'ūd al-Tayalisi stated in his hadith compendium, "Shu'ba related to us, from al-Ḥakam, from Musa'b b. Sa'd, from his father, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) left 'Ali b. Abū Ṭālib behind from the expedition to Tabuk. 'Ali then asked him, "Messenger of God, would you leave me behind with the women and children?" He replied, "Are you not content to have with me the status Aaron had with Moses! Although there will be no prophet after myself.'"

Both authorities gave this on lines of transmission from Shu'ba in similar form. Al-Bukhārī also gave it on a line from Abū Da'ūd, from Shu'ba.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Qutayba b. Sa'd related to him, quoting Ḥātim b. Isma'il, from Bukayr b. Mismār, from ʿAmir b. Sa'd, from his father, who quoted the Messenger of God (SAAS) as follows, 'Ali, having been left behind by him at one of his expeditions asked, "Messenger of God, would you leave me behind with the women and children?" He replied, "'Ali, are you not content that you have the same status with me that Aaron had with Moses? However, there will be no prophet after myself.'"

Muslim and al-Tirmidhi related this from Qutayba. Muslim and Muḥammad b. Ṣāib both added to this, quoting Ḥātim b. Isma'il. Al-Tirmidhi categorized it as being hasan, sahih, gharib, good and authentic, and unique from this line.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, "Abū Khaythama returned on a hot day to his family several days after the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He found two wives he had each in a bower in his garden; each one had sprinkled and cooled her bower with cold water and had prepared him food.

"When he entered, Abū Khaythama stood at the door of a bower, gazed at his two wives and at what they had done, and said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) is out there in the sun, wind and heat, while Abū Khaythama is in the cool shade with food prepared for him with beautiful women and on his own property! This is not fair. By God, I swear I'll not enter the bower of either one of you before joining up with the Messenger of God (SAAS)! Prepare provisions for me!' And they both did so."
“He then brought up his camel, saddled it, and left to seek the Messenger of God (SAAS). He reached him after he had encamped at Tabuk. Umaýr b. Wahb al-Jumahî, himself heading for the Messenger of God (SAAS), had overtaken Abû Khaythama on the way and they had travelled on together until they neared Tabuk. Abû Khaythama then said to Umaýr b. Wahb, ‘I am at fault. Best for you to stay back from me until I go on to the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ And he did so.

“When Abû Khaythama approached the Messenger of God (SAAS), people told the latter, ‘There’s a rider approaching along the road.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘That will be Abû Khaythama!’ They commented, ‘By God, Messenger of God, it is indeed Abû Khaythama!’

“When he arrived, he came up and greeted the Messenger of God (SAAS) who responded, ‘Woe upon you, Abû Khaythama!’ He then explained to the Messenger of God (SAAS) what had happened and the latter blessed him.”

‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr and Musa b. ‘Uqba related this story about Abû Khaythama in a similar though more simple form than that of Mu‘ammas b. Isâq. Their account states that the departure of the Prophet (SAAS) took place in the autumn. But God knows best.

Ibn Hishâm stated, “Abû Khaythama – his given name being Malik b. Qays – spoke the following verses on this.

‘Having seen how people were hypocritical in their faith, I kept to what was more fine and noble. I gave forth my hand in fealty to Muhammad and did no wrong nor committed any sin.

I left a woman wearing make-up inside the bower, amidst the palms, along with a feast of ripened dates.

While the hypocrites were in doubt, my soul flowed onwards to the faith, its path wheresoever that would lead.’”

Yunus b. Bukayr stated that Muhammad b. Isâq quoted from Burayda, from Sufyân, from Muhammad b. Ka‘b al-Quraşî, from ‘Abd Allah b. Mas‘ûd, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) left for Tabuk, whenever anyone fell behind people would tell him, ‘Messenger of God, so-and-so has stayed back.’ He would then say, ‘Oh leave him alone. If there is any good in him, then God will bring him up to join you. Otherwise, it is God who will have relieved you of him!’

“Eventually he was told, ‘Messenger of God, Abû Dharr has fallen behind, his camel having slowed him down.’ He replied, ‘Leave him; if there is good in him, God will have him catch up with you. If otherwise, then God will have relieved you of him.’

“Abû Dharr gave his camel time to recover, but when it still moved only slowly, he took from it his equipment, placed it on his own back and walked on after the Messenger of God (SAAS). The latter made one of his halts and a Muslim on look-out said, 'Messenger of God, I can see this man walking along the road.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'That will be Abu Dharr.' When they had observed him closely, people said, 'Messenger of God, it is Abū Dharr, by God!' At this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, 'May God have mercy on Abū Dharr! He walks alone, will die alone and will be resurrected alone!'

"And fate did strike its blow at him. Abū Dharr was (ultimately) sent to al-Rabda. When his death was near, he gave instructions to his wife and a slave, saying, 'When I die, wash me and wind me in my shroud at night, then lay me on the crest of the road and tell the first passer-by that this is Abū Dharr.'

"When he died, they did this. Riders came along and unwittingly trod him underfoot. When Ibn Mas'ūd came past in a group of men of Kūfah, he asked 'What is this?' He was told it was the bier of Abū Dharr. Ibn Mas'ūd began weeping upon hearing this and said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the truth! He said, "May God have mercy on Abū Dharr! He walks alone, will die alone and will be resurrected alone!"'

"He then dismounted and he himself buried him."

The line of authorities for this is good; but they (the authors of the canonical collections of the traditions) did not give it.

Imām Aḥmad stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd al-Razzāq, quoting Maʿmar, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. ʿAqlī, who said with reference to the words of the Almighty, "who followed him at the time of al-ʿūṣra" (ṣūrat al-Tawbah; IX, v.117). "These men went forth on the expedition to Tabuk; there were two and three to the single camel. They travelled at a time of severe heat and eventually began slaughtering their camels to split open their stomachs to drink the liquid inside them. That was a time of ʿūṣra, 'great difficulty', over water, over the expenses and over the transport."

ʿAbd Allāh b. Wahb stated that he was informed by ʿAmr b. al-Ḥārith, from Saʿīd b. Abū Hilāl, from ʿUtba b. Abū Ṭūba, from Nāfiʿ b. Jūbair, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, that someone asked ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to tell about the saḥārat al-ʿūṣra, "the time of great difficulty". ʿUmar replied, "We went out to Tabuk when the weather was extremely hot. At one stop we made, we suffered such severe thirst that we feared our necks would come off! Whenever one of us went out to locate his baggage, he'd come back fearing his neck would come off! Men would slaughter their camels and compress the contents of their stomachs to drink, then place the remainder over their livers. Abū Bakr, 'the trusting', asked, 'Messenger of God, God responds favourably to your prayers. Pray to God for us.' 'You would like that?' he asked. 'Yes,' he replied. The Messenger of God

3. The text of Ibn Ishaq as translated by Guillaume, op. cit., quotes sources saying that he was exiled there by ʿUthmān.
(SAAS) then raised up his hands towards heaven and did not bring them back down until it had prepared to give rain. A drizzle fell and then a torrent, and everyone filled everything available. We then went out and discovered that the rain had not fallen beyond our camp!

The line of transmission for this is excellent. But the authorities did not give it from this line.

Ibn Ishraq narrated from ʿAṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatada, from some men of his tribe, that this incident related to when they were at al-Ḥijr. They had then asked a man accompanying them who was a hypocrite, "Well, do you want still more (proof) after this?" He replied, "It was just a passing cloud!"

Ibn Ishraq also narrated that the she-camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS) had strayed and men went off to search for it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told ʿUmara b. Ḥazm al-anṣārī, who was there with him, "A man said, ‘This Muḥammad tells you he is a prophet and gives you news of heaven, but he doesn’t even know the whereabouts of his camel!’ I swear by God, all I do know is what God tells me. And God has directed me to her; she is in a gully where her halter has caught on a tree."

They then went off and retrieved her and ʿUmara went back to his camp. He told them how someone had made a comment (about the Prophet (SAAS)), and one of the men present said, "It was Zayd b. al-Luṣāyf who said this." This man had been there in ʿUmara’s camp before his return. He now went up to Zayd and poked him in the neck, saying, "There was a disaster right here in my camp without me knowing it! Clear off, you enemy of God! You’ll not accompany me!" Some say that Zayd repented, but others say he persisted in his error until he died.

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi stated that a similar account about the camel had been related to him from a hadith of Ibn Masʿūd. He then narrated from a hadith of al-Aʿmash, which Imām Al-Ḥamd also narrated, from Abū Muʿāwiyah, from al-Aʿmash, from Abū Șāliḥ, from Abū Hurayra – or from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudari, al-Aʿmash was not sure which – who said, "At the expedition to Tabuk, the men were greatly afflicted by hunger. They asked, ‘Messenger of God, with your permission, we would like to slaughter our water-transport camels; we could eat them and gain some weight.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) told them to do so.

"Then ʿUmar came and asked, ‘Messenger of God, if you do this, we’ll have a shortage of transport. Invite them instead to bring the remnants of their supplies, then pray to God to bless it for them; perhaps God will place His blessings in it.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Yes, I will.’ He then called for a leather coverlet, laid it out and called for the remnants of their food. One man would bring an ear of maize, another a handful of dates, a third a piece of bread. He made a small pile of this on the piece of leather and spoke a prayer blessing it. Then he told them, ‘Put this into your containers.’ They kept on doing this until there was not a single container in the camp that was not filled with it. They also ate from it until satisfied and still some remained. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then called, out, ‘I testify that there is no god but God and that I am the Messenger of God! No doubt-free worshipper who addresses God with this shall be kept from paradise.’”

Muslim narrated this from Abū Kurayb, from Abū Muʿāwiya, from al-ʿAʿmash. Imām Aḥmad narrated it from a ḥadīth of Suhayl, from his father, from Abū Hurayra. He did not make reference to the expedition to Tabūk, but said that it related to an expedition on which he went.

An Account of how, on his way to Tabūk, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by the dwellings of Thamūd and their fortifications at al-Ḥijr.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed al-Ḥijr, he made a halt there and the men took water from its well. When they left, he told them, ‘Do not drink at all from its waters; do not use its water for your ablutions. Any dough you have made using it you should give to the camels without eating any of it yourselves.’”

This is how Ibn Isḥāq related it, without any chain of transmission.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Yaʿmūr b. Bishr related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, quoting Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, who said, “Ṣālim b. ʿAbd Allāh quoted to me his father as having said that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by al-Ḥijr, he said, ‘Do not enter the houses of those who harmed themselves unless you do so weeping, lest there befall you what did them.’ And he masked himself with his cloak while he was on his mount.”

Al-Bukhārī related this from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak and ʿAbd al-Razzāq, both of whom cited Maʿmar and gave a similar line of transmission.

Mālik stated, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Dīnār, from Ibn ʿUmar, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told his Companions, “Do not enter upon these persons who suffered punishment unless you are weeping; if you do not weep, then do not enter upon them, otherwise there will afflict you what afflicted them.”

Al-Bukhārī related this from a ḥadīth of Mālik, and from a ḥadīth of Sulaymān b. Bilāl, both of whom quoted ʿAbd Allāh b. Dīnār. Muslim related it from another line from ʿAbd Allāh b. Dīnār in similar form.

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd al-Ṣamad, quoting Ṣakhr – Ibn Juwayriyya, that is – from Nāfiʿ, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, “At the time of the expedition to Tabūk, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his men made a halt at al-Ḥijr, at the dwellings of Thamūd. The men drew water from the wells from which Thamūd used to drink, made dough and set up cooking pots with meat. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered them to empty out the pots and to feed the dough to the camels. He then left with them and proceeded on, making another halt at the well from which the camel used to drink. He forbad them entering the dwellings of those who had been afflicted with punishment, saying, 'I fear that there will befall you what befell them; do not enter in upon them.'"

This hadith with this line of transmission conforms with the criteria set in both canonical collections, but they did not include it. However, both al-Bukhārī and Muslim did give it from a hadith of Anas b. ʿIyyād, from Abū ʿAlī b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-Mālikī, from ʿAbd al-Latīf b. ʿAbdullāh b. ʿUmar, from ʿAbd al-Salām b. ʿAbdullāh b. ʿUmar.

Al-Bukhārī stated, "Usāma traced it from ʿUbayd Allāh." Muslim narrated it from a hadith of Shuʿayb b. ʿAbdullāh, from ʿUbayd Allāh, from Nāfiʿ.

Imām ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to him, quoting Maʿmar, from Ṣāḥib b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUthmān b. Khuthaym, from Abū ʿAlī al-Qāsim b. ʿAbd al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by al-Ḥijr, he said, 'Do not ask for signs. Ṣāliḥ’s people asked for them and they would come from this cleft.' They disobeyed the order of their Lord and hamstrung it (the holy camel). It would one day drink their water and on another they would drink its milk; God destroyed every one of them beneath the surface of the sky, except for one man who was inside God's temple."

"Someone asked, 'And who was he, Messenger of God?' 'That was Abū Righāl,' he replied. 'And when he left the temple, he was struck down as his people had been.'"

The chain of authorities for this is ṣaḥīḥ, "authentic"; (but) they (the compilers of the canonical collections of traditions) do not promulgate it.

Imām ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to him, quoting al-Maṣṣūdī, from Ismāʿīl b. Wāsīt, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbdullāh b. Muḥammad b. ʿAbdullāh b. ʿAbd al-Razzāq b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, from his father as saying, "On the expedition to Tabūk, the men raced off to visit the people of al-Ḥijr, to enter their dwellings. This reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he had a call made for a general assembly for prayer.

"I came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), as he was there holding his camel, saying, 'What? Would you enter in upon a people with whom God was angry?' One man called out, 'We’re curious about them.' 'Do I not tell you of matters more curious than that? A man from among yourselves informs you of what happened before you and what will be after you? Be righteous, and see clearly; God cares nothing for your punishment. A people will come who will not be able to protect themselves at all.'"

4. A reference to the pregnant camel the Qur’ān tells us that the virtuous Thamūd leader Ṣāliḥ conjured up from the rock. Ṣāliḥ’s ungodly opponents cut the tendons of the holy camel, thus causing God’s retribution that was expressed in the destruction of all Thamūd.

5. An alternate reading in a different manuscript substitutes wajh, ‘direction’, for fajj, “cleft”, in its first use here.

6. A different, and perhaps similarly mythical, Abū Righāl is mentioned elsewhere in this work.
The chain of authorities for this is good; they (the compilers of the canonical collections of traditions) did not promulgate it.

Yunus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as stating, "Abd Allah b. Abū Bakr b. Ḥazam related to me, from al-ʿAbbas b. Sahl b. Saʿd al-Saʿīdī – or from al-ʿAbbas b. Saʿd, I am not sure which – who said that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by al-Ḥijr, where he made a halt, the men took its water. And when they left there, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told them, 'Do not drink any of their water, nor use it for ablutions before the prayer. Feed the dough you have prepared to the camels, eating none of it yourselves. And let none of you go out this night unless accompanied by another.'

"They did as the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had ordered them, except for two men of Banū Saʿīda. One of them went out to relieve himself and the other went to look for a camel of his. The man who relieved himself was choked at the place where he had gone. The one searching for his camel was carried away by the wind and thrown up on Mt. Ṭayyī. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was told of this and commented, 'Didn't I tell them not to go out unless accompanied by another?'

"He then spoke a prayer for the man who had been afflicted at the place where he relieved himself, and the man was cured. The other man reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) (on his return) from Tabuk."

In one account there is additional information given from Ibn Ishāq to the effect that a man of Banū Ṭayyī presented him (the second man) to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when he returned to Medina.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Abd Allah b. Abū Bakr related to me that al-ʿAbbas b. Sahl named these two men to him but in confidence and so he did not tell me who they were."

Imām ʿAḥmad stated that ʿAffān related to him, quoting Wahib b. Khālid, quoting Amr b. Yāḥyā, from al-ʿAbbas b. Sahl b. Saʿd al-Saʿīdī, from Abū Ḥumayd al-Saʿīdī, who said, "We left with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the Tabuk expedition and travelled to Wādī al-Quṭr. There we came across a woman in a garden. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to his Companions, 'Guess!' The men made their guesses, as did the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); he guessed that the produce from the garden would equal ten ansāq, ten camel loads. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked the woman, 'Keep a total of the produce that comes from it until, if God wills it, I come back.'

"He then travelled on to Tabuk. There he told the men, 'Tonight there will be a severe gale. No one should get up during it. Those of you with camels should fasten down their halters.'

"Abū Ḥaṃdāl said, 'We did and during the night a severe gale swept over us. One of our men did get up and it carried him away on to Mt. Ṭayyī.'

"Then the Governor of Ayla came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and presented to him a white mule. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), presented him with a robe of honour and wrote a document for him giving them protection.
"He then went on, as did we with him, and eventually we were back in Wadi al-Qurā. He asked the woman, ‘How much did your garden produce?’ ‘Ten camel loads,’ she replied. He had guessed correctly.

‘He then announced, ‘I am in a hurry. Any of you who want to hurry too can do so.’ He then left, and we accompanied him. When he looked down upon Medina, he commented, ‘That is Tāba.’ When he sighted Mt. Uḥud, he commented, ‘That is Mt. Uḥud; it loves us and we love it. Shall I tell you which are the best houses of the ansār?’ ‘Please do, Messenger of God,’ we replied.

‘The best houses of the ansār are those of Banū al-Najjaw, then that of Banū ‘Abd al-Ashhal, then that of Banū Sā‘īda; and moreover, there is good in all the houses of the ansār.’"

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim gave this from another line, from ‘Amr b. Yahyā in similar form.

Imām Malik, may God have mercy on him, stated from Abū al-Zubayr, from Abū al-Tufayl ‘Amir b. Wāthila, that Mu‘ādhd b. Jabal informed him that they went forth with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the Tabuk expedition. (Mu‘ādhd stated), ‘He would combine together the prayers of the al-ṣuhr, ‘noon’, and the al-‘asr, ‘late afternoon’, and those of the al-maghrib, ‘early evening’, and the al-‘isha, ‘late evening’. One day he postponed the prayer and came out and prayed the al-ṣuhr and the al-‘asr together. He then went back in and came out again and prayed the al-maghrib and the al-‘isha together. He then said, ‘Tomorrow, if God wills it, you will arrive at the spring at Tabuk. You’ll not reach it until forenoon. Those who reach there should not touch any of its water before I arrive.’

‘When we arrived there, we had been preceded by two men. The well looked like skirak, ‘sandal straps’, just oozing a little water. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked the two men, ‘Did you touch any of the water?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. He berated them and said to them what God wished him to speak. They then little by little scooped out water from the spring and put it all in a water-skin. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) washed in it his face and hands then poured it back into the spring. Now the spring produced much water and the men drew from it. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Mu‘ādhd, if you live long enough, you’ll see that what’s here will be enough to fill several gardens!’"

Muslim did include this in a ḥadīth from Malik.

An Account of the address the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave at Tabuk at a palm tree there.

Imām Ahmad narrated from Abū al-Nadr Hashim b. al-Qāsim, Yūnus b. Muḥammad al-Mu‘āddib and Ḥajjaj b. Muḥammad, all three quoting al-Layth

7. The image is unclear. The word is obscure, suggesting: ‘sandal straps’, ‘a thin planting of palm saplings’, or ‘light shadows’.
b. Sa‘d, from Yazid b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Abū al-Khayr, from Abū al-Khaṭṭāb, from Abū Sa‘d al-Khudari, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave an address at Tabuk while leaning his back against a palm tree. He spoke as follows: ‘Shall I tell you who is the best of men and who is the worst? Of the best of men is one who works in God’s cause on the back of his horse and on the back of his mule and on his two feet until death comes to him. Of the worst of men is one who is profligate and insolent, a man who recites God’s Book but pays no attention to any of it.’”

Al-Nasa‘ī narrated this from Qutayba, from al-Layth. Concerning Abū al-Khaṭṭāb, he commented, “I do not know of him.”

Al-Bayhaqi narrated through Ya‘qūb b. Muḥammad al-Zuhri, from ʿAbd al-ʿAziz b. ʿUmran, that Muṣ‘ab b. ʿAbd Allah related to him, from Manzūr b. Jamil b. Sinān, who quoted his father as saying to him, “I heard ‘Uqba b. ʿAmir al-Juhānī relate as follows, ‘We went forth with the Messenger of God (SAAS), on the expedition to Tabuk. (One night) the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in bed without waking up until the sun had risen a spear’s length high. He called, ‘Bilal, did I not tell you to announce dawn to us?’ He replied, ‘Messenger of God, He who bore you away in sleep bore me also!’”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) moved a little away from his tent and prayed. He travelled on the rest of that day and night and arrived next morning in Tabuk. He gave appropriate praise and thanks to God, then said, ‘People, the most truthful speech is that of God’s Book. The firmest of bonds is the word “piety”. The best of religions is that of Abraham. The best of ways of life is the sunna, the practice of Muḥammad. The most noble of speech is mention of God. The finest of narratives is this Qurān. The best of practices are those sanctioned by God; the worst of practices are those innovated. The best guidance is that of the prophets. The most noble of deaths is being killed as a martyr. The most blind thing of all is going astray after guidance. The best of deeds are those that are beneficial. The best guidance is that which is followed. The worst blindness is that of the heart. The upper hand is better than the lower hand. That which is little yet suffices is better than that which is much but wasteful. The worst apology is that when death is at hand. The worst repentance is that on Judgement Day. There are those people who only attend the jumā, the Friday prayers, at the end. There are those people who only mention God in vain. The worst of sins is a lying tongue. The best riches are those of the soul. The best of qualities is piety. The pinnacle of wisdom is fear of God, Almighty and Glorious is He. The best quality within the heart is that of certainty. Doubting is from disbelief. Wailing in mourning is an act from the jāhiliyya. Fraud is of the soil spread in hell. Poetry comes from Satan. Wine is the aggregate of sin. Women are the snares of Satan. Youth is an offshoot of madness. The worst income is that from interest. The worst food is consuming the wealth of orphans. The happy man is he who is warned by (the actions of) others. The most naughty is he who misbehaves within his mother’s womb. One of you has only to move four arm lengths away for the matter to lead on to the hereafter. The fundamental of an action is determined by its results. The worst of narratives are those of untruth. All that is to come is near at hand. To swear at a believer is an outrage. To fight a believer is disbelief. To eat his flesh is disobedience of God. The sanctity of his property is as the sanctity of his blood. Whoever takes an oath by God gives the lie to Him. Whoever seeks His forgiveness shall be forgiven. Whoever gives pardon, God will pardon. Whoever supresses anger, God will reward. Whoever remains firm against calamity, God will compensate. He who desires fame, God will discredit. He who remains firm, God will doubly reward. He who disobeys God, God will punish. O God, forgive me and my people! O God, forgive me and my people! O God, forgive me and my people! He spoke this three times, then added, 'I seek God's forgiveness for myself and for you.'"

This hadith is gharib, unilateral, and it has some objectionable aspects; and there is some weakness in its line of transmission. God knows best what is right. Abū Da'ūd stated that both Aḥmad b. Sa'īd al-Hamadānī and Sulaymān b. Dā'ūd related to him, quoting Ibn Wahb, quoting Mu'āwīya, from Sa'īd b. Ghazwān, from his father (who said) that he passed the night at Tabuk while on his way to the pilgrimage. There he noticed a cripple. (Ghazwān's account goes on), "I asked him about himself and he replied, 'I will give you an account, but don't tell anyone of it for so long as I live. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was encamped at Tabuk near a palm tree. He said, 'This is our qibla.' He then performed the prayer towards it. I, a youth at the time, came running along and passed between him and the tree. He then said, 'He has severed our connection! May God cut out his footprint!' And I've not stood up on it to this very day!'"

Abū Da'ūd then related it from a hadith of Sa'īd b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Tanukhī, from a freed-man of Yazīd b. Nimrān, from Yazīd b. Nimrān, who said, "At Tabuk, I saw a cripple. He told me, 'While riding my donkey, I passed in front of the Messenger of God (SAAS) as he was praying. He said, 'O God, cut off his footprint!' And I have not been able to walk on it ever since.'"

In another account, the words are, "He cut off our connection! May God cut out his footprint!"

An Account of the prayer spoken for Mu'āwīya b. Abū Mu'āwīya — if indeed authentic.

Al-Bayhaqī narrated from a hadith of Yazīd b. Hārūn, quoting al-ʿAla' Abū Muhammad al-Thaqafī, who quoted Anas b. Malik as saying, "We were with the Messenger of God (SAAS), at Tabuk. The sun came up with a brightness and with rays of light such as I had never seen before. Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked, 'Gabriel, why do I see the sun today with a brightness and rays of light such as I never before saw it arise?' He replied, 'That is because Mu'āwīya b. Mu'āwīya al-Laythī died today in Medina. God sent to him 70,000 angels to pray over him.' ‘And why was that?’ he asked. ‘It was due to the frequency of his reciting the words: “Say: He is God, One” (sūrat al-‘Ikhlas; CXII, v.1). He did so by night and by day, when walking and upon rising or sitting down. Would you like me, Messenger of God, to take hold of the earth for you so you can pray for him?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied. And he then prayed for him and returned.’

This hadith is extremely strange and objectionable. People base it upon this al-‘Alī b. Zayd, but he is the object of controversy.

Al-Bayhaqi then stated, ‘‘Ali b. Ahmad b. Abdān related to us, quoting Ahmad b. Ubayd al-Ṣaffār, quoting Hishām b. ‘Alī, quoting Uthmān b. al-Haytham, quoting Mādhūb b. Hilal, from ‘Aṭā’ b. Abū Maymūna, from Anas, who said, ‘Gabriel came and said, “Muḥammad, Muḥāwiya b. Abū Muḥāwiya al-Mazānī has died. Would you like to pray for him?” “Yes,” he replied. Gabriel flapped his wings and every tree and mountain top bent over in submission. He then prayed while behind him there stretched two columns of angels in each of which there were 70,000 angels. I (the Prophet (SAAS)) then asked, “Gabriel, how did he achieve this status with God?” He replied, “By his love for the words, ‘Say: He is God, One.’ He would recite it standing or sitting, going or coming, and at all times.’”

‘Uthmān went on, “I asked my father where the Prophet was at the time. He replied that he was on the expedition to Tabuk in Syria, that Muḥāwiya had died in Medina and that his bed had been raised up so he could see it and pray for him.”

This too is objectionable from this line.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE MESSENGER FROM CAESAR TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) AT TABŪK.

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Ishāq b. ʿIṣa, quoting Yahyā b. Salīm, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Uthmān b. Khuthaym, from Saʿīd b. Abū Rāshid, who said, “In Ḥims I met al-Tanūkhi, the envoy of Heraclius to the Messenger of God (SAAS); he was a neighbour of mine and a very old man who had reached 90 or so. I asked, ‘Won’t you tell me about the message of Heraclius to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and of his message to Heraclius?’ ‘Certainly,’ he replied.

(He narrated) The Messenger of God (SAAS) reached Tabūk and sent Dihiya al-Kalbi to Heraclius. When the message from the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached him, Heraclius summoned the priests and patriarchs of Rome and locked himself and them inside a building. He told them, ‘This man is encamped where you are aware, and he has sent me offering me three alternatives. He invites me to follow him in his religion, or that we give him what we have on this our land, this land remaining ours, or that we go to war with him. By God, you well know from what you read in the books that he will definitely take our land, so let us either follow him in his faith or give him what we have on our land.'

"They snorted in disgust as one man so hard as almost to burst from their hooded gowns, saying, 'You are inviting us to abandon Christianity or have us be slaves to a bedouin from Hijaz?"

"When he realized that when they left him they would turn the Byzantines against him, he made peace with them immediately, saying, 'I only said that to find out how dedicated you are.'"

"He then summoned an Arab of Tajib who had power over the Christian Arabs and said, 'Find me some man who can well remember speech and whose native tongue is Arabic whom I can send to this man with a reply to his message.'"

"He brought me to him and Heraclius gave me a letter, saying, 'Take this letter of mine to this man. Commit to memory what he says and note three specifics: take note of any comment he makes about the letter he wrote me; observe whether he reads my letter and whether he makes mention of "night" and observe whether there is anything you find curious about his back.'

"So I set off with his letter and reached Tabuk where I found him seated among his men, his legs drawn up and wrapped in his garment, over near the spring. I asked, 'Where is your leader?' 'This is he,' I was told.

"I went over and sat down before him, handed him my letter which he placed on his lap. He then asked, 'From whom have you come?' 'I am a brother of Tanukh,' I answered. He asked, 'Would you like to join Islam, the hanafi faith of your father Abraham?' I replied, 'I am the messenger of my people and belong to the faith of my people; I cannot turn from it before I return to them!' He laughed and said, 'You cannot lead aright whomever you wish; but God leads aright whomever He wishes; He knows best those who will be led aright' (koran al-Qa'a, XXVIII, v.56). Brother of Tanukh, I wrote a message to Chosroe (and he tore it up) and God will tear him up and tear up his realm. I wrote a letter to the Negus and he burned it; and God will burn him up along with his realm. I wrote a letter to your leader and he kept it; the people will continue to experience courage from him so long as there remains goodness in life.'

"I told myself that this was one of the three things my master had advised me about. So I took an arrow from my quiver and used it to write on the side of my sword. He then took the letter and gave it to a man on his left. I asked, 'Who is the man with your letter who reads to you?' 'That is Mu'awiya,' they replied. In my master's letter it said, 'You invite me to a paradise as big as the sky and the earth that is prepared for the pious; then where is hell-fire?' The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, 'Glory be to God! And where is night when daytime comes?'

"I took an arrow from my quiver and noted this on the leather scabbard of my sword.

"When he had finished reading my letter, he said, 'You are right; you are indeed a messenger. If I had some reward, I would give it to you. We are travellers out of supplies.' One of the group of men then called out to him, 'I will give him a reward.' And he opened his pack and brought me a gold-threaded garment which he placed in my lap. I asked who was the donor of the reward, and I was told it was ʿUthmān.

'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked, 'Which of you will accommodate this man?' One of the young Ḥāḍirīs said, 'I will.' The ʿāsirī got up and I arose with him. When I had left the group of men, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called out to me, 'Come here, brother of Tanikīh!' I hurried over to where I had been sitting in front of him and he lifted off the shirt from his back and said, 'Over here; carry on and do as you were ordered.' I looked over at his back and saw a seal in the place of the fold of his shoulder blades, like a large mole.'

This is a ḥadīth that is ghārib, unilateral; its line of authorities is not bad. Imām Ḥāmid is alone in giving it.

THE PEACE PACT THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS) MADE WITH THE GOVERNOR OF AYLA AND THE PEOPLE OF JARBAʾ AND ADHRUḤ WHILE HE WAS ENCAMPED AT TABŪK, BEFORE HIS RETURN.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had reached Tabūk, Yūḥanna b. Rūḥa, the Governor of Ayla came to him. He made peace with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and paid him the jīzāa, the alms-tax. People also came from Jarbāʾ and Adhrūḥ and also gave him the jīzāa."

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote a document for them which they retain. He wrote the following to Yūḥanna b. Rūḥa and the people of Ayla: 'In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent. This is a guarantee of safe passage from God and Muḥammad the Prophet, the Messenger of God, to Yūḥanna b. Rūḥa and the people of Ayla and their transports by land and sea. They have the protection of God and that of Muḥammad, the Prophet and those with him, of the people of Syria, Yemen and the sea. Those of them who cause any incident (breaking this treaty) shall not find that their wealth protects them; (their property) shall be fair game for whoever seizes it. It shall not be permissible to prevent their passage to any well to which they go or any path they take, whether by land or sea.'"

Yunus b. Bukayr added the following from Ibn Isḥāq: "This is the document of Juhaym b. al-Ṣalt and Shuraḥbīl b. Ḥasāna, (made) by permission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)."

"Yunus quoted Ibn Isḥāq as stating, 'He also wrote to the people of Jarbāʾ and Adhrūḥ, as follows, 'In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent; this is a document from Muḥammad the Prophet, the Messenger of God, to the people of Jarbāʾ and Adhrūḥ: that they are secure under the protection of God and Muḥammad. That they shall pay 100 dinārs each Rajab and 100 awqīyya weight of ṭība, fine perfume. Moreover, God holds them responsible for providing friendship and kindness to Muslims, and to any Muslims who might seek refuge with them.'"
"The Prophet (SAAS) awarded the people of Ayla his cloak, along with his treaty for them."

He went on, "Abū al-'Abbas 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad purchased it (the cloak) thereafter for 300 dinārs.

THE DISPATCH BY THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) OF KHĀLID B. AL-WALĪD TO UKAYDIR DUMA.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called for Khalid b. al-Walīd and dispatched him to Ukaydir Dūma, he being Ukaydir b. 'Abd al-Malik, a man of Banū Kinda who had been their king; he was a Christian. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told Khalid, ‘You will find him hunting for cattle.’

"Khalid travelled until Ukaydir’s fortress was in sight. It was a summer’s night with a full moon, and Ukaydir was on the roof of his fortress with his wife. Cattle spent the night rubbing their horns against the door of the fortress and his wife asked him, ‘Have you never seen anything like that before?’ ‘No, by God, I have not,’ he replied. ‘Who could let this go on?’ she said. ‘No one could,’ he replied.

"He then went down and ordered that his horse be brought. It was saddled for him. A number of his family then rode out with him, including a brother of his named Hassān. They all left on the hunt.

"When they came out, the cavalry of the Prophet (SAAS) engaged them, capturing Ukaydir and killing his brother. He (Ukaydir) was wearing a brocade gown embroidered with gold. Khalid appropriated this and sent it to the Messenger of God (SAAS) before his own arrival back to him."

Ibn Isḥaq went on, "Aṣīm b. 'Umar b. Qatāda related to me, quoting Anas b. Malik, as having said, ‘I saw the gown of Ukaydir when it was brought in to the Messenger of God (SAAS). The Muslims began feeling it in admiration. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Do you so admire this! Why, I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand, the kerchiefs of Sa‘d b. Mu‘adh in paradise are finer than this!’’"

Ibn Isḥaq continued, "When Khalid brought Ukaydir to the Messenger of God (SAAS), the latter spared his blood and made a treaty with him on condition that he pay the jizya. He then released him and Ukaydir returned to his village.

A man of Banū 'Ṭayī named Bujayr b. Bujara spoke the following verses on this:

'Blessed be He who led the cattle! I have seen that God leads all who guide.
Let whoever wishes turn from Tabūk; we have been ordered to engage in the fight.'"

Al-Bayhaqī narrated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to this poet, "May God not close your mouth!" He lived on for 70 years, during which he never lost a molar or any other tooth.
Ibn Lahi‘a narrated from Abū al-Aswad, from ‘Urwa, that, upon his return from Tabūk, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent forth Khālid against Ukaydir Dūma with a cavalry force of 420 men. His account is similar to the above, except that he stated that he tricked him into descending from his fortress. He said that he brought Ukaydir along with 800 prisoners and 1,000 camels, 400 coats of mail and 400 lances. He related that when the Governor of Ayla, Yuhanna b. Ru‘uba heard the story of Ukaydir Dūma, he came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to make peace with him, and that they both met with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Tabūk. But God knows best.

Yūnus b. Bukayr narrated, from Sa‘d b. Aws, from Bilal b. Yahya, that Abū Bakr, “the trusting”, was in command of the muhajirin on the expedition to Dumat al-Jandal, while Khalid b. al-Walid commanded the bedouin in that expedition. But God knows best.

Division

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed there for some ten days, but not longer, and then left to return to Medina.

“On that route there was a spring that oozed from a rock in a valley that could give enough water for one, two or three riders; the valley was known as Wādī al-Mushaqqaq. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Those who reach there before us should not take any of that water, but should await our arrival.’

“A number of hypocrites did precede him there and took its water. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived, he stopped there but found nothing and asked, ‘Who preceded us here?’ He was told, ‘Messenger of God, it was so-and-so and so-and-so.’ He then said, ‘Did I not forbid them to take its water till I arrived?’ He then cursed them and spoke a prayer against them.

“He then dismounted and placed his hand beneath the rock and there began to flow into it that amount of water that God determined. He then splashed the water over the rock and stroked it with his hand, praying as God wished him to do. At that there came forth from the water — as those say who heard it — a sound like that of a thunder-clap. The men went on to drink from it and to satisfy all their needs from it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘If you live on — or those of you who do — will hear of this valley as more fertile than any other either before or beyond it.’”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Ḥarīth al-Taymi related to me that ‘Abd Allah b. Mas‘ūd used to relate as follows, ‘While I was on the expedition to Tabūk with the Messenger of God (SAAS), I happened to get up in the middle of the night and saw a faint light over towards the camp. I went to see what it was. I found it to be the Messenger of God (SAAS), Abū Bakr and ‘Umar. ‘Abd Allah Dhūt al-Bijādayn had died, and they had dug a grave for him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was in the grave, while Abū Bakr and ‘Umar were lowering the body to him. As they did so, the Messenger of God (SAAS) was saying, “Let down your brother close to me!” And they did so. When he placed him in position into his niche, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “O God, I was pleased with him; may You be pleased with him!”

“And 'Abd Allah b. Mas‘ūd would say, “How I wish that grave had been my own!””

Ibn Hishām stated, “The reason he was known as ‘Dhū al-Bijādayn’, ‘he of the two pieces of coarse cloth’, is because when he wanted to accept Islam, his people prevented him. They persecuted him, and when he eventually escaped them, all he had on was one piece of bijād, ‘coarse cloth’. He ripped it into two pieces and used one as a waist-wrapper and the other as a shirt. He then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and became known as Dhū al-Bijādayn.”

Ibn Isḥaq continued, “Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhri related, from Ibn Ukayma al-Laythi, from his nephew Abū Ruhm al-Ghifārī, who stated he heard Abū Ruhm Kūthām b. al-Husayn, who was one of those who pledged allegiance at the tree, say, ‘I went on the expedition to Tabūk with the Messenger of God (SAAS). One night I was travelling with him at al-Akhdār, when God sent sleep down upon me. I awoke to find that my mount was very close to that of the Prophet (SAAS). I was shocked to find it so close to him, afraid I might strike against his leg in the stirrup. I therefore set about moving my mount away from him. Eventually, some distance further on, my eyes were again overcome and my mount approached him and his leg in the stirrup. This time I only awoke when he shouted, ‘Husl!’, ‘careful!’ I exclaimed, ‘Please forgive me, Messenger of God!’ He replied, ‘Ride on!’

“He then began asking me about those men of Banū Ghifār who had fallen behind, and I told him. He then asked me, ‘What happened to those men with long, red, thin beards who had no other facial hair?’ I told him they had dropped behind.

“He went on, “And what about those men with short, black, curly hair?” I replied, “By God, I don’t know any like that among us.” “Yes,” he insisted, “they’re the ones who own camels at Shabakat Shadakh.” I then remembered them to have been among the Banū Ghifār, but I could not identify them until I recalled them to have been a clan of Aslam who were allied to us. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “What prevented one of them, when he fell behind, from giving transport on one of his mounts, to some man eager to participate in God’s cause? It troubles me greatly to have muhājirūn and anṣār, along with men of Ghifār and Aslam, fall behind.””

Ibn Lahi‘a quoted Abu al-Aswād as telling him that ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) set out to return from Tabūk to Medina, a group of hypocrites plotted to assassinate him by casting him down from a steep ridge on to the path below. He was informed of this and ordered the men to pass through the valley while he mounted the ridge. Those who had plotted accompanied him, having muffled their faces. The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered 'Amr b. Yasir and Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yaman to proceed along with him, 'Amr holding the bridle of his camel, while Ḥudhayfa urged it forward.

"While they were proceeding, they heard the group (of assassins) descending upon them. The Messenger of God (SAAS) became angry and when Ḥudhayfa saw this, he went back towards the assassins carrying a bent cudgel that he waved in the faces of their mounts. When they saw Ḥudhayfa, they realized that the terrible deed they planned had been discovered, so they hurried away and mingled with the rest of the force.

"Ḥudhayfa returned and caught up with the Messenger of God (SAAS). He ordered his two guides to hurry ahead and they traversed the ridge trail and halted, waiting for the others. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked Ḥudhayfa, 'Did you recognize those men?' 'No,' he replied, 'all I could see was their mounts as I came down at them in the dark of night.' He then asked, 'And do you two men know anything about what these men were doing?' 'No,' they replied. And he told them both of what they had conspired to do to him; he named them, and asked the two men to keep this confidential.

"They asked, 'Messenger of God, won't you order us to kill them?' He replied, 'I dislike to have people say that Muhammad kills his own men.'"

Ibn Isḥāq gave this account, except for relating that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told the names of the conspirators only to Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yaman. This is more likely; but God knows best.

Evidence for this is in the words of Abu al-Dardā' to 'Alqama, the friend of Ibn Mas'ūd: "Do you not have among you" – meaning the people of Kūfah – “the sahib al-sawād wa al-wisād?” (By this he meant Ibn Mas'ūd.) “And do you not have among you the sahib al-sirr, 'he in charge of the secret?'” (By this he meant Ḥudhayfa.) “And do you not have among you he whom God protected from the devil through the tongue of Muhammad?” (By this, he meant 'Ammār.)

And the Commander of the Believers, Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, may God be pleased with him, has been quoted as having said to Ḥudhayfa, “I adjure you by God to say whether I was one of them!” “No,” he replied, “But I’ll not declare innocent anyone else after you!” Meaning, in order not to disclose the secret of the Prophet (SAAS).

I observe that they were 14 men, though some say they were 12. Ibn Isḥāq stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yaman to assemble them and that the former then told them what they had conspired to do. Ibn Isḥāq proceeded to list their names and said, “And it was about them that God, the Almighty and Glorious, revealed the words, ‘And they set out to do what they did not accomplish.’ (ṣūrat al-Tawbah; X, v.74)."

9. Lord of the fertile plains and of the hills.
Al-Bayhaqi related through Muḥammad b. Salama, from Abū Ishāq, from al-‘Aṣmash, from ‘Amr b. Murra, from Abū al-Bakhtari, from Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yamān, who said, “I was holding the halter of the camel of the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) and leading it ahead, while Ammār drove it” — or his words were, “I was driving it while Ammār was leading it”. “Suddenly, there on the ridge trail were 12 men blocking our way along it. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) was startled at this and shouted out at them, and they turned and went back.

“He then asked us, ‘Did you recognize them?’ We replied, ‘Messenger of God, they were muffled. We did recognize their mounts, however.’ The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) went on, ‘Those are men who will be hypocrites right on until Judgement Day! Do you know what they intended?’ ‘No,’ we replied. ‘They wanted to crowd out the Messenger of God, on the trail, to cast him down from it!’

“We asked him, ‘Messenger of God, would you not have us contact their tribes to have each one send us the head of their man?’ ‘No,’ he replied. ‘I dislike having the Arabs discuss how Muḥammad had his people fight with him until God gave him victory, and that he then turned on them and killed them.”

“He proceeded to say, ‘O God, cast al-dubayla at them!’ We asked, ‘Messenger of God, what is this al-dubayla? He replied, ‘It is a flame that strikes a person’s aorta and kills him.’”

In the saḥīḥ collection of Muslim, it is stated, on a line of authority through Shu’bā, from Qatada, from Abū Naďra, from Qays b. ‘Ubayda, who stated, “I said to Ammār, ‘Do you regard this action of yours — relating to ‘Alī, that is — to be an opinion you hold, or something that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) enjoined upon you?’ He replied, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) never enjoined upon us anything he did not require of the people as a whole. Except that Ḥudhayfa quoted the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) as having said, “Among my men there are twelve hypocrites; of these, eight will not enter paradise until camels pass through the eyes of needles!”’

In an account on a different line of transmission from Qatada, he is quoted as having stated, “In my nation there are twelve hypocrites who will not enter paradise until camels go through the eyes of needles! And al-dubayla will take care of eight of them for you — a glowing fire that will appear between their shoulders and pass on through them to emerge from their chests.”

The ḥāfuṣ al-Bayhaqi stated, “It was related to us by Ḥudhayfa that they were fourteen — or fifteen — and that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) swore by God that twelve of them would make war against God and His Messenger here on earth and on the day when the witnesses stand and testify. He forgave three of them who said, ‘We did not hear anyone make the announcement and did not know what was wanted of us.’”

This ḥadīth was related by Imām Aḥmad in his compendium. He stated, “Yazid related to us, he being Ibn Ḥārūn, quoting al-Walid b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Jami’, from Abū al-Ṭufayl, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) was coming back from the expedition to Tabuk, he ordered a crier to announce, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) is going along the ridge trail and no one should take that route."

"While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was being led by ɭudhayfa and urged forward by ‘Ammār, a group of men, muffled and on mounts appeared. They descended upon ‘Ammār, who was urging ahead the Messenger of God (SAAS) and ‘Ammār advanced at them, striking at the heads of their mounts. The Messenger of God (SAAS) called to ɭudhayfa, ‘Qadin! Qadin!’ ‘Lead on! Lead on!’

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) went on down from the gully and when he had done so, and ‘Ammār had returned, the former asked the latter, ‘Ammār, did you recognize those men?’ He replied, ‘I recognized most of their mounts, but the men were muffled.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, ‘Do you know what they intended?’ ‘God and His Messenger know best,’ ‘Ammār replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) explained, ‘They intended to crowd out the Messenger of God and cast him down.’

‘Ammār later spoke in confidence to one of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS), asking him, ‘I adjure you by God, how many do you know the group on the ridge trail to have been?’ ‘Fourteen men,’ he replied. ‘Ammār commented, ‘If you were among them, that would have meant fifteen!’

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) forgave three, who said, ‘We did not hear the crier of the Messenger of God, and had no idea what they intended.’ ‘Ammār stated, ‘I declare that the remaining twelve will make war against God and His Messenger here on earth and the day the witnesses stand and testify.’"

An Account of the al-Dirār Mosque.

God Almighty stated, “Those who built a mosque ԁιɾɑɾɑn, to do harm, in unbelief, to disperse the believers and to subvert those who formerly had fought God and His Messenger. And they will surely insist, ‘It was only good we sought.’ But God will declare that they are surely liars. Never stand inside it. A mosque built on piety from its first day is more fit to have men stand within it who like to purify themselves; and God loves those who are pure. Is he who founded his building on fear of God and pleasing Him better, or is he who built his structure upon the side of an undercut bank, which will collapse with him into the fires of hell? God does not guide a people who are unjust. Their structure they built will continue to give them discontent in their hearts, unless their hearts are cut to pieces! God is All-Knowing, Wise” (sūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.107–10).

We have discussed interpretation of matters relating to these verses sufficiently heretofore in our Tafsīr (Exegesis). And all praise be to God!

Ibn Ishaq discussed how this mosque came to be built, and its evil people, and how the Messenger of God (SAAS), upon his return from Tabuk and before he entered Medina, ordered its destruction.
The gist of this is that a group of hypocrites built a replica of a mosque near that at Quba. They wished for the Messenger of God (SAAS) to pray for them in it in order to further their purposes of corruption, disbelief and obstinacy.

God forbad His Messenger from praying in it. This was because he was in the process of travelling to Tabuk. When he returned from there, he stopped at Dhu Awân – a place an hour’s travel from Medina. It was while he was there that revelation came to him about that mosque – namely, the Almighty’s words, “Those who built a mosque to do harm...” (surat al-Tawba; IX, v.107).

As for the word ḥārār, “harm”, used here, it related to their wish to imitate the mosque at Quba and did so in ʿufr, “disbelief”, in God, not in belief in Him, and also as a means of ʿafrq, “causing separation”, of the congregation from the mosque at Quba.

And they acted ṭanadān, “in order to subvert”, those who had formerly fought God and His Messenger. This referred to ʿAbū ʿAmīr, the immoral monk, may God rebuke him. What had happened earlier was that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) had invited him to accept Islam, he refused and went to Mecca and incited them to war. Then they attacked at Uhud, with the outcome we have given above. Having failed in his purpose, he went to the king of the Byzantines seeking his help against the Messenger of God (SAAS). ʿAbū ʿAmīr followed the same faith as Heraclius, along with those other Arabs who had become Christians. He would write to his brothers who were acting in hypocrisy, making promises to them and raising their hopes, Satan merely increasing their delusion. His messages and letters kept coming to them constantly.

And so they constructed this overtly as a mosque, while secretly it was a place of war, and a centre for those who came from ʿAbū ʿAmīr, the monk, and a meeting place for those who were hypocrites like themselves. This is why the Almighty stated, “... to subvert those who formerly had fought God and His Messenger”.

He then stated, “And they will definitely insist,” that is, those who built it, “it was only good we sought.” That is, “We only wanted good in building it.” And God further stated, “But God will declare that they are surely liars.”

God then told His Messenger, “Never stand inside it.” He forbade standing in it in order not to endorse its cause. He went on to order and encourage him to stand in the mosque that had been established in piety from the very first, this being the mosque at Quba, for the text and reports that exist praise the purity of its congregation, while making reference to it.

The evidence given in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī that the mosque (referred to here) is that of the Messenger of God (SAAS) does not refute the above comment. For even if the Quba mosque were founded in piety from its very first day, then that applies even more appropriately to the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS); the virtue of the latter is even stronger and firmer.

We have commented exhaustively on this in our Tafsīr (Exegesis). And all praise be to God.
The outcome was that when the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) halted at Dhū Awān, he called for Mālik b. al-Dukhshum and Māʾān b. ʿAdī— or his brother ʿAṣim b. ʿAdī— may God be pleased with them both— and told them to go to that mosque whose people were evil and to burn it. They did then proceed there and burnt it down, and those who had attended it left it.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Those who had built it were 12 men. These were Khīdām b. Khālid, next to whose home it was built. Then there were Thaʿlabā b. Ḥāṭīb, Muʿattīb b. Qushyār, Abū Ḥābihā b. al-Azʿār, ʿAbbād b. Ḥunayf (a brother of Sahl b. Ḥunayf), Jāriyya b. ʿĀmir and his two sons Mūjammī and Zayd, Nabtal b. al-Ḥārīth, Bāḥzaj (who belonged to Banū Dūbayʿa), Bījād b. Uthmān (of Banū Dūbayʿa) and Wadīṣa b. Thābit (who was of Banū Umayya).

I note that on this expedition to Tabūk, the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) prayed the al-fajr, “the dawn prayer”, behind ʿAbd al- Raḥmān b. ʿAwf, joining him in the second rakʿa. This was because the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) had gone to make his ablutions in the company of al-Mughira b. Shuʿba, and was late in arriving. And so the prayer began with ʿAbd al- Raḥmān b. ʿAwf leading it. When they made their greetings, the congregation attributed much importance to what had happened. The Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) told them, however, “You have done extremely well, and acted correctly.” This is according to what al-Bukhārī, may God have mercy on him, related.

Al-Bukhārī also stated that Aḥmad b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, quoting Ḥumayd al-Ṭawīl, from Anas b. Mālik, who said that when the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) returned from the Tabūk expedition and approached Medina, he said, “In Medina there are people who, whatever distance you covered, whatever valleys you crossed, were always there with you.” They asked him, “While they were still there in Medina, Messenger of God?” He replied, “Yes, while there (valid) excuses kept them confined to Medina.”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this from this line.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Khālid b. Makhlad related to him, quoting Sulaymān, quoting ʿAmr b. Yahyā, from al-ʿAbbās b. Sahl b. Saʿd, from Abū Ḥumayd, who said, “We returned with the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) from the expedition to Tabūk and eventually saw Medina below us. The Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) then said, This is Ṭāba (Medina); and that is Uḥud, a mountain that loves us and that we love.”

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth of Sulaymān b. Bilāl in similar terms.

Al-Bukhārī stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Sufyān, from al-Zuḥrī, from al-Saʿīb b. Yazīd, who said, “I remember going out to Thaniyyat al-Wādāʾ with the boys to meet the Messenger of God (ṣAṣAṣ) on his arrival from the expedition to Tabūk.”

Abū Dāʾūd and al-Tirmidhī related this from a ḥadīth of Sufyān b. Uyyayna. Al-Tirmidhī categorized it as ḥasan, saḥīḥ, “good and authentic.”
Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Abū Naṣr b. Qatāda quoted Abū ʿAmr b. Māṭar (as having said), ‘I heard Abū Khalīfa say, ‘I heard Ibn ʿAʿisha say, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived back in Medina, the women and the boys and girls began calling out, ‘The full moon has come out for us over Thaniyyat al-Wadāʾ! We owe our thanks to one who only invited towards God.””

Al-Bayhaqi commented, “Our scholars relate that this is what was said when he arrived in Medina from Mecca, not when he arrived there from Thaniyyat al-Wadāʾ on his return from Tabūk; God knows best. We have, in any case, made reference to it here as well.”

THE HADITH OF KĀʾB B. MĀLIK, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM, AS QUOTED BY AL-BUKHĀRĪ, MAY GOD HAVE MERCY UPON HIM.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Yaḥyā b. Bukayr related to him, quoting al-Layth, from ʿAqīl, from Ibn Shihāb, from ʿAbd al-Rāḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb b. Mālik, who said that ʿAbd Allāh, son of Kaʿb b. Mālik, who was one of the sons of Kaʿb and acted as the latter’s guide when he became blind, said, “I heard (my father) Kaʿb b. Mālik relate the story of the expedition to Tabūk from which he remained behind, as follows, ‘The only expedition in which the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took part in which I did not participate was that to Tabūk. Except, that is, for the battle of Badr. And God did not censure anyone who had not taken part in it because the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had actually gone out on that occasion to seek the Quraysh caravan. And then God brought them (the Muslims) and their enemy together without any prior expectation of that. I was present the night of the pledge at al-ʿAqaba when we made our commitment for Islam; and I would not prefer to have attended Badr instead of it, even though people consider that more worthy of prestige.

“‘The fact was that I had never been stronger nor wealthier than I was when I remained behind the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), when he went on that expedition. I swear, never before that had I owned two riding camels, as I acquired from that expedition. Whenever the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) intended to send out an expedition, he would talk of one to a different destination. Except for that one. That one he was to make at a time of extreme heat and by travelling very far against a numerous enemy. And so he announced this clearly to the Muslims, so that they could make appropriate arrangements for the expedition. He informed them of the destination for which he was heading. The Muslims accompanying the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) were many in number; such that a single kitāb ḥāfīz (by which he meant a diwān, “a register”) would not have contained them.’

‘Kaʿb went on, ‘Every man wishing to be absent from it thought it would remain undisclosed, provided that God did not give any revelation about it. And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) departed on that expedition at a time when the fruits and the shade were very alluring.
The Messenger of God (SAAS) made his preparations, as did the Muslims accompanying him. I also began hurrying to prepare, but I would retire without accomplishing anything. I would then tell myself, "I can do it!" I kept delaying, while the others were making serious efforts. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the Muslims with him departed, I had completed none of my preparations. I said, "I'll get ready in a day or two and then catch up with them." The morning after they left, I went off to get ready, but came back again having accomplished nothing. Again next morning I did the same, but returned having done nothing. And so it continued with me while they hurried on and the expedition came to an end. I constantly intended to leave and overtake them — how I wish I had! But that was not fated for me.

"Whenever I went out and mixed with people after the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS), it grieved me that the only men I saw were persons suspected of hypocrisy or those excused by the Messenger of God (SAAS), because they were in poor health.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) made no mention of me until after he arrived at Tabuk. Then, while sitting there with his men, he asked, "What happened to Ka'b?" A man of Banu Salama replied, "Messenger of God, he has been detained by his two cloaks, and by his gazing at his own two flanks!" Mu'adh b. Jabal commented, "That's a rotten thing to say! By God, Messenger of God, we know nothing of him but good!" The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained silent.

"Ka'b b. Malik went on, 'When I learned that he had begun his return journey, I began to feel anxious. I began thinking up excuses, wondering how I would be able to avoid incurring his anger. I sought the help of everyone of wisdom in my family. When it was said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was close at hand, all this silliness left me, and I knew I could never extricate myself using any deception; I decided to tell him the truth.

"One morning he arrived back. Whenever he returned from a journey he would first go to the mosque, where he would perform a prayer of two rak'at and he would then sit down with the congregation. And so when he had done this, those who had remained behind began coming and offering excuses and declaring oaths to him. There were some 80 such men. He accepted from them the statements they made and their pledges of allegiance and then he sought forgiveness for them, relying upon God, Almighty and Glorious is He, to determine their inner thoughts.

"Then I came to him. When I greeted him, he gave me a smile, but it was that of someone made angry. He said, "Come over here." I walked over and sat before him. He then asked, "What kept you back? Had you not already purchased a mount?" I replied, "Yes, I had. If I were sitting before anyone else in the world than yourself, I would decide to escape his anger by making up some excuse. And I have been gifted with eloquence. But, I swear by God, I am sure that if I were to tell you lies to please you, God would surely soon thereafter make you angry with me. Whereas if I tell you the truth, though you will be angry with me, I will hope for God's pardon. Actually, I swear by God, I had no excuse; I had never been stronger or more wealthy than when I remained behind.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, "Well, this man has told the truth. Get up until God makes his decision about you."

"I arose, as did those men there of Banu Salama, and they followed me outside, saying, "By God, we never before knew you to commit such a sin! You are at fault. Could you not have made excuses to the Messenger of God (SAAS), as the others did who stayed behind? The request for forgiveness that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would have made for you would have been enough for you." They kept on blaming me, so that I thought seriously of going back and denying what I had previously said.

"But then I asked them, "Has anyone other than myself received the same response?" They replied, "Yes; two men. They said as you did, and his response to them was as to yourself."

"Who are they?" I asked. "Marara b. al-Rabi' al-A'mri and Hilal b. Umayya al-Waqifi," they replied. Those they mentioned were fine men who had been present at Badr – exemplary men. When they told me their names, I went on my way."

"Ka'b b. Malik continued, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) banned Muslims from speaking with all three of us who had remained behind. People avoided us, and so changed their relationships with us that the very land itself seemed unfamiliar to me. We stayed in this state for 50 nights.

"The other two men simply remained inside their homes, weeping. I was the youngest and most resilient. I continued to go out and to participate in the prayers with other Muslims and walked in the markets; no one spoke to me. I would still go to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and greet him while seated in his assemblies following the prayers, and I would ask myself whether or not he had moved his lips in response. I would pray close by him and look at him stealthily. As I prayed, he would look over at me, but when I turned towards him, he would look away.

"Finding this rejection by everyone to be onerous, I walked out and climbed over the wall of the garden of Abu Qiltada, my nephew of whom I was very fond. I greeted him, but, I swear by God, he did not even return my greeting. I asked, "Abu Qiltada, I appeal to you by God! Do you not know that I love God and His Messenger?" He remained silent. I appealed to him again, but he made no reply. Again I appealed and now he said, "God and His Messenger know best." At that my eyes streamed tears, and I turned away and climbed back over the wall.

"While one day I was walking in the market of Medina, I saw a Nabati from Syria who had come to sell his produce in Medina. He was asking, "Who will direct me to Ka'b b. Malik?" People began pointing to me, and he came over and gave me a letter from the King of Ghassân enclosed in a silken envelope. The letter stated, “I have been informed that your master has behaved harshly to you. God will not make you stay in a place where you are despised and ill-treated. So join with us. We will relieve you.” When I read this, I said, “This also is a trial!” I took it to an oven where I burned it.

“Things went on as before until 40 of the 50 nights had passed. Then an envoy from the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to me and said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS), orders you to keep away from your wife.” “Should I divorce her, or what?” I asked. “No,” he replied, “just keep away from her; do not go near her.” He sent similar messages to each of the other two men. I told my wife, “Go and join your family. Stay with them until God decides this matter.”

“Then the wife of Hilal b. Umayya went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, “Messenger of God, Hilal b. Umayya is a needy old man who has no servant. Do you dislike my serving him?” He replied, “No; but he should not come near you.” She asked, “I swear by God, he has no desire for anything. He has not stopped weeping since this began, right on up to the present.”

“After that some of my family asked me, “Why don’t you ask the Messenger of God (SAAS) permission for your wife, as Hilal b. Umayya asked, that his wife could serve him?” I replied, “I swear by God, I’ll not ask his permission about that! How do I know what he might say if I asked him this, since I am still a young man?”

“Ten more days went by as before until we had gone through fifty since the Messenger of God (SAAS) had forbidden people to speak to us. When I had performed the dawn prayer on the fiftieth night on the roof of one of our houses, sitting in that state that God, Almighty and Glorious is He, described, my spirit feeling constrained and “the earth constricted, though it was spacious . . .” (sūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.118). I heard the voice of someone who had climbed Mt. Salâ shouting at the top of his voice, “Rejoice, Ka‘b!”

“I prostrated before God, realizing that relief had come. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had, after he had performed the al-fajr, “pre-dawn prayer”, announced God’s forgiveness of us, and people had come out to tell us the good news. They had gone to the other two men to tell them and a man hurried up on a horse to inform me, while a man of Banû Aslam had climbed up the mountain; his voice had been quicker to reach me than the horse.

“When the man whose voice I heard came to me to inform me, I took off the two garments I was wearing and presented them to him for his having brought me such good news. And I swear to God, at that time those were the only clothes I owned! I borrowed two garments and put them on, then went off to see the Messenger of God (SAAS). The people began swarming in to see me, congratulating me on God’s forgiveness of me and expressing their delight at this.

“Then I went in to the mosque where the Messenger of God (SAAS) was seated, with people all around him. Talha b. Ubayd Allah hurried up to me, shook hands and congratulated me. I swear, no others of the muhājirīn did so, and I will never forget Ṭālḥa’s action.

“When I greeted the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), he said, his face beaming with pleasure, “Rejoice at the best day you have ever had since your mother gave you birth!”

“I asked him, “Does this (forgiveness) come from you, Messenger of God, or from God?” He replied, “No; it is from God.” When he was pleased, his whole face would radiate as though a piece of the moon; we well knew this characteristic of his. When I sat down before him, I asked, “Messenger of God, in acknowledgement of God’s acceptance of my repentance, I will give up my property as a donation to God and to His Messenger.”

“He replied, “Keep some of what you own; that will be best for you.” I replied, “I will just keep my share of the booty from Khaybar.”

“I then said, “Messenger of God, it is only my honesty that saved me. It shall be part of my repentance that I will speak nothing but the truth for as long as I live.” And I swear by God, I know of no Muslim whom God has so helped for telling the truth, since I told him that truth, than He has helped myself. And since I made that pledge to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), I have never intentionally told a lie. And I hope very much that God will preserve me from doing so for as long as I live.

“And then God revealed to His Messenger (ṢAAS) the verse: “God has forgiven the Prophet, the muhājirīn and the anjār” up to the words “and be with those who are truthful” (ṣūrah al-Tawba; IX, v.117–119).

“I swear by God, God never bestowed upon me any greater blessings, after he led me to Islam, than having me speak the truth to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and that I did not lie to him and so suffer the same fate as those who had lied. For God Almighty spoke to those who lied more terrible things than He ever did to anyone. The Almighty said, “They will swear by God to you, when you turn away from them,” and on to the words, “God is surely not pleased with those who are immoral” (ṣūrah al-Tawba; IX, v.95–6).

“We three men were quite different from those who swore to him, so that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) accepted their excuses and their allegiance and forgave them. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) postponed judgement over us until God decided the matter. Therefore God Almighty said, “and (forgiveness is) for those three who remained behind” (ṣūrah al-Tawba; IX, v.118). The reference made here by God is not to our having remained behind from the expedition, but to postponement by the Prophet (ṢAAS), of deciding our case, unlike that of those who swore to him and made excuses that he accepted.”

Muslim related this in similar form through al-Zuhri. Muhammad b. Ishāq related it from al-Zuhri in a text similar to that of al-Bukhārī. We quoted this in our Exegesis from the Musnad compendium of Imām ʿĀbd al-Rahmān ibn ʿAbd al-Razzāq al-Saghrī; in that account there are minor additions. And all praise and credit are due to God.
REFERENCE TO DISOBEDIENT PERSONS OTHER THAN THOSE WHO HAD REMAINED BEHIND.

Regarding the words of the Almighty, “And others have confessed their sins, thus mixing a good deed with one that was bad; ’asā, ‘perhaps’, God will turn to them in forgiveness. God is very Forgiving, Beneficent” (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.102). Abü Talha al-Walībi quoted Ibn ‘Abbās as having said, “They were a group of ten men who remained behind the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the time of the expedition to Tabūk. When it came time for his return, seven of them attached themselves to pillars of the mosque.

“When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) passed by them, he asked, ‘Who are these men?’ He was told, ‘They are Abū Lubābā and associates of his who remained behind you; (they intend to stay here) until you set them free and forgive them.’ He commented, ‘I swear by God, I’ll not release them, nor will I forgive them until God, the Almighty and Glorious, releases them! They disregarded me and remained behind from the expedition on which the other Muslims departed.’

“When they learned of this, the men said, ‘We will not release ourselves until God does so.’ And then God the Almighty and Glorious revealed the verse, ‘And others have confessed their sins . . .’. The word ’asā used in this verse has the power of certainty when applied to God. When it was revealed, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent to them, and released and forgave them. They then brought their possessions to him, saying, ‘Messenger of God, these are what we own; take them as a donation from us and seek forgiveness from God for us.’ He replied, ‘I have not been ordered to take your possessions.’

“Then God revealed, ‘Take alms from their property; you will purify and cleanse them thereby. And pray for them. Your prayer is a relief for them. God is All-Hearing, All-Knowing . . .’ as far as the words ‘. . . and others are made to wait for God’s command; He would either punish them or turn to them in mercy’ (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.103–6).

“This referred to those who had not tied themselves to the pillars and about whom a decision was deferred until there came down the words of the Almighty, ‘God has forgiven the Prophet, the muhājirīn and the anṣār who followed him . . .’” (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.117).

‘Atiyiya b. Sa‘d quoted Ibn ‘Abbās in words similar to these.

Sa‘d b. al-Musayyab and Mujāhid b. Ishāq narrated the story of Abū Lubābā in respect to the battle with Banū Qurayza; they told of his attaching himself until he was granted forgiveness. And then he remained behind from the expedition to Tabūk and again tied himself up until God forgave him. He then wanted to give up all his possessions as a donation, but the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “No; one-third of it will suffice.”

Mujāhid b. Ishāq stated, “And it was about him that there was revealed, ‘And others have confessed their sins’” (ṣūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.102).
Sa'id b. al-Musayyab stated, "And thereafter only good in Islam was seen of him; may God be pleased with him and give him pleasure."

I observe that perhaps the reference here is not to the three above as well as the rest. Perhaps they restricted reference to him (Abu Lubaba) because he was their leader, as the text of Ibn 'Abbas indicates. But God knows best.

The ḥāfīẓ al-Bayhaqi narrated through Abū ʿAbdAllāh b. al-Zubayrī, from Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Salama b. Kuhayl, from Ŷyāḏ b. Ŷyāḏ, from his father, from Ibn Masʿīd, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made an address to us. He said, ‘There are hypocrites among you. Let those I name arise. Get up, so-and-so! Get up, so-and-so! Get up, so-and-so!’ And he went on until he had given 36 names. He then said, ‘There are within you’ (or ‘there are among you’) ‘hypocrites. Ask for relief from God.’ ‘Umar passed by a man concealing his face. He had earlier been acquainted with him. ‘Umar asked, ‘What is the matter?’ He then related to him what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had said. At this, he (‘Umar) said, ‘Keep away for the rest of the day.’"

I observe that those who remained behind the expedition to Tabūk consisted of four categories. Those who were ordered to do so and were rewarded, like ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭalib, Muhammad b. Maslama and Ibn Umm Maktūm. Those who were excused, such as the weak and the sick. Those who were muqillun, “ill-equipped”, such as those who wept. And there were those who were disobedient and were subject to criticism. These were the three men and Abū Lubaba and his companions mentioned above. There were also others who were blameworthy and were rebuked. These were the hypocrites.

An Account of the events after the return of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from Tabūk to Medina.

“Previously, you were content in the shadows and in a storehouse where palm leaves are kept.
Then you came down into the land; you are no more human being, not droplet, no clot,
No; a droplet riding the flow, having bridled an eagle that loves to dive.
You were borne from loins to womb; when one person passed on, another vessel appeared. Until your guardian house encompassed Mt. Khindif, its heights towering above other peaks. When you were born, the earth grew bright and the horizon was illuminated with your light. We are now in that brightness and that light, and we pass on along the paths of righteousness.”

Al-Bayhaqi then related this from another line, from Abü al-Sakan Zakariyya b. Yahya al-Tanṭi. In one part of this line, the above is related from him.

Al-Bayhaqi went on, “He spoke further and then the Messenger of God (SAA) stated, ‘This is white al-Hira (I see) raised up (in a vision) for me. And this (I see) is al-Shayma’, daughter of Nufayla al-Azadiyya. She is riding a grey mule veiled in a black scarf.’ I asked, ‘Messenger of God, when we conquer al-Hira and I find her as you describe, may she be mine?’ ‘She will be yours,’ he said.

“The ridda, ‘apostacy’, wars then arose; no one from (Banu) al-Tanṭi apostatized. We were busy fighting the neighbouring Arabs over Islam. We battled against Qays, of whom was Uyayna b. Hiṣn. We also fought Banu Asad, of whom was Taḥfa b. Khawwaylid. Khalid b. al-Walid would give us praise, including the following verses he recited:

‘May God requite Taḥfa in their homes most handsomely for fighting like heroes.

They are worthy of the banners of nobility and magnanimity that flutter when the east wind blows through every tent.

They struck at Qays for the faith, after the latter had responded to the calls of darkness and blindness.’

“Khalid then went on to attack Muslaylima the Imposter and we accompanied him. When we had finished with Muslaylima, we proceeded on towards al-BAṣra. There we encountered Hurmuz at Kāzima with an army larger than our own.

“There was no Persian more strenuous in his antagonism to the Arabs and Islam than Hurmuz. Khalid proceeded out against him and challenged him to single combat. He accepted, and Khalid killed him. Khalid sent a dispatch to inform (the Caliph Abü Bakr) ‘the trusting’, and he (Abü Bakr) awarded the booty from Hurmuz to Khalid. The tall headgear of Hurmuz fetched 100,000...
dirhams; the Persians were accustomed to awarding headgear worth 100,000 dirhams to one of their number who acquired nobility.

“We then moved out along the al-Taff route to al-Htra. The first person to meet us there when we entered it was al-Shayma', daughter of Nufayla, just as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said; she was mounted on a grey mule and veiled with a black scarf. I took her prisoner, saying, ‘This woman was gifted to me by the Messenger of God (SAAS).’

“Khālid asked me to bring witnesses proving this, and so I did. The witnesses were Muḥammad b. Maslama and Muḥammad b. Bashir al-Anṣāri. Khālid then awarded her to me.

“After that her brother ‘Abd al-Masṭih came down to seek peace. He asked me to sell her to him. I replied, ‘I swear, I’ll not do so for less that 1,000 dirhams!’ He gave me 1,000 dirhams and I handed her over to him. People told me, ‘If you had demanded 100,000 dirhams, he would have paid it to you.’ I told them, ‘I could not figure any number larger than 1,000!’”

THE ARRIVAL OF A DELEGATION FROM THAQIF TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) IN RAMĀDĀN OF 9 AH.

It is told above how, when the Messenger of God (SAAS) left Thaqif he was asked to invoke God against them. But he spoke prayer seeking guidance for them.

It is similarly told above that when Malik b. ʿAwf al-Naṣri accepted Islam, the Messenger of God (SAAS) treated him with honour, made presents to him and placed him in command of those of his people who accepted Islam. Thereafter, Malik would make attacks into Thaqif territory and harass them until he had forced them into acceptance of Islam.

It is also related above by Abī Daʿūd about how Sakhr b. al-ʿAyla al-Aḥmas remained in Thaqif until he brought them down from their fortress under the control of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and led him to Medina, with the permission of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to do so.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived back in Medina from Tabūk in Ramādān, and that same month a delegation from Banī Thaqif arrived.

“It is told of Banū Thaqif, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) had left them, Urwa b. Masʿūd followed after him and caught him up before he arrived in Medina. Urwa accepted Islam and asked permission to return to his people to bring them into Islam.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him – so his people say – ‘They will fight you.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) knew of the strong feeling of resistance they would feel against one of their own. But Urwa said, ‘I am more beloved by them than their first-born!’ And he was indeed thus loved and obeyed among them."
“‘Urwa then left to call upon his people to join Islam, hoping that they would not oppose him because of his high status with them. But when he appeared on his high balcony, revealed his faith to them and called for them to join Islam, they cast arrows at him from every side. One struck him a mortal blow.

‘Banu Malik claim that it was one of their men, named Aws b. ‘Awf, a brother of Banū Salīm b. ‘Awf, who killed him. The Aḥlāf, however, claim that it was one of theirs, a man of Banū ‘Attāb called Wābb b. Jābir. ‘Urwa was asked what he thought about his (imminent) death, and he replied, ‘It is an honour that God has awarded me, a martyrdom God has given me. I am no different from those martyrs killed in the company of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), before he went from you. So bury me with them.’ And they did so.

“They claim that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said of him, ‘His position among his people is like that of the hero of (ṣūrat) Yāsin (XXXVI, v.19) among his people.’”

Mūsā b. Uqba related similarly the story of ‘Urwa. However, he claimed that this occurred after the pilgrimage made by Ābū Bakr, “the trusting”. Ābū Bakr al-Bayhaqī agreed with this view.

But this is unlikely. What is authentic is that this came about before the pilgrimage of Ābū Bakr, as Ibn Iš̄āq related. But God knows best.

Ibn Iš̄āq went on, “Thaqīf remained thus for some months after the killing of ‘Urwa. They then conferred together and decided they lacked the power to fight all the Arabs around them, and so they pledged their allegiance and accepted Islam.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “They were a body of some ten men, including Qina‘a b. ‘Abd Yalīl – he being their leader. They also had with them Uthmān b. Ābū al-‘Āṣ, who was the youngest member of the delegation.”

Ibn Iš̄āq went on, “When they neared Medina, they halted at Qanāt. There they met al-Mughīra b. Shu‘bā, who was taking his turn to pasture the riding camels of the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When he sighted them, he hurried off to inform the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of their arrival. Ābū Bakr, ‘the trusting’, met him and al-Mughīra told him of the men of Banū Thaqīf who were coming to pledge their allegiance and to accept Islam, provided that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) met some of their conditions and wrote a document treating their people. Ābū Bakr told al-Mughīra, ‘Please don’t go in before me to tell the Messenger of God; let me be the first to tell him.’ Al-Mughīra agreed and Ābū Bakr went in and told the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of their arrival. Al-Mughira then went back to rejoin his companions, and with them brought in the camels.

He also instructed them how they should greet the Messenger of God (SAAS), since the only greeting they then used was still that of the Jahiliyya.

“When they came in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS), he had a tent pitched for them in the mosque. It was Khalid b. Sa’id b. al-As who walked (with messages) between them and the Messenger of God (SAAS). When he brought food for them from home, they refrained from eating until Khalid b. Sa’id did so first. It was he who wrote out their pact for them.

“One condition they proposed to the Messenger of God (SAAS) was that he allow them to keep their idol al-Lat for a period of three years. They kept on bargaining with him regarding the issues of time, with him constantly refusing until ultimately they asked for one month after their return so that the foolish people among them could become accustomed. He refused them any set period and insisted he was going to send Abü Sufyān b. Ḥarb and al-Mughira to destroy the Goddess.

“They also requested that they not perform the prayers and that they themselves should not have to destroy their idols. He said, ‘Regarding yourselves destroying your idols, this we will excuse you. But concerning the prayer, there is no good in a faith devoid of prayer.’ They said, ‘Then we will perform them, though it is demeaning.’”

Imām Aḥmad stated that ‘Affān related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Salama, from Ḥumayd, from al-Hasan, from ʿUthmān b. Abū al-As, who said that the delegation from Thaqīf came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and that he had them reside in the mosque to have it make an impression on them. They posed the condition that they not be required to take part in expeditions, that they not be required to pay a tithe, not be otherwise taxed, and that no others would be placed in command of them. The Messenger of God (SAAS) agreed, saying, ‘You will not be required to fight; you will not have to pay a tithe, and others will not have command over you. And there is no good in a religion without prayer prostrations.’

“ʿUthmān b. Abū al-As asked, ‘Messenger of God, teach me the Qurʾān and appoint me Imām for my people.’”

Abū Dāʾūd related this from a ḥadīth of Abū Dāʾūd al-Ṭayālīṣī, from Ḥammād b. Salama, from Ḥumayd.

Abū Dāʾūd stated that al-Hasan b. al-Sabāḥ related to him, quoting Ismāʿīl b.ʿAbd al-Karim, quoting Ibrāhīm b. ʿAqīl b. Maʿqīl b. Munabbih, from Wāḥib (who said), “I asked Jabir about what happened when Thaqīf pledged allegiance. He replied, ‘They proposed to the Messenger of God (SAAS) the condition that they should not have to give alms, nor do battle.’ Jabir also stated that he heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say thereafter, ‘They will give alms, and will do battle when they become Muslims.’”
Ibn Isḥaq stated, "When they accepted Islam and he had written a document for them, he appointed Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ as their commander; he was among their youngest. This was because (Abū Bakr) 'the trusting' told him, 'Messenger of God, I observe this young man to be the one of them most dedicated to Islam, and to learning the Qurʾān.'"

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related that when their delegation came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), they had left Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ behind with their camels, and that when they returned at midday, he went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to ask him for information and about reciting the Qurʾān. Finding him to be asleep, he then went to Abū Bakr, "the trusting". His training lasted until he had become expert in Islam. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to like him very much.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, "Saʿd b. Abū Hind related to me, from Muṭṭarīf b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Shikhkhīr, from Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ, who said, 'One of the last things the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked of me was when he sent me to Thaqīf. He told me, "Uthmān, be concise in the prayer. Evaluate the people by their weakest member, for they will include the old, the young, the weak and those in need."'"

Imām ʿĀlī mad stated that it was related to him by ʿAffān, quoting ʿAbbās b. Salāma, quoting Saʿīd al-Jarrī, from Abū al-ʿAlī, from Muṭṭarīf, from Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ, who said, "I asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), 'Appoint me as my people's Imām.' He replied, 'You are their Imām. Be guided by their weakest person. And appoint as your muʿazzīn, "prayer announcer", someone who will not accept payment for summoning to the prayer.?'"

ʿAbd Allāh related from ʿAffān, from Wahb and from Muḥāwiya b. ʿAmr, from Zaʿīda, both of these quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Uthmān b. Khathaym, from Daʿūd b. Abū ʿĀṣim, from Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ, that the last direction the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave to him when he appointed Uthmān as commander of al-Taʾif, was to say, "When you say the prayers with a group, take it easy on them." He told him further, "Recite: 'In the name of your Lord who created ... ' (ṣūrat al-ʿAlaq, XCVI, v.1) and similar passages from the Qurʾān."

ʿAbd Allāh stated that Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to him, quoting Shuʿba, from ʿAmr b. Murra (who said), "I heard Saʿd b. al-Musayyab say, 'Uthmān b. Abū al-ʿĀṣ spoke as follows, "The last instruction the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave me was to say, 'When you act as Imām for a group, make the prayer easy for them.'"'"

Muslim related this from Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar, from Muḥammad b. al-Muthannā and from Bindār, both of whom quoted Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar, from Ghundar. ʿAḥmad stated that Abū ʿAḥmad al-Zubayrī related to him, quoting Abd Allah b. Abd al-Rahman b. Yaqa al-Taifi, from Abd Allah b. al-Hakam (who said) that he heard Uthman b. Abu al-As say, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) placed me in command of al-Ta’if, and the last instruction he gave me was to say, ‘Make the prayer easy for the people.’”

Muslim is alone in giving it with this line of transmission.

Ahmad stated that Yahya b. Sa’id related to him, quoting Amr b. Uthman, quoting Musa – he being Ibn Talha – to the effect that Uthman b. Abu al-As related to him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed him Imam for his people and then said, “He who becomes an Imam for a people should be easy on them; they include those who are weak, elderly and in need. When he prays alone, he can pray however he wishes.”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Amr b. Uthman.

Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Muhammad b. Ja’far, quoting Shu’ba, from al-Nu’man b. Sallam (who said), “I heard some elders of Thaqif saying, Uthman b. Abu al-As told us, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to me, ‘Be your people’s Imam; and if you are a people’s Imam you should make the prayer easy for them. For among them there will stand the young and the old, the weak and the sick, and those who are in need.’’”

Ahmad also stated that Isma’il b. Ibrahim related to him, from al-Jurayri, from Abu al-As b. al-Shikhr, that Uthman said to the Messenger of God (SAAS), “Messenger of God, Satan came between me and my prayer and my recitation.” He replied, “That satan is named Khanzab; if you sense him, then seek refuge in God from him and spit three times on your left hand.” (Uthman said,) “I did this, and God sent him away from me.”

Muslim related this from a hadith of Sa’id al-Jariri.

Malik, Ahmad, Muslim and the orthodox scholars all related from various lines of transmission, from Nafi’ b. Jubayr b. Mut’im, from Uthman b. Abu al-As, that the latter complained to the Messenger of God (SAAS) about a pain he was experiencing in his body. He told him, “Place your hand over that part of your body that is hurting and say three times, ‘Hismi Allahi,’ ‘In the name of God!’” Then say, seven times, ‘a’udhu bi ‘izzat Allahi wa qudratihi min sharr ma ajidu wa ubadhir!, ‘I take refuge in the power and might of God against what I am experiencing, and I am on my guard!’”

In some accounts there is an addition in which Uthman goes on, “I did this and God cured what was wrong with me. And I have advised my own people and others about this.”

Abu ‘Abd Allah b. Maja stated that it was related to him by Muhammad b. Bashshar, quoting Muhammad b. ‘Abd Allah al-Ansari, quoting Umayya b. ‘Abd al-Rahman – he being Ibn Jawshin – quoting his father, who stated that Uthman b. Abu al-As said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed me in command of al-Ta’if, something was impeding my prayers, so that I did not know what it was I was praying. When I recognized this, I travelled to the
The Messenger of God (SAAS). He asked, ‘You are the son of Abū al-ʿĀṣ, aren’t you?’ ‘Yes, Messenger of God,’ I replied. ‘What brings you then?’ he asked. I replied, ‘Messenger of God, something is impeding my prayer so that I do not know what I am praying.’ He told me, ‘That is Satan. Come close.’ I went over close to him and squatted on the soles of my feet. He then slapped me on my chest with his hand and spat in my mouth, saying, ‘Begone, enemy of God!’ He did this three times. Then he said, ‘Get back to your work.’ And, by my life, I don’t think he ever interfered with me again.’

Ibn Maja is alone in giving this.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Īsā b. ‘Abd Allāh related to me, from Āṭiya b. Sufyān b. Rabīʿa al-Thaqafi, that one of their delegation said, ‘After we had become Muslims, while engaged in fasting along with the Messenger of God (SAAS) for the remainder of Ramadān, Bilal would come to us with our evening and pre-dawn meals. When he brought the pre-dawn meal, I would tell him, “So we see that dawn has broken?” He would say, “I left the Messenger of God (SAAS) still eating his meal, for the dawn meal can be eaten this late.” When he would bring us our evening meal, we would tell him, “But we don’t see that the sun has completely set yet.” He would say, “We have only come to you after the Messenger of God (SAAS) has eaten.” He would then take his hand to the dish and eat from it.’”

Imām Ahmad, Abū Daʿūd, and Ibn Maja all related from a ḥadith of ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Ya‘la al-Ṭāʿifi, from ‘Uthmān b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Aws, from his grandfather Aws b. ʿAbdullāh b. Ḥudhayfa, who said, “We came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the delegation of Thaqīf. The ahlāf were given accommodation with al-Mughira b. Shuʿba, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) put up those from Banū Mālik in a tent of his. Every night he would come to us after the evening meal to talk with us, standing putting his weight alternately on each leg to rest them from standing so long. Mostly, he related to us what he had suffered from Quraysh. He would say, ‘There was no equivalence. We were treated arrogantly and demeaned in Mecca. After we left for Medina, the tides of war sometimes favoured us, sometimes them.’

“One night, when it was after the time when he usually came to us, we commented, when he arrived, on the fact that he was late. He replied, ‘It was my turn to read one-sixtieth part of the Qurʾān, and I hated to come before I had completed it.’”

Aws went on, “I asked the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘How is it you divide up the Qurʾān into parts?’ They replied, ‘Into three, five, seven, nine, eleven, thirteen, and hizb al-muṣafāt alone.’”

This is the text of Abū Daʿūd.

14. This is apparently a reference to the latter part of the Qurʾān, which it is recommended should be recited in the daily prayers.
Ibn Isḥaq stated, “When they had concluded the matter, they returned to their own territory. The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Abū Sufyān b. ʿJarb and al-Mughīra b. Shuʿba with them to destroy the idol al-Lat.

“The two men continued on with the others until they arrived near al-Ṭāʾif. There al-Mughīra wished to send Abū Sufyān on ahead, but Abū Sufyān refused this. He responded, ‘You go on in to your people.’ And Abū Sufyān remained on a property he owned at Dhū al-Hadhām.15

“When al-Mughīra entered the town, he went up to the idol and struck it with a pickaxe. His people, Banū Muʿattib, stood in front of him fearing that arrows would be fired at him, or that he would be struck down, as happened to Urwa b. Masʿūd.

“The Thaqīf women came out with their heads bare, weeping for the idol and chanting,

‘We weep for a protector betrayed by those accursed
They have not done well in striking her.’

“While al-Mughīra struck her with the pickaxe, Abū Sufyān was saying, ‘Alas! Alas for you!’ When al-Mughīra had finished destroying her, he took all she had, including her jewels, and sent a message to Abū Sufyān. He also told him, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered us to settle with Urwa b. Masʿūd and his brother al-Aswād b. Masʿūd, father of Qārīb b. al-Aswād, for the debts owed them, using the money from the idol.’ And this they did.”

I note that al-Aswād had died a polytheist. However, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave the command for this in order to establish goodwill and to honour his son, Qārīb b. al-Aswād, may God be pleased with him.

Mūsā b. Uqba related that the Thaqīf delegation consisted of some ten men, and that when they arrived, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave them accommodation in the mosque so that they would hear the Qurʿān. They questioned him about the taking of interest, fornication and wine, and he forbade them all of these.

They asked him about the goddess and what he would do with her. He replied, “Destroy her!”

They responded, “How terrible! If the goddess knew that you intend to destroy her, she would execute her people!”

ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb commented, “Really! Ibn ʿAbd Yalīl, how ignorant you are! The goddess is nothing but stone.” They replied, “We did not come here to see you, Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb!”

They then said, “Messenger of God, you undertake destroying her. We’ll never do it.” He replied, “I’ll send someone to take care of her destruction for you.”

They gave him a document specifying this and asked him to permit them to arrive back home before his messengers arrived. When they reached their own people, they met with them and were asked what had happened.

15. A spring beyond Wādī al-Qura.
They expressed sadness, saying that they had just come from an uncouth and peculiar man who had appeared bearing a sword, and made whatever judgements he wished. Having dominated the Arabs, he had forbidden usury, fornication and wine. He had ordered the destruction of the goddess. Thaqif expressed their aversion, saying, “We'll never obey this!”

He then told them, “Then prepare for battle; prepare your weapons.” They did this for two or three days, and then God cast terror into their hearts. Once more they sent representatives, instructing them, “Go back to him and agree to his conditions; make peace with him.” The delegation members replied, “We have already done this! We find him to be the most God-fearing of men, very trustworthy, merciful and truthful. We were blessed in having gone to him and in having reached a settlement with him!” They then informed them of what had been agreed, and they accepted what God had favoured them with. They asked, “Why did you conceal this from us at first?” The delegation responded, “We wanted for God to remove Satan’s arrogance from your hearts!” They accepted Islam right then and there.

They remained thus for several days, and then the messengers of the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived. He had placed them under the command of Khalid b. al-Walid. Al-Mughira b. Shu‘ba was among them. They went to al-Lat; all Thaqif, their men, women and children, stood there watching, even the old men having emerged from their pavilions. Most of Thaqif did not believe that she was to be destroyed, thinking her invincible.

Al-Mughira b. Shu‘ba took up the al-karzin – meaning the mi‘wal, “the pickaxe”, and said to his companions, “I'm really going to make you laugh at al-Thaqif!” So he struck out with the pickaxe, then fell, his legs giving way. The people of al-Taqif were shaken by this, all crying out in one voice. They were delighted and said, “May God remove al-Mughira! The goddess has killed him! They then told the others, “Those of you who wish may go close up.”

Al-Mughira then arose, saying, “It's nothing but a pile of stone and clay! Accept God's munificence and worship Him!” He struck the door and broke it, then scaled its walls, as did other men with him, and they kept on destroying it stone by stone until they had levelled it to the ground.

Its guardian then began shouting, “Its foundations will still be angry! They will swallow them up!” When al-Mughira heard this, he said to Khalid, “Let me dig up its foundation!” So they dug it all up, collecting all its water and structures.

At this Thaqif were truly amazed.

Then they all returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he divided up the wealth from it, that very day. They gave praise to God Almighty for inspiring pride in His religion and for aid given to His Messenger.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The document written for Thaqif by the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'In the name of God the most Compassionate, the most Merciful, from Muhammad, the Prophet, the Messenger of God, to the believers. The acacia trees of Wajjî and the game there are not to be harmed. Whoever is found doing this shall be whipped and his clothing shall be stripped from him. If he should do this a second time, he will be taken to the Prophet Muḥammad. This is the command of the Prophet, Muḥammad. Khalīl b. Sa’īd has written (this) by order of the Messenger, Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allah. Let no one transgress this; by so doing, he will harm himself in such as Muḥammad, the Messenger of God, has ordered.”

Imām Aḥmad stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith al-Makhzūmī, of Mecca, related to me, quoting Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ismā’īl — whom he praised highly — from his father, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, who said, ‘We advanced with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), from Mt. Liyya until we reached Mt. al-Sidrā. There he made a halt by the side of the peak, facing towards it. He directed his gaze towards a mabbas — a valley, that is. He stayed there until everyone arrived and then he said, “Hunting in Wajj or (cutting down) its trees is forbidden, made so by God.” This was prior to his arrival at al-Ta’if and his siege of Thaqif.”

Abū Da’ūd related this from a ḥadīth of Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ismā’īl al-Ta’ifi. Ibn Hibban includes him among the reliable sources to whom he refers. Ibn Ma’in stated that there was nothing wrong with him (as a source). Some authorities, however, express their doubts about him.

Aḥmad, al-Bukhārī and other scholars classify this ḥadīth as ṣaḥīḥ, “authentic”, and stated that it was necessary to comply with it. But God knows best.

An Account of the Death of ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy, may God find him repulsive!

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from ‘Urwa, from Usama b. Zayd, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went in to visit ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy as he lay sick during the illness from which he died. When he saw him to be close to death, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to him, “Well, by God, I used to warn you against loving the Jews!” ‘Abd Allāh replied, “And yet did Ās’ād b. Zurārā not express his hatred of them?”’

Al-Waqīḍī stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy fell ill some days before the end of Shawwāl. He died in Dhū al-Qa’da. His illness lasted for 20 days. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would constantly visit him during it.

“The day of his death, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who was being very generous to him with his time, came in to see ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy and commented, ‘I advised you against loving the Jews.’ He replied, ‘As‘ad b. Zurāra treated them as enemies; what good did it do him?’

“He then went on, ‘Messenger of God, this is no time for complaint; this is my death. Be present when my body is washed and give me your shirt damp from your own skin to wrap me in. And pray and seek forgiveness for me.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did all this for him.”

Ishaq b. Rahayyah stated, “I asked Abu Usāma, ‘What was it that Ubayd Allāh related to you from Nafi’, from Ibn ‘Umar?’ He replied, ‘When Ḥāfīz b. Ubayy b. Sulaymān died, his son Ḥāfīz related to me the account of his death; and asked him to give him his shirt to wrap his body in. He gave it to him. He then asked him to pray for him.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arose to pray over him, but Ḥāfīz b. Ubayy al-Khattāb took hold of his gown, saying, ‘Messenger of God, are you going to pray for him even though God prohibited you from keeping company with him?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, ‘My Lord gave me a choice: “Seek forgiveness for them or do not seek forgiveness for them. Even if you do seek forgiveness for them 70 times, God will still not forgive them.” I will do so more than 70 times.’

“He (Ḥāfīz) objected, ‘But he was a hypocrite! Will you really pray for him?’ Then God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed, ‘And never offer prayer for anyone of them who dies, and do not stand by their graves. They disbelieved in God and His Messenger’ (ṣūrat al-Tawbah; IX, v.84). Abu Usāma confirmed this, saying, ‘Yes.’”

They included this in both sahih collections, from a hadith of Abu Usāma.

In one account, given by al-Bukhārī and others, ‘Umar said, ‘So I asked, “Messengers of God, would you pray for him, though once he said this-and-that? And then on another occasion he said so-and-so-forth?”’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, ‘Leave me alone, ‘Umar. I have two choices. If I knew that forgiveness would be granted for him if I spoke more than 70 prayers, I would do so.’ He then did pray for him. And so God the Almighty and Glorious revealed, ‘And never offer prayer . . .’”

‘Umar went on, “I was myself surprised at my courage with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); God and His Messenger know best!”

Sufyān b. ‘Uyayna stated, from ‘Amr b. Dinar, who heard Jabir b. ‘Abd Allāh say, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to the grave of ‘Abd Allāh b. Ubayy after he had been placed in it. He ordered that he be brought out and placed upon his knees or his thighs – and he then discharged some of his spittle upon him and dressed him in his own shirt. But God knows best.”

In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, this is given with the same chain of authorities. According to him, he only dressed him in his shirt in exchange for 'Abd Allah b. Ubayy having given al-'Abbas his shirt when he had come to Medina; the only shirt appropriate for him they could find was that of 'Abd Allah b. Ubayy.

Al-Bayhaqi related at this point the story of Thaqaba b. I:latib, and how he had been led into temptation by the excess of his wealth, and how he had refrained from giving alms. We have dealt with that in our Exegesis with regard to the words of the Almighty, “And there are those of them who made a pledge to God; ‘If he gives us of His favour ... ’” (sūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.75).

DIVISION

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The expedition to Tabuk was the last on which the Messenger of God (SAAS) went out.”

“Hassān b. Thabit, may God be pleased with him, spoke the following verses enumerating the battles and expeditions in which the anṣār participated with the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Ibn Hishām attributed these verses to Hassān’s son ‘Abd al-Raḥmān:

> “Am I not the best of Ma‘ād in family and clan, if all were collected and brought together?
> These are men who all fought at Badr along with the Messenger and they did not disappoint or desert.
> They pledged allegiance to him and none of them reneged, and there was no falseness in their faith.
> That morning at the defile at Uhud hard blows fell on them like the burning heat of a fire.
> And that day at Dhū Qarah, when fighting arose while on their mounts, and they did not betray or abstain.
> And at Dhū al-‘Rusayra they charged ahead on their horses with the Messenger, armed with swords and lances.
> And at Waddan they drove its people out, their horses charging ahead until rugged ground and mountain intervened.
> And there was that night when they pursued their enemy for God; and God will reward them for their action!
> And that night at Hunayn they fought hard with him; that night he gave them new energy for fighting when they became tired.
> And the attack to Najd, where, with the Messenger, they gained booty and spoils.
> And at the expedition to al-Quds we scattered the enemy like camel herds to a water-hole.
> And that day when allegiance was pledged, it was they who agreed to go to war; they aided him, and did not retreat.
> And there was the Conquest wherein they were enrolled in his personal guard, and they were not reckless or hasty.
And at Khaybar they were in his squadron, all marching ahead, death-defying heroes,
Their bare swords brandished in their right hands, brought down to strike, then raised again.
And that day the Messenger of God went forth to Tabuk, willling to suffer for reward, they were his prime standard-bearers.
And leaders into battle when warfare faced them, either advancing or withdrawing, as they thought best.
Those are they - the Prophet’s anşar; these are my people, those to whom I refer in tracing my descent.
They die with nobility, and do not break their oaths;
if they are killed, it is in God’s cause.”

THE DISPATCH BY THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) OF ABU BAKR, ‘THE TRUSTING’, IN COMMAND OF THE PILGRIMAGE IN THE YEAR

Following his account of the arrival of the delegation from al-Ta'if in Ramadan, as detailed above, Ibn Ishaq proceeded to state that the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained there for the remainder of Ramadan, Shawwal and Dhul-Qa‘da. He then dispatched Abu Bakr in command of the pilgrimage the Muslims could undertake that year, 9 AH, while the polytheists were at the stations for their own pilgrimage. The Muslims were no longer to be prevented access to the ka'ba; some of them (the Arab tribes) had agreements with him (the Prophet (SAAS)), for specific and temporary periods of time.

When Abu Bakr, may God be pleased with him, and the Muslims with him deptarted, and he departed from home, God, the Almighty and Glorious, revealed the following verses at the beginning of surat al-Barija (al-Tawba; IX): “(This is a declaration) of immunity by God and His Messenger to those polytheists with whom you made an agreement: move out into the countryside for four months . . .” to the words “. . . and a declaration from God and His Messenger to the people at the time of the Greater Pilgrimage, that God and His Messenger are free of obligation to the polytheists” (surat al-Tawba; IX, v.1–3).

Ibn Ishaq went on to discuss these verses. We have expounded upon them at length in our Exegesis; and to God belong all praise and credit.

What is referred to here is the dispatch of 'Ali following that of Abu Bakr so that the former could himself make this declaration of immunity to the polytheists on behalf of the Messenger of God (SAAS); he did this in his capacity as his cousin and relative on his father’s side.

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Hakim b. Hakim b. Abbad b. Hunayf related to me, from Abu Ja'far Muhammad b. 'Ali, who said, ‘When the surat al-Barâ’a (al-Tawba; IX) was revealed to the Messenger of God (SAAS), after he had dispatched Abu Bakr to oversee the pilgrimage of the Muslims, he was asked, “Should you not send news of the (revelation) to Abu Bakr?” He replied, “Only a man from my own family could transmit this for me.”

“He then summoned ‘Ali b. Abu Talib and told him, “Take this part from the beginning of surat al-Bara’iḥa, and announce it to the people when they gather on the day at Mina to make sacrifice there. Tell them (also) that no unbeliever will enter paradise, and that after this year no polytheist shall make the pilgrimage. Nor shall anyone circumambulate the ka’ba naked. Those with agreements made (individually) with the Messenger of God, can consider them valid until their term expires.”

“‘Ali b. Abu Talib therefore left on al-‘Adba’, the camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and travelled to Abu Bakr, “the trusting”. When Abu Bakr saw him, he asked, “(Do you come) as a commander, or as one to be commanded?” ‘Ali replied, “The latter”.

“They proceeded on together and Abu Bakr maintained charge of the pilgrimage. That year the Arabs were keeping to their stations for the pilgrimage as they had previously done before the coming of Islam.

“When it was the day to make the sacrifices, ‘Ali b. Abu Talib arose and made the proclamation as ordered by the Messenger of God (SAAS). He gave them a period of four months from the day of that declaration for them all to return to some place of safety, or to their own lands. Thereafter there was to be no pact or protection for any polytheists, except for any individual who had a personal agreement with the Messenger of God (SAAS); that would remain in force until its expiration.

“After that year, no polytheist made the pilgrimage and no one circumambulated the ka’ba naked. Thereafter the two men returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

This account is mursal, with the line of authorities as given.

Al-Bukhārī stated as follows in his section entitled: Chapter on the pilgrimage made by Abu Bakr, may God be pleased with him, with the men in the year 9 AH: “Sulaymān b. Da’ūd Abu al-Rabi’ related to me, quoting Fulayḥ, from al-Zuhri, from Ḥumayd b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Abu Hurayra, who said, ‘Abu Bakr, “the trusting”, was sent out by the Messenger of God (SAAS), in command of the pilgrimage that preceded the hijmat al-wadā’, “the farewell pilgrimage”. With him went a group who were to announce to everyone, “No polytheist shall make the pilgrimage after this year. And no one shall circumambulate the ka’ba naked.””

In another section, al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf, quoting al-Layth, quoting ʿAqil, from Ibn Shihāb, who said, “Ḥumayd b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān informed me that Abu Hurayra stated, ‘On that pilgrimage, Abu Bakr, “the trusting”, sent me out along with those criers he dispatched on the day of the making of the sacrifice, to announce at Minā, “After this year no polytheist shall make the pilgrimage. And no one shall circumambulate the ka’ba naked.”” “Ḥumayd stated, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sent ʿAli forth to make the declaration concerning the al-barāʾa, “the immunity”.’

ʿAbū Hurayra stated, ‘He sent out ʿAli along with us to make the announcement to those at Mina on the day of the sacrifice, concerning the declaration about the immunity, (and) that, “After this year no polytheists shall make the pilgrimage”, and “no person shall circumambulate the kaʿba naked”.’”

In his Kitāb al-Jīhād (Book of fighting in God’s Cause) he stated that Abū al-Yaman related to him, quoting Shuṣayb, from al-Zuhri, who said that he was told by Ḥumayd b. Abū al-Rahmān that Abū Hurayra said, “Abū Bakr, ‘the trusting’, sent me out among those to make an announcement on the day of the sacrifice at Mina, that after that year no polytheist would make the pilgrimage, and that no one should circumambulate the kaʿba naked.”

“The term yawm al-hajj al-akbar, ‘day of the greater pilgrimage’, refers to the day when sacrifice is made. It is called the al-akbar, ‘the greater’, because of people referring to the ‘umra as the al-hajj al-asghar, ‘the lesser pilgrimage’.

“Abū Bakr thus gave warning to everyone that year; in the (following) year of the hijjat al-wadaʾ, ‘the farewell pilgrimage’, performed by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), no polytheist took part.”

Muslim related this in similar form through al-Zuhri.

Imām ʿAḥmad stated that Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to him, quoting Shuṣba, from Mughīrā, from al-Shābī, from Muḥriz b. Abū Hurayra, who quoted his father as saying, “I was with ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had dispatched him. ʿAli asked, ‘What was the announcement you were making?’

“He replied, ‘We would announce that no one but a believer would enter paradise, that no one naked should circumambulate the kaʿba, and that those having an agreement with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would have their pact valid for a term – or a period – of four months. After those four months were over, then God and His Messenger would have immunity from it. Also, that no polytheist would make the pilgrimage after this year.’ He added, ‘I kept making this announcement until my voice became hoarse.’”

This chain of transmission is excellent. However, there is some objection with regard to the narrator’s statement “... those having an agreement with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would have their pact valid for a term of four months”.

There are those who do not maintain this. However, what is correct is that those with a pact would have it last for its specified duration, even if for more than four months. Those with pacts devoid of a specified duration would have their pacts expire after four months.

There remains a third category – those with pacts terminating in less than four months, before the date being specified. Presumably these would be included with the first category – that their duration would be for the term (originally) specified, even if less than four months. It could also be maintained that these should be extended to the four months, that being more appropriate than for those whose initial pacts had no specific terms. But God Almighty knows best.

Imam Aḥmad stated that ‘Aflān related to him, quoting Ḥammād, from Ṣimāk, from Anas b. Mālik, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) dispatched his declaration of immunity with Abū Bakr, but that when the latter reached Dhū al-Ḥulayfa, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “Only a man from my immediate family household should announce this.”

And so he dispatched ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭālib to make it.

Al-Tirmidhī related this from a ḥadīth of Ḥammād b. Salama and categorized it as ḥasan, “good”; and ghārib, “unique”, from the ḥadīth of Anas.

‘Abd Allah b. Aḥmad related, from Luwayn, from Muḥammad b. Ḥabīb, from Simāk, from Ḥanāsh, from ʿAlī, to the effect that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked ʿAlī to follow after Abū Bakr, the latter received the letter from him at al-Juḥfa. Abū Bakr then went back and asked, “Messenger of God, was anything revealed concerning myself?” He replied, “No; but Gabriel did come to me and told me, ‘No man but you yourself or one from your family should make this declaration.’”

This ḥadīth has a weak line of transmission and its content is somewhat objectionable. But God knows best.

Imam Aḥmad stated that Sufyān related to him, from Abū Ishāq, from Zayd b. Athīr – a man of Ḥamdān – who said, “We asked ‘Alī what his mission had been when he was dispatched with Abū Bakr on the pilgrimage. He replied, ‘With four messages: that only a believing soul could enter paradise; that no one should circumambulate the qaʿba naked; that any pact a person had with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would remain valid until its term; and that polytheists would not be able to participate with Muslims in the pilgrimage after that year.’”

Al-Tirmidhī related it thus from a ḥadīth of Sufyān – he being Ibn ʿUyayna – from Abū Ishāq al-Sabīʿ, from Zayd b. Athīr, from ʿAlī. Al-Tirmidhī classified it as ḥasan al-sahīḥ, “good and authentic”.

He went on to state that Shuʿbā related it from Abū Ishāq, who quoted it from Zayd b. Athīl. Al-Thawrī related it from Abū Ishāq, one of his companions, from ʿAlī.

I note that Ibn Jarir related it from a ḥadīth of Maʿṣmar, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Ḥarīth, from ʿAlī.

then sent me as well bearing 40 verses of surat al-Bara'a. When he was at Mt. 'Arafat, he made a public address on the day of the assembly there. When he had completed his address, he turned to me and said, ‘Now you rise, 'Ali, and deliver the message of the Messenger of God (SAAS).’

‘‘I got up and recited to them the 4 verses from surat al-Bara'a. We then proceeded on up to Minā, where I cast stones and slaughtered a sacrificial camel. I then shaved my head. Having learned that not all those present had attended the address given on Mt. 'Arafat by Abu Bakr, may God be pleased with him, I went all around to the camps reciting the verses to them.’’

‘‘Ali went on, “From that, I believe you imagined it to have been the day when sacrifice is made, when in fact it was the day of Mt. 'Arafat.’’"

We have discussed this in detail in the Tafsir (Exegesis), reporting the lines of authority for the hadith and the various evidences relating to this at sufficient length. And to God be all praise and credit.

Al-Waqidi stated, “Three hundred of the men departed with Abu Bakr on this pilgrimage, including 'Abd al-Rahman b. 'Awf. Abu Bakr took with him five camels for sacrifice. Along with him the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent twenty animals for sacrifice, then sent 'Ali out to follow him; he caught him up at al-'Arj. He made the announcement concerning bara'a, ‘immunity’, in the presence of those on the pilgrimage.”

EVENTS THAT OCCURRED IN THAT YEAR, 9 AH DURING RAJAB OF WHICH THE EXPEDITION TO TABUK TOOK PLACE.

Al-Waqidi stated that in Rajab of that year the Negus, the leader of Abyssinia, died and the Messenger of God (SAAS) made a public address in remembrance of him.

In Sha'ban that year Umm Kulthum, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS) died. Her body was washed by Asma', daughter of 'Umayr and by Safiyya, daughter of 'Abd al-Muttalib. It is also said that she was washed by Anbar wives, including Umm 'Atiyya.

I note that this is established in both sahih collections as well as in other hadith accounts, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed over her and was about to bury her, he said, “Let no one enter her grave who has tonight experienced desire for his family.” Her husband, 'Uthman, therefore abstained (from entering the grave) and she was buried by Abu Talha al-Ansari. May God be pleased with her.

It is likely that by making that comment he was referring to those companions, such as Abu Talha and others, who normally volunteered with burial duties. What he meant, then, was “Let no one from among these persons enter her grave except for whoever has not experienced desire for his family”. It is unlikely that 'Uthman had any other wife than Umm Kulthum, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS). That is unlikely. Though God knows best.
That year there was the peace made with the Governor of Ayla, the people of Jarbi and Adhrui, and the ruler of Dumat al-Jandal, as has been explained above, each in their appropriate places.

That year the Dirar mosque had been built by a group of hypocrites; it had the form of a mosque, but secretly was a house for war. The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave orders and it was burned down. In Ramaqan that year, a delegation came from Thaqif and made peace on behalf of their people, then returned with a security agreement. Also, al-Lat was destroyed, as has been related above.

At the end of that year ‘Abd Allah b. Ubayy b. Saalul, the chief hypocrite, may God curse him, died. A month prior to that occurred the death of Muawiya b. Muawiya al-Laythi – or al-Muzani. It was he for whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke prayers while he was at Tabuk, if the report about that is true.

That year ‘Abd Bakr, may God be pleased with him, made a pilgrimage with some of the people with the permission of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

That year also there came delegations from various Arab tribes. The year 9 AH is therefore known as “the Year of the Delegations”. We will therefore now present a section under that heading in emulation of al-Bukhari and others.

THE BOOK OF DELEGATIONS THAT CAME TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS)

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had conquered Mecca and completed the expedition to Tabuk, Thaqif accepted Islam and pledged allegiance, and delegations of Arabs came to him from all directions.”

Ibn Hisham stated, “Abu ‘Ubayda related to me that that occurred in the year 9 AH, which was known as the sanat al-wufud, ‘the year of the delegations’.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “The Arabs had only been holding back their acceptance of Islam to observe what became of this tribe of Quraysh. Because it was Quraysh whom the others considered as their leaders and guides; they had charge of the ka’ba and the sacred area, and the pure line of descent from Isma’il, son of Abraham. And the leading Arabs did not dispute that.

“It was Quraysh who had set up the warfare and conflict with the Messenger of God (SAAS). When Mecca was conquered, Quraysh accepted his leadership. Islam having conquered them, the Arabs realized that they did not have the power either to go to war against the Messenger of God (SAAS) or to be antagonistic towards him. And so they entered into God’s faith, as God the Almighty and Glorious stated, afwajan, ‘in droves’, coming to him from every side.

“God Almighty stated to His Prophet (SAAS), ‘(Remember) when God’s aid came and the conquest. And you saw people entering in droves into God’s religion. And so celebrate in praise of your Lord and seek His forgiveness; He is very ready to forgive’” (sūrat al-Naṣr; CX, v.1–3). That is, give praise to God for having given victory to your religion; and seek His forgiveness, for He is very ready to forgive.

We have narrated above the hadith of ‘Amr b. Salama” which states, “These Arabs were delaying their acceptance of Islam until the conquest. They would say, ‘Leave him for his own people to take care of him: if he does overcome them, then he will be a prophet speaking the truth. When the combat at the conquest occurred, each tribe hurried to accept Islam. My father accepted Islam before my tribe did. When he arrived back, he said, ‘I swear by God, that I have come to you from the Prophet, in truth! He (the Prophet (SAAS) said, ‘Perform such-and-such a prayer at such-and-such a time. And when the time for prayer comes, then one of you should call the adhan “the summons to prayer”. And then whichever one of you knows the Qur’an best should lead the prayer.’”

The hadith continues thereafter to its conclusion; it is included in the Sahih of al-Bukhari.

I note that Ibn Istāq, followed by al-Waqidi, al-Bukhari and then by al-Bayhaqi, makes reference to various delegations that came prior to those of 9 AH, and even prior to the conquest of Mecca.

God Almighty stated, “Not equal among you are those who spent before the conquest and did battle (and those who did not); they are higher in rank than those who spent and did battle only later. And to all God promises good” (sūrat al-lkhālid; LVII, v.10). Previous mention has been made above of the words of God Almighty on the day of the conquest, “There is no hijra, ‘hegira’, migration, (henceforth); but there is jihad and niyya, ‘striving in God’s service’ and ‘intent’.”

Distinction must be made between those in these two delegations who came at the time of the conquest and whose participation must be considered a Hijra, and those who joined them after the conquest. While these latter were promised good by God, this would not be like the former in time and an earlier (expression of) virtue; but God knows best.

While those imāms who concerned themselves with relating the arrival of the delegations have omitted referral to certain matters, we will give not only information they provided, but will also make special references where necessary to issues they omitted, if God so wills it. And in Him is all confidence and reliance.

Muḥammad b. Umar al-Waqidi stated, “Kathīr b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Muẓār related to us, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, ‘The first delegation to come in to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from Muṣar were 400 men of Muzayna; this occurred in Rajab of 5 AH.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) declared the hijra as valid for them (while staying) in their own homes. He stated, ‘You are muḥājirūn where you were; and so return to your properties.’ And they went back home.’”

18. See Vol. III.
19. See Vol. III.
Al-Waqidi then recounted from Hisham b. al-Kalbi, with his chain of transmission, that the first person to arrive from Muzaynā was Khuza‘l b. ‘Abd Nahm, accompanied by others of his tribe of Muzaynā. He pledged to him the allegiance of his tribe, but when he returned to them he did not find them to be as he had thought; they put it off.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered I;lasb b. Thabit to make negative allusions to Khuza‘ā without actually satirizing him. He did speak some such verses and when they reached Khuza‘ā he complained of this to his people and they rallied around him and did accept Islam along with him. He then brought them to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

On the day of the conquest (of Mecca) the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave the banner of Muzaynā – a force of 1,000 men at that time – to this Khuza‘ā. He (al-Waqidi) also stated that Khuza‘ā was the brother of ‘Abd Allāh Dhū al-Bi‘jādayn.

Al-Bukhārī, may God forgive him, stated, in a section of his work entitled: Chapter on the Delegation of Banū Tamīm “Abū Nu‘aym related to us, quoting Sufyān, from Abū Ṣakhrā, from Ṣafwān b. Muḥrīz al-Māzīnī, from İmān b. Ḥuṣayn, who said, ‘A group of men came in from Banū Tamīm to the Prophet (SAAS), and he told them, “Accept the good tidings, Banū Tamīm!”’ They replied, “Messenger of God, you have already given it to us, so give us (something else now).” Displeasure was to be seen in his face. A group from Yemen then arrived, and he told them, “Accept the good tidings, for Banū Tamīm did not do so.” They replied, “We do accept them, Messenger of God.”’

Al-Bukhārī also related this from a different chain of authorities, from Ibn Abū Mulayka, and with different phraseology. We have made reference to this in our Taṣfīr (Exegesis) regarding the words of the Almighty, “Do not raise your voices above that of the Prophet (SAAS)” (surat al-Hujurāt; XLVIII, v.2).

"With them was 'Uyayna b. Ḥuṣn b. Ḥudhayfa b. Badr al-Fazārī. Al-Aqra' b. Ḥābis and 'Uyayna had been present with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the conquest of Mecca, and at the battles of Hunayn and al-Ṭā'īf. When the delegation of Bani Tamim arrived, these two men were with them.

"When all these men entered the mosque, they called out to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), from behind his apartments, saying, 'Come on out to us, Muḥammad!' This shouting of theirs disturbed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he came to them. They then said, 'Muḥammad, we have come to express our admiration for you; give permission to both our poet and our orator.' He replied, 'I give permission to your orator; he may speak.'

"'Utārid b. Ḥajib then arose and said, 'Praise be to God who provides us His grace and favour, for He is worthy of such praise. It is He who made us kings and awarded us great wealth which we donate to charity. It is He who made us the most powerful men of all the East, the greatest in number and equipment."

"'Who is our equal? Are we not at the leaders of the people, their very best? Any who would challenge us should enumerate their qualities, as we have done. We could, if we wished, speak at greater length, but we are reluctant to speak over much of what He has given us. We are well known for this (reluctance). I say this so that you may speak of similar or even better.' He then sat down.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said to Thabit b. Qays b. Shammas, brother of Bani al-Ḥarith b. al-Khazraj, 'Arise and respond to this man's address.'

"Thabit got up and said, 'Praise be to God, Creator of both the heavens and the earth. In these He expressed His will; His throne encompasses all He knows. Nothing ever existed except by His favour.

"'It was, moreover, by His power that He made kings of us and chose as His Messenger the best of His creation, its most noble in lineage, its most truthful in speech and most respected man. It was to him that He revealed a book, entrusting it to him above all others of His creation. He is the best of God's creation in the worlds.

"'He then called upon the people to believe in him. And the muḥājiṣrūn from his tribe did so, along with his relatives, those most noble in line, those best of all in person and deed. It was we who were foremost in responding to God when the Messenger made his call. We are the ansār "the Helpers", of God and deputies of His Messenger. We will fight people until they believe. Whoever believes in God and His Messenger is also protecting his own possessions and life. Whoever disbelieves, we will battle for God for ever. And executing them will be a minor matter for us. In speaking this, I ask forgiveness for myself and for you all and for all believers. Peace be upon you.'

"Al-Zibriqān b. Badr arose and spoke the following verses:

'It is we who are the nobles; no clan can match us.
Kings come from us and among us places of worship are built.
IMÂM ABU AL-FIDÂ‘ ISMÂ‘IL IBN KATHîR

Many are the clans we have defeated, extracting plunder from all; and the benefits of might are to be pursued.

Even in famines we entertain, our food fine meat stew, even when no trace of a rain-cloud is visible.

And so you see chieftains arrive from all around, hurrying for us to serve them a banquet.

We slaughter large, fat, young camels for our guests; when they are accommodated, they are well satisfied.

You know that every tribe we challenge submits and becomes as though leaderless.

And whoever may challenge us, we know what will happen; his people will retreat and that news will spread abroad.

We may decline, but no one declines us; and so it is that we rise in pride."""

Ibn Ishâq went on, "Since Hasân b. Thâbit was absent, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent for him. He (Hasân later) said, 'When I reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and their poet spoke as above, I challenged what he had said and spoke in the same manner as he had.'

"When al-Zibriqân had finished speaking, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told Hasân b. Thâbit, 'Get up and respond to the man.'

"Hasân then recited,

'The chieftains of Fihr and their brothers have clarified a way of life for the people that should be followed

Such as to please any man whose inner purpose is to fear God and who desires to do good,

A people who, when they fight, destroy their enemy, or, if seeking advantage to their allies, achieve this.

This is their natural disposition, no acquired trait; the worst of characteristics – you well know – are those innovated.

Even if, after they are gone, others surpass them, (it is true that) anyone who leads still follows those who preceded him.

Men cannot mend what their own hands have ruined in battle, nor could others ruin what they have mended.

When they seek to lead, their effort succeeds; if compared in generosity to other nobles, they tip the scales.

These are fine men, their purity mentioned in the revelation; no materialists, these, untainted by greed.

From their generosity to neighbours, they are no misers and they are untouched by any taint of ambition.

When we attack people, we do not crawl as does a wild calf to its mother;
We get right up when the talons of war attain us, though the riff-raff submit to its claws.

They are not boastful when they attain their enemy; and if overcome, they do not turn feeble or despair.

When engaged in battle, when death is close by, they are like lions of Halya, their claws bent and ready.

If they are angry, take whatever you can get submissively, and don’t worry after what they are refusing.

Do not seek their enmity, for in going to war with them you will have evil laced with poison.

Honour a people in whose party is the Messenger of God, at a time when ideas and sects are very diverse.

My heart awards them my praise, helped on in its favoured task by a creative and inventive tongue.

They are the best of all peoples, whether we talk of what is serious or what is light.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “A scholar of the poetry of Banū Tamīm told me that when al-Zibriqān came to the Messenger of God (ṣaas), with the delegation of Banū Tamīm, he arose and spoke the following verses:

‘We have come to you so that people may know our virtue when they mingle in attendance at the fairs,

And that we are the finest in any place, in all the land of Hijāz, none the like of Dārīm.

We put the medalled champions to flight when they boast, and strike the heads of warriors seeking fame.

To us goes the one-fourth share of every expedition we fight, whether in Najd or abroad.’

“Ḥassān then arose and responded to him as follows,

‘Is glory anything but repeated mastery and magnanimity, the glory of kings and the bearing of great responsibility?

We give aid and refuge to the Prophet, Muhammad, regardless of the resentment or pleasure of Ma‘ād.

In a unique tribe whose origins and wealth stem from a place in Jabīyyat al-Julān, amidst foreigners.

We gave aid when he came to live among us, using our swords against all the tyrants and aggressors.

We placed our sons and our daughters between us and him, and put him at ease regarding the spoils gained.

We strike at men with our fine, sharp swords until they follow into his faith.

20. A village near Damascus, Syria.
It was we who fathered the greatest man of Quraysh, we who fathered the Prophet of good from Hashim’s line.

Banu Darim, do not boast; your boasting seems shameful when noble deeds receive mention.

You are fools! Do you pride yourselves over us, when you are our vassals, somewhere between wet-nurses and slaves?

If you have come to us to save your blood and property, from being distributed as booty,

Then consider none a peer of God and accept Islam; and do not dress yourselves in such garb as foreigners wear.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When Hassān b. Thabit had finished speaking, al-Aqrab. Ŧahās said, ‘By my father, this man is certainly well provided for! His orator is more eloquent than ours, and his poet more gifted. Their voices rise higher than ours.’

“Finally they accepted Islam and the Messenger of God (SAAS) presented valuable gifts to them. They had left Āmr b. al-Ahtam behind with their mounts, he being their youngest. Qays b. Āṣīm, who disliked Āmr b. al-Ahtam, said, ‘Messenger of God, we do still have one man, a young fellow, out with our mounts.’ And he went on to belittle him. However, the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave to Āmr what he had given to the others.

“Āmr b. al-Ahtam recited the following satirical verses when he learned what Qays had said:

‘You hurt me, you lazy, hairy dog, by slandering me to the Messenger; you were not truthful or accurate. We ruled you in broad authority, but your leadership merely consists of sitting on your tail and displaying your molars!’”

“He thus indicated that he already knew of Qays.

“‘Āmr responded, ‘He is obeyed by those closest to him, a good orator and very defensive of those in his care.’

“Al-Zibriqān commented, ‘He has spoken very well, knowing me to be better than what he has said!’

“‘Āmr responded, ‘I swear by God, all I know of you is that you are of little manliness, narrow-minded, that your father was a fool and your uncle a rogue!’ He then went on, ‘Messenger of God, I spoke the truth in both my characterizations of him. When he treated me well, I said of him the best I could, and when he angered me, I said the worst I know!’
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘Oratory has its own magic!’" This hadith is mursal, "incomplete", from this line of transmission.

“Al-Zibriqān commented, ‘I swear by God, Messenger of God, he knows of me other than what he has just said. It is merely his envy that prevents him speaking it.’"

“ʿAmr b. Ahtam asked, ‘What? Me envy you! I swear by God, your uncle is a rogue, only recently wealthy, your child is a fool, and you’re a nobody in the tribe! I swear by God, Messenger of God, I spoke the truth in what I first said and I’ve not lied in what I just said. However, I am a man who will speak the best he can if pleased, but the worst he can when angered. But I still tell the truth, both the former and the latter.’"

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘Oratory has its own magic!’"" This line of authorities is very gharib. Al-Waqiḍi explains the reason for their coming. They had unsheathed their swords against Khuzā‘a, and so the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent ʿUyayna b. Badr to them along with 50 men who included no ansār and no muhājirīn. This force had taken prisoner 11 of their men, 11 of their women and 30 children. Because of this capture, their leaders had arrived. Some say that they were 90 men all told – or 80 – and that ʿUtarīd, al-Zibriqān, Qays b. ʿAṣim, Qays b. al-Ḥārith, Nuʿaym b. Sa‘d, al-Aqrābī, ʿHabīs, Rabbāb b. al-Ḥārith, and ʿAmr b. al-Ahtam were among them. They came into the mosque after Bilāl had announced the al-ṣuḥr prayer, and the people were awaiting the Messenger of God (SAAS) to come out to them. These men hurried over and called out to him from behind his apartments. And then the revelation came down concerning them.

Al-Waqiḍi went on to make reference to their orator and to their poet, and to the fact that the Messenger of God (SAAS) presented to each of their men a gift of 12 awiqiyya and 20 dirhams in weight.

21. That is, in a fully complete line of transmission.
This did not include 'Amr b. al-Ahīm, to whom he gave five ḥawāqīya because of his youth. But God knows best.

Ibn ʿIsāq stated, “It was about them that the words of the Almighty were in the Qurʾān: ‘(As for) those who call out to you from behind the apartments, most of these do not understand; if they were patient until you came out to them, it would be better for them. But God is Forgiving, most Merciful’” (ṣūrat al-Hujūrāt; XLVIII, v. 4, 5).

Ibn Jarrīr stated that Abū ʿAmmār al-Ḥusayn b. Ḥurayth al-Mawzūṭi related to him, quoting al-Ḥadīth Mūsa, from Abū ʿIsāq, from al-Ḥusayn b. Waqīqīd, from Abū ʿĪsāq, from al-Bārīʾ, who said, in reference to the verse, “(As for) those who call out...”, “A man came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Muḥammad, my praise is zayn, “beautiful”, and my blame is shayin, “ugly!”’. He responded, ‘That applies to God, the Almighty and Glorious.’”

The chain of authorities for this is musṭaṣṣīl, “complete and continuous”.

This ḥadīth is also related from al-Ḥasan al-Ḥaṣrī and Qatādah, mursalan, “incomplete in its line”, in both cases.

The name of this man has been omitted. ʿImām Aḥmad stated that Ṭāfān related to him, quoting Waḥīb, quoting Mūsā b. ʿUqba, from Abū ʿSaʿlāma, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān, from al-Aqrāʾ b. Ḥabīb, (who said) that he called out to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “O Muḥammad! O Muḥammad!” In one version his words are related to have been, “O Messenger of God!” But he gave no reply. Al-Aqrāʾ then called out, “O Messenger of God, my praise is beautiful, and my blame is ugly!” He then responded, “That applies to God, Almighty and Glorious is He.”

Chapter: On the excellence of Banū Tamīm.

Zuhayr b. Ḥarb related to us, quoting Jarrīr, from ʿUmārah b. al-ḤAQaṭī, from Abū Zurāʾ, from Abū Hurayrā, who said, “I have always loved Banū Tamīm since I heard three things that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said about them. These were, ‘They are the most severe of my people against al-Dajjal, “the imposter”, “Satan”. ‘Aʾisha had one of them as a slave-girl, and of her he said, ‘Free her, for she is of the progeny of Ismāʿīl.’ And when their charitable donations arrived, he said, ‘These donations are from a people – my people, that is.’”

Muslim also related this in similar form, from Zuhayr b. Ḥarb.

This ḥadīth offers a response to Qatādah regarding the poetry given by the author of the hamāsā22 and others, which is critical of them. A poem states, “Tamīm are better guided than a sand-grouse along the paths of what is blameworthy; if they were to seek to follow the paths of virtue, they would go astray.

If there were a flea upon the back of a tick, Tamīm would see it from a distance and turn aside!”

22. Presumably a reference to the poetry anthology Kitāb al-Hamāsā of Abī Tamām.
THE DELEGATION FROM BANÜ ʿABD AL-QAYS.

Al-Bukhārī then proceeded to a section he entitled, Chapter on the delegation of ʿAbd al-Qays. He stated, “Abū Ishāq related to us, quoting Abū Ṭāmir al-ʿAqīl, quoting Qurra, from Abū Jamra, who said, ‘I told Ibn ʿAbbās, “I have a jar that produces wine for me that I drink when it is sweet. If I drink much of it and then sit down among the people, I fear I may be discovered.” He responded, “A delegation of Banū ʿAbd Qiys came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he told them, ‘Welcome! You will suffer no disgrace or regret!’ They replied, ‘Messenger of God, in the territory between you and ourselves there are the polytheists of Banū Muḍar and so we can only reach you during the sacred months. Could you kindly tell us of the actions in which we can engage to ensure our entry into paradise? We will tell those of us back home the same.’”

“He replied, ‘I order you to accomplish four things and to avoid four things. Faith in God. Do you know what faith in God means? It means to speak the shahada, “to say La Ilaha illa Allah wa Mubammad rasūl Allāh, ‘there is no god but God and Muḥammad is the Messenger of God’“. Also, perform the prayers, pay the zakāt, “alms tax”, fast for the month of Ramadaʿ, and give over the khums, “one-fifth of the spoils”. And I forbid you four things: the wine that is made in al-Dubbaʿ, al-Naqir, al-Bantam and al-Muzaffat.”

Muslim related it thus from a ḥadīth of Qurra b. Khalid, from Abū Jamra. And there are other lines of transmission for it in both ʿaʾbīb collections, from Abū Jamra.

Abū Daʿūd al-Ṭayalisi quoted in his musnad collection from Shuʿba, who quoted Abū Jamra as having said: “I heard Ibn ʿAbbās say, ‘When the delegation from ʿAbd Qays came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), he asked, ‘From which tribe do they come?’ ‘From Rabīʿa’, he was told. He then said, ‘Welcome to the delegation! You will suffer no disgrace nor regret.’ They then told him, ‘Messenger of God, we are a clan of Banū Rabīʿa, and we have travelled very far to be with you. Between you and us there is that tribe of unbelievers, Banū Muḍar. We can only reach you during a sacred month. Give us instructions for our conduct that we can also pass on to those back home to ensure our entry into paradise.’”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘I order you to do four things and forbid you from doing four things. I order you to have faith in God alone. Do you know what faith in God means? It means to state the shahāda, to perform the prayers, to pay the zakāt tax, to fast the month of Ramadaʿ, and to give over one-fifth of the booty you acquire. I also forbid you four things: (wine) from al-Dubbaʿ, al-Hantam, al-Naqir and al-Muzaffat.”” (And he may also have said . . . “and from al-Muqayyar”). “Observe these commandments, and so order those back home.”

Both authors of the ʿaʾbīb collections also gave this from a ḥadīth of Shuʿba in a similar form.
Muslim gave it from a hadith of Sa'īd b. Abū Urūba, from Qatāda, from Abū Naḍra, from Abū Sa'īd, that account being similar to this text.

In his (Muslim's) account, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to Ashajj ʿAbd al-Qays, "You have two qualities that God, the Almighty and Glorious, much likes: discernment and perseverance." In one version, the words are "that God and His Messenger much like". Ashajj asked, "Messenger of God, was it I who developed these qualities, or God who brought me to them?" He replied, "It was God who brought you to them." Ashajj then said, "Then praise be to God who brought me to two qualities that God and His Messenger much like!"

Imām Ahmad stated that Abū Sa'īd, the freed-man of Banu Hashim related to him, quoting Māṭar b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, who said that he heard Hind, daughter of al-Wāzīr report that she heard al-Wāzīr say, "I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the company of al-Ashajj al-Mundhir b. ʿAmīr" – "or ʿAmīr b. al-Mundhir. With their party there was a man who was much afflicted.

"Having reached and seen the Messenger of God (SAAS), they jumped down from their mounts. Then they went up to him and kissed his hand. Al-Ashajj also dismounted, hobbled his camel, took out and opened his baggage pack and extracted from it two white garments which he put on. He then went over to the other camels, hobbled them too and proceeded on to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked him, 'Ashajj, you have two qualities both God the Almighty and Glorious and His Messenger very much like – discernment and perseverance.' Al-Ashajj responded, 'Messenger of God, is it I who developed these, or did God bring them to me?' He replied, 'No, it was God who brought them to you.' Al-Ashajj commented, 'Praise be to God who brought to me two qualities that God the Almighty and Glorious and His Messenger both much like!' Al-Wāzīr then said, 'Messenger of God, I have with me an uncle who is much afflicted. Please pray to God for him.' 'Where is he?' he asked. 'Bring him to me.' Al-Wāzīr went on, 'I then did as al-Ashajj had done: I dressed him in two white garments and took him over to him. He took hold of his outer garment and lifted up both sides so that we could see the white of his armpits. He then struck the man on his back, saying, 'Get out, you enemy of God!' The man then turned around and he was seeing just as does a healthy man.'"

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī narrated through Hūd b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Saʿīd, that the latter heard his grandfather Muzīda al-ʿAbdī say, "While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was engaged in speaking to his Companions, he told them, 'From over there riders are coming who are the best of the people of the East."

"ʿUmar arose and went out towards them and met 13 riders. When he asked who they were, they replied, 'We're from Banū ʿAbd al-Qays.' 'And what brings you to these parts; business?' 'No,' they replied. 'Well,' ʿUmar commented, 'The Prophet (SAAS) just made mention of you and spoke highly of you.'"
"They proceeded in with him to the Prophet (SAAS), and ‘Umar told them, ‘This is your master you seek.’ The riders threw themselves off their mounts and some walked while others jogged and ran towards him. When they reached him, they took his hand and kissed it. Al-Ashajj remained back until he had hobbled the camels and gathered some of the baggage of the group. He then walked over and took the hand of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and kissed it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, ‘You have two qualities that both God and His Messenger much like.’ He asked, ‘And is that a natural disposition created within me or something I myself have brought about? ‘It is a natural disposition,’ he replied. Al-Ashajj commented, ‘Then praise be to God who has created within me what both God and His Messenger much like!’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Al-Jārūd b. ‘Amr b. Hanash, a brother of Banū ‘Abd al-Qays arrived to visit the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Ibn Hishām stated, “He was Al-Jārūd b. Bishr b. al-Mu‘allā, accompanying a delegation of ‘Abd Qiys; he was a Christian.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Someone I trust related to me that al-Hasan said, ‘When we reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), the latter explained Islam to him, invited him to accept it, and made him very enthusiastic about it. Al-Jārūd told him, “Muhammad, I used to follow a faith, but now I am leaving it for yours. Do you guarantee to me your faith?” He replied, “I do indeed guarantee to you that God has led you now to something better than it.” And so al-Jārūd accepted Islam, as did his companions.

“He then asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) for transport, but he replied, “I swear, I’ve nothing on which to mount you.” Al-Jārūd then asked, “Messenger of God, between here and our home there are stray mounts that have wandered away from their owners. May we use them to reach home?” “No,” he replied, “beware of them. They would mean the fires of hell.”

“Al-Jārūd left to return to his own people; he was a good Muslim and firm in his faith until he died. He lived on into the ridda, the wars of apostacy. When some of his people reverted to their former religions along with al-Ghārūr b. al-Mundhir b. al-Nu‘mān b. al-Mundhir, al-Jārūd arose and gave testimony to the true faith and called for them to join Islam. He said, “O people, I bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muhammad is His servant and His Messenger. I consider unbelievers all who do not bear witness.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent al-‘Alā‘ b. al-Hadrami out before the conquest of Mecca to al-Mundhir b. Sāwi al-‘Abdī, and he became a good Muslim. Al-Mundhir died after the Messenger of God (SAAS), but before the apostacy of the people of al-Bahrayn; al-‘Alā‘ had remained with him as the Governor of al-Bahrayn on behalf of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

Consequently al-Bukhārī narrated from a hadith of Ibrahim b. Tāhmān, from Abū Jamra, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “The first jum‘a, Friday congregational, prayer to be performed after that held in the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS) was the one in the mosque at Jawāthī, in al-Bahrayn.”
IMĀM ABU AL-FIDA’ ISMĀ’IL IBN KATHĪR 65

Al-Bukhārī narrated from Umm Salama that the Messenger of God (SAAS) delayed performing the two rak‘āt prayers after the noon (prayer) because of the arrival of the delegation of ‘Abd Qays; he performed them later in her dwelling, following the al-ṣūr prayer.

I note, however, that there are suggestions in the text of Ibn ‘Abbas’s hadith that the arrival of the ‘Abd al-Qays delegation occurred before the conquest of Mecca. This relates to their having said, “Between you and us there is that tribe of unbelievers, Banū Muḍar. We can only reach you during a sacred month.” But God knows best.

The Story of Thumāma and the delegation from Banū Ḥanīfa, among whom was Musaylima, ‘The Imposter’, may God damn him!

Al-Bukhārī has a section under the heading, The delegation of Banū Ḥanīfa and the Story of Thumāma b. Uthāl. He stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Yusuf related to us, quoting al-Layth b. Sa‘d, quoting Sa‘d b. Abu Sa‘d, who heard Abu Hurayra say, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) dispatched some cavalry to Najd. They brought back a man of Banū Ḥanīfa named Thumāma b. Uthāl. They bound him to one of the pillars of the mosque. The Messenger of God (SAAS) went to him and asked, “Well, Thumāma, what do you have (in mind I should do with you)”? He replied, “Muḥammad, I have (a) good (idea). If you kill me, you’ll (only) kill a man who has killed others. But if you act kindly, you will be doing so to someone who will be grateful. If it’s money you want, just ask for it.”

“He left him there till the next day, when again he asked, “Well, Thumāma, what do you have (in mind)?” “I have what I told you; if you act kindly, you’ll do so to a man who will be grateful.” Again he left him, until the following day, when he again asked, “What do you have (in mind), Thumāma?” “Just as I told you before,” he replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said “Release Thumāma.”

“At that the man hurried over to a garden of date-palms near the mosque, washed himself and entered the mosque. He then announced, “I testify that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God! Muḥammad, I swear, formerly there was no one on earth I hated more than you. Now I love you best of all men. And, I swear, there was no faith more hateful to me than yours. Now your faith has become the one I love best. Moreover, there used to be no land more hated by me than your land; now your land has become the one I love best. Your cavalry captured me while I was on my way to make the al-ṣumra pilgrimage; what do you think (about it now)?”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) congratulated him and told him to proceed on the ‘umra. When Thumāma reached Mecca, someone asked him, “Have you adopted the Sabian faith, then?” He responded, “No, but I have accepted Islam with Muḥammad (ṢAAS). And I swear, you’ll not receive a single grain of wheat from Yamāma until he gives his permission for that!"

Al-Bukhārī also related this in another place, as did Muslim and Abū Dā'ūd al-Naṣā'ī, from Qutayba, from al-Layth.

Al-Bukhārī’s having given this story in his section on delegations is controversial. This is because Thumāmah did not come in by himself, but was brought in bonds and was tied up to one of the pillars of the mosque.

It is also questionable whether he should be referred to among the delegations occurring in 9 AH. This is because it is evident from the text of his story that it relates to prior to the conquest of Mecca. This is because the Meccans rebuke him over his acceptance of Islam and ask him whether he has adopted the Sabian faith. He went on to warn them that not a grain of wheat would reach them from al-Yamāma until the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave his permission. This shows that at that time Mecca was considered enemy territory, its population not yet having accepted Islam. But God knows best.

This is why the hāfīz al-Bayhaqī narrates the story of Thumāmah b. Uthāl before the conquest of Mecca; this is most likely to have been the case. However, we have given it here in deference to al-Bukhārī, may God have mercy upon him.

Al-Bukhārī stated that it was related to him by Abū al-Yāmān, quoting Shu‘ayb, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Ḥusayn, quoting Nāfi’ b. Ḥubayr, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘During the lifetime of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Musaylima, the imposter, arrived and began saying, ‘If Muḥammad appoints me to rule after him, I will follow him.’ He had arrived in the company of a great number of his people.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), holding a stick of date-palm wood in his hand, went out to him, accompanied by Thabit b. Qays. Coming to a stop near Musaylima and his men, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘If you had asked me for it, I’d not even give you this stick! You will not avoid God’s order concerning you. If you do not turn away, God will destroy you. I believe you to be the person I saw in a dream. This man is Thabit, and he will answer your questions about me.’ The Prophet (ṢAAS) then left him.

“Ibn ‘Abbās stated, ‘I asked about the statement of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “I believe you to be the person I saw in a dream.” Abū Hurayra told me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “While I slept, I saw on my hand two gold bracelets. This disturbed me. Then I received revelation, in my sleep, that I should blow upon them. I did so, and they disappeared. I interpreted them to be representing two imposters who would emerge after me, one of them being al-Aswad al-Anṣārī, the other Musaylima.”’”

23. Ayyala b. Ka'b, of the Madhhij tribe of Ans, known as "al-Aswad", led a successful revolt in Yemen both against the authority of the Persians and that of the Prophet (ṢAAS). His assassination at the hand of former allies came shortly before the death of the latter. See the Encyclopedia of Islam, under the heading “al-Aswad".
Al-Bukhari went on to state that Isâq b. Naṣr related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Razzaq, who said, “Maʿmar informed me that Hammām b. Munabbih told him that he heard Abū Hurayra say that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘While I slept, I was brought treasures from the earth and two gold bracelets were placed on my palm. They disturbed me, and revelation came to me that I should blow upon them. I did so, and they disappeared. I interpreted them as the two imposters between whom I am – the ruler of Sanʿāʾ and the ruler of al-Yamāmah.’”

Al-Bukhari continued to state that it was related to him by Saʿd b. Muḥammad al-Jarrah, quoting Yaʿqūb b. Ibrāhim, quoting his father, from ʿAlī, from Ibn ʿUbaydā b. Nashīṭ – his name is given elsewhere as ʿAbd Allāh – who said that ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭūbā said, “We learned that Musaylima, ‘the imposter’, had arrived in Medina and was staying in the home of the daughter of al-Ḥārith. His wife was the daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Kurayz, and she was the mother of ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmīr b. Kurayz. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went to him, accompanied by Ṭhābit b. Qays b. Shammās; it was he who was known as the orator of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). The latter had a stick in his hand. He stood before Musaylima and spoke to him and Musaylima told him, ‘If you wish, we will leave the way clear for you to rule, provided that you make me your successor.’”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, ‘If you were to ask me for this stick, I’d not give it to you. I believe you are the one about whom I had a dream. This is Ṭhābit b. Qays; he will answer any questions on my behalf.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left.”

ʿUbayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh continued, “I asked Ibn ʿAbbās about the vision he had mentioned. Ibn ʿAbbās replied, ‘I was told that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘While I slept, I was given a vision in which two gold bracelets were placed on my hand. I was disturbed by these and disliked them. Then I was given permission to blow on them and when I did so, they disappeared. I interpreted them to represent two imposters who would appear.’’”

ʿUbayd Allāh stated, “One of these was al-ʿAnṣi, who was killed by Fayruz in Yemen; the other was Musaylima, ‘the imposter.’”

Muḥammad b. Isâq stated, “The delegation of Banū Ḥantīfa came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and with them was Musaylima b. Ḥabīb, ‘the imposter.’”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, “His name was Musaylima b. Thumāma b. Kathīr b. Ḥabīb al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd al-Ḥārith b. Ḥaffān b. Dḥahl b. al-Dūl b. Ḥanīfa; he was known as Abū Thumāma, and also as Abū Ḥārūn. He was also referred to as ‘al-Raḥmān’ and as ‘Raḥmān of al-Yamāmah’. He was 150 years old at the time of his execution. He knew various forms of magic. He knew how to insert an egg into a long-necked bottle and was the first to do this. He would cut off a bird’s wing, then reattach it. It is said that there was a gazelle that would come down from the mountain and he would drink its milk.”
Ibn Isḥaq went on, “They went into residence in the home of the daughter of al-Ḥārith, an ḥusnī woman of Banū al-Najjar.”

Al-Suhaylī stated, “She was Zaynab; some say her name was Kaysa, daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Kurayz b. Ḥabīb b. ʿAbd Shams. Musaylima had married her long before, but then separated from her. This is why they stayed in her home.”

Ibn Isḥaq continued, “One of our scholars of Medina related to me that Banū Ḥanīfah hid him in some clothing and brought him to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while the latter was sitting among his Companions, holding a palm frond. When he reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), having been completely concealed by the clothes, and began to make requests, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘If you were to ask me for this palm frond, I’d not give it to you!’

“A sheikh of Banū Ḥanīfah from al-Yamāma related to me that the incident concerning him was quite different. He claimed that the delegation from Banū Ḥanīfah came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), having left Musaylima with their mounts. Having accepted Islam, they remembered him and asked, ‘Messenger of God, we have left a companion of ours with our mounts and baggage to care for them for us.’

“And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered that what had been given to the men of Banū Ḥanīfah should be given to him too, saying, ‘His status is no worse than yours.’ That is, due to his having looked after his companions’ property. That is what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wanted to imply.

“They then all left and took to Musaylima what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had given to each one of them. When they reached Yamāma that enemy of God apostatized, proclaimed himself a prophet and told them many lies. He said, ‘I have been made his partner in this matter.’

“He then told his delegation, who were with him, ‘Did he not say to you, “His status is no worse than yours”? The only reason he said this was from his knowledge that I had been made his partner in the matter.’

“Thereafter he began to recite doggerel verse to them and to imitate the Qurʾān, saying, ‘God has bestowed His favour on the pregnant woman; he has extracted from her a being that moves, from between the skin on her womb and her intestines.’

“He made wine and fornication permissible for them and abolished the need for prayer. He nevertheless testified for the Messenger of God, God’s peace and blessings be upon him, being a prophet. And Banū Ḥanīfah was in agreement with him on that.”

This is what Ibn Isḥaq stated. But God knows best.

Al-Suhaylī and others related the following about al-Rahbāl b. Unfiwā - his other name being Nahār b. Unfiwā; he had accepted Islam and learned some of the Qurʾān and spent a period as a Companion of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). The latter once passed by while al-Rahbāl was seated with ʿAbū Hurayra and commented, “One of you has his molar in hell-fire like Mt. Ḫud!”
Both men remained apprehensive until eventually al-Raḥīl apostatized with Musaylima. He falsely testified that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had made Musaylima his partner in his activities and attributed to the latter some part of the Qurʾān he had learned; this Musaylima claimed for himself. All this resulted in great confusion for Banū Ḥantāfī. Al-Raḥīl was killed by Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb at the battle of al-Yamāma.

Al-Suḥayl stated that the muʿazzin employed by Musaylima was named Hujayr; and the one of his men who most directed the warfare on his behalf was Muḥkam b. al-Ṭufayl. To these should be added Sajaiṭ, known as Umm Sadir. This was a woman Musaylima married, and there are various shameful reports about his relationship with her. The name of her muʿazzin was Zuhayr b. Ḥamr, or alternatively Janba b. Ṭāriq. It is also said that Sabath b. Ribḥ also acted as her muʿazzin and then later became a Muslim. She too accepted Islam during the reign of Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, and became a good Muslim.

Yunus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as having stated, “Musaylima b. Iḥābīb wrote to the Messenger of God (SAAS) as follows, “From Musaylima, Messenger of God, to Muḥammad, Messenger of God. Peace be upon you. To proceed: I have been appointed as your partner in the task, along with you. Half the authority is ours, the other half that of Quraysh. However, Quraysh are an aggressive people.” Two messengers brought this document and the Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote back to him. He stated, “In the name of God, the most Merciful, most Beneficent. From Muḥammad, Messenger of God, to Musaylima, ‘the imposter’. Peace be upon him who follows the guidance. To proceed: the earth belongs to God. He entrusts it to whomever of His servants He wishes. The outcome will favour the pious.”

This — the receipt of this message — was at the end of 10 AH. Al-Bukhārī relates the story of this message in his saḥīḥ collection. Yunus b. Bukayr stated, quoting Ibn Ishāq, “Sa’d b. Ṭāriq related to me, from Salama b. Nuṣaym b. Maṣʿūd, from his father, who said, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say to the two messengers of Musaylima when they brought the letter from him, ‘Do you agree with what he said?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. ‘I swear by God’, he told them, ‘that if it were not for the fact that messengers are not to be executed, I would strike off the heads of you both!’”

‘Abd Allah b. Maṣʿūd al-Ṭayalīsī stated that al-Maṣʿūdī related to him, from ‘Āṣim, from Abū Wāsīl, from ‘Abd Allah b. Maṣʿūd, who said, “Ibn al-Nawāḥa and Ibn Uthāl came as messengers to the Messenger of God (SAAS), on behalf of Musaylima, ‘the imposter’, and he asked them, ‘Do you testify that I am the Messenger of God?’ They replied, ‘We testify that Musaylima is the Messenger of God!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then exclaimed, ‘I proclaim my belief in God and in His Messengers! If I were someone who executed messengers, I would execute both of you!’” ‘Abd Allah b. Maṣʿūd went on, “And so the practice was instituted that messengers would not be executed.”
He continued, “Regarding Ibn Uthāl, God ultimately gave him his reward. As for Ibn al-Nawāḥa, I continued to feel much anger against him until God took possession of him.”

The ḥāṣīṣ al-Bayhaqi stated that Usāma b. Uthāl accepted Islam. And we referred to this above.

Regarding Ibn al-Nawāḥa, Abū Zakariyyā b. Abū Isḥāq al-Muzani, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allah Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Walāḥ, quoting Jaʿfar b. ʿAwn, quoting Ismāʿīl b. Abū Khālid, from Qays b. Abū Ḥāzim, who said that a man came to ʿAbd Allah b. Masʿūd and said, ‘I passed by a mosque of Bānt Ḥanifa while they were making a recitation of something God did not reveal to Muḥammad (ṣa). It was, ‘By those women who mill flour; by those women who knead dough; by those women who bake bread; by those women who concoct stew; by those women who swallow morsels . . .’

“ʿAbd Allāh then sent for them; they were 70 men in number, and their leader was ʿAbd Allah b. al-Nawāḥa. ʿAbd Allah gave orders and he was executed. He then said, ‘We’ll never acquire Satan out of these; however, we can drive them off to Syria, so that God may take care of them for us!’”

Al-Wāqīḍi stated, “The delegation from Bānt Ḥanifa consisted of approximately ten men, under the leadership of Sulma b. Ḥanḍala. They included al-Raḥīl b. ʿUnfuwa, Taqī b. ʿAlī, ʿAlī b. Sinān, and Musaylima b. Ḥabbā biʾis, ‘the imposter’. They were accommodated in the home of Maslama, daughter of al-Ḥārith, and they were given full hospitality. They were given lunch and dinner – at times consisting of bread and meat, at others of bread and yoghurt, bread and meat fat, and dates, during their stay.

“When they came to the mosque, they accepted Islam. They had left Musaylima with their mounts and when they wanted to depart, the Messenger of God (ṣa) gave them each five awqiyā weight of silver. He also ordered the same gift for Musaylima, and when they said he was with their mounts, he commented, ‘His status is no worse than yours.’

“When they returned to Musaylima and told him what the Messenger of God (ṣa) had said, he commented, ‘He only said that because he knows that power will come to me after him.’

“Having said this, Musaylima, may God abhore him, persisted and made claim to the prophethood.”

Al-Wāqīḍi stated, “The Messenger of God (ṣa) had sent out with them a vessel containing the remainder of water he had used for cleansing himself. Musaylima ordered his men to revoke their pledge of allegiance to the Messenger of God (ṣa) to pour the water over his dwelling, and to adopt it as a masjid, a place of prayer. This they did.”

Hereafter we will recount the death of al-Aswād al-ʿAnṣārī at the end of the life of the Messenger of God (ṣa). Musaylima was killed during the caliphate of Abū Bakr, ‘the trusting’.
THE DELEGATION FROM THE PEOPLE OF NAJRĀN.

Al-Bukhari stated that it was related to him by ‘Abbās b. al-Husayn, quoting Yahya b. Adam, from ʿIrṣālīl, from Abū Isḥāq, from ʿIyād b. Zufar, from Ḥudhayfah, who said, “Al-ʿAqib and al-Sayyad, rulers of Najrān, came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), intending to engage in the ḫān ceremony.

“One man said to the other, ‘Let’s not do this. If he is a prophet, and we engage him in this ḫān, neither we nor our descendants will have success.’ They both then said (to the Prophet (ṢAAS)), ‘We will give you whatever you want. Send a trustworthy man out with us, but do not send anyone who is not worthy of trust.’ He responded, ‘I will send with you a man who is truly trustworthy.’

“The Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) competed to have this honour, and he ultimately said, ‘Stand up, Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāḥ.’ And when he did so, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘This is the (most) trustworthy man of this nation.’”

Al-Bukhari also related this, as did Muslim, from a ḥadīth of Shuʿbā, from Abū Isḥāq.

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī stated that he was informed by Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfiz and Abū Saʿīd Muḥammad b. Mūsā ibn al-Fadl, both of whom said, “Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb related to us, quoting Ṭāhir b. Abī ʿAbd al-Jabbar, quoting Yiʿnūs b. Bukayr, from Salama b. ʿAbd Yasīr, from his father, from his grandfather. Yiʿnūs, who had been a Christian and had accepted Islam, said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote to Najrān before the (sūrat) Taʿ sinful of Sulaymān (Solomon) had been revealed to him, ‘In the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, from Muḥammad, the Prophet, to the bishop of Najrān. Are you peaceable? I praise to you the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. To proceed: I summon you to the worship of God, away from worshipping servants of God. If you should refuse, then you will have to pay the jizya. If you refuse, I am warning you of warfare. Peace.’

“When this letter reached the bishop, he was shocked and astounded by it. He sent for a man of Najrān named Shuraḥbīl b. Wadaʾa, who was originally from Hamdān. No one would be consulted in preference to him in the case of some problem – not al-Abham, nor al-Sayyid, nor al-ʿAqib.24

“The bishop gave this letter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Shuraḥbīl. When he had read it, they asked him, ‘Abū Maryam, what do you think?’ Shuraḥbīl replied, ‘You well know how God promised Abraham that prophethood would pass on through the progeny of Ismāʿil; don’t you believe that this could refer to this man? I have no personal opinion about the prophethood question. If this were a worldly matter, I would give you my views on it, and would do my very best for you.' The bishop told him, 'Come aside and take a seat.' Shura'b then went aside and sat down near him.

"The bishop sent to a man of Najrân named ʻAbd Allâh b. Shura'bîl, a man of Dhû Asbah, from Himyar. He had him read the letter and asked him his opinion. This man spoke as Shura'bîl and the bishop told him, 'Come aside and take a seat,' and the man did so and sat near him.

"Next the bishop sent for a man of Najrân named Jabbar b. Fayd, of Banû al-Ĥarîth, son of Ka'b, a man of Banû al-Ĥimâs. He asked this man to read the letter and to give his opinion of it. Jabbar replied as had Shura'bîl and ʻAbd Allâh. The bishop then told him to go aside and sit, which he did.

"When they had all agreed on the same statement, the bishop gave orders that the bell be struck and lighted lanterns and hair shirts were lifted up into the monks' cells; they would do this if there were an alarm during the day, but if the alarm were by night, they would merely strike the bell and lift up the lights into the cells.

"When the bell was struck, they assembled and the people of the valley, both in its upper and its lower parts, raised the hair shirts; the valley was the length of a day's journey for a fast rider. It consisted of 73 villages and had 100,000 warriors. The letter of the Messenger of God (SAAS) was read to them and the bishop sought their opinion of it. Their leaders agreed that they should send Shura'bîl b. Wada'a al-Hamadani, ʻAbd Allâh b. Shura'bîl and Jabbar b. Fayd al-Ĥarîthî to seek information about the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"The delegation travelled to Medina and when they arrived there, they took off their travel garments and dressed in fine robes of striped cloth and put on gold rings. They then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS). They greeted him, but he did not respond. They waited there all day long for him to speak to them, but he did not, since they were wearing those garments and gold rings.

"The delegation went to find ʻUthmân b. ʻAffân and ʻAbd al-Rahmân b. ʻAwf, whom they had known previously; they found them in an assembly, meeting with ansâr and muhâjirîn. They asked them, 'Uthmân and Abd al-Rahmân, your Prophet wrote us a letter and we have come in response to it. We have greeted him, but he has not returned our greeting. We waited patiently all day long, but failed to get him to speak to us. What do you both think; do you consider we should return home?'

"They also asked ʻAlî b. Abû Talib who was also there in the group. He said to ʻUthmân and Abd al-Rahmân, 'I think they should take off these fine robes and rings, dress in their travel garments and then return to him.'

"They did this and when they greeted him, he responded. He then told them, 'By Him who sent me with the truth, when you first came to me, Ibîs (Satan) was certainly with you.' He then asked them questions, as they did him. This session of questioning continued and they eventually asked, 'What do you say about Jesus? Although we will go back to our people as Christians, it would please us, if you are a prophet, we could hear what you say of him.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'I don't have anything to say about him today; stay here until I tell you what it is God says about Jesus.'

"By next morning God, the Almighty and Glorious, had revealed this verse, 'God considers Jesus to be the like of Adam; He created him from earth, then said to him: "Be!" And he was. The truth is from your Lord; and so do not be of those who make disputes. To those who could dispute with you, after the knowledge that has come to you, say, "Come, let us call our sons and (you) your sons, we our wives and (you) your wives and we our ownselves and (you) yourselves, and then let us make our appeals to God, and pray that God places his curse upon those who lie' (sūrat Al 'Imrān; III, v. 58-60).

"They refused to agree to this.

"On the next morning following that when he had told them of this, he arrived for a mulā'ama,27 'an oath-taking competition', accompanied by al-Hasan and al-Husayn. He was dressed in a khamil, 'a coarse-fibred garment', and Fatima walked at his back; that day he was also accompanied by several of his womenfolk.

"Shurabīl told his two companions, ‘You both well know that the upper and lower parts of our valley join in accepting my views and I have, I swear, reached a weighty conclusion. Given that this man is a powerful leader, if we were the first of the Arabs to spite him and to reject his orders, he and his men would maintain such ill-will for us that they would eventually do us great harm. We are the Arabs who are his closest neighbours, and if this man is truly a prophet, and we challenge him as a liar, then every hide and hair of us is sure to perish!'

"His companions then asked him, ‘Well, Abu Maryam, what should we do?’ He replied, ‘My opinion is that I should recognize his authority. He is, I think, not a man who would ever make an over-harsh judgement.’

Shurabīl then met with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘I have something better to suggest than an oath-taking competition with you.’ ‘And what is that?’ he asked. ‘Spend this day till tonight and tonight till tomorrow reaching your judgement and whatever you decide concerning us will be acceptable.’

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Is there anyone else back home behind you who will contradict you?’ Shurabīl replied, ‘Ask my two companions.’ They said, ‘Our whole valley will accept his decision.’

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then returned home without making oaths regarding them. When they went to him next day, he wrote for them the following document, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent. This is written by Muhammad, the Prophet, the untutored, the Messenger of God, to Najrān. It is his judgement regarding all their produce and all their assets in gold, silver and slaves to be generous to them and to leave them all this in consideration of a payment of 2,000 sets of garments. Of these 1,000 shall be paid each Rajab, and another 1,000 each Šafar.' He then went on to give the rest of the conditions. The document ends, 'Witnessed by Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, Ghaylān b. ʿAmr, Mālik b. ʿAwf, of Banū Nasr, and al-ʿAqrāʾ b. Ḥabis al-Ḥanzali, and al-Mughira.' And he (so) wrote it.

"When they received this document, they left for Najrān. With the bishop there was a brother of his, on his mother's side, he being his uncle's son, a man named Bishr b. Muʿāwiyah, known as Abū ʿAlqama. The delegation gave the letter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to the bishop. While he was reading it, in the company of Abū ʿAlqama, while they were both riding, Bishr's camel stumbled. Bishr swore an oath, although he did not make reference to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

"The bishop told him, 'You might have spoken a curse against a prophet who has been sent.' Bishr replied, 'Certainly; and I swear I'll not nullify it until I go to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).'

"He then directed his camel back towards Medina, but the bishop positioned his own in his way and told him, 'Understand from me, that I only said that so that the Arabs have that reported to them of me, fearing that they might consider that we had accepted his authenticity, or been swayed by his voice, or agreed to something this man wanted to which the Arabs did not comply, even though we are the most powerful and numerous of all.' Bishr replied, 'No; I swear, I'll never accept this attitude of yours.'

"Bishr then spurred his mount into motion, turning his back to the bishop. He also spoke the following doggerel verse:

'To you (my camel) anxiously turns her flank
Though a foal inside her belly objects,
For her religion opposes that of the Christians.'

"When he reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), he accepted Islam and stayed on with him until he was eventually killed."

"The delegation entered Najrān and went to the monk Ibn Abū Shamar al-Zubayydi while he was high up in his cell, telling him, 'A prophet has been given a mission in Tihāma!' They narrated how the Najrān delegation had gone to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and how he had suggested an oath-swearing competition to them, which they had refused, and how Bishr b. Muʿāwiyah had hurried off to him and had accepted Islam.

"The monk replied, 'Bring me down, or else I'll cast myself from this cell!' They did so; he brought with him a present which he took with him to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Part of it is that cloak that the caliphs wear, along with a wooden cup and a staff."
"He remained for some time with the Messenger of God (SAAS), listening to the revelation, then returned to his own people. He is not credited with having accepted Islam. He promised to come back but this was not to be until the Messenger of God (SAAS) had died.

"The bishop, Abu al-Harith, went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), along with al-Sayyid, al-Aqib and important persons from their people. They stayed with him, hearing what God revealed to him. He wrote the document for the bishop and those bishops to come after him: 'In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent. From Muhammad, the Prophet, to Bishop Abu al-Harith and the bishops of Najran, and its priests and monks, including all those under their control, few or many. (This gives) protection of God and of His Messenger, which shall not be changed for any of its bishops, monks or priests. Nor shall any of their rights or powers or former practices be changed. The protection of God and His Messenger is for ever, so long as they remain peaceful and sincere and are not subjected to wrongdoing or engage in it.' 'Written by al-Mughira b. Shu'ba.'

Muhammad b. Ishāq related that the delegation of Christians of Najran included 60 riders, of whom 14 were leaders. These latter consisted of al-Aqib, whose name was 'Abd al-Masiḥ, and al-Sayyid, whose name was al-Abḥam. Abu Khariṣa b. Alqama, Aws b. al-Harith, Zayd, Qays, Nubayh, Khuwaylid, Amr, Khalid, Abd Allah and Yahlus.

Leadership of these 14 men devolved upon 3 of them. These were al-Aqib, their leader, opinion-maker and council-leader, whose decision no one would oppose; al-Sayyid, their protector, and camel-master; Abu Ḥarīṭa b. Alqama, their bishop and pontiff. The last-mentioned was an Arab of Banū Bakr b. Wa'il. He had entered the religion of Christianity, and the Byzantines had promoted and honoured him, built churches for him and given him power and authority because of the firmness they knew of his faith. He was nevertheless fully aware of the mission of the Messenger of God (SAAS), but (his love for) honour and prestige prevented him from following the truth.

Yūnus b. Bukayr quoted Ibn Ishāq as stating, "Burayda b. Sufyān related to me, from Ibn al-Baylamānī, from Kurz b. Alqama, who said, 'A delegation of Christians of Najran arrived, consisting of 60 mounted men, 14 of whom were their leaders. And there were 24 of them . . . ' Three of them were in charge - al-Aqib, al-Sayyid and Abu Ḥarīṭa, one of the Banū Bakr b. Wa'il, their bishop, and their sabib midrās." This last man they had awarded great honour, power and privileges, and had built him churches because of what they had heard of his great knowledge and zeal for their faith.

28. Titles of authority.
29. Incomplete in the Arabic printed text.
30. Perhaps the guardian of their Midrash, an early Jewish interpretation of the Old Testament.
When they left Najrán, Abū Ḥaritha was mounted on a mule and by his side rode a brother of his named Kurz b. Ṣaqama. The mule of Abū Ḥaritha stumbled and Kurz said, ‘May al-Ab’ad, “the one far away”, (meaning the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) stumble!’ Abū Ḥaritha commented, ‘No; it’s you who may stumble!’ Kurz asked him, ‘Why, brother?’ He replied, ‘I swear by God, he is certainly the prophet whom we have been awaiting!’

‘Kurz asked, ‘Well, what is holding you back, when you know that?’ He replied, ‘It’s because of what these people have done for us. They have honoured us, made payments to us, and given us authority. But they adamantly oppose him; if I were to take action, they would take everything away from us.’

‘His brother Kurz gave much thought to what he had said and eventually accepted Islam.’

Ibn Isḥaq went on to relate that when they entered the mosque of the Prophet (ṢAAS), they were dressed in finery. It was time for the al-‘aṣr prayer, and they got up and prayed towards the east. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “Let them do so.”

Their spokesman was Abū Ḥaritha b. Ṣaqama and (their other leaders were) al-Sayyid and al-Ṣaqib. Eventually the major part of surat Al ‘Imrān and verses about the oath-taking competition were revealed concerning them. But they refused the latter. They asked that a fully trustworthy man be sent out with them. And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did dispatch Abū ‘Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ, as is related above in the account of al-Bukhārī.

We have discussed this in detail in our Tafsīr (Exegesis) of surat Al ‘Imrān. And to God be all praise and credit.

THE DELEGATION OF BANU ẒÂ‘IR AND THE STORY OF ẒÂ‘IR B. AL-ṬUFAYL AND ARBAD B. QAYS, MAY GOD DAMN THEM BOTH!

“When that enemy of God Ẓâ‘ir b. al-Ṭufayl came to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), it was with the intent of betraying him. His people had told him, ‘Abū Ẓâ‘ir, others have accepted Islam, you do so too.’ But he replied, ‘I swear by God, I made a vow I would never cease striving to get the Arabs to follow me; should I now follow this Quraish fellow?’

“Al-Arbad then said, ‘When we go to see this man, I will get him to turn his face away from you. When I do this, you strike him with your sword!’

“When they reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Ẓâ‘ir b. al-Ṭufayl said, ‘Muḥammad, will you come aside with me?’ He replied, ‘No, by God, not until you believe in God alone!' ‘Amir repeated, ‘Please, just come aside with me, Muhammad,’ and he began talking to him, waiting for Arbad to act. Arbad, however, did nothing. When ‘Amir saw that Arbad was taking no action, he again said, ‘Muhammad, do come aside with me,’ but he again replied, ‘No, not until you believe in God alone Who has no partner.’

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) thus rejected him, ‘Amir said, ‘Then, by God, I’ll fill this place with horses and men to fight you!’ When ‘Amir had turned away to leave, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘O God, take care of ‘Amir b. al-‘Tufayl for me!’

“When they had left the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘Amir b. al-‘Tufayl asked Arbad, ‘Had I not ordered you what to do? I swear by God, there was no man on earth I considered more fearsome than you! I swear, I’ll never fear you again, after today!’

“He replied, ‘I pray you, don’t blame me too hastily. Whenever I was about to do as you had asked, you got in the man’s way so all I could see was you. Should I have struck you with my sword?’

“They headed back home and when they had gone part way, God, the Almighty and Glorious, afflicted ‘Amir b. al-‘Tufayl with a growth in his neck. And God killed him in the home of a woman of Banu Salil. He exclaimed, ‘O Banu ‘Amir, shall (my death) be from a growth like that on a young camel in the home of a woman of Banu Salil?”’

Ibn Hisham stated, “The words are also quoted as, ‘... a growth like that of a camel and a death in the house of a Salilite woman?”’

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi narrated through al-Zubayr b. Bakkar, quoting Fāṭima, daughter of ‘Abd al-‘Azīz b. Mawzala, from her father, from her grandfather, Mawzala b. Humayl, who said, “‘Amir b. al-‘Tufayl came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who told him, ‘‘Amir, accept Islam!’ He replied, ‘I will do so on condition that I control al-mabar, “the nomads”, while you control al-madar, “the villages”.’ He refused.

“Again the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Accept Islam!’ And again ‘Amir replied, ‘On condition I control the nomads, while you control the villages.’ ‘No,’ replied the Messenger of God (SAAS). ‘Amir then turned away, saying, ‘I swear by God, Muhammad, I’ll fill this place with horses like locusts and men like breadcrumbs; I’ll tether a horse to every palm tree!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘O God, rid me of ‘Amir and give his people guidance!’

“‘Amir then left and when he reached the outskirts of Medina, he happened to meet a woman of his tribe called Salilyya. He dismounted from his horse and slept in her house. He was then afflicted by a growth in his throat. He mounted his horse and, levelling his lance, he rode away, saying, ‘A growth like that on a young camel and a death in the house of Salilyya!’ He kept this up until he fell dead from his horse.”
Abū 'Amr b. 'Abd al-Barr stated in his work al-Isṭāb fī Ṣmāʾ al-Ṣaḥāba (A Study of the Names of the Companions) concerning (a man named) Maw'ala: “He was Maw'ala b. Kuthayf b. Ḍāḥibī b. Ṣā'īr b. ‘Amir b. ‘Sa’sā‘a. He went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and accepted Islam when a young man of 20, and he lived on in the faith for 100 years. He was known as ‘he of the two tongues’ because of his eloquence. His son ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz related materials from him. It was he who recounted the story of ʿAmir b. al-Ṭūfayl and the line, ‘... a growth like that of a baggage camel and a death in the house of Ṣa‘īr so-and-so? Bring me my horse!’”

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār stated, “Zamya', daughter of ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Maw'ala b. Kuthayf b. Ḥamīl b. Khālid b. ʿAmr b. Muṭāwiya, he being al-Ḍabbāb b. Kīlāb b. Rābi'a b. ʿAmir b. ʿSa’sā‘a, said, ‘My father related to me, quoting his father, quoted Maw'ala as having recounted that he went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and accepted Islam when he was 20 years old. He pledged him his allegiance, wiped his right arm (in deference to him), and led his camel to him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave him a two-year-old she-camel. After the death of the Prophet (ṢAAS), he became a companion of Abū Hurayra and lived on for 100 years into Islam. He was nicknamed “he of the two tongues” because of his eloquence.’”

I note that it is evident that the story of ʿAmir b. al-Ṭūfayl related to a period prior to the conquest of Mecca, even though Ibn Ḳisāʾ and al-Bayhaqī include mention of it thereafter.

When al-Bayhaqī gave it, he did so from al-Ḥakīm, from al-Asamm, quoting Muhammad b. Ḳisāʾ, quoting Muṭāwiya b. Ṣamīr, quoting Abū Ḳisāʾ al-Ḥaẓārī, from al-Awzāʾī, from Ḳisāʾ b. Abū ʿAlāʾ b. ‘Abū Ṣalāḥ, from Anas, in the account of the expedition to Biʿr Maʿṣūma and the killing by ʿAmir b. Ṭūfayl of Ḥarām b. Māliḥ, the uncle of Anas b. Ṭalḥa, and his treachery against the men there that resulted in the killing of them all except ʿAmr b. Umayyā, as is given above.

Al-Awzāʾī stated that Yahyā said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spoke prayers against ʿAmir b. Ṭūfayl for 30 mornings, saying, ‘O God, rid me of ʿAmir b. al-Ṭūfayl however You wish, and send upon him what will kill him.’ And God did infect him with a malignancy.”

It is related from Hammām, from Ḳisāʾ b. Abū Ṣalāḥ, from Anas, in the story relating to Ḥarām b. Māliḥ. Anas stated, “ʿAmir b. al-Ṭūfayl went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him, ‘I give you to choose between three options: you shall govern the people on the plains, while I the nomads, or I shall be your successor after you, or I will attack you with Banū Ṭaḥāfūn and 1,000 stallions and 1,000 mares.’”

He went on, “He was then, while staying in a woman’s house, afflicted with a malignant growth. At this, he exclaimed, ‘Shall it be a growth like that on a camel and death in the house of a woman of Banū so-and-so? Bring me my horse!’ He rode away and died upon his horse.”
Ibn Ishāq stated, “His companions went out and buried him, then proceeded on to Banū ‘Amir territory to spend the winter. When they arrived there, their people came to them and asked, ‘Arbad, how was it back behind you?’ ‘It was nothing,’ they replied. ‘I swear, all he did was invite us to worship something or other. I wish he were here now; I’d kill him with an arrow, right on the spot!’

“A day or two after his having made that comment, he went out with a camel he had to sell and God sent down upon him and it a thunderbolt that burned them both up.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Arbad b. Qays was a brother of Labīd b. Rabī’a on his mother’s side. Labīd said, mourning Arbad, ‘Death spares no one – not a kindly father, nor a son.

I fear much that death of Arbad more than I do the influence of Pisces or Leo.
Eye, why weep for Arbad, now that both we and the women have stood in mourning?
If others threatened, he ignored their threats; if they were reasoned in judgement, so was he.
A sweet and clever man, though with some bitterness in his sweetness; a man of calm and healthy constitution.
Eye, would you weep for Arbad now that the winter winds sweep the bare trees
And they have become wind-tossed and fruitless, their remnants of fruit revealed?
He was braver than a meat-eating forest-lion, staring forth and determined to prevail.
The eye does not see to its full extent on a night when horses return frail and worn.
He inspired the mourning women to attend his wake, (as evident) as young gazelles on barren terrain.
The lightning and thunderbolt terrified me when they struck this bold warrior that terrible day.
He took from those who robbed and gave back to their victims; if they came in distress, he gave them again and again.
He was generous in bad times, as when spring rain produces growth.
All the sons of a free-born woman must diminish in number, no matter how many they were.
Even though once envied, all shall be brought down; though once leaders, all shall perish and fade.”

Ibn Ishāq quoted many further lines from Labīd in mourning for Arbad b. Qays, his brother on his mother’s side. We have omitted them here for brevity’s sake, thinking the verses we have given sufficient. And it is God who leads to what is right.
Ibn Hisham stated that Zayd b. Aslam recounted, from ʿAtṣr b. Yasār, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “And God, the Almighty and Glorious, revealed the following concerning ʿAmir and Arbad: ‘God knows what every female bears and what falls short and what comes to fruition in the womb. And with Him everything has its measure. (He it is who is) Knowledgeable of the unseen and what is witnessed; He is the Great, the Most High. Alike (for Him) are those of you who conceal their words and those who speak openly, those who hide by night, and those who go forth by day. He has those (Helpers) who proceed forth on his behalf, both ahead and behind him, who protect him, by God’s command’ (ṣūrat al-Raʿād; XIII, v.9–11). By this latter wording, He is referring to Muḥammad (ṣa).”

“He proceeded to make reference to Arbad and to his execution. God Almighty stated, ‘And when God intends harm for a people there is no averting it and from Him they have no protector. He it is who shows you lightning bringing fear and expectation, He who summons the heavy clouds. The thunder proclaims His praise and the angels too are in awe of Him. He sends the thunderbolts and uses them to strike whomever He wishes. Yet they dispute concerning God, and He is Mighty in power’” (ṣūrat al-Raʿād; XIII, v.11–13).

We have discussed these honoured verses in our exegesis of ṣūrat al-Raʿād. And to God goes all praise and credit.

Ibn Hisham, may God have mercy on him, did provide a chain of authorities for this additional comment he made.

We are also given an account by the ḥāfiz Abū al-Qāsim Sulaymān b. Ahmad al-Ṭabarānī in his great compendium of ḥadīth in which he states, “Masʿāda b. Saʿd al-ʿAṭṭār related to us, quoting Ibrāhīm b. al-Mundhir al-ʿIḥīāmī, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿUmrān, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān and ʿAbd Allāh, two sons of Zayd b. Aslam, from their father, from ʿAtṣr b. Yasār, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who recounted that Arbad b. Qays b. Jarīʾ b. Khalīd b. Jaʿfar b. Kilāb and ʿAmir b. al-Tufayl b. Mālik came to see the Messenger of God (ṣa) in Medina. When they reached him, he was seated and they both sat down in front of him. ʿAmir b. al-Tufayl asked him, ‘Muḥammad, what will you do for me if I accept Islam?’ The Messenger of God (ṣa) replied, ‘You will receive the same as the other Muslims and have the same obligations.’ ʿAmir then asked, ‘If I accept Islam, will you ensure that I become leader after you?’ The Messenger of God (ṣa) replied, ‘That shall not be for you or for your tribe. But you may have command over the cavalry.’ ʿAmir responded, ‘I already now have control over all the cavalry of Najd. Give me control over the nomads, and you control the villages.’ ʿAmir said, ‘I am coming to fill up this place with horses and men to fight you.’ The Messenger of God (ṣa) responded, ‘God will prevent you.’ ʿAmir left, the latter suggested, ‘Arbad, I’ll distract Muḥammad from you by talking to him, and then you strike him with your sword. If you do kill Muḥammad, they’ll want no more than to be satisfied by payment of the blood-wit. They dislike warfare. You'll just give them the blood-wit.' Arbad replied, 'I'll do it.'

"They proceeded back to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and 'Amir addressed him, 'Muḥammad, get up and come with me so I can talk to you.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) arose and went alone with him towards the wall where he stopped to talk to him. Arbad went to draw his sword, but when he touched it, his hand lost its grip on the sword's hilt and he could not unsheathe it. Arbad was unable to strike him sufficiently quickly for 'Amir, because the Messenger of God (SAAS) turned and, seeing Arbad and what he intended, walked away from them both.

"When Arbad and 'Amir left the presence of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and reached the lava plain of Wāqīm, they halted. But Sa'd b. Mu'ādh and Usayd b. al-Ḥudayr went out after them and said, 'Clear off, you enemies of God! God damn you both!' 'Amir responded, 'Who is that, Sa'd?' 'That is Usayd b. Ḥudayr, of the cavalry squadrons,' he replied.

"They left, and while they were at al-Raqm, God sent a thunderbolt down on Arbad and killed him. 'Arnir then left, and when he was in the lava field, God sent a malignant growth to afflict him. That night he spent in the house of a woman of Bani Ṣa'd. He began feeling the growth on his neck and said, 'A growth like that of a camel, in the house of a woman of Bani Ṣa'd!' He loathed the idea of dying in her house.

"He then rode off on his horse, made it gallop, then died on it as he returned. God revealed about them both, 'God knows what every female . . .' and so on, to the words, 'He has those (Helpers) who proceed forth on his behalf . . .' By this, He was making reference to Muhammad (SAAS). He then made a reference to Arbad and how God had killed him, then quoted the verse, 'He sends the thunderbolts and uses them . . .'

This account suggests the early time frame of this incident concerning 'Amir and Arbad; this is because it mentions Sa'd b. Mu'ādh in it. But God knows best.

The arrival of the delegations of al-Tufayl b. 'Amir al-Dawsī, may God be pleased with him, to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Mecca and his acceptance of Islam have been treated above," and also how God placed a light between his eyes and he made a request to God, who removed it on to the end of his whip. We have detailed that above and have no need to repeat it here, as did al-Bayhaqī and others.

THE ARRIVAL OF Dimām B. Tha'Laba TO SEE THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS), ON BEHALF OF HIS TRIBE OF BANU Sa'D B. BAKR.

When he arrived, he made his camel kneel at the door of the mosque, hobbled it and entered the mosque while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was seated inside with his men. Đimām was a burly and hairy man who had two pigtails.

He advanced, stood over the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked, ‘Which one of you is ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib’s son?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘I am ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib’s son.’

‘Đimām then asked, “Muḥammad?” “Yes?” he asked. “Son of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, I’ve got some tough questions to put to you; don’t be offended.”

‘“I’ll not be offended,” he replied. “Ask what you want.”

‘“I adjure you by God, your God, and the God of those who came before you, and the God of those who will come after you, is it God who orders you that we worship Him alone, and associate none other with Him, and that we take down those idols that our fathers worshipped?” “Yes, by God,” he replied.

‘“I again adjure you by God, your God, and the God of those before and after you, is it God who ordered you that we pray those five prayers?” “Yes,” he replied.

‘Đimām then began referring to the religious duties of Islam, one by one – alms-giving, fasting, the pilgrimage and all the other ordinances of Islam. He went on to refer to each one specifically. When he had finished, he said, “I testify that there is no god but God, and I testify that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God. And I shall perform these duties and shall abstain from all that you prohibit. And I shall not add nor subtract anything.”

‘He then went to his camel to go home. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “If that man with the two pigtails spoke the truth, he will enter paradise!”

‘When Đimām reached his camel, he untied it and travelled home. His people gathered to meet him and the first thing he said was, “Al-Lat and al-ʿUzza are evil!” They told him, “Take care, Đimām! You might get leprosy! You might get elephantiasis! You might go crazy!”

‘He replied, ‘Confound you all! Those two can do no harm nor good. God has sent a Messenger and revealed to him a book with which I will try to save you from your former error. I testify that there is no god but God alone who has no partner, and that Muḥammad is His servant and His Messenger. I have come to you from him with orders for what you should do and what he forbids you from doing.”

‘And by God, that night and by next morning every man and woman there had become Muslims. And Ibn ʿAbbās said, “We never heard of anyone who came as a finer representative of any tribe than Đimām b. Thaʿlabab.”

Imām Āḥmad related this similarly, from Yaʿqūb b. Ibrāhīm al-Zuhri, from his father, from Ibn Isḥāq.

In this text there is evidence of his having returned to his people before the conquest of Mecca, since Khalid b. al-Walid destroyed al-Uzza during the days of that conquest.

Al-Waqidi stated that Abū Bakr b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Sabrā related to him, from Shurayk b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Nimr, from Kurayb, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “In Rajab, 5 AH Banū Saʿd b. Bakr sent Dimām b. Thaʿlabā out in a delegation to meet with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); he was a burly, thick-haired man with two pigtails.

“When he arrived, he stood over the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and asked him questions, doing so brusquely, about who had sent him, what he was sent with, and about the required duties of Islam. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded to him concerning all this and he went back to his people as a Muslim. He took down the idols and told them what orders he had received and what he had been forbidden from doing. And by the next morning, every single man and woman of them had become Muslims. They built mosques and instituted the call for prayer.”

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Ḥāshim b. al-Qāsim, quoting Sūlāmān—meaning Ibn al-Mughīrā—from Thābit, from Anas b. Malik, who said, “We had been forbidden to pose any questions to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and it would amaze us to have some intelligent man come in from the desert and ask him questions while we listened.

“One man arrived from the desert and asked, ‘Muḥammad, your messenger came to us and claimed that you claim that God sent you.’ ‘He spoke the truth,’ he replied.

“‘So who created the sky?’ he asked. ‘God.’ ‘And who created the earth?’ ‘God.’ ‘And who set up these mountains and placed things upon them?’

“He went on, ‘By Him who created the sky and the earth and set up these mountains, was it God who sent you?’ ‘Yes.’

“‘Your messenger claimed that we are required to perform five prayers each day and night.’ ‘He spoke the truth.’ ‘By Him who sent you, was it God who gave you this order?’ ‘Yes.’

“‘Your messenger claimed that we are to give zakāt payments from our assets.’ ‘He spoke the truth.’ ‘By Him who sent you with the truth, did He really give you this order?’ ‘Yes.’

“‘Your messenger claimed that we are required to fast for one month each year.’ ‘He spoke the truth.’ ‘By Him who sent you, was it God who gave you this order?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied.

“‘And your messenger claimed that everyone with the necessary means is required to make a pilgrimage to the kaʿba.’ ‘He spoke the truth.’

“The man then turned aside, saying, ‘By Him who sent you with the truth, I will not add to nor subtract from these at all.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) said, ‘If he has spoken the truth, he will enter paradise.’”
This hadith is included in both sahih collections, as well as in other compendia, with various phraseology and lines of transmission, from Anas b. Malik, may God be pleased with him. Muslim related it from a hadith of Abū al-Naḍr Hāshim b. al-Qāṣim, from Sulaymān b. al-Mughra. Al-Bukhrāʾi also gave this hadith from this source.

It is also given in similar form from another line. Imam Ahmad stated, “Al-Ḥāḏrāj related to us, quoting Layth, quoting Saʿd b. Abū Saʿd, from Shurayk b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Nimr, who stated that he heard Anas b. Malik say, ‘While we were seated in the mosque with the Messenger of God Ḥaṃs, a man arrived on a camel that he made kneel and hobbled it there. He then asked, ‘Which of you is Muḥammad?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was there, resting among his Companions. We told him, ‘He is this white-skinned man, the one reclining.’”

“The man addressed him, ‘Son of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib . . .’” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “I will respond to you.” The man went on, “Muḥammad, I want to ask you some tough questions; don’t be offended at me.” “Ask whatever you see fit.” The man went on, “I adjure you by your Lord and the Lord of those who came before you, did God send you to all the people?” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “Yes, by God.”

“‘Again, I adjure you by God, was it God who gave you the order that we perform the five prayers each day and night?’ ‘By God, yes,’ he affirmed.

“‘Then, I adjure you by God, was it God who ordered you that we fast this month each year?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “Yes, by God!”

“‘I adjure you by God, was it God who ordered you to take these alms from our wealthy and to distribute them to our poor?’ “Yes, by God,” responded the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“The man went on, “Then I believe the message you bring. I am an envoy on behalf of my people back home; my name is ʿAbd Allāh b. Thaqīb, a brother of Banū Saʿd b. Bakr.’” Abū Daʾūd, al-Naṣāʾi and Ibn Māja related this from al-Layth.

It is curious that al-Naṣāʾi related it from a line other than through al-Layth. He stated, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Thaqīb, a brother of Banū Saʿd b. Bakr, related it to me from Saʿd b. al-Maqbūrī, from Shurayk, from Anas b. Malik . . .” and he then gave the hadith. Al-Naṣāʾi also related it from a hadith of ʿUbayd Allāh al-ʿUmārī, from Saʿd b. al-Maqbūrī, from Abū Hurayra. Perhaps it was derived from Saʿd b. al-Maqbūrī from both of these other sources. God knows best.

DIVISION

We have given above the account related by Imām Ahmad, from Yahyā b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Thaqīb, a brother of Banū Saʿd b. Bakr, from al-Layth b. Saʿd, from Saʿd b. al-Maqbūrī.

See Vol. II.
from Ibn ‘Abbās, relating to the arrival of ʿImām al-Azdi to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Mecca before the Hijra and of the acceptance of Islam by the former and by his people. Our previous account is of sufficient detail to need no repetition here. And to God be all praise and credit.

THE DELEGATION OF TAYYYP WITH ‘ZAYD OF THE HORSES’ MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM.

This man was Zayd b. Muhallīl b. Zayd b. Manhib, known as Abū Muknīf al-Ṭāṭ. He was one of the finest of the Arabs, and one of their tallest. He was called, “Zayd of the horses” because of five mares he owned.

Al-Suhaylī noted, “Each of these horses had a name, but these at present escape me.”

Ibn Isāq stated, “A delegation from Banū Taʿī, led by ‘Zayd of the horses’, came to visit the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When they reached him, they spoke with him, and he explained Islam to them which they accepted; they became good Muslims.

“A man of Taʿī whom I trust told me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘I have never met an Arab previously referred to me as of high reputation whom I have not found, on meeting him, to fall short of what is ascribed to him. Except for ‘Zayd of the horses’; his reputation did not do justice to him.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then renamed him Zayd al-Khayr, ‘Zayd the good’, instead of Zayd al-Khayl, ‘Zayd of the horses’. He then deeded to him Faydī and two properties along with it, giving him a document to that effect.

“Zayd then left to travel back to his people; as he did so, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Let’s hope Zayd avoids catching the Medina fever.’

“The source for this report said that he did not actually use the term zummā, ‘fever’, nor did he use its commonly used nickname Umm Maldam; however, my source did not actually give the term he used.”

Ibn Isāq continued, “When Zayd travelled on and reached one of the wells in Najd called Farda, he was fatally stricken by the fever. As he sensed the approach of death, he said, ‘Shall my people move on in the morning to the East while I am left in a house in Farda in Nejd? Many was the day that women would visit with me, even when sick, or tired but not exhausted by journeying.’

“After his death, his wife, due to her ignorance and the scant nature of both her intellect and her faith, took all the documents Zayd had with him and burned them.”

34. Land to the east of Salmā, a mountain in Banū Taʿī territory.
35. The Arabic printed text quotes al-Suhaylī as stating that the word used was Umm Kalba.
It is established in both ṣaḥiḥ collections from Abū Sa‘īd, that ‘All b. Abū Ṭālib sent a nugget of gold to the value of a dhahabiyya from Yemen to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who distributed it between four persons: Zayd al-Khayl, ‘Alqama b. ‘Udynamic. al-Aqrab, Ḥabīb and ‘Uyyaṇa b. Badr; this ḥadīth is similar to that given above. An account of this will be given hereafter, relating to the dispatch of ‘All to Yemen, if God Almighty so wills it.

The Story of ‘Adī b. Ḥātim al-Tā’ī.

Al-Bukhārī stated in his ṣaḥiḥ collection under a section headed: The Delegation from Banū al-Tayy (Tā’ī) and the ḥadīth of ‘Adī b. Ḥātim. Mūsā b. Ismā‘īl related to us, as did Abū ‘Awāna and ‘Abd al-Malik b. Ḫumayr, from ‘Āmir b. Hurayth, from ‘Adī b. Ḥātim, who said, “We came to Ḫumayr b. al-Khaṭṭāb in a delegation and he began calling out to us by name, one by one. I asked, ‘Don’t you know me, Commander of the Believers?’ ‘O yes,’ he replied, ‘you accepted Islam when others disbelieved. You advanced when they retreated. You were true when they betrayed. You recognized when they denied.’”

‘Adī said, “So I responded, ‘Well, I don’t mind’ then!”’

Ibn Ishāq stated, “‘Adī b. Ḥātim, so I have been told, used to say, ‘No Arab more disliked the Messenger of God (SAAS), when he first heard of him than did I. Of high birth, I was also a Christian. I used to move among my people collecting my fourth share. I was content about my religion and was treated by my subjects like a king.

“When I heard about the Messenger of God (SAAS), I hated him. I told an Arab slave of mine who was herdsman for my camels, “Get some of my camels well trained and fattened and keep them close by me. If you hear of Muḥammad’s army setting foot in this area, then warn me.” And he did so.

“‘He came to me one morning and said, “‘Adī, do now whatever you intended if Muḥammad’s cavalry were to come; I’ve seen banners, and when I asked about them I was told they were Muḥammad’s armies.” I told him, “Bring up my camels!” And he did so. Having mounted up my family, I announced, “I’m going to join my fellow Christians in Syria.”

“I travelled to al-Jawshiyah, at which town I left a daughter of (my father) Ḥātim. When I reached Syria, I took up residence there. Muḥammad’s cavalry came on after me and among the prisoners they took was Ḥātim’s daughter. She was conducted in to the Messenger of God (SAAS), along with other prisoners of Banū Ṭā’ī; he had heard of my flight to Syria.

“‘Ḥātim’s daughter was placed in an enclosure near the door of the mosque where prisoners were kept. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) happened to pass by there, Ḥātim’s daughter, a woman of fine intellect, arose to greet him and said, 'Messenger of God, my father is dead and my wâfid," 'guardian', has gone. So please spare me - and may God spare you!"

"He asked, 'And who is your guardian?" Adî b. Ḥâtîm," she replied. 'The one who fled from God and His Messenger?" he asked.

"She (later) stated, 'He then went away, leaving me there. Next morning, he again passed by; I said as I had before, and he made the same response as the previous day.

"The following morning, he again passed and I was in despair. A man following behind him gestured to me to get up and speak to him. I did so, saying, 'Messenger of God, my father is dead and my guardian absent; please spare me. And may God spare you!"

"He responded, 'So be it. But do not hasten to leave before you find someone of your people whom you trust who can conduct you home. Let me know.' I asked about the man who had gestured to me to speak to him and I was told that he was Ali b. Abu Talib.'

"She went on, 'I remained until riders came from Balî or Quqâ'a. All I wanted was to go to my brother in Syria. So I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, 'Messenger of God, a group of my people have arrived and I consider them trustworthy.' She went on, 'He gave me clothing and a mount and expense money; I then left with them and arrived in Syria.'"

'Adî went on, 'There I was, I swear, sitting with my family when I saw a howdah heading for our people. I said, 'That will be Ḥâtîm's daughter.' And there she was! When she stood there before me, she burst out, 'You absolute villain! You carried off your wife and family, yet left your father's daughter unprotected!' I responded, 'Come on now, sister; speak only good! I swear, I have no excuse. I did just as you say.'

"She then dismounted and remained there with me. I asked her, knowing her to be a sensible woman, 'What is your view of this man?' She replied, 'In my opinion you should join him quickly. If the man is a prophet, then all the more virtue to those who go to him first. If he is a king, then you'll not be bringing any shame to the glory of Yemen, being who you are.'

"I said, 'By God, that's good advice.' I then left and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina. I went to him in his mosque and greeted him. He asked, 'Who is this man?' I replied, 'Adî b. Ḥâtîm.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) arose and took me home with him. On the way with me there an infirm old woman came up and stopped him. He stood there talking with her for a long time about her problem. I told myself, 'By God, this is no king!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then took me to his home. When I went inside, he picked up a leather cushion stuffed with palm leaves and threw it to me, saying, ‘Here, sit down on this.’ I replied, ‘No, you sit on it.’ ‘No, you,’ he insisted.

37. An obscure word; the context here seems to require "guardian" as its translation, since her comment refers to her near relative, the narrator.

“So I did sit, while he seated himself on the floor. Again I told myself, ‘This is not the action of a king!’

“He then said, ‘Well then, ‘Adl b. Ḥātim, so you’re a rakūṣī,38 right?’ ‘That’s right,’ I agreed.

“‘You’ve been taking a quarter share from your people, haven’t you?’ he asked. ‘Yes,’ I agreed. ‘But that’s not appropriate for you in your religion,’ he commented. ‘I swear, you’re quite right,’ I said, conscious of him being a prophet, aware of things not well known.

“He then said, ‘Maybe ‘Adl, the only thing preventing you joining the faith is the poverty of our people. I swear by God, wealth is about to flood over them so that there won’t be enough to take it! Or perhaps you don’t enter the faith because of the large number of our enemies. I swear by God, you’ll soon be hearing of women who come riding camels from Qādīsīyā39 to visit this house, and without being afraid. Or maybe what’s holding you back is your seeing that others have control and sovereignty over them. I swear by God, you’ll soon hear of the white castles of Babylon being conquered by them.’

‘‘Adl concluded, “At that I accepted Islam.”

Ibn Isḥaq’s account continues, “‘Adl used to say, ‘Two of these (predictions) came to pass, but the third remained unfulfilled. But, I swear, it too was to be fulfilled! I did see the white castles of Babylon conquered. And I also saw women borne on ḥowdāḥs from al-Qādīsīyā and make pilgrimage to the ka’ba without fear. And, I swear, the third will happen too; wealth will flood in until there won’t be those to take it!’”

This is how Ibn Isḥaq, may God have mercy on him, gave this text – without a chain of transmission. But there are witnesses to this hadith from other sources.

Imām Āḥmad stated that it was related to him by Muhammad b. Ja‘far, quoting Shu‘ba, quoting Simāk b. Ḥarb, quoting ‘Abdād b. Ḥubaysh, who related the following hadith from ‘Adl b. Ḥātim, who said, “The cavalry of the Messenger of God (SAA) arrived while I was at ‘Aqrab.” They took prisoner my aunt and others. When these were later lined up before the Messenger of God (SAA), she said, ‘Messenger of God, my guardian is far away, and I am separated from my children. I’m just an elderly woman with no servants. Spare me – and may God spare you!’

“He asked her, ‘Who is your guardian?’ ‘‘Adl b. Ḥātim,’ she replied.

38. A religion considered to share elements of Christianity with those of Sabianism.
39. An ancient city in Iraq, the site of the famous battle in the caliphate of Ĕumar. By “this house”, the ka’ba is presumably implied. The comment suggests that Islam would establish an empire in which security would prevail.
40. A footnote in the Arabic printed text suggests that this might be a mistake for ‘Aqrab, a town in Jūlān, near Damascus.
“He asked, ‘The man who fled from God and His Messenger?’

‘Spare me,’ she asked.

“When he next came back, there was another man at his side who I think to have been ‘Ali, who said, ‘Ask him for a howdah. She did so, and he ordered one.’”

‘Adi went on, “Then she came to me and said, ‘Your father would never have done as you have! Go to him, whether hoping for gain or pity. So-and-so went and were rewarded, as others have been.’

“I did go to him and he had with him a woman with two children and another boy. He mentioned their relationship to him. I then knew that this was not the domain of some Chosroe or Caesar.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, ‘Adi b. Ḥātim, what made you flee? Was it having the words, “There is no god but God” spoken? Is there any god but God? What made you flee? Was it due to the words, “Allāhu Akbar! God is most Great!” spoken? Is there anything greater than God, Almighty and Glorious is He?’ So I accepted Islam and saw his face rejoice. He then said, “The ones al-maght/ūb‘alayhim, ‘who have incurred (God’s) wrath’, refers to the Jews; the al-t/ālin, ‘those who are straying’ refers to the Christians.”

“Then questions were asked of him, and he gave praise and thanks to God. He went on to say, ‘To proceed: people, it is up to you to give from (your) surplus. Give a man (the measure of) a sā‘; or one part of a sā‘; or a handful; or part of a handful. (Shu’ba stated, ‘As far as I know, he also said, “or a date; or half a date” .’)

“(The Prophet (SAAS) went on) ‘Each of you will meet God, saying as I am, “Did I not make you hearing and seeing? Did I not give you wealth and children? Yet what have you offered?” Each person will then look before and behind him, to his right and to his left and find nothing but hell-fire wherever he looks. Fear the fire, even if by giving only half a date! And if you do not possess that, then give a kind word. I fear not poverty for you. God will certainly aid you until a howdah-borne woman can travel between al-Ḥira and Yathrib (Medina) with the worst fear she has being to be robbed while travelling.’”

Al-Tirmidhī related it from a ḥadīth of Shu’ba and ‘Amr b. Abū Qays, both of them quoting Simak. He then said, “This is ḥasan, gharib; ‘good’ and ‘unilateral’; we know it only from the ḥadīth of Simak.”

Imām ʿAbd Allāh also stated, “Yazid related to us, quoting Ḥishām b. Ḥassān, from Muḥammad b. Sirīn, from Abū Ubayda – he being Ḥudhayfa’s son – from a man who said, ‘I told ‘Adī b. Ḥātim, ‘I’ve heard a ḥadīth attributed to you that I would like to hear from you.’ “Certainly,” he replied. “When I learned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had come forth (with his mission) I very much hated his having done so. I left and travelled into Byzantine territory” – in one version the wording is, “until I reached Caesar” – “but I hated my being there even more than I did his having come forth (with his mission).”

41. The Arabic phrases given here are from the surat al-Fatīḥa; I, v.7.
“So I told myself, ‘If I go to this man, it will not harm me if he is a liar; and if he is being truthful, then I will have learned.’ So I did go to him and when I arrived, people said, ‘It’s ‘Adi b. Ḥātim!’

“When I went in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS), he asked me, ‘Adi b. Ḥātim, aslim, taslim!, ‘accept Islam and be safe!’ He said this three times.

“I replied, ‘But I already have a faith.’ He commented, ‘I know more about your faith than you do!’

“You know more of my faith than I?’ I asked. ‘Yes,’ he said. ‘Aren’t you of the al-rakiisiyya? And yet you take a fourth of your people’s produce?’ ‘Yes,’ I acknowledged. ‘Well,’ he commented, ‘that’s not permissible for you in your faith.’ ‘Yes,’ I agreed. And as soon as he said this, I came to agree about it.

“He went on, ‘And I know what is keeping you from Islam. You say, “It’s only those with the least power who follow him, those with no power, and the Arabs attack them.” Do you know al-ljira?’ ‘I’ve not seen it; but I have heard of it,’ I replied. ‘I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand,’ he went on, ‘God will so conclude all this that women borne on howdahs will come out of al-ljira and circumambulate the ka’ba without having any to protect them! And He will conquer the treasuries of Chosroe, son of Hurmuz! The treasures of Chosroe, son of Hurmuz, and the money will be distributed bountifully until there will be no one to accept it!’

“And, ‘Adi b. Ḥāzim went on, ‘these women borne on camels did come and circumambulate the ka’ba without (needing) any to protect them. Moreover, I was one of those who conquered the treasures of Chosroe and the third prediction will come about because it was the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said it!’”

(Imām) Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqi stated that he was informed by Abū ‘Amr al-Adib, quoting Abū Bakr al-Isma’īlī, quoting al-‘Iṣāṣī b. Sufyān, quoting Isḥāq b. Ibrāhīm, quoting al-Nadr b. Shumayl, quoting Isra’il, quoting Sa’d al-Taḥtā, quoting Maḥī b. Khalīfa, from ‘Adi b. Ḥātim, who said, “While I was with the Prophet (SAAS), a man came in to see him, and complained about his poverty. Then another man came to him and complained to him about highway robbery.

“He then asked, ‘Adi b. Ḥātim, have you seen al-Ḥira? I replied, ‘I’ve not seen it, but I’ve been told about it,’ ‘Well,’ he said, ‘if you live long enough, you’ll see women borne in howdahs ride in from al-Ḥira and circumambulate the ka’ba fearing no one except God, Almighty and Glorious is He.’

42. A derogatory term applied to a faith said to combine the beliefs of Christians and Sabians.
"I asked myself, ‘So where are those toughs of Tayyi who set the country afire?’

“He went on, ‘And if your life continues long enough, the treasures of Chosroe, son of Hurmuz will be conquered.’ ‘What? Chosroe, son of Hurmuz?’ I asked. ‘Yes, Chosroe, son of Hurmuz. And if your life continues long enough, you’ll see a man come along bearing a palm full of gold or silver who asks everyone he meets to accept it, and he’ll find no one. And on the day you each meet with God, you’ll find you have no intermediary between yourself and Him, and that you’ll see only hell-fire if you look to the right and only hell-fire if you look to the left.’”

‘Adl went on, “I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say, ‘Fear the fire, even if (by donating) only half a date. And if you can’t find half a date, then (speak) a kind word.’

“And I did see howdahs arriving from al-Kufa so their women could circumambulate the ka’ba and having fear only of God the Almighty and Glorious. I was one of those who conquered the treasures of Chosroe b. Hurmuz; and if you live long enough, you’ll see (fulfilled) all that Abu al-Qasim, God’s peace and blessings be upon him, spoke.”

Al-Bukhārī related this from Muhammad b. al-Ḥakam, from al-Nadr b. Shumayl, in full. He also related it on a different line of transmission, from Sa’dan b. Bishr, from Sa’id Abū Mujahid al-Ṭārī, from Mahall b. Khalīfa, from ‘Adī. Imām Ahmad and al-Nasā’ī related it from a hadith of Shu’ba, from Sa’d Abū Mujahid al-Ṭārī.

‘Amīr b. Shurabīl al-Shāblī is also one of those who narrated this, and he did so in similar words. His version has the wording, “. . . having fear only of God and of wolves attacking their sheep.”

It is related in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, from a hadith of Shu’ba, and by Muslim, from a hadith of Zuhayr b. Mu’awiyah, both of them quoting Ibn Ishaq, from ‘Abd Allah b. Ma’qil al-Muzantī, from ‘Adī b. Ḥātim, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Fear hell-fire, even if only on account of half a date!’”

The phrase given by Muslim is, “Whoever among you can shield himself from hell-fire by means of half a date should do so.”

There are other lines of transmission also that testify to the above.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī stated that he was informed by Abū ‘Abd Allah al-Ḥāfiz, quoting Abū Bakr b. Muhammad b. ‘Abd Allah b. Yūsuf, quoting Abū Sa’īd, ‘Ubayd b. Kathīr b. ‘Abd al-Wahīd al-Kūfī, quoting Dirār b. Shūrād, quoting ‘Aṣīm b. Ḥāmid, from Abū Hamza al-Thumālī, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Jundab, from Kumayl b. Ziyād al-Nakha’ī, who said, “‘Ali b. Abī Ṭalīb stated, ‘Glory be to God! How many a man who acts pious for gain! How strange is someone who is approached by his Muslim brother in need yet does not see his way to doing good. For even if he did not hope for reward or fear punishment, he ought to make haste in acting with nobility, for it is such deeds that lead to success.’
“A man thereupon arose to ask him, ‘0 Commander of the Believers, I pledge you my father and my mother, did you hear that from the Messenger of God (SAAS)?’ ‘Ali replied, ‘Yes. And I have a tale even better than that. When the Tayy women were brought in as captives, one of them was red-haired, cherry-lipped, smooth-skinned, slender-nosed, with an erect figure, raised head, full ankles, plump legs, rounded thighs, slim waist, slender sides and well-shaped body. I was much struck by her when I saw her and said I would request the Messenger of God (SAAS), to award her to me in my portion of the booty. But when she spoke, I forgot her beauty for the eloquence I heard. She said, ‘O Muhammad, will you not release me and spare me the malicious gloating of the Arab tribes, for I am the daughter of the leader of my people. My father was guardian of our sacred objects; he relieved the distressed, fed the hungry, clothed the naked, gave generous hospitality, provided the best of food, spread peace abroad, and never refused the request of the needy. I am the daughter of Ḥātim al-Ṭā’ī.’

‘The Prophet (SAAS) replied, ‘O girl, all that truly describes the Believers. Had your father been a believer, we would certainly have been merciful to him. Release her, for her father was a man who loved noble character traits, and God Almighty loves noble character traits.’

‘At that Abū Burdā b. Niyār arose and asked, ‘Messenger of God, does God really love noble character?’

‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘By Him in whose hand is my soul, no one will enter heaven except by noble character.’

This hadith is hasan, “good”, in its content, but very gharib, “unique”, in its line of transmission. Its mukhrij, “narrator”, is highly esteemed.

We have reviewed the biography of Ḥātim al-Ṭā’ī in the jāhiliyya period in reference to those men of fame who died during that time. Therein we commented upon those qualities of goodness and kindness that made him believed by people. However, (we showed that) the extent of the advantage to him of these qualities was dependent upon his faith; he was of those who never spoke the words, ‘O God, forgive me my sins on the Day of Judgement.’

Al-Waqīdī claimed that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent ʿĀli b. Abū Ṭalīb in Rabi’ al-Ākhir of 9 AH into Tayy territory and brought back prisoners who included the sister of ʿAdi b. Ḥātim. With him he also brought two swords that had been in the temple for the idols; one of them was called al-rasūb, “the deep-cutter”, the other al-mikhdam, “the sharp-slicer”. Al-Ḥārith b. Abū Shamar had presented them as an offering to the idol there.

Al-Bukhārī, may God have mercy upon him, also gave a section under the heading, The Story of (Banū) Daws and al-ʿRufayl b. ʿAmr.

He stated that it was related to him by Abū Nuʿaym, quoting Sufyān, from Ibn Dhakwān – he being ʿAbd Allah b. Ziyād – from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-ʿAraj, from 43. This hadith is also given above: Vol I. pages 152-4.

Abū Hurayra, who said, "Al-Tufayl b. 'Amr came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him, '(Bantu) Daws are done for; they have been disobedient and have refused (Islam); so pray to God against them.'

"However, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'O God, give Daws guidance and bring them.'"

AI-Bukhari is alone in giving this with this line of transmission.

He then went on, "Muḥammad b. al-ʿAlāʾ related to us, quoting Abū Usāma, quoting Ismāʿīl, from Qays, from Abū Hurayra, who said, 'As I made my way to the Messenger of God (SAAS), I recited to myself, "O night, how long and difficult you are; however, you have freed me from the abode of disbelief.""

"On the way, a slave of mine escaped and, having reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and pledged my allegiance to him, I was still there with him when the slave suddenly appeared. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, "Abū Hurayra, this is your slave." I replied, "He is freed for God's sake." And I manumitted him.'"

AI-Bukhari is alone in giving this hadith, from a hadith of Ismāʿīl b. Abū Khalid, from Qays b. Abū Ḥāzim.

The arrival of al-Tufayl b. 'Amr, to which al-Bukhari refers here, occurred before the Hijra. Moreover, even if his arrival is calculated as after the Hijra, it came before the conquest of Mecca. This is because Daws brought Abū Hurayra when they came. And his arrival coincided with the siege of Khaybar by the Messenger of God (SAAS). Abū Hurayra then left again and came back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Khaybar after the conquest and some of the spoils (of Khaybar) were awarded to them. We have covered all this at appropriate length in its appropriate place.

AI-Bukhari, may God have mercy upon him, gives a further section entitled, The Arrival of the Ashʿarīs and the people of Yemen.

He then proceeded to relate from a hadith of Shu'ba, from Sulaymān b. Mahran al-A'mash, from Dhakwan Abū Ṣāliḥ al-Samman, from Abū Hurayra, from the Prophet (SAAS), who said, "The people of Yemen have come to you. They are most gentle and kind. Faith is (a characteristic) of Yemen; wisdom is of Yemen. Pride and arrogance reside in those with camels, while tranquillity and seriousness resides in those with sheep."

Muslim related this from a hadith of Shu'ba.

AI-Bukhari then related it from Abū al-Yamān, from Shu'ayb, from Abū al-Zinād, from al-ʿArāj, from Abū Hurayra, from the Prophet (SAAS), who said, "The people of Yemen have come to you. They are most kind and sensitive. Understanding the faith and wisdom are (characteristics) of Yemen."

He then related, from Ismāʿīl, from Sulaymān, from Thawr, from Abū al-Mughith, from Abū Hurayra (who said) that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Belief is of Yemen, while al-fitna, 'trouble', is over here. It is over here that Satan's horn appears."

44. The word bears connotations of dissension and civil unrest.
Muslim related it from Shu'ayb, from al-Zuhri, fromSa'îd b. al-Musayyab, from Abû Hurayra.

Al-Bukhârî then went on to relate from a hadîth of Shu'ba, from Ismâ'îl, from Qays, from Abû Mas'ûd, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Faith is over here” - gesturing towards Yemen - “while insensitivity and harshness of heart are qualities of those concerned only with their camels; and from them the two horns of Satan will emerge. (They are the tribes of) Rabî'î and Muḍăr.”

Thus do al-Bukhârî and also Muslim relate it, from a hadîth of Ismâ'îl b. Abû Khalij, from Qays b. Abû Hâzim, from Abû Mas'ûd 'Uqba b. 'Amr.

Al-Bukhârî proceeded to relate a hadîth of Sufyan al-Thawri, from Abû Ṣâ'khrâ Jāmî b. Shaddâd, quoting Ṣâfîn b. Muḥriz, from 'Imrân b. Ḥusayn, who said, “Banû Tamîm came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he told them, ‘Accept my good tidings, Banû Tamîm!’ They replied, ‘Having now awarded you your good tidings, how about you also giving us something?’ At that the expression of the Messenger of God (SAAS) changed. Some people from Yemen then came in and he told them, ‘You accept my good tidings; Banû Tamîm have not done so.’ They responded, ‘We do accept them, Messenger of God.’”

Al-Tirmidhi and al-Nâsâ'î related it from a hadîth of al-Thawri.

All of this goes to show the superiority of the delegations from the people of Yemen, regardless of the lateness of their arrival. The lateness of the arrival of the Banû Tamîm delegation need not necessarily be placed in comparison with the arrival of the Ash'ârs. Indeed, the arrival of the delegation of the Ash'ârs preceded this. They came in the company of Abû Mûsâ al-Ash'ârî, accompanied by Ja'far b. Abû Ṭalîb and his fellow muḥâjirîn who had been in Abyssinia. And this all happened while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was engaged in the conquest of Khaybar, as we have detailed in its appropriate place above. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had then made his statement, “I swear by God, I don't know which makes me happier; the arrival of Ja'far, or the conquest of Khaybar!” But God, Almighty and Glorious is He, knows best.

Al-Bukhârî then proceeded with his section on The Story of ‘Umar and al-Bahrîyin. He stated that Qutayba b. Sa'îd related to him, quoting Sufyan, quoting Muḥâammad b. al-Munkâdîr, quoting Ja'far b. ‘Abd Allah, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, ‘When the money arrives from al-Bahrîyin, I'll give you so-much and so-much and so-much.’” He gave three figures. But the money from al-Bahrîyin did not arrive before the Messenger of God (SAAS) died.

“When it came in for (the Caliph) Abû Bakr, he ordered a crier to announce, ‘Anyone having an outstanding debt or payment due him from the Messenger of God (SAAS) should come to me.”’

Ja'far went on, “So I went to Abû Bakr and told him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said, ‘When the money arrives from Bahrîyin, I'll give you so-much and so-much,’ mentioning three figures. But he turned away from me.

“So thereafter I again met Abū Bakr and asked him, but again he gave me nothing. Once more I went and he still did not give to me. And I did this yet a third time, with him still not giving to me. I then told him, ‘I have repeatedly come to you and asked you to give me payment but you have not done so. Either you pay me, or you will be treating me in a miserly manner. Are you being a miser?’ He replied, ‘What curse would be worse than miserliness!’ He said this three times, then went on, ‘Every time I refused you, I really did want to give to you.’”

Al-Bukhari related this here in this way. Muslim related it from ‘Amr al-Naqid, from Sufyān b. Uyayna.

Al-Bukhari proceeded to state, “And from ‘Amr, from Muḥammad b. ‘Alī. Jabir b. ‘Abd Allah is quoted as having said, ‘I went to him and Abū Bakr (gave me the money and) said, “So count it.” I did so and found it to be 500 dirhams. I then said, “Now, take the same, twice over.”’”

Al-Bukhari also related it from ‘Alī b. al-Madīnī, from Sufyān – he being Ibn Uyayna – from ‘Amr b. Dinār, from Muḥammad b. ‘Alī Abū Ja‘far al-Ba‘qir, from Jabir. This account is similar to that from Qutayba. Both he and Muslim also related it through other lines of transmission, from Sufyān b. Uyayna, from ‘Amr, from Muḥammad b. ‘Alī, from Jabir in similar form. In another account he is said to have given orders and his hands were piled high with coins which he counted; they amounted to 500 dirhams. He then doubled it twice – that is, the total he gave him was 1,500 dirhams.

THE DELEGATION OF FARWA B. MUSAYK AL-MURĀDI, ONE OF HIS PEOPLE’S LEADERS, TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS).

“A conflict had arisen between his people of Murād and (Bānū) Hamdān. In that engagement, known as the battle of Radm, Hamdān had severely beaten his people; the leader of the Hamdān force had been al-Ajda‘ b. Mālik.”

Ibn Hishām stated that he is also said to have been Mālik b. Kharīm al-Hamdānī.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “Farwa b. Musayk spoke the following verses on that day:

“They passed by Lāfāt, their eyes fatigued, pulling at their reins, turning aside.

Should we be conquered, well, we were conquerors once, and if (now) conquered, then by others than those we conquered.

It is not our way to be cowards, but our fate and the wishes of others (influence the outcome).

Thus it is that fate revolves, its revolutions going around and around.

We may be pleased and contented with our lot and may have enjoyed its bounties for years.
The cycles of fate may reverse their course and those formerly envied are suddenly crushed. Those who are envied for bounty from fate may find the turns of time treacherous. If kings were immortal, so would we be; and if men of nobility lived for ever, so would we. The leaders of my people pass away, just as have those of former times.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “And as Farwa left the kings of Kinda on his way to the Messenger of God (SAAS), he said:

‘Having seen how the kings of Kinda went astray, like a man betrayed by his thigh joints, I brought up my mount to head for Muḥammad, hoping for his favours and all they entail.’

“When Farwa reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), the latter asked him, so I have been told, ‘Farwa, did what befell your people at the battle of al-Radīm truly upset you?’

“He replied, ‘Messenger of God, what man would not be upset to have happen to his people what happened to mine?’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told him, ‘That can only compound for your people the benefit Islam will bring them.’ He then appointed Farwa as governor over Murād, all of Zubayd and Mādhīj, sending out with him Khalīd b. Sa‘īd b. al-‘Ās to collect the alms; he remained there with him in his territory until the death of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

THE ARRIVAL OF ‘AMR B. MA‘DI KARIB WITH PERSONS FROM (BANU) ZABID.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When news of the Messenger of God (SAAS) had reached them, ‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib had said to Qays b. Mākhṣūl al-Murādī, ‘Qays, you are your people’s leader; we have been told that a man of Quraysh named Muḥammad has come forth in Hijāz saying that he is a prophet. Let’s go to him and gain knowledge of him. If a prophet, as he says, we’ll find out, and if we decide him to be one, we’ll follow him. If not, we’ll know that too.’ But Qays refused to do this and ridiculed his view.

“When ‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib then left and rode to the Messenger of God (SAAS); he accepted Islam, believing and having faith in him. When news of that reached Qays b. Mākhshuḥ, he made threats against ‘Amr for having acted against his own wishes and views.

“On that subject, ‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib spoke the following verses:

‘I advised you on that day at Ṣan‘a in a manner that was plainly wise
I advised you to fear God, to act with charity and to subject yourself to Him.

But you went off out of your lust, like an ass led on by his member!

He wanted me to be on a horse, seated on it like a lion.

Dressed in a coat of mail (shining) like a pool of water, its water clear, lying on rocky, flat ground.

Armor that will fend off lances having bent their heads, making them fly off in pieces.

Had you met me in battle, you would have found me like a lion with a towering mane,

A fierce lion, its claws raised about its shoulders

Facing its opponent; if his rival makes for him, he throws him over,

Grips him, raises him, brings him down and kills him,

Crushing his brains, smashing him, biting him and devouring him,

Refusing to share what his own fangs and claws grip fast.'"

Ibn Ishāq proceeded, “‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib remained there among his people of Banū Zubayd while Farwa b. Musayk was their governor. Following the death of the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib apostatized along with the others and spoke the following verses satirizing Farwa b. Musayk:

‘We found the rule of Farwa the worst ever — an ass, his nose sniffing at a female organ!

When one looks at Abu Umayr, one is reminded of the disgusting afterbirth from a camel!’”

I note that he returned to Islam thereafter and was a good Muslim. He participated in many of the conquests made during the rule of Abu Bakr and that of Umar, may God be pleased with them both.

He was a brave and renowned warrior and hero, as well as a fine poet. He died in 21 AH after having taken part in the battle of Nahawand; it is alternatively said that he took part in the battle of al-Qadisiyya and was killed on that day.

Abū ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-Barr stated, “His arrival to the Messenger of God (SAAS) occurred in 9 AH. However, according to what is related by Ibn Ishāq and al-Waqidi, this took place in 10 AH.”

I note that al-Shafī‘i gives evidence in support of this. But God knows best.

Yūnus stated, quoting from Ibn Ishāq, who said, “It has been said that ‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib did not actually go to see the Prophet (SAAS). On that subject he (‘Amr b. Ma‘di Karib) is quoted as having spoken the following verses:
‘I am in myself fully convinced by the Prophet, even if I have not seen him with my own eyes.

He is the master of all men, and the closest to God when his stature became manifest.

He brought the law from the presence of God, and he was al-Amin, ‘the trustworthy’, given help thereby.

In wisdom after wisdom and in light by which we were led aright out of our blindness.

We rode along the (right) path when we rode with him, new in both what we dislike and liked.

We worshipped God in truth, whereas before having worshipped idols, in our ignorance,

We became allied with him, whereas we had been enemies, and we came back with him, as friends.

Peace be upon him, and peace from us (to him) wherever we were and wherever he be.

Even if we did not see the Prophet, we followed his path in faith.’”

THE ARRIVAL OF AL-ASH`ATH B. QAYS IN A DELEGATION FROM KINDA.

‘Al-Zuhri related to me that he came as one of a party of 80 riders from Kinda. They went in to the Messenger of God (SAA) in his mosque, having curled their long hair, put kulh, ‘mascara’, around their eyes and dressed in multi-coloured robes with silken edges.

“When they entered in to the Messenger of God (SAA), he asked them, ‘Would you not accept Islam?’ ‘Why yes,’ they replied. ‘Then why is there this silk around your necks?’ They ripped it off and discarded it.

“Al-Ash‘ath b. Qays then told him, ‘Messengers of God, we are, just as you are yourself, from the tribe of the ‘Akil al-Murār, ‘the one who ate bitter herbs’.’

“The Messenger of God (SAA) smiled and said, ‘People do ascribe this ancestry to al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib and Rabī‘a b. al-Ḥārith.’

“These two men referred to were merchants and when they travelled out among the Arabs and were asked who they were, they would reply, ‘We are sons of ‘Akil al-Murār’, that is, they would attribute their ancestry to Kinda to acquire prestige. This is because Kinda had been kings. And Kinda considered that Quraysh were their descendants, because of this comment made by ‘Abbās and Rabī‘a. The full name of this ‘Akil al-Murār was al-Ḥārith b. ‘Amr b. Ḥijr b. ‘Amr b. Mu‘awiya b. al-Ḥārith b. Mu‘awiya b. Thawr b. Murti‘ b. Mu‘awiya b. Kindi, also known as Ibn Kinda.
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told them, 'But really we are descendants of al-Naḍr b. Kināna; we don't cast aspersions on our mothers, nor do we deny our fathers.'

"Al-As̱haṭ b. Qays then told his companions, 'By God, people of Kinda, any man I hear say that in future I'll give 80 lashes!'

This hadith is also narrated from a different and unbroken line of authorities. Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Bāhāz and ʿAffān, both of whom said that it was related to them by ʿUthmān b. Saʿlām, quoting Ṭalḥa b. Aqīl. In his hadith, ʿAffān said that he had been informed by Ṭalḥa b. Aqīl, from Muslim b. Ḥayṣam, from al-As̱haṭ b. Qays, who is quoted as saying, "I came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), in a delegation from Kinda" - ʿUthmān added the words "... and they did not consider me the best man among them" - "and I told the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'I am a cousin; you are one of us.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'We are of Banū al-Naḍr b. Kināna; we neither cast aspersions on our mother, nor do we deny out father.'

"Al-As̱haṭ then said, 'I swear by God, anyone I hear denying that Quraysh is descended from al-Naḍr b. Kināna, I'll whip to the limit.'"

Ibn Maja related it from Abī Bakr b. Abī Shayb, from Yazīd b. Hārūn; from Muḥammad b. Yāhiya, from Sulaymān b. Ḥarb, from Hārūn b. Ḥayyān, from 'Abd al-ʿAzīz b. al-Mughira. All three lines give their source as ʿUthmān b. Saʿlām.

Imām Ahmad stated that it was related to him by Shurayh b. al-Nūmān, quoting Hushain, quoting Mūjālid, from al-Shaft, quoting al-As̱haṭ b. Qays as saying, "I went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS), in a delegation from Kinda and he asked me, 'Do you have children?' 'A son was born to me as I was leaving to come to you, her mother being the daughter of Jamād. I want his role to be that of our people's provider.'

"He responded, 'Don't say that; they will be made content and given reward, if they should die. And if you say as you have, then they will become cowardly and pitiable; yes, cowardly and pitiable!'"

Ahmad is alone in giving this; it is a hadith that is hasan, "good", and it has a fine line of transmission.

THE ARRIVAL OF AṢHA B. MĀZIN TO THE PROPHET (SAAS).

ʿAbd Allāh, son of Imām Ahmad, stated that it was related to him by al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-Anbārī, quoting Abū Salām ʿUbayd b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Ḥanāfī, who said, "Al-Junayd b. Amin b. Dhirwa b. Naḍla b. ʿAmr b. Naḥṣil al-Ḥirmilāzī related to me, quoting Abū Amin, quoting his father Dhirwa, from his father Naḍla, that one of their men, called al-Aṣha, his actual name being ʿAbd Allāh al-ʿAmmār, had a wife named Muʿāṣīda. He went forth in Rajab to seek supplies from his family from Hijr. After he had left, his wife fled, in defiance of him, and took refuge with a man of their tribe called Muṭṭarif b. Nahshāl b. Nāf b. Qumaythā b. Dūlāf b. Ahqām b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ḥīrmāz who hid her. When al-ʿAʾšā returned home and did not find his wife there, he was told that she had left him and had sought refuge with Muṭṭarif b. Nahshāl. Al-ʿAʾšā went to this man and asked him, ‘Cousin, if my wife Muʿādhā is with you, hand her over to me.’ ‘She is not here,’ he replied. ‘And even if she were, I’d not give her over to you!’

“Now Muṭṭarif was more powerful than him. So al-ʿAʾšā went to the Prophet (ṢAAS), to seek his help and recited the following verses:

‘Lord of men, he who gives religion to the Arabs, I complain to you about someone sharp of tongue Like a long-haired female wolf in the shade of her lair; I went out to find food for her in Rajab She left me in dispute and fled; she broke the promise and hid in disgrace. She defamed me among the crowd of impure lineage. And women can be overwhelmingly evil to those they overcome.’

“At this the Prophet (ṢAAS) said, ‘They can be overwhelmingly evil for those (evil spirits) who control them.’

“Al-ʿAʾšā went on to complain to him about his wife’s behaviour and how she had gone off to a man of their tribe named Muṭṭarif b. Nahshāl. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then wrote a letter to this Muṭṭarif saying, ‘As for Muʿādhā, the wife of this man; return her to him!’

“When he received this note and it was read to him, he told her, ‘Muʿādhā, this is a letter from the Prophet (ṢAAS) about you. I’m giving you over to him.’ She replied, ‘Get a firm pact from him and the protection from his prophet that he will not punish me for what I did.’ He obtained this commitment and Muṭṭarif gave her back to him, whereupon he (al-ʿAʾšā) spoke the following verses:

Neither my love for Muʿādhā, I swear, nor time itself, will bring change to the slanderer The evil she wrought is nothing, made trivial by the lustful calls of men (to her) after me.’”

THE ARRIVAL OF SURAD B. ʿABD ALLĀH AL-ʿAZDĪ AMONG SOME MEN OF HIS TRIBE, AND THEN AFTER THEM THE DELEGATION OF THE PEOPLE OF JURASH.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Surad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-ʿAzdī then came in to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), among a delegation of Banū al-ʿAzdī. He accepted Islam and was a good Muslim. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) appointed him as governor

46. The comment of the Prophet (ṢAAS), despite his use of the same words as the poet, seems to require the interpretation given here.
The arrival of a messenger from the kings of Ḥimyar to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

According to al-Waqtî, this took place in Ramaḍān, 9 AH.

Ibn Ṭāʾīṣ stated, “Following his return from Tabūk, a document was brought by messengers on behalf of the kings of Ḥimyar announcing their acceptance of Islam. Their names were al-Ḥārith b. (ʿAbd) Kulāl, Nuʿaym b. ʿAbd Kulāl, al-Nuʿmān, the prince of Dhū Ruʿayn, Maṣʿīr and Hamdān. Zurʿa Dhū Yazan sent to him Mālik b. Murrāt al-Rahāwī with news of their acceptance of Islam and their abandonment of polytheism and those accepting it.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote them the following document: ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent. From Muḥammad, the Messenger of God, the Prophet, to al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd Kulāl, Nuʿaym b. ʿAbd Kulāl, al-Nuʿmān, prince of Dhū Ruʿayn, Maṣʿīr and Hamdān. To proceed: to you I give praise to God, the One and only God. Your Messenger came to us upon our return from Byzantine territory. We met in Medina; he informed us of your message, of your wishes, of your acceptance of Islam, of your battling against the polytheists, and of your having been given guidance by God. If you have indeed reformed and have given obedience to God and to His Messenger, then perform the prayers and give the alms. You must also give one-fifth of booty to God, along with the share due to the Prophet (SAAS), that portion he selects, along with the charitable donation required of Muslims. (This consists of) one-tenth of the produce of land watered by wells or rain and one-twentieth of that watered by bucket. For every forty camels you must give one young female foal of a milch-camel and for every thirty camels you must give one young male born to a milch-camel. For every five camels you must give one sheep; for every ten camels, two sheep. For every forty cattle, you must give one cow. For every thirty cattle you must provide a calf that can be either a male or a female. For every forty goats (or sheep) at pasture, you must give one sheep. This donation is a requirement God has made incumbent upon believers; those who do even greater good will benefit thereby.

"Those who fulfil all this, give testimony to their acceptance of Islam, and assist Muslims against polytheists, shall be considered Muslims with all the attendant rights and obligations they have. They shall have the protection of God and that of His Messenger. Those Jews and Christians who accept Islam become Muslims with all the rights and obligations due them.

"Those who remain within Judaism or Christianity shall not be turned away from either, but they must pay the jizya, ‘the poll-tax’, for each adult, whether male or female, free or slave, one full dinar by the value of (gold) dust, or its equivalent value in clothing. Those who pay this to the Messenger of God (SAAS) shall have the protection of God and of His Messenger; those who refuse it will be enemies of God and of His Messenger.

"Further, the Messenger of God, Muhammad, the Prophet, has sent to Zur'a Dhul Yazan the following: "When my envoys, Mu'adh b. Jabal, 'Abd Allah b. Zayd, Malik b. Ubada, Uqba b. Nimr, Malik b. Murra and their men come to you, I require you to treat them well. Collect the alms and the poll-tax from your territories and deliver all this to my envoys. Their commander is Mu'adh b. Jabal; he is not to return until fully satisfied."

"To proceed further, Muhammad testifies that there is no god but God and that he is His servant and His Messenger. Moreover, Malik b. Murrat al-Rahawi has told me that you are the first men of Himyar to have accepted Islam, and to have fought against the polytheists. I commend you and command you to treat Himyar well; do not betray or forsake them. The Messenger of God (SAAS) is the ally of your rich and of your poor. The alms payments may not legally go to Muhammad or to his household; they are alms payable to poor Muslims and to wayfarers. Malik delivers information and withholds what is confidential. I order you to treat him well. I have dispatched to you some of my finest people, most religious and learned men; I order you to treat them well. They are being watched over. May peace be upon you along with the mercy and blessings of God."
Imām Aḥmad stated that Ḥasan related to him, quoting ʿUmāra, from Thābit, from Anas b. Malik, that Mālik Dhu Yazan presented to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) a ceremonial robe for which he had paid either 33 baggage camels or 33 riding camels.

Abū Dāʿūd related it from ʿAmr b. ʿAwn al-Wāsīṭī, from ʿUmāra b. Zādhān al-Šaydālānī, from Thābit al-Bunānī.

The ḥāfīẓ al-Bayhaqī related at this point the story of the letter of ʿAmr b. Ḥazam. He stated, “Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfīz related to us, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās al-ʿAṣamm, quoting Ḥaḍām b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, quoting Yūnus b. Bukāyr, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, from his father Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. Ḥazam, who said, ‘The following is the letter we have that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote for ʿAmr b. Ḥazam when he sent him to Yemen to give religious instruction to its people, to teach them the sunna, the orthodox practices of Islam, and to collect their alms payments. The letter he wrote for him gives his appointment and his instructions.

‘‘He wrote, “In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent. This is a document from God and His Messenger. ‘O you who believe, keep to your agreements! (This represents) a commission from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), to ʿAmr b. Ḥazam upon his being sent to Yemen.

‘‘‘He commands him to fear God in all he does, for God stays with those who fear Him and who do good. He orders him to act in accord with the truth as God so commanded it, and to give people glad tidings of what is good and to tell them to act in accord with it. He shall teach people the Qurʾān and give them religious instruction. He must warn people that no one may touch the Qurʾān unless that person is undefiled. He shall inform people of their rights and of their obligations. He shall treat them with liberality in matters relating to good, but with severity in cases of injustice; for God proscribed and forbade injustice, saying, “The curse of God shall be upon the unjust, those who turn others aside from the path of God” (sūrat Ḥud; XI, v.18, 19).

‘‘‘He shall tell people the good tidings of paradise and what happens there, and will warn people of hell-fire and what happens there. He will court people’s friendship so that they acquire knowledge of the faith. He will teach them about the conduct and practices and obligations required by God that relate to the ḥajj, “the pilgrimage”, and it consists of al-ḥajj al-akbar, “the greater pilgrimage”, and the al-ḥajj al-ṣaḥār, “the lesser pilgrimage”, which is known as the al-ʿumra.

‘‘‘He shall order people that a man should not pray in one flimsy garment unless it be loose-fitting and hangs down over both shoulders between both sides. He will forbid a person from sitting in a single garment with his legs drawn up, thus exposing his private parts to the sky. And a person’s hair should not be plaited if it hangs over the neck. He is to forbid people from calling upon clans or tribes in the case of conflict; their call should be directed solely to God alone Who has no associate. Those who do not call to God but call instead to clans or tribes are to be put to the sword until their calls are to God alone Who has no associate.
"""He shall command people to perform the ablutions properly, washing their faces, their hands up to their elbows and their feet up to their ankles. And they shall wipe over their heads just as God the Almighty and Glorious, commanded. They are commanded to say the prayers at the correct times and to perform properly the bowings and the prostrations at them. They are to arise for the al-ṣubh, ‘pre-dawn’, prayer while it is still dark, pray at midday until the sun is past its zenith, pray the al-ṣaṣr, ‘the late afternoon’, prayer while the sun is hurrying towards earth, and thereafter the al-maghrib, ‘the post-sunset prayer’, as night approaches, but it should not be delayed until when the stars appear in the sky. And then is the al-‘ishā, ‘the evening prayer’, at the first part of the night.

"""He is ordered to take God’s share of the booty as alms as is required from Muslims. From the produce of land watered by springs, the alms payments shall be one-fifth. From land watered by rain, it shall be one-tenth. From land watered by the bucket, it shall be one-twentieth. For every ten camels, two sheep shall be paid, and for twenty camels, the payment shall be four sheep. For every forty cattle, one cow. For every thirty cattle, whether male or female, one calf, whether male or female. For every forty sheep (or goats) at pasture, one sheep shall be paid. This is all an obligation made incumbent by God upon Muslims. Anyone paying more will gain benefit thereby.

"""Any Jew or Christian who genuinely accepts Islam and properly performs in accord with the faith of Islam shall be (considered) a believer, and shall enjoy all the rights and obligations they have. Those who remain in their Judaism or Christianity shall not be made to change their faith. But each of their adults, whether male or female, free or slave, shall pay one full dinar, or clothing in value thereto. Those who fulfil this shall have the protection of God and His Messenger; those who refuse shall be considered the enemies of God, of His messenger and of all believers.

"""May the prayers of God be upon Muḥammad. And may the peace and the mercy of God and His blessings be upon him."""

The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi went on to state that Sulaymān b. Dāʿūd related in this ḥadīth from al-Zuhrī, from Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ‘Amr b. Ḥazm, from his father, from his grandfather, with a full chain of transmission and including many additions, as well as omissions of some details he may have given above relating to the alms and the compensations payable and other matters.

I note that the ḥāfiẓ Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Nasāʾī related it from this same chain of transmission at length in his sunan; Abū Dāʿūd also did so in his work Kitāb al-Marāṣil. I have made reference to that in including his chains of authorities and his phraseology in my al-sunan. And all praise and credit belong to God.

Following the account of the delegations, we will make reference to the dispatch by the Messenger of God (SAAS) of his commanders into Yemen to teach people and to collect from them their one-fifth payments (of booty) and their alms donations. Those he dispatched were Mu‘ādh b. Jabal, Abū Mūsā, Khalid b. al-Walid and ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭālib. May God be pleased with them all.

THE ARRIVAL OF JARIR B. ʿABD ALLĀH AL-BĀJALĪ AND HIS ACCEPTANCE OF ISLAM.

Imām Aḥmad stated that it was related to him by Abū Qatān, quoting Yūnus, from al-Mughīra b. Shibl, who quoted Jarīr as saying, “When I approached Medina, I made my camel kneel, untied my leather bag, put on my ceremonial garments and went inside. There I found the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) making an address. The people present stared hard at me and I asked the person sitting next to me, ‘ʿAbd Allāh, did the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) make some reference to me?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘he did make a very nice reference to you while he was making his address. He said, “There will come in to you through this door” – or this opening – “one of the finest men of Yemen. On his face, however, will be an expression of authority.’”

Jarīr went on, “So I gave praise to God, the Almighty and Glorious, for the esteem he had expressed for me.”

Abū Qatān stated, “So I asked him (Yūnus), ‘Did you hear this from him, or from al-Mughīra b. Shibl?’ ‘Yes,’ (from him), he replied.

Imām Aḥmad then narrated it from Abū Nuʿaym and Ishaq b. Yasuf. Al-Nāṣāʾī gave it from a ḥadīth of al-Fadl b. Mūsā, all three of them quoting Yūnus, from Abū Ishaq al-Sabīqī, from al-Mughīra b. Shibl – also known as Ibn Shubayl – from ʿAwf al-Bajali al-Kūfī, from Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh; he gave no other line of transmission.

Al-Nāṣāʾī related this from Qurayba, from Sufyān b. ʿUyayna, from Ismāʿīl b. Abū Khalīd, from Qays b. Abū Ḥāzim, from Jarīr. His text stated, “Through this door there will enter in to you a man on whose face there is an expression of authority.”

This ḥadīth meets the criteria of the two ṣaḥīḥ collections.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Muḥammad b. ʿUbayd related to him, quoting Ismāʿīl, from Qays, from Jarīr, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) never ignored me after I had accepted Islam. Whenever he saw me, he would smile directly at me.”

The community of scholars except Abū Dāʿūd related this, through various lines of transmission, from Ismāʿīl b. Abū Khalīd, from Qays b. Abū Ḥāzim.

In both ṣaḥīḥ collections there is additional wording: “I complained to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), that I could not keep my seat on a horse, and he slapped me in the chest, saying, ‘O God, set him firmly and make him a guide who is rightly led.’”

Al-Nāṣāʾī related this, from Qurayba, from Sufyān b. ʿUyayna, from Ismāʿīl, from Qays, and his account gives the alternative wording, ‘... and there will enter among you from this door a man upon whose face is an expression of authority.’ The rest of this account is as above.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated that he was informed by Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥāfīz, quoting Abū ʿAmr and ʿUthmān b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Sammāk, quoting al-Ḥasan b. Sallām al-Sawwāq, quoting Muḥammad b. Muqāṭīl al-Khurasānī, quoting Ḥusayn b. ʿAbd Allāh al-ʿĀlī, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Khālid, from Qays b. Abū Ḥāzim, from Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢĀAS) sent for me and said, ‘Jarīr, why have you come?’ I replied, ‘To accept Islam at your hands, Messenger of God.’” Jarīr went on, “He then threw a mantle over me and went to his men, saying, ‘When a people’s (most) noble man comes to you, then honour him.’”

He went on, “Jarīr, I invite you to testify that there is no god but God, that I am God’s Messenger, that you believe in God and in the last day, in fate, both its good and its evil, that you will perform the prayers as written, and that you will pay the alms that are required.”

Jarīr said, “I did all that; and thereafter, whenever he saw me, he would smile at me.”

This ḥadīth must be classified as gharīb, “unique”, with this chain of transmission.

Imām ʿAbd Allāh al-Sammāk related to us, quoting Ismāʿīl b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘I pledged to the Messenger of God (ṢĀAS) to perform the prayer, to pay the alms and to be loyal to all Muslims.”

Both compilers of the ṣaḥīḥ collections gave this from a ḥadīth of Ismāʿīl b. Abū Ḥāzim. It is (also) given in both from a ḥadīth of Ziyād b. ʿUṯlāth, from Jarīr.

Imām ʿAbd Allāh al-Sammāk stated that it was related to him by Abū Saʿd, quoting Zāʿida, quoting ʿĀṣim, from Sufyān – Abū Wāʾil, that is – from Jarīr – who said, ‘I asked, ‘Messenger of God, make stipulations; you know best what they should be.’

“He replied, ‘I ask you to pledge that you will worship God alone and that you will not associate any other with Him; that you will perform the prayers, pay the alms, be loyal to Muslims and disavow idolatry.’”

Al-Nasāʾī narrated this from a ḥadīth of Shuʿba, from al-ʿAʾmash, from Abū Wāʾil, from Jarīr. He also gave it with another line, from al-ʿAʾmash, from Manṣūr, from Abū Wāʾil, from Abū Nukhayla, from Jarīr. But God knows best.

He also related it from Muḥammad b. Qudāma, from Jarīr, from Muḥīr, from Abū Wāʾil and al-Shaḥīb, quoting Jarīr. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmayra also related it from Jarīr. ʿAbd Allāh alone gives his specific text; he is also alone in giving it through Jarīr’s son ʿUbayd Allāh. One source quoted above is also known as “Abū Jamīl”, which name should be Abū Nukhayla. ʿAbd Allāh and al-Nasāʾī also gave it from this line.

ʿAbd Allāh also related it from Ghundar, from Shuʿba, from Manṣūr, from Abū Wāʾil, from “a man” who quoted Jarīr.
It seems apparent that the “man” referred to here would be Abū Nukhayla al-Bajali. But God knows best.

We have referred previously to how the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent him, following his acceptance of Islam, out to Dhū Khalaṣa, the temple where (Banū) Khaṭ’am and (Banū) Bajila would worship. That was known as the “Southern ka’ba” with which they would rival the ka’ba in Mecca. The ka’ba at Mecca they would refer to as the “Northern ka’ba”. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked Jarīr, “Will you not relieve me of Dhū al-Khalaṣa?”

Jarīr then complained to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), that he had difficulty in keeping his seat on horses. At this, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) struck him in the chest so hard as to make a mark there and said, “O God, seat him firmly and make him a guide who is well guided.” Thereafter he never fell from a horse.

Jarīr then went to Dhū al-Khalaṣa with a force of 150 cavalry of his own clan of Aḥmas and destroyed and burned that temple, leaving it looking like a mangy camel! He sent back a messenger named Abū Arṭat to tell him this good news. Thereupon the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) five times spoke blessings upon the horses and men of Aḥmas.

This hadīth is given in full in both sahih collections and elsewhere, as we have given above in the materials relating to the period following the conquest of Mecca, narrating it after reference to the destruction by Khalīd b. al-Walīd, may God be pleased with him, of the temple of al-ʿUzza.

It is clear that the acceptance of Islam by Jarīr, may God be pleased with him, came substantially after the conquest.

Imām Ahmed stated that Ḥāshim b. al-Qāsim related to him, quoting Ziyād b. `Abd Allāh b. Ulātha, from `Abd al-Karīm b. Mālik al-Jazari, from Mujāhid, from Jarīr b. `Abd Allāh al-Bajali, who said, “I only accepted Islam after the revelation of surat al-Mā’īda. I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wipe (his socks) after I had accepted Islam.”

Ahmad is alone in giving this. This chain of transmission is fine, except for the fact that there is a break in it between Mujāhid and Jarīr.

It is established in both sahih collections that the companions of `Abd Allāh b. Masʿūd were much struck by Jarīr’s reference to wiping (his socks), because the acceptance of Islam by Jarīr came only following the revelation of the surat al-Mā’īda. It will be related in the section of the hijāj of the companions that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told Jarīr, “Hearken to the people, Jarīr.” He only told him to do this because he was very highly regarded.

48. Presumably because Mujāhid and Jarīr were not contemporaries or because there is a lack of evidence that they met or could have done so.

49. This chapter of the Qurʾān contains the injunctions pertaining to the manner of performing al-wuḍūʿ, the ritual ablution. The wiping (of the socks), which is a modification of those injunctions, would only have legal effect if it were known to have been instituted subsequent to the revelation of the said chapter.
Jarir was a man of very large stature. His feet were the length of a fore-arm. His face was also unusually handsome. Despite this, he was the most modest of men. Thus, it is related of him in the traditions considered authentic that he said, “I asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), about glancing inadvertently (at the opposite sex), and he replied, ‘Turn your gaze away!’”

THE ARRIVAL TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS), OF WA’IL B. HUJR B. RABI’A B. WĀ’IL B. YA’MUR AL-HADRAMĪ B. HUNAYDA, ONE OF THE KINGS OF YEMEN.

Abū Umar b. ‘Abd al-Barr stated, “He was one of the princes of Ḥadramawt, his father having been one of their kings. It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) announced the news of his coming before his actual arrival, saying, ‘A son of a line of kings is coming to you.’ When Wa’il entered, he welcomed him heartily, positioned him to sit close to himself and spread out his cloak for him, saying, ‘O God, bless Wa’il and his sons and the sons of his sons!’

“He then placed him in command of the princes of Ḥadramawt, sending three letters home with him. One was a letter to al-Muhājir b. Abū Umayya. There was also a letter to the princes and (another) to the hereditary rulers. The Messenger of God (SAAS) assigned him control over a specific territory and dispatched Mu’āwiya b. Abū Sufyān along with him on foot. The latter complained to him at the heat of the ground and Wa’il responded, ‘Well, step in the shadow of the camel!’ Mu’āwiya asked, ‘What good will that do? Could you not let me ride behind you?’ Wa’il replied, ‘Be silent! You’re not such as to ride behind kings!’

“Wa’il b. Ḥujr lived on to later go to see Mu’āwiya when he had become Commander of the Believers. Mu’āwiya recognized him, welcomed him and invited him to come close to himself. He then reminded Wa’il of what he had said and offered him an official gift. Wa’il refused it saying, ‘Give it to someone more needy of it than myself.’”

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi gave some of the above and pointed to the fact that al-Bukhārī in his History related it in part.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Ḥajjāj related to us, quoting Shu’ba, from Simāk b. Ḥarb, from ‘Alqama b. Wa’il, from his father, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) assigned me control over a specific territory. And he sent with me Mu’āwiya for me to give it’ – the land or its revenues – ‘over to him’ (or his words were ‘... to acquaint him with it’ (the land). Mu’āwiya asked, ‘Let me ride behind you.’ I replied, ‘You’re not such as to ride behind kings!’ He then asked, ‘Then give me your shoes.’ I replied, ‘Step in the camel’s shade.’”

Wa’il went on, “After Mu’āwiya had become caliph, I went to visit him; he seated me next to him on his couch and reminded me of our conversation.”

Simāk continued, “Wa’il then commented, ‘I wished I had in fact borne him in front of myself!’”
Abū Daʻud related this, as did al-Tirmidhī, from a hadith of Shuʻba. Al-Tirmidhī categorized this hadith as sahih.

THE ARRIVAL OF LAQİT B. ʻÂMIR B. AL-MUNTAFIQ B. ABU RAZÎN AL-ʻAQİLĪ TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS).

ʻAbd Allāh b. al-Imām Aḥmad stated that his father related to him, quoting ʻAbd Allāh, who said, “Ibrāhīm b. Ḥamza b. Muḥammad b. Ḥamza b. Muṣṭab b. al-Zubayr al-Zubayrī wrote to me as follows, ‘I am writing to you with this hadith; it was delivered to me, and I heard it just as I have written it to you. Relate it thus as a hadith from myself: ʻAbd al-Raḥmān b. al-Mughīra al-Hizāmī related to me, quoting ʻAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ayyāsh al-Samāʻ al-Anṣārī al-Qubāṣī, of Banū ʻAmr b. Aṣwād b. ʻAbd Allāh b. Ḥājjīb b. ʻĀmir b. al-Muntafīq al-ʻAqīlī, from his father, from his uncle Laqīt b. ʻĀmir. Dalham stated, “My father al-Aswād related to me from ʻĀṣim b. Laqīt that the father of the latter, Laqīt, went to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), in the company of a friend of his named Nahīk b. ʻĀṣim b. Mālik b. al-Muntafīq.

“‘Laqīt stated, ‘I and my friend travelled until we reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina at the end of Rajab. We came to him and expressed our allegiance to him as he was leaving the noon prayer meeting. He then stood to address the people and said, “The only reason I have been refraining from addressing you for the past four days was in order to listen to you. Is there any man among you sent out by his people?”

“‘People were saying (to one another), “Tell me what the Messenger of God, is saying!” He then said, “What if a person is misled by what he tells himself, or what his friend tells him, or what he is told in error; am I not responsible for delivering my message? Listen carefully, and you will live. Sit down all of you.”

“‘The people sat down. I and my friend stood, and when he had turned his attention to us entirely, I asked, “Messenger of God, what knowledge do you possess of al-ghayb?”

“‘He laughed, I swear by God, and shook his head, realizing that I was seeking to trip him up. He replied, “Your Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, kept concealed five keys to the future that only God knows.” And he made a gesture with his hand.

“‘I asked, “And what are those?” He replied, “Knowledge of death; He knows when the death of each of you will occur, though you do not. And (He has) knowledge of the sperm when it is inside the womb; he knows of it, though you do not. And knowledge of what tomorrow will bring and what your sustenance will be. Though you have no sense or knowledge of tomorrow. He knows when heavy rain will fall, and when you will suffer severe drought. And He continues laughing, knowing that your fate is close at hand.'" Laqi stated, "We'll never lack from a Lord who laughs in benevolence. And Who knows yawm al-sa'a, the day of the (judgement) hour.

"We then said, 'Messenger of God, teach us what people do not know but that you do know. We are of a tribe who never gives credence to anyone; we are a group from (Banu) Madhhij who lead us, from Khath'am who are allied to us, and we ourselves, from our own tribe.'

"He replied, 'You will continue on for some time as now, and then your Prophet will die. Again you will continue as before for a time and then the day of lamentation will be sent. By the life of your God, I swear every single thing on earth will die, as well as the angels who are with your Lord. Your Lord, the Almighty and Glorious, will then pass over the earth, alone, over all its parts. Your Lord will have sent down a deluge from His throne. And, by the life of your Lord, every single place on earth where warriors have fallen or the dead have been buried will be split open, revealing them. The dead will be recreated from the head (down) and each one will sit up straight. Your Lord, the Almighty and Glorious, will ask them, "Mayham? 'What did you do?'" – concerning what each had done. Each will reply, "O Lord, it all happened shortly before today." And from his knowledge of life, he will consider it (his death) to have been a recent event for his family.'

"I asked, 'Messenger of God, how will He join us back together again once the winds, decay and wild beasts will have scattered our remains?'

"He replied, 'I remind you of such similar favours of God; you have looked down at the earth and found clods of soil empty of life and have said, "It will never live again. But then your Lord sends rain from the sky and soon you will look down at it again and see a plant sprouting. By the life of your God, it is easier for Him to compound you from water than the plants from the earth. You shall emerge from your graves wherever you died, and you will look at Him, as He will look at you.'"

"I asked, 'Messenger of God, how can it be that we (who are so many as to) fill the land while He, Almighty and Glorious is He, is just one person, and yet He can look at us as we look at Him?'

"He replied, 'I refer you to some of God's favours that are similar to that. The sun and the moon are a sign from him. You see them as small. They see all of you at one instance, yet you are not harmed by seeing them. By the life of Your God, He is more able to see you and you Him than you are to see both of them, and them to see you.'

"I asked, 'Messenger of God, what will our Lord do when we meet Him?' He replied, 'You will turn to him and show him your entire surface; nothing of you shall remain hidden from him. Your Lord will take up a handful of water and splash it towards you. And, I swear by the life of your God, not a drop of it will fail to strike the face of anyone of you. It will fall upon the face of the Muslims like a fine, white cloth, while it will lie upon that of the unbelievers like black pitch.

"‘Then your Prophet will leave, as will the righteous, following after him. You will pass across a bridge of fire, and when one of you treads upon it, he will cry out in pain. Your Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, will say, “His time has come!” You will gaze out at the al-ḥawād of the Messenger as all go towards it, burning with thirst, a sight such as you will never have seen before. And, by the life of your God, every time any one of you stretches forth his hand, there will fall over it a cup full with which he will cleanse himself from the excrement, the urine and the filth. The sun and the moon will be veiled over and you will see neither of them.’"

Laqīt went on, “I asked, ‘Messenger of God, with what shall we see?’ He replied, ‘Your sight will be as it is now; that will be when the sun rises on a day when it will brighten the earth and appear face to face with the mountains.’

“I asked next, ‘Messenger of God, how will we be requited for our bad and for our good deeds?’ ‘By ten-fold the like for your good deeds and by one the like for your bad, unless He forgives them.’ I asked, ‘Messenger of God, then (it is to be) either paradise or hell-fire?’ He replied, ‘By the life of your God, hell-fire has seven gates, any two of which would require a rider seventy years to travel between them! Paradise has eight gates, any two doors of which would require a rider seventy years to travel between them.’

“I asked him, ‘Messenger of God, on what will we look in paradise?’ He replied, ‘On rivers of purified honey and on rivers of goblets that give neither headache nor regret. On rivers of milk the taste of which never changes, and of water devoid of brackishness, and fruits. By the life of your God, along with you do not yet know that other like fine things. And there will be spouses for you, who are pure.’

“I asked, ‘Messenger of God, we shall, then, have these women as wives, and they will be righteous women?’ He replied, ‘Only righteous women for the righteous men! And you will give them pleasure just as you do on earth, and they will give you pleasure. However, there will be no procreation.’”

Laqīt went on, “I then asked, ‘And that then, will be the utmost we will attain and achieve?’

“To this the Prophet (SAAS) made no response.”

Laqīt went on to ask, “Messenger of God, what shall I make my pledge to you that I will do?” The Prophet (SAAS) spread forth his hand and said, ‘To perform the prayer, to pay alms, to give up idolatry and to refrain from associating God with any other god than Him.’

Laqīt continued, and reported having said, “‘And we are to have (control over) all between the East and the West?’ The Prophet (SAAS) clenched his hand, then stretched out his fingers, thinking me to be presenting as a condition something he would not give me. I then said, 'And we will be able to travel over it wherever we wish and with never a man doing harm, except to himself?' He spread out his hand and said, 'That is granted you; you shall go where you wish, and no one but your own self will do you harm.'"

Lāqīt concluded, "We then left him. And he stated, 'Those two, I swear by the life of your God, are of the most pious of all, both in this world and the afterlife!'

Kāb b. al-Khūdāriyya, a man of Bānū Kīlāb, one of those there, then asked him, 'Messengers of God, are those of the Bānū al-Muntāfīq also worthy (of your comment)?'

He concluded, "We then left, and I (later) joined him."

Lāqīt proceeded to complete the ḥadīth in which he said, "'(I asked), 'Messengers of God, does any good people may have done in the jāḥiliyya, 'before Islam', count for them?' One man of the Quraysh faction, then commented, 'Indeed, your father, al-Muntāfīq, is in hell-fire!'

'I felt a flush of embarrassment at what he had said about my father in front of everyone. I was about to ask, 'And what of your father, Messenger of God?', but thought something else would be better. So I asked, 'And your own family, Messenger of God?'

'He replied, 'Yes, my family too, I swear by God! Every time you pass by the grave of a person of (Bānū) 'Amīr or of Quraysh who had been a polytheist you should say, 'Muḥammad sent me to you to tell you of the harm coming to you; you will be dragged on your face and stomach into hell-fire.'"

'I asked, 'Messengers of God, what brought this about for them? They did not know any better than what they were doing; they thought they were behaving rightly.'

'He replied, 'The reason is that God sent someone' — a prophet, he implied — 'at the end of seven nations; and whoever disobeyed His prophet was going astray, while everyone who obeyed His prophet was rightly guided.'"

This ḥadīth is very gharīb, "odd". Some of its phraseology is objectionable. The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī did include it in his work al-Ba'th wa al-Nushūr (Resurrection and Doomsday), as did 'Abd al-Ḥāqq al-Ishbīlī in his al-‘Āqība (The Hereafter), and as did al-Qurtubī in the work al-Tadhkhīra fi Ḥīwāl al-Ākhirah (Treatise on the Circumstances of the Afterlife).

THE ARRIVAL OF ZIYĀD B. AL-ḤARĪTH AL-ṢUDĀRĪ, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM.

al-Šudārī relate as follows, “I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and pledged to him my allegiance in Islam. I was told that he had sent out an army against my people and I said, ‘Messenger of God, bring back the army and I will guarantee to you that my people will accept Islam and pledge obedience to you.’ He replied, ‘You go and bring them back.’ I replied, ‘My camel is exhausted.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then sent out a man and brought them back.”

Al-Šudārī went on, “I wrote a letter to them, and their delegation arrived with news of their acceptance of Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Brother of (Banū) Sūdā, your people give you obedience.’ I replied, ‘In fact it is God who led them to Islam.’ He then asked, ‘Should I then not appoint you to be their leader?’ I replied, ‘Oh no; you should do so, Messenger of God.’ He then wrote a document appointing me their leader and I asked him, ‘Messenger of God, entrust me with part of their alms payments.’ He replied, ‘Certainly’. He then wrote me another document.”

Al-Šudārī continued, “That occurred during one of his trips. The Messenger of God (SAAS) took up residence in a house and the family of that house came to him and complained about their governor, saying, ‘He blames us for some problem there used to be between us and his people in the jāhiliyya days.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘He does this, does he?’ ‘Yes,’ we replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then turned to his Companions, who included myself, and he said, ‘Well, there’s no (material) benefit in having command for a man who believes.’”

Al-Šudārī went on, “His words had great impact on me. Another man then came to him and asked, ‘Messenger of God, give to me!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘Those who request donations from superfluous property are an ache in the head and a pain in the stomach!’ The petitioner now asked, ‘Then give me from the alms.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘God would not be pleased at alms being disbursed by the decision of a prophet or anyone else, whereas He Himself has decided about it and divided it up into eight parts. If you were of one of those parts, I would give it to you.’”

Al-Šudārī went on, “That made an impression on me; I was wealthy, yet I had asked for payment from the alms. Early that night the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the campfire and I kept close by him; his (other) Companions were away from him and late in coming to him, so that there was no one with him except myself.

“When it was close to the time for the al-ṣubh, ‘pre-dawn’, prayer, he gave me orders and I made the call to prayer. I asked him, ‘Shall I (give the) iqāma,’51 then, Messenger of God?’ He began looking out to the east for the dawn and said, ‘No’.

51. The second call made to the worshippers, to form straight lines in readiness for the congregational prayers.
When dawn came, he went off and relieved himself, then came back to me, his Companions with him. He asked me, 'Brother Șudâ', is there water?' I replied, 'Not except for just a little that won't be enough for you.' He told me, 'Put it in a vessel and bring it to me.' I did so and he placed his palm in the water. And there between his fingers I saw a spring bubbling up! The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Were it not for my diffidence towards my Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, we would drink of the water and also draw therefrom. Invite those of my Companions in need of water to come.' I did call out to them and those who wished did take some.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose to perform the prayer. Bilâl wished to call the iqâma, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, 'Brother Șudâ' made the call to prayer; he who calls the âdân should also call the iqâma.' And so I did.

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had completed the prayer, I took to him both documents and said, 'Messenger of God, please cancel out both of these for me.' 'What is your reason?' he asked. I replied, 'Messenger of God, I heard you say, "There is no benefit in having command for a man who believes." And I do believe in God and in His Messenger. I heard you tell that petitioner, "Those with superfluous property who request donations are an ache in the head and a pain in the stomach." I made a request to you, though I am wealthy.'

"He replied, 'So be it; accept if you wish, or decline.' 'I decline,' I answered. He then told me, 'Point out to me a man I can place in command of you.' I led him to one man of the delegation who had come to him and he appointed him in command of them.

"We then said, 'Messenger of God, we have a well that has enough water for us in the winter and we assemble around it. But in the summer its water is scanty, so we disperse to wells around about us. Now we have accepted Islam, all those around us will be enemies. Say a prayer for us to God about our well so that its water supply will suffice for us and we will not have to disperse.'

"He called for seven pebbles, rubbed them in his hand and spoke a prayer over them. He then said, 'Take these pebbles and when you go to the well, throw them in, one by one, and invoke the name of God.'"

Al-ȘudâPi went on, "We did as he had told us. And thereafter, when we looked down into it" – the well, he meant – "we could not see its bottom!"

There are many testimonials to this hadîth, in the collections made by Abû Da'ūd, al-Tirmidhî and Ibn Mâja.

Al-Wâqîdî narrated that following the 'umra of al-Jîrâna, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Qays b. Sa'd b. Ubâda out with 400 men to subdue the territory of Șudâ. Those there dispatched one of their men, who said (to the Prophet SAAS), "I have come to you to withdraw your army from my people. And I will bring them over to you." Thereafter, their delegation of 15 men did arrive. And 100 of their men were seen participating in the hijjat al-wâdâ, "the farewell pilgrimage".
Al-Waqidī then narrated, from al-Thawrī, from 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ziyād b. Anām, from Ziyād b. Nu‘aym, from Ziyād b. al-Ḥarīth al-Ṣudārī, the latter’s account concerning the summons to the prayer.

THE ARRIVAL OF AL-ḤARĪTH B. ḤASSĀN AL-BAKRĪ TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS).

Imām ʿAbd Allāh stated that Zayd b. al-Ḥabbāb related to him, quoting Abū al-Mundhir ʿAbd al-Malik b. Sulaymān al-Nawwār, quoting ʿĀṣim b. Abū al-Nujud, from Abū Wāfī, from al-Ḥarīth al-Bakrī, who said, “I went to make a complaint about al-ʿAlāʾ b. al-Ḥadramī to the Messenger of God. As I passed by al-Zubda, I came across an old woman of Banū Tamīm who had been stranded. She asked, ‘Abd Allāh, I need to see the Messenger of God. Will you take me to him?’

“So I carried her into Medina. The mosque was inundated with people; a black banner was flying and Bilāl was there wearing his sword, standing in front of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). I asked what was going on and people told me that he was about to dispatch ʿAmr b. al-Āṣ.

“I sat down, and he entered his house” — or the narrator used the word, his ʿrāf, “his tent” or “dwelling” — “and I asked permission to go in to him and it was granted. I entered and greeted him, and he asked, ‘Has there been something going on between your people and (Banū) Tamīm?’ ‘Yes,’ I replied, ‘And they lost this time. I passed by an old woman of Banū Tamīm who had been stranded. She asked me to transport her to you; she is over there, at the door.’ He asked her to enter, and she did so. I asked, ‘Messenger of God, if you should decide to make some barrier between us, let it be the desert.’ The old woman then became very excited and agitated and said, ‘Messenger of God, to what will (your own tribe of) Muqar be reduced!’

“I commented, ‘Well, I’m like in the ancient saying, “a goat bearing its own fate”! I transported this woman without realizing that she was my adversary! I seek refuge with God and His Messenger! I’m like the man who came to (Banū) ʿAd!’

“He asked, ‘What’s that about, “the man who came to ʿAd”? ‘(He was more knowledgeable about the story than was the narrator, but he wanted to test him.)

“I replied, ‘ʿAd suffered from lack of rain, and they sent out one of their men, named Qayl; he passed by Muʿāwiyah b. Bakr and stayed with him for a month, being given wine to drink and having songs sung to him by two girls, called al-jaradātān, “the two locusts”. When the month was over, he went off to the mountains of Muhra. There he called out, ‘O God, You know I would never visit a sick man (without) giving him medicine, nor to a prisoner without ransoming him! O God, send rain for ʿAd as you never have before!’ Black clouds then passed above him, and a voice called out to him, “Choose from among them!” He gestured to one particular black cloud. Then a voice called out from it, “Take it to be ashes, fine and copious! You will not have one of 'Ad survive!" And, from what I have heard, no more wind was sent at them than would pass through this ring of mine, before they had all perished!"

Abū Wā'il commented, "He spoke the truth. Men and women would say, when a man was sent to visit them, 'May you not be like the man sent out by 'Ad!'"

Imām Aḥmad also related it as above, from Abū Bakr b. 'Ayyāsh, from 'Aṣim, from al-Ḥārith, but the correct version is from 'Aṣim, from Abū Wā'il, from al-Ḥārith. As just related.

THE ARRIVAL OF 'ABD AL-RAHMĀN B. ABU 'UQAYL, WITH HIS PEOPLE.

Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqi stated that he was informed by Abū 'Abd Allāh Ishāq b. Muhammad b. Yūsuf al-Sūsī, quoting Abū Ja'far Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Baghdādī, quoting 'Alī b. Ja'ād, quoting 'Abd al-'Azīz, as having related, quoting 'Aḥmad b. Yūsuf, quoting Zuhayr, quoting Abū Khālid Yazīd al-Asadī, quoting 'Awn b. Abū Juḥayfā, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Alqama al-Thaqāfī, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū 'Aqīl, who said, "I set off in a delegation to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When we reached him, we made our camels kneel at the door. There was absolutely no one more hated by us than the man we were going in to see. Yet after we had gone in and come out again, there was absolutely no one more beloved by us than the man we had gone in to see! One of our men asked him, 'Messenger of God, have you not asked your Lord for a domain like that of Solomon?' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) laughed and replied, 'Perhaps your companion has even higher status with God than King Solomon! God, Almighty and Glorious is He, never sent any prophet without according him a request. Some of them take theirs here on earth and are awarded it. Some use it to invoke God against their people who disobey and are destroyed thereby. God awarded me a request that I have kept hidden with my Lord: I will intercede for my nation on Judgement Day.'"

THE ARRIVAL OF TARIQ B. 'ABD ALLĀH AND HIS COMPANIONS.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqi narrated through Abū Janāb al-Kalbī, from Jāmi' b. Shaddād al-Muḥāribī, quoting one of his people, a man named Ṭāriq b. 'Abd Allāh, who related, "I was standing at the market at Dhū al-Majāz when a man 52. Referring, of course, to himself.

wearing a jubba, a long robe, arrived and said, 'People, say the words, “There is no god but God” and you will prosper!’ There was another man following him, throwing stones at him and saying, 'People, he is a liar!' I asked who it was and was told it was a young man of Bani Hashim who claimed to be a Messenger of God. I also asked who it was treating him that way and was told that he was his uncle ‘Abd al-Uzza. When people accepted Islam and migrated (to Medina), we left al-Rabda for Medina to purchase dates there. When we neared its walls and palm-groves, I said, 'We should make a halt and change our clothes.' Just then a man dressed in rags came up and greeted us. He asked from where we had come, and we told him from al-Rabda. He then asked where we were headed, and we told him we had come to that town. When he asked why, we told him we wanted to barter some dates. I told him we had a lady in a litter with us and a red camel with a blaze on its nose. He asked whether we would sell him our camel and we said we would, in exchange for a specific weight of dates.

“We received no deposit on the price agreed; the man took hold of the camel’s halter and left. When he was out of our sight beyond the city’s walls and palms, we asked one another what it was we had done. We realized we had sold our camel to someone we did not know, and we had not been paid for it.

“The lady with us commented, 'I swear by God, what I saw was a man whose face was like a slice of a full moon! I’ll guarantee the price of your camel!’ Just then the man appeared and announced, 'I am the Messenger of God to you; these are your dates. Eat until you are satisfied and take your full measure.' We did eat our fill and take full measure.

“Then we entered the town and went in the mosque. He was there, on the minbar making an address. We arrived as he was saying, 'Make charitable donations, for alms-giving is better for you. And the hand that gives is better than one that receives – to your mother and your father, then to your sister and your brother, and then on lower down from there.'

“Messenger of God, these people have unpaid debts of blood from the jahiliyya, “before Islam”.' He replied, ‘Sins of the father do not become those of the son.’ He repeated this three times.”

The hâfiz al-Bayhaqi also related it, from al-Ḥakim, from al-Aṣâamm, from Ahmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbâr, from Yûnus b. Bukayr, from Yazid b. Ziyâd, from Jâmi‘ b. Târiq, complete as above. In his account, the lady in the litter is quoted as saying, “Don’t blame yourselves; I saw the face of a man who would not deceive. I never saw anything more like the moon when full than his face!”

I believe that to have been either at Tabuk or thereafter.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Farwa b. 'Amr b. al-Nafirat al-Judhami, of the Nufathi tribe, sent an envoy to the Messenger of God (SAAS), announcing his acceptance of Islam and presented him with a white mule.

“Farwa was governor on behalf of the Byzantines over the Arabs whose territory bordered their own. His residency was centred in Mu‘ān, and the Syrian lands thereabouts. When the Byzantines learned of his acceptance of Islam, they summoned him, and seized and imprisoned him there with them. While imprisoned, he composed the following verses:

‘Sulayma made her way at night to my friends, while the Byzantines were between the gate and the water-tank.

The spirit turned away in distress at what it had seen and though I tried to sleep, it had made me cry.

Do not decorate your eyes with antimony, Salmā, when I am gone, nor subject yourself to intercourse.

You have learned, O Abū Kubaysha, that when in the presence of the powerful, my tongue is not tied.

If I should die, you will mourn your brother, while if I survive my status will be recognized.

I have encompassed the finest qualities a hero can have – generosity, bravery and eloquence.’

“When the Byzantines had decided to crucify him at a well of theirs in Palestine called ʿIrār, he spoke the following:

‘I wonder whether Salmā has learned that her husband will be at the ʿIrār well upon a camel Whose mother was never served by a stallion, a mount whose limbs were pruned by axes?’"

Al-Zuhri claimed that when they took him out to kill him, he said, “Inform the Muslim leaders that I am bequeathing my body and my bones to my Lord.”

They then cut off his head and crucified him at that well. May God have mercy on him, be pleased with him and give him pleasure and make paradise his abode.

53. He is, of course, referring to a wooden cross.
THE ARRIVAL OF TAMIM AL-DARDI TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS), AND HIS INFORMING HIM ABOUT AL-JASSASA AND ABOUT WHAT HE HEARD FROM AL-DAJJAL, "THE IMPOSTER", CONCERNING THE MISSION OF THE PROPHET AND THE FAITH OF THOSE BELIEVING IN HIM.

Abû ʻAbd Allâh Sahl b. Muḥammad b. Naṣrawayh al-Marwazi of Nishâpur narrated to us, quoting Abû Bakr Muḥammad b. Ḥamd b. Ḥasan al-Qâdî, quoting Abû Sahl Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. Ziyâd al-Qâṭân, quoting Yaḥyâ b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr, quoting Wahb b. Jarîr, quoting his father, who said that he heard Ghaylân b. Jarîr relate from al-Shâbî, who quoted Fâṭîma, daughter of Qays, as having said, "Tamîm al-Dârî came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him how he had gone to sea. His ship had gone off course and they had been cast upon an island. They had gone ashore seeking water and met a man with exceedingly long hair. Tamîm asked him who he was, and the man replied that he was al-Jassasâ. When they asked him about himself, he replied, 'I'll tell you nothing! But you can have this island!'"

Tamîm's account went on, "So we proceeded into the island and there we found a man in chains. He asked us, 'Who are you people?' 'We're Arabs,' we replied. He asked, 'What's all this about some prophet who has come forth among you?' We replied, 'People believe in him, follow him and consider him truthful.' He commented, 'That is best for them.'

"He then asked, 'Tell me what news there is of ʻAyn Za'r.' We did so, and he was so excited he almost jumped right outside! He then asked, 'What news is there of the date-palms at Baysân?' Are they bearing fruit yet?' We told him they were and again he was most excited. He next said, 'If I were allowed to do so, I would travel throughout the land – except for Ṭayyba!''"

Fâṭîma continued, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent him (Tamîm) out to the people and he recounted this to them. And he said, 'This is Ṭayyba, and that man was al-Dajjal, "the imposter".'"

İmâm Aḥmad also narrated this hadîth, as did Muslim and the ahl al-sunan, from several lines of transmission, from ʻAmîr b. Sharaḥîl al-Shaḥîb, from Fâṭîma, daughter of Qays. İmâm Aḥmad gave testimony to this hadîth from an account of Abî Hurayra and ʻAṣîla, "mother of the Believers". We have given this

54. A red-complexioned, corpulent one-eyed male being to whom reference is variously made in the hadîth literature. Sometimes identified as the anti-Christ or as a servant of Satan, he is said, elsewhere as here, to be a captive resident of an island. See the entry al-Dađdîjâl in the Encyclopedia of Islam.
55. A location in Hijâz.
56. Located in al-Yamâma.
57. One of the names by which Medina was known.
58. The remaining four, that is, of the six scholars who composed the sahih collections of the traditions.
hadith, with its various lines of transmission and phraseology, in our work Kitāb al-Fitan (Book of Intrigues). Al-Waqidi also related the arrival of the delegation of al-Daris of Lakhm, a group of ten men.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANÛ ASAD.

Al-Waqidi also stated that a delegation from Banû Asad came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), early in 9 AH; it consisted of ten men. These included Dirrār b. al-Azwar, Wābiṣa b. Ma'bad, Tulayḥa b. Khwaylid, who later claimed to be a prophet, then accepted Islam and became a good Muslim, and Nafada b. 'Abd Allah b. Khalaf.

Their leader, al-Hādrami b. ʿAmir, commented, “Messenger of God, we have made our way to you in dark of night in a year of drought without you sending out anyone to us.”

And so God revealed about them, “They think they place you under an obligation by accepting Islam. Say: ‘Don’t place me under an obligation for your accepting Islam; rather, it is God who places you under an obligation by guiding you to the faith, if you are sincere’” (ṣūrat al-Hujurāt; XLIX, v.17).

There was one clan of theirs known as Banū al-Rathya, “the error clan”; he changed their name to Banû al-Rashda, “the correct clan”. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had requested Nafada b. ʿAbd Allah b. Khalaf to bring him a camel that would be excellent for both riding and milk and that did not have young. The only one Nafada could find belonged to a cousin of his and he did bring it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told him to draw some of its milk. He drank some and gave the remainder back, saying, “May God bless her and those who donated her.” Nafada asked, “Messenger of God, and also those who brought her?” He added, “And those who brought her.”

THE DELEGATION OF BANÛ ʿABS.

Al-Waqidi stated that they were nine in number, and he named them. The Prophet (SAAS) said “And I am the tenth of you.” He then gave orders to Ṭalḥa b. Ubayd Allah, who made up a banner for them and he made its motto, “O Ten!”.

It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked them about Khalid b. Sinân al-ʿAbsi, whose biography we mentioned in the account of the jāhiliyya. They said he had had no descendants.

Al-Waqidi stated that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent them out to waylay a Quraysh caravan arriving from Syria. This would mean that their acceptance of Islam would have preceded the conquest of Mecca. But God knows best.

59. In Ibn Kathīr’s al-Nihāya wa al-Bidāya (An End and a Beginning).
THE DELEGATION FROM BANU FAZARA.

Al-Waqidi stated that it was related to him by 'Abd Allah b. Muhammad b. 'Umar al-Jumahi, from Abü Wajza al-Sadi, who said, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from Tabuk, that being in 9 AH, a delegation consisting of some ten men came to him from Banu Fazara. These included Kharij b. Hisn and al-Harith b. Qays b. Hisn; the latter was the youngest of them. The camels they rode were emaciated. They had come to affirm their acceptance of Islam.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked them about their lands. One of them replied, 'Messenger of God, our lands are suffering drought; our cattle are dying. Our whole area is barren, and our families are starving. Pray to God for us!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) mounted the minbar and said, 'O God, water Your land and Your cattle! Extend forth Your mercy and give life to Your dead land! O God, send rain upon us to render a great area fertile, soon and without delay, making it beneficial and without harm! O God, send rain for us as an act of mercy, not for punishment, nor for destruction, without inundation or damage! O God, send us rainfall and give us aid against our enemies!'

"It did rain and they could see no break in the sky. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) mounted the minbar and prayed, saying, 'O God, let it be around about us, but not upon us! Let it be upon the hillocks and the knolls, on the valleys and the woodlands.'

"And the rain was drawn away from Medina as though it were a garment removed."

THE DELEGATION FROM BANU MURRA.

Al-Waqidi stated that their arrival came in 9 AH when he returned from Tabuk. They consisted of 13 men, including al-Harith b. 'Awf. The Prophet (SAAS) awarded them each 10 awqiyya weight of silver. To al-Harith b. 'Awf he gave 12 awqiyya.

They related that their country was undergoing drought and he prayed for them, saying, "O God, send down rain upon them!" When they returned home they discovered that it had rained that very day the Messenger of God (SAAS) had spoken the prayer for them.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANU THA'LABA.

Al-Waqidi stated that it was related to him by Musa b. Muhammad b. Ibrahim, from a man of Banu Tha'laba, who quoted his father as saying, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned from al-Jirana in 8 AH four of us went to him and said, 'We are envoys from our people who wish to affirm their acceptance of Islam.'
"He ordered us to be accorded hospitality. We stayed there a few days, then went to him to say farewell. He told Bilal, 'Give them the awards usual to delegations.' He brought large quantities of silver and gave each of our men the weight of five awqiyya, saying, 'We don't have any dirham coins.' We then returned home."

THE DELEGATION FROM BANÛ MUḤĀRIB.

Al-Wāqīḍī stated that Muḥammad b. Ṣalīḥ quoted Abū Wajţa al-Sa‘dī, as saying, "A delegation from (Bantū) Muḥārīb came in 10 AH during the ḥijjat al-wadā', 'the farewell pilgrimage'. It consisted of ten men, including Sawā’ b. al-Ḥārīth and his son Khuzayma. They stayed at the home of Ramla, daughter of al-Ḥārīth. Bilāl would bring them their lunch and their dinner. They accepted Islam, saying that they were leaders of their people.

"And in the past the fairs had treated the Messenger of God (SAAS), in a more rough and rude way than they had. In that delegation there was one man whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) recognized. That man told him, 'Praise be to God who has allowed me to live on to believe in you.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, 'These hearts are in the hands of God, Almighty and Glorious is He.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) wiped the face of Khuzayma b. Sawā’ and it turned clear and white. He gave them the awards usual to delegations and they then returned home."

THE DELEGATION FROM BANÛ KILĀB.

Al-Wāqīḍī stated that they came in 9 AH, their delegation consisting of 13 men. These included Labīd b. Rabī‘a, the poet, and Jabbār b. Sulmā. There was great friendship between the latter and Ka‘b b. Mālik, who warmly honoured and welcomed Jabbār and made gifts to him. They went with him (Ka‘b) to the Messenger of God (SAAS), to whom they spoke with the Islamic words of greeting. They told him that al-Ḍāḥḥak b. Sufyān al-Kilābi had gone among them with God's Book and with information concerning the religious practices of His Messenger that had been ordained by God. Al-Ḍāḥḥak had invited them to God and they had responded. He had then taken from their wealthy charitable donations, which he had then distributed to their poor.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANÛ RU’ĀS B. KILĀB.

Al-Wāqīḍī went on to relate that a man named ‘Amr b. Mālik b. Qays b. Bujīd b. Ru‘ās b. Kilāb b. Rabī‘a b. ‘Amir b. Sa‘sa‘a arrived to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and accepted Islam. He then returned to his own people and invited them into Islam, saying, "We will then gain from Banū 'Aqīl the like of what they took from us.'

He then recounted a battle that took place between them and how this 'Amr b. Malik had killed a man of Banū 'Aqīl. He ('Amr) said, "I placed my hands in manacles and went to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He had learned what I had done and had said, 'If he comes to me, I'll strike off his hands above the manacles!'"

"When I came in and greeted him in Islam, he did not return my greeting, but turned away. I then approached him from his right side, but again he turned away. I came to him from his left, and again he turned away. Then I approached him from directly in front and said, 'Messenger of God, when the approval of the Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, is sought and He approves; now therefore do be pleased with me – may God be pleased with you!' He responded, 'I am so pleased.'"

THE DELEGATION FROM BANŪ 'AQĪL B. KA'B.

Al-Waqidl recounted that they came to visit the Messenger of God (SAAS), and that he accorded them the income from al-'Aqlq – the 'Aqlq of Banū 'Aqīl – which is land on which there are palm trees and wells.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote a document to this effect, as follows, "In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent. This records what Muḥammad, Messenger of God, has given to Rabī', Muṭrif and Anas – namely al-'Aqlq – for their having performed the prayers, made payment for the alms, and having accepted and obeyed (my) authority. He has not given them any right (to anything) belonging to a Muslim."

The document was entrusted to Muṭrif.

Al-Waqidl went on, "Laqīṭ b. 'Āmir b. al-Muntafiq b. 'Āmir b. 'Aqīl, he being known as Abū Razīn, also came to him. He awarded Laqīṭ a well called al-Naẓīm; Laqīṭ expressed allegiance to him for his people."

We have fully recounted above his arrival and the narrative about Laqīṭ. And to God go all praise and credit.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANŪ QUSHAYR B. KA'B.

This was prior to the ḥijjat al-madā‘, "the farewell pilgrimage", and also before the battle of Ḥunayn. Among these men is said to have been Qurra b. Hubayra b. 'Āmir b. Salama al-Khayr b. Qushayr. He accepted Islam and the Messenger of God (SAAS) made a payment and also awarded him a cloak. He placed him in charge of collecting the charitable donations from his people. When he returned home, Qurra spoke the following verses,

"The Messenger of God defended it when it came down to him, protecting it from attack or criticism."
And so it attained lush green pastures, Muḥammad having provided for all its needs.

Upon it is a hero, who would never allow blame to ride beside him, who encourages the hesitant to overcome indecision.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANŪ AL-BAKKĀ'.

It is said that they arrived in 9 AH and that they were 30 men in number. Among them was Muḥāwiya b. Thawr b. Muḥāwiya b. ‘Ubaydā b. al-Bakka’, he at that time being 100 years old. He had a son with him named Bishr. Muḥāwiya asked, ‘Messenger of God, I would receive blessing from your touch. I am old, and this son of mine is dutiful towards me. Please stroke his face.’

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did stroke his face and gave him some ash-coloured goats. He spoke a blessing over them. And thereafter they were never afflicted by drought or poverty.

Muḥammad b. Bishr b. Muḥāwiya spoke the following verses on this:

“It was my father whose head the Messenger stroked, praying for good and blessings for him.

When he went to him, Ahmad gave him ash-coloured goats, lean but not emaciated like snakes.

They would satisfy the delegation every evening, and return to do the same during the day.

Blessed is the gift, and so too the donor, and salutations to him from me for as long as I live.”

THE DELEGATION FROM KINĀNA.

Al-Waqidi related, with complete lines of transmission, that Waʿila b. al-Asqaʿ al-Laythi arrived to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while he was equipping himself to leave for Tabūk. He performed the al-ṣubḥ prayer with him, then returned to his people. He invited them to accept Islam, telling them about the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). His father told him, “I swear by God, I’ll never forgive you!”

His sister heard what he had said and accepted Islam. She equipped him for travel and he went with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), to Tabūk, mounted upon a camel belonging to Kaʿb b. ʿUjra.

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent him with Khalid to Uraydīr Dūma. When they returned, Waṭhila offered to Kaʿb b. ʿUjra the share of the booty that had been apportioned for him. Kaʿb replied, “But it was to God the Almighty and Glorious that it carried you.”
THE DELEGATION FROM ASHJA'.

Al-Waqqidi related that they arrived the year of the battle of al-khandaq. They consisted of 100 men; their leader was Mas'ud b. Bukhayla, and they made camp at the Sal'a defile.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out to them and ordered that they be provided supplies of dates. It is also said that they arrived after he had finished with Banu Qurayza, and that they consisted of 700 men. He reached an understanding with them and they returned home. They accepted Islam thereafter.

THE DELEGATION FROM BĀHILA.

Their leader, Mu'tarif b. Kāhin arrived after the conquest of Mecca and accepted Islam. He took a peace pact to his people and signed a document to the Messenger of God (SAAS), accepting the laws and obligations of Islam. Uthmān b. 'Affān, may God be pleased with him, wrote it.

THE DELEGATION FROM BANU SULAYM.

He (al-Waqqidi) stated, “A man named Qays b. Nushba came from Banu Sulaym to the Messenger of God (SAAS). The latter listened to what he had to say and asked him various questions to which he replied, being fully aware of everything. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then invited him to accept Islam, and he did so.

‘Qays returned to his people of Banu Sulaym, and told them, ‘I’ve heard the history of the Byzantines, the legends of Persia, the poetry of the Arabs, the divinations of Ḥimyar, but the words of Muḥammad are not at all similar to theirs. Obey me and seek your fortune with him.’

“The year of the conquest of Mecca, Banu Sulaym went out and joined the Messenger of God (SAAS), at Qadid; they consisted of 700 men, though this figure is also given as 1,000. They included al-‘Abbās b. Mirdas and a number of their leading men. They accepted Islam, saying, ‘Place us at your fore; make our banner red and our motto mughaddaman, “ahead!”’ He agreed to this and they were present with him at the conquest, and at the battles of al-Tā’if and Hunayn.

‘Rashid b. ‘Abd Rabbih al-Sulami used to worship an idol. One day he saw two jackals urinating over it and he spoke the line,

‘Is this a lord upon whose head two jackals urinate?
Whoever has jackals urinate upon him is disgraced!’

“He then attacked and broke it. After that he went to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and accepted Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, ‘What is your name?’ He replied, ‘Ghāwī b. ‘Abd al-Uzza.’ ‘No’, he told him, ‘now your name is Rāshid b. ʿAbd Rabbīhi. He awarded him the revenue of a place called Ruhāt where there is a running spring; it is known as the ʿayn al-rasul, ‘the well of the Messenger’. He was the best man of Banū Sulaym, over whom he was placed in command. He was present at the conquest of Mecca and later actions."

THE DELEGATION OF BANŪ HILĀL B. ʿAMIR.

He (al-Waqidi) mentioned ʿAbd Ṭawfīq b. Aṣārām in their delegation. He accepted Islam, and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) renamed him ʿAbd Allāh. Also there was Qabīṣa b. Mukhāriq, who is the source for a hadith about charitable donations.

Amongst those he (al-Waqidi) mentioned as in the delegation of Banū Hilāl were Ziyād b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Malik b. Bujayr b. al-Hadm b. Ruwayba b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Hilāl b. ʿAmir. When he entered Medina, he made his way to the home of his aunt Maymūna, daughter of al-.l;Iarith. He went inside and when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered his home, he saw him, became angry and went out again. She called to him, “Messenger of God, he’s my sister’s son!” He then went inside, came out again and went to the mosque, accompanied by Ziyād. He performed the al-ṣuḥr prayer, then prayed for him. He placed his hand on his head, then touched the tip of Ziyād’s nose. Banū Hilāl used to say, “We could always recognise the blessing in Ziyād’s face.”

A poet spoke the following verses to Ziyād’s son ʿAlī:

“O Son of him whose head the Messenger touched and for whom he prayed for good at the mosque,

I mean Ziyād, referring to none but him, to no passer-by, not to one accused or one seeking aid.

That light on the bridge of his nose was always visible, until his body went down to the grave.”

THE DELEGATION OF BANŪ BAKR B. WAʿIL.

Al-Waqidi stated that when they arrived, they asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) about Quss b. Sāʿida. He replied, “That man was not one of yours. He was of Iyād. He became a ḥanif in the jāhilīyya. He was present at ʿUkāz while the people were gathered there. He spoke there the words since passed on as his."

“In the delegation there were Bashīr b. al-Khaṣṣāṣiyya, ʿAbd Allāh b. Marthād and Ḥassān b. Khūṭ. A son of Ḥassān spoke the following verse:

60. The man’s original name meant “Misleader, son of the worshipper of al-Uzza”; his new name meant “Right-guided, son of the worshipper of his Lord”.

61. See glossary. A word with many associations. Often applied to Abraham with connotations that he was a devoted follower of God; the word also has implications of being circumcised or of having abandoned the worship of idols.
‘I am the son of Ḥassān b. Khūṭ; my father was the messenger of all Banū Bakr to the Prophet.’”

THE DELEGATION FROM TAGHLIB.

He (al-Waqidi) stated that they consisted of 16 men, Muslims, and Christians wearing crosses of gold. They stayed at the house of Ramla, daughter of al-Ḥarīth. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made a pact of peace with the Christians on the understanding that they would not baptize their children into Christianity. He gave payments to the Muslims among them.

DELEGATIONS FROM THE PEOPLE OF YEMEN.

Al-Waqidi stated that they came in 9 AH and that they consisted of 13 men. He gave them larger payments than he had to others. Al-Waqidi also said that there was a youth among them whom the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked what gift he wanted. He replied, “Messenger of God, pray to God to forgive me, to have mercy on me and to place my wealth in my heart.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, ‘O God, forgive him, have mercy on him, and place his wealth in his heart.’ And thereafter he was one of the most pious and ascetic of men.”

THE DELEGATION FROM KHAWLĀN.

Al-Waqidi stated that they were ten in number, and that they arrived in Sha'bān of 10 AH. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked them about their idol known as “Amm Anas”. They replied that they had exchanged him for a better one and that they intended to destroy it on their return. They learned the Qurʾān and the orthodox practices of Islam and when they returned home, they did destroy the idol. They made permissible what God had rendered so, and they forbid that which God had forbidden.

THE DELEGATION FROM JUṆFI.

Al-Waqidi stated that they forbade eating heart. When their delegation accepted Islam, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered them to eat heart. He had some cooked and handed it to their leader, saying, “Your faith will not be complete until you eat it.” He did take it, his hand trembling, and he did eat it, saying, ‘I did eat the heart unwillingly, my body trembling when I touched it.’”
Section: On the arrival of the delegation of Banū Azd to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Abū Nu‘aym stated, in his book Ma‘rifat al-Ṣaḥāba (Knowledge about the Companions) as did the ḥāfīz Abū Mūsā al-Madīnī, from a hadīth of Aḥmad b. Abū al-Ḥawārī, who said, “I heard Abū Sulaymān al-Dārānī, who said, ‘Alqama b. Yazīd b. Suwayd al-Azdī said, “My father related to me, from my grandfather, from Suwayd b. al-Ḥārīth, who said, ‘I was the seventh of a delegation of seven men from my people who went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS). When we went in to him, we spoke with him and he was surprised by our appearance and our dress. He asked, “And what are you?” We replied that we were Believers.

“‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) smiled and said, “There is truth in every statement; what is the truth in your statement and your faith?”

“‘We replied, “There are fifteen essentials, five of which your emissaries ordered us to believe. Five you ordered us to act upon and five we ourselves developed while during the jahiliyya and still maintain – unless you should dislike any of them.”

“‘He asked, “What are the five my envoys ordered you to believe?”

“‘We replied, “They told us to believe in God and in His angels, His books, His messengers and rebirth after death.”

“‘He then asked, “And what are the five I ordered you to act upon?” We replied, “You ordered us to say, “There is no god but God”, to perform the prayers, to pay the zakāt, ‘the alms’, to fast at Ramadān, and to make pilgrimage to the ka‘ba if we are able.”

“‘He asked, “And what are the five you developed during the jahiliyya?” We replied, “Being thankful when prosperous, being stoical in the face of difficulty, being pleased with whatever fate brings, being truthful at social gatherings, and refraining from cursing enemies.”

“‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, “Why, such wise and learned men! Their understanding is such as to almost make them prophets!”

“‘He then said, “I’ll give you five more; then you’ll have twenty essentials. If you are as you say, then do not accumulate what you cannot yourselves consume, do not build what you do not inhabit, do not compete for something you will shortly leave behind, fear God to Whom you will be returned and before Whom you will be exposed, and desire strongly that to which you head and wherein you will be forever.”

“‘The party then left him, having memorized his advice and acting upon it.’”
THE DELEGATION FROM KINDA.

Al-Waqidi stated that they were ten or so mounted men under the command of al-Ash'ath b. Qays. He made a payment of ten awqiyya weight (of silver) to each, while to al-Ash'ath he gave twelve. This has been related above.\(^{62}\)

THE DELEGATION FROM AL-ṢADIF.

They arrived in a group of some ten riders. They came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), as he was on the minbar delivering an address. They sat down without giving the usual Muslim greeting. He asked, “Are you Muslims?” “Yes,” they replied. “Will you not give the Muslim greeting, then?”

The all arose and said, “Peace be upon you, Prophet, and the mercy and blessings of God.” He responded, “And upon you all be peace. Sit down.” They did so and then asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) about the times for the prayers.

THE DELEGATION FROM KHUSHAYN.

Al-Waqidi stated, “Abū Thaʿlabā al-Khushāni arrived as the Messenger of God (SAAS) was preparing his equipment to proceed to Khaybar. Abū Thaʿlabā was present with him at the battle of Khaybar and thereafter some ten men of Banū Khushayn came and accepted Islam.

Al-Waqidi went on to tell of the delegations from Banū Sa‘d, Hudhaym, Bālī, Bahrā’, Banū Qudra, Salāmān, Juḥayna, Banū Kalb and al-Jarmiyin. We have given above the ḥadīth of ‘Amr b. Salama al-Jarmī given in the ṣaḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī.

Al-Waqidi then referred to the delegations of al-Azd, Ghasān, al-Ḥārith b. Kaḥ, Hamdān, Sa‘d al-‘Ashīra, ‘Abs, that of al-Dāriyin, and al-Rahāwīwīn, of Banū Ghāmīd, al-Nakhr, Bajīla, Khathām and Ḥḍramawt. He made mention of Wāṭil b. Ḥujr among these. He also referred to the four kings Jamd, Mikhwas, Mishrawī and Abdā‘a as among these. In the ḥadīth collection of Ahmad detail is given of their curse, with their sister al-‘Amarrada.\(^{63}\) Al-Waqidi related about them at length.

He also referred to the Azd of Umnān, and Ghāfiq, Bāriq, Daws, Thumāla, al-Jidār, Aslām, Juḏḥām, Mahrā, Himyar, Najrān and Jayshān. Explication on these tribes would need to be very extensive; and we have already given above \(^{63}\) A footnote in the Arabic printed text suggests that the correct name should be their brother al-Ghamar.

some material associated with this. What we have related heretofore is enough. Though God knows best.

THE DELEGATION OF AL-SIBA'.

Al-Waqidi went on, "Shu'ayb b. 'Ubāda related to me, from al-Muṭṭalib b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥantab as follows, 'While the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) was seated in Medina among his Companions, a jackal came, stood before him and howled. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) said, 'This is a delegate from the lions who has come to you. If you wish to impose some restriction upon him, they will not go beyond it to something else; however, if you wish, you could leave him and be wary of him and whatever he is able to take would be his sustenance.'"

"They replied, 'Messenger of God, we don't wish to give him anything.' The Prophet (ṣaṣṣ) then gestured to him with three fingers, meaning, 'leave them alone' and it turned and ran away in fear.'"

The ḥadīth is mursal, "incomplete", with this line of transmission.

This jackal resembles the one referred to in the ḥadīth related by Imām Ahmad: “Yazīd” – he being Ibn Ḥārūn – “related to us, quoting al-Qāsim b. al-Fāḍl al-Ḥuddānī, from Abū Naḍra, from Abū Saʿīd al-Khudārī, who said, ‘The jackal attacked a sheep. The shepherd went after it and took it from him. The jackal sat up on its tail and asked, ‘Don’t you fear God, taking from me bounty to which God led me?’ The shepherd exclaimed, ‘Amazing! A jackal sitting up on its tail and speaking to me like a human being!’"

"The jackal went on, ‘Would you like me to tell you something even more amazing than that? Muhammad, the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) is in Yathrib telling people of what happened long ago.’"

"The shepherd then led his herd away into the town; there he left them in a corral and went to the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ), and told him about the jackal.

"The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) had a call made for a general prayer meeting and went out and said to the bedouin, ‘Tell them.’ He did so. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) then said, ‘He spoke the truth, I swear by Him who has the soul of Muḥammad in His hand. Judgement Day will not come until animals speak to humans, and a man’s strap on his whip and his sandal straps talk to him, and his thigh informs him of what his family does behind his back.’”"

Al-Tirmidhī related it from Sufyān b. Wāktū b. al-Jarrāh, from his father, from al-Qāsim b. al-Fāḍl. He characterized it as ḥasan, gharib, saḥīh, "good, unilateral and authentic”. We know of this only from the ḥadīth of al-Qāsim b. al-Fāḍl, whom scholars consider a trustworthy and reliable source. Yaḥyā and Ibn Mahdī consider him reliable.

I note that Imām Ahmad also related this ḥadīth, giving a line of transmission quoting Abū al-Yāmān, quoting Shu’ayb, he being the son of Abū Ḥamza, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū al-Ḥusayn, quoting Mahrān, quoting Abū Saʿīd al-Khudārī; he gave this anecdote in full and with a more extensive line than the account given above.

I note that Imam Ahmad also related it quoting Abu al-Nadr, quoting 'Abd al-Hamud b. Bahram, quoting Shahr, who said he heard it from Abu Sa'd.

This text is closer (to the above); but God knows best. This line of transmission accords with the criteria of the ahl al-sunan, but they did not promulgate it.

DIVISION

Material concerning the delegations of the jinn, “the spirits”, at Mecca prior to the Hijra has been given above. 64

We have examined this also with regard to the words of the Almighty, in surat al-Abqaiif (XLVI, v.29): “And when we sent towards you a group of the jinn who listen to the Qur'an”. We gave commentary on those abiidith and ancient materials referring to this and gave the hadith of Sawad b. Qarib who had been a monk but accepted Islam. We wrote of his channel, who would bring him information, as when he told him,

“I was surprised at the jinn and their knowledge, and their gripping their baggage on their mounts

Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for believing spirits are not like those that disbelieve.

So head for the finest men of Hashim, amidst their hills and rocks.”

He went on to say,

“I was surprised at the jinn and their perceptions, and their gripping their cloth blankets on their mounts

Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the gracious of the spirits are not like the foul ones.

So head for the finest men of Hashim, and raise your eyes to their head.”

He later continued,

“I was surprised at the jinn and their knowledge, and their gripping their baggage on their mounts,

Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for those that are evil are not like those who are good.

So go to the finest men of Hashim; the jinn who believe are not like those of them who disbelieve.”

This and similar materials indicate the repeated arrival of the jinn to Mecca. We have sufficiently established that above; and all praise and credit be to God. Success and authority come through Him.

The hāfīz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī gave here a very strange hadīth— one indeed, that was either objectionable or fabricated. However, its source is a cherished one. And I wish to report it just as he did. It is strange to come from him.

Al-Bayhaqī stated in his Dalā'il al-Nubuwwa: “Chapter on the arrival of Hāma b. al-Haytham b. Lāqīs b. Iblīs to the Prophet (ṢAAS), and his acceptance of Islam” as follows: “Abū al-Hasan Muḥammad b. al-Ḥusayn b. Da'ūd al-ʿAlawi, may God have mercy on him, informed us, quoting Abū Naṣr Muḥammad b. Ḥamdawayh b. Sahl al-Qārī al-Marwazī, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥammād al-ʿĀmilī, quoting Muḥammad b. Abū Ma'shar, who quoted his father, from Nāfi', from Ibn ʿUmar, who quoted ʿUmar, may God be pleased with him, as saying, ‘While we were seated with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), on one of the mountains of Tihāma, an old man holding a staff arrived. He greeted the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who returned the greeting, and asked, “By the sing-song and prattling of the jīmm, who are you?” He replied, “I am Hāma b. al-Haytham b. Laqīs b. Iblīs.”

‘The Prophet (ṢAAS), asked “There are only two fathers in your line from Iblīs (Satan); how long have you lived, then?”

“I’ve been living almost as long as the world itself. Back when Cain killed Abel, I was still a boy, learning to understand words, moving across the hills and ordering food to turn bad and breaking up families.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, “Evil was the work of both the blameworthy old man and the reprehensible boy!”

“The old man went on, “Spare me from destruction! I turn in repentance to God, Almighty and Glorious is He! I was with Noah in his mosque, along with those of his people who believe in him. I kept on decrying him for his call to his people until he wept and made me do so too. He said, ‘Surely, I am one of those who repent for all that; and I seek refuge with God from being one of those who are foolishly ignorant.’

“I said, ‘Noah, I was of those who took part in shedding the blood of that fortunate martyr Abel, son of Adam. Can you find forgiveness for me in yourself?’ He replied, ‘Hām, hurry and find good to perform before you suffer grief and remorse. I have read in what God has sent down to me that every worshipper who turns in repentance to God and communicates this will have God turn to him in forgiveness. Arise, perform the ablutions and make two prayer prostrations to God.”

“Hām went on, “I did at once what he told me. He then called out to me, ‘Lift up your head; forgiveness of you has been revealed from heaven. And so I prostrated in worship to God.”

“He continued, “I was also with Ḥud in his mosque, along with those of his people who believed. I kept on criticizing him for his call to his people until he wept over them and made me weep too. He said, ‘Surely, I am one of those who repent for all that. And I seek refuge with God from being one of those who are foolishly ignorant.’
“Also I was with Šāliḥ in his mosque with those of his people who believed. I kept on criticizing him for his call to his people until he wept over them and made me weep too. He said, ‘I am one of those who repent for all that. And I seek refuge with God from being one of those who are foolishly ignorant.’

“I used to visit Jacob, too; I was with Joseph in the secure place; and I used to meet Elijah in the valleys; I meet him now.

“I met Moses, son of Imrān, and he taught me from the Torah. He told me, ‘If you meet Jesus, son of Mary, greet him for me.’ I did meet Jesus, son of Mary, and greeted him from Moses. Jesus said, ‘If you meet Muḥammad (ṢAAS), greet him for me.’

“The eyes of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) flowed abundantly in tears as he wept at this. Then he said, ‘And may peace be upon Jesus for as long as the world exists. And may peace be upon you too, Hām, for your keeping to the faith.’

“Hām went on, ‘Messenger of God, do with me as Moses did. He taught me from the Torah.’

“He then told him, ‘Tell us your needs, Hām. And don’t stop visiting us.’”

ʿUmar concluded, “He shook hands with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in farewell and never returned to us. We don’t know whether he is alive or dead.”

Al-Bayhaqi went on to state, “This Ibn Abū Maʿṣhar in the chain has had major āḥādīth related from him; however, the scholars in the traditions consider him weak.

But this āḥādīth is narrated from another and stronger line of transmission. God knows best.

THE YEAR 10 AH.

Chapter: On the dispatch by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of Khalid b. al-Walid.

“He ordered him to invite them to Islam for three days before attacking them. If they responded positively, he was to accept them, and if they did not, he was to attack them.

“Khalid went forth and when he reached them, he sent out riders in all directions inviting them to Islam, telling them, ‘Accept Islam and you will be safe.’
“They did accept Islam and accepted what they had been asked to do. Khalid remained with them, instructing them in Islam, in God’s Book and in the practices of His Prophet (SAAS), as the latter had ordered if they should accept Islam and not do battle.

“Khalid b. al-Walid then wrote to the Messenger of God (SAAS), as follows, ‘In the name of God the most Merciful and Beneficent. To Muhammad, the Prophet, and Messenger of God, from Khalid b. al-Walid. Peace be upon you, Messenger of God, along with the mercy and blessings of God. I express to you praise for God, other than Whom there is no god. To proceed, Messenger of God, may God’s blessings be upon you, you dispatched me to Banu al-Hashim b. Ka‘b and ordered me not to fight them for three days, to invite them into Islam and if they accepted I was to go and teach them the essentials of Islam, God’s Book, and the practice of His Prophet; if they did not accept Islam, I was to fight them.

“I did go to them and invited them into Islam for three days, as the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered me. I sent riders out to them who said, ‘Banu al-Hashim, accept Islam and be safe.’ They did accept Islam and did not fight. I am staying among them telling them of what God has ordered them and forbidding them from what God forbad them. I am teaching them the essentials of Islam and the practice of the Prophet (SAAS), until the Messenger of God (SAAS) writes to me. Peace be upon you, Messenger of God, along with His mercy and His blessings.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote back to him as follows, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent. From Muhammad, the Prophet, to Khalid b. al-Walid. Peace be upon you. I express to you praise for God other than Whom there is no other god. To proceed: your letter came to me with your messenger informing me that Banu al-Hashim b. Ka‘b accepted Islam before you did battle with them, that they responded positively to the requirements of Islam of which you informed them, that they testified that there is no god but God, that Muhammad is His servant and His Messenger, and that God has given them His guidance. Congratulate them, give them warning and return; and let their delegation come with you. Peace be upon you and the mercy and blessings of God.’”

“Khalid did return to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and the delegation of Banu al-Hashim b. Ka‘b came with him. Qays b. al-Husayn Dhul al-Ghaṣṣa, Yazid b. ‘Abd al-Madān, Yazid b. al-Muḥajjal, ‘Abd Allāh b. Qurād al-Ziyyādi, Shaddād b. Ubayd Allāh al-Qanānī and ‘Amr b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Dibābī were among them. When they came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he saw them, he asked, ‘Who are these men who seem to be Indians?’

“Someone told him, ‘These men are Banū al-Ḥārith b. Ka‘b.’ When they stood before the Messenger of God (SAAS), they greeted him and said, ‘We bear witness that you are the Messenger of God, and that there is no god but God.’
He replied, 'I bear witness that there is no god but God, and that I am the Messenger of God.'

"He then said, 'You are the people who, if forced back, would promptly advance again.' They remained silent; none of them offered him any response. He said the same a second and a third time and still no one responded.

"Then he said it a fourth time, and Yazid b. 'Abd al-Madān replied, 'Yes, Messenger of God; we are those who advance again if forced back.' He said this four times.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'If Khalid had not written to me that you had accepted Islam and had not done battle, I would have cast your heads beneath your feet!'

"Yazid b. 'Abd al-Madān said, 'In fact, I swear by God, we do not give praise to you or to Khalid.'

"'Whom do you praise, then?' he asked. He replied, 'We praise God who led us to you, Messenger of God.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, 'You speak the truth.'

"He then asked, 'How was it you overcame those you fought in the jahiliyya?' They replied, 'We overcame no one.'

"'But you did,' he said. 'You did overcome those you fought.'
